One of the severest rain and wind storms of recent years hit Grosse Pointe Monday evening with the result that many basements were flooded, wires and trees were down, and traffic was generally slowed down.

Grosse Pointe Park was hit the hardest, although there were no casualties.

High voltage lines caused traffic on Jefferson between Lakeland and Neff to be detoured until the electric company could shut off the power.

The power line that supplies the pumping station in Grosse Pointe Woods was struck by lightning and caused many basements in that area to be flooded.

Parcells Tells Rotarians About Pointe Schools

How the Grosse Pointe school district was evolved from five separate little local schools, was told to members of Grosse Pointe Rotary club with charts and figures, at their luncheon last Monday noon, by Charles A. Parcells, president of the Pointe board of education.

The speaker stated that in 1922 the five Grosse Pointe villages approved a proposal to amalgamate the five school districts. The entire population at that time was 6,000. Today it is 34,000. Twenty years ago there was no high school in Grosse Pointe. In 1928 the present Grosse Pointe high school was constructed.

Confronting Problems

Discussing some of the problems confronting the board of education, Mr. Parcells showed that when the present school district was first organized the assessed valuation of properties averaged $57,000 per pupil. Today, this assessed valuation has dropped to $17,000 per pupil. This is due largely to the rapid increase in population and elimination of the personal property assessment.

In 1922 the school debt averaged $169 per capita. Today this average has dropped to $88.

Essert Selection

Mr. Parcells told how the new school superintendent, Paul Essert was selected by the board of education. Notices were sent out to colleges and universities in all sections of the United States and nominations were made by these schools. The board made a thorough study of all candidates for the position. The choice finally simmered down to five or six names and Mr. Essert with some 20 years of progressive experience was selected for the position.

If you are concerned about the welfare of any family which recently has lost its breadwinner, give its members this information.

If the deceased worked in commerce or industry, one of his survivors should visit the east side field office of the social security board and discuss the facts with the manager of that office, E. E. Paralysis Cases Down For First Week In August

Infantile paralysis cases reported in the first week of August have been under average figures, the Michigan department of health says, but adds that the course of polio is unpredictable.

"No one can tell in advance how polio may affect a community, nor say what the outcome of a case may be," says Dr. H. Allen Moyer, state health commissioner. "The patient who recovers without paralysis and the one who has a crippling after-effect may look just the same at the beginning. The physician must have a chance to see polio early and follow the case day by day. Proper care helps to avoid paralysis, but if it does develop, the crippling effects can be overcome in part by rest and use of splints. For these reasons, the physician should be called for any of the signs which may be the first symptoms of polio — fever, vomiting, pain or stiffness of the neck and back."

In July, the number of cases of polio reported was 22, compared with 28 cases in 1940 and a five-year average of 29. No cases were reported in August until the fifth day, whereas last year polio was reported daily through the month and the August total was three times the five-year average of 103.

Polio is caused by one of the smallest of the viruses, whose diameter is calculated to be only one two-and-a-half-millionth of an inch. If the virus is ever seen it will be with the aid of some device like the electron microscope. No one is now sure just how the virus is spread. It may get from one person to another like the virus of measles, by way of droplets from the nose and mouth in breathing, or like the germ of typhoid, through food and water. This uncertainty as to manner of spread makes control more difficult than for many other communicable diseases.

Delivering That Aluminum Was Quite A Job

A small mechanized army of trucks and crew members was required to deliver the scrap aluminum contributed by Michigan citizens to United States treasury agents, according to Everett DeRyke, executive director of the Michigan council of defense, which supervised the collection.

The state highway department and county road commissions throughout the state co-operated in the delivery of the aluminum to the treasury, which will sell it to smelters supplying defense contractors. The money will be used to buy trainer planes for the army and navy.

The delivery system, set up by engineers assigned to the task by

G. Donald Kennedy, state highway commissioner, reached into every community of the state. First of all, county trucks picked up aluminum from local collection points and hauled it into the yards of the county road commissions. Then state trucks, 19 of them, gathered the scrap metal from the county centers and hauled it to seven concentration centers in Detroit, Lansing, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids, Saginaw, Cadillac and Escanaba, where the treasury took charge. In some cases, where county yards were near the concentration centers, county trucks made the final haul, but the long routes were covered by state trucks. These 19 state trucks covered 1,652 miles in making the final collection.

No attempt was made to estimate the distance traveled by trucks making collections within counties, but it is known that those making hauls to the seven key points covered 868 miles. At least 75 trucks were assigned to the collection by county road commissions.

"The efficiency of the collection system contributed greatly to the success of the aluminum-procurement campaign," DeRyke declared. "The council has already adopted a formal resolution conveying its thanks to the state and county road agencies which contributed trucks, men and gasoline to this drive without asking a penny in return. Because we have had to deduct nothing for transportation charges, the net return from Michigan's contribution to the national scrap aluminum fund is certain to be a sizeable one."

"Everyone concerned—and there are far too many deserving credit to be listed as individuals or even by organizations to which they belong — is to be congratulated on a job well done."

Final figures on the amount of aluminum collected are not available as yet.

State Fair All Set To Open

A circus composed entirely of headline acts from the famed European circuses and the major American shows will make its first group appearance in the United States at the Michigan state fair, it was announced today by Bernard J. Youngblood, general manager.

The circus will play twice daily in the Coliseum during the state fair which opens August 27 and continues through September 7 and will include the following acts, well known in this country or on the continent in the days of peace:

The Flying Meteors, a flying return act with three men; The Orantors, perch act trio; The Kenneth Waite trio of English clowns; Gregoresko, Czech aerial magician; the well known Bud Anderson Liberty Horse act; Ray Goodie, wire and slide act; Capt. William Hayer; The Maximos, wire act; Lady Barbara's Animal Circus, a typically English animal show with ponies, mules, dogs, and monkeys; the Five Kays, comedy acrobats using teeterboards, balancing traps and slack wires; the Four Skating Marvels and a number of other acts more familiar to Detroit through visits with the major shows and the Shrine Circus.

Youngblood explained that the circus is being assembled in Chicago.

To make way for the circus the state fair annual rodeo will be moved to the race track infield this year. Rings for the circus already are in place in the Coliseum.

Griffiths Win 2nd Playoff

Griffith and Wade won their second playoff game, defeating Ulrich Lumber 6 to 1 in the Grosse Pointe Baseball league playoffs Sunday. Ernie Roberts held Ulrich to one hit while striking out 13 men, and they scored their only run on an error.

Bud Moeleg, Griffith and Wade shortstop started the rally in the fourth with a line single. Three runs were scored in this inning to make the score three to one. Three more were scored in the sixth when Bruce Bockstanz, Griffith's third baseman lined a home run over the left fielder's head with two on.

Bob Gouin caught his usual fine game and was the sparkplug of the team.

Griffith and Wade have now defeated both teams in the playoffs, the Ulrich and Shores teams. The winners of the playoffs will be Grosse Pointe champions and will be sent to the state tournament in Battle Creek Aug. 29.

478 Students Finish Pointe Summer School

Four hundred seventy-eight students finished the eight-week summer school session at Grosse Pointe high school last Friday, August 8. There are, however, many students coming to the office to discuss changes in schedules necessary because of conflicts.

New students transferring to Grosse Pointe high school from other schools have also been reporting to arrange their schedules and discuss their selection of subjects.

Each year Grosse Pointe high school has a relatively high percentage of the student body entirely new to the system. Last year there were at Grosse Pointe high school, in grades seven through twelve, 178 new students, in addition to the House Down To 4 Goals

Eight Grosse Pointe Hunt club polo players are listed in the handicaps issued by the officials of the United States Polo Association for the season of 1941.

Bert Beveridge was raised to one goal; Don Beveridge and Arnold Hoffman were listed at 0 goals; Joel Dobbs was lowered from one to no goal; Alfred House was lowered from 5 to 4 goals; and Mack Krim and Abram Vanderzee received a one goal rating.

These new handicaps are the result of a regional handicap meeting and final recommendation by the national handicap committee of which F. S. von Stade is chairman.

Five changes were made by the committee but several men have been added to the top brackets. Notable among these is the entire membership of the Akusti team, which won the national open championship at the close of the past season.

Elbridge T. Gerry, the team's captain has been made one of the four active men at the top of the United States rating list. Gerry had been raised to nine goals from his previous rating of eight, and now ranks with Winston Guest.

Ahead of Guest and Gerry at 10 goals are Cecil Smith of Texas and Stewart Iglehart of Long Island.

Ebby's brother, Robert L. Gerry, Jr., who has been playing number two with the championship team has been raised from seven to eight goals. Gerard S. Smith, the team's No. 1, was raised from six to seven goals, and Alan Corey Jr., back, goes from five to six.

Smith and Iglehart are alone in the 10-goal position, now that Tommy Hitchcock has been placed on the inactive list.

Officers for the new year include Elbridge Gerry as chairman, Devehux Milburn re-elected vice-chairman, and Gouverneur M. Carnahan re-elected secretary-treasurer. Strawbridge, the retiring chairman was elected to the board of governors as was W. Thorn Kissel of New Jersey.

Tax Dept. Modernized

In step with the movement toward better working conditions for state employees, Louis M. Nims, managing director of the state sales tax administration is modernizing the filing division of the sales tax department this week.

Formerly housed in windowless, dimly lighted archives, files and records of over 100,000 retail merchants are being transferred to a well ventilated, well lighted, modern filing plant.

As a forerunner to centralization of revenue collections, the new filing division has been set up to accommodate all sales tax files—"live" and "dead"—as well as an increasing volume of use tax files resulting from the recent validation of the use act by the supreme court.

Space is also provided for sales tax records from Monroe, Macomb, Washtenaw and Oakland counties.

Merchants in those counties formerly made their tax returns to the Detroit office but under a new ruling have been transferred to the Lansing office.

Director Nims, commenting on the new set-up, declared: "Records and files of a tax collecting agency are of vital importance, and we realize that good working conditions and employee morale are required for utmost efficiency in public service."

Selena Murphy Weds Ted Granger

Selenah Murphy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Murphy and Theodore Henckels Granger, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ross Granger, were married in St. Catherine's chapel of SS. Peter and Paul church last Saturday morning at 11 o'clock.

Lois Murphy attended her sister as maid of honor in a frock with full skirt, turnback collar and short sleeves. The belt was of matching velvet and was fastened in a small bow. A tiara of net held in place a shoulder-length veil, colored like the dress. The attendants carried white daisies.

Gown Made By Mother
Selenah wore a gown made by her mother. It had a basque type bodice with a dainty row of orange blossoms down the front. The neckline came to a 'V' and the sleeves were short and puffed.

Lilla Murphy a sister of the bride and Geraldine Higbie were bridesmaids, and wore contrasting colors of organdy, Lilla in pink, and Geraldine in green. They wore small organdy caps banded across the front with daisies.

Best Man
Edward Ross Granger, Jr., was the best man, and ushers included Michael and Charles Butler Murphy, Charles Potts and Stewart W. Munroe, Jr.

The reception and wedding breakfast was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Murphy on Balfour road. The bride's table was centered with a crystal bowl filled with white flowers, combining larkspur and gardenias. At one end of the table was the wedding cake.

Irma Verna Bayley, daughter of Mrs. Gordon H. Bayley, was married to Jack Gaylord Briner, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gaylord H. Briner of Harvard Road last Friday night in Central Christian church.

The bride wore candlelight satin with long sleeves puffed at the shoulders. The gown had a smocked waist and long train. Two pearl clips marked the neckline. There was a silk tulle veil — a Juliet cap bound in two rows of white satin, holding a long veil covering the train. She carried stephanites, snow white roses and white orchids tied with satin.

Rhea Margaret Bayley, sister of the bride was maid of honor and wore a dress of heaven blue marquisette, full bishop sleeves, smocked yokes outlined with ruffle. She wore a Juliet cap to match the blue of the dress made exactly like the cap of the bride. She carried white dahlias, snow white roses, maline, tied with white satin.

The bridesmaids were Betty St. Clair, Mary Louise Mann, and Mrs. Neil Gillies. John Spitzer was best man, and ushers were Tom Miller, Mike Zimmer, Jerome Fayram, John Quirk and Charles Shaw.

A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, 824 Stockdale. The couple left for a trip to Ohio where they will race the Caprice, Mr. Briner's sloop in the Interlake Yachting Regatta. From there they will motor through Quebec and back through the eastern states. They will be at home on Kearsley Park boulevard after Sept. first.

Vets. Plan Ceremony

Against a background of the greatest collection of modern instruments of war ever assembled in the United States, 50,000 Michigan war veterans will hold memorial services on Sunday, September 7th, during the state fair.

The services will be held in the state fair shell centering the Mall where the great United States government exhibit of planes, tanks, and guns will be located. Veterans of all wars in which this country has engaged, including the Civil War, will attend, Bernard J. Youngblood, fair manager, announces. On that day, also, all veterans with suitable identification will be admitted to the fair free.

Just A Handful

by GEORGE GIBBS

CHAPTER XIII

Synopsis
Camilla Dean tours the East and becomes greatly interested in Ronald Barker — El Kerak — mysterious leader of tribes in Palestine. In order to obtain information helpful to Barker, she accepts the attentions of Hassan Isar, but refuses his proposal of marriage. Motoring across the Syrian desert Camilla is carried off by followers of Hassan and taken to a Bedouin encampment. Ronald's tribesmen attack, and Hassan is killed.

Camilla rode in silence beside Ronnie for a way. As he had said, there was no time for sentiment — only a brief touch of fingers, a glance of eyes as they rode toward the moon. "You know the Saied Ahmal?" she asked, as they gave their weary horses a walk.

"I've seen him — as I said, another descendant of the Prophet. I wonder why I never thought of him before. I've got to pay him a visit."

"We," she corrected. "I'm going with you, Ronnie."

He smiled with a fondness she had begun to understand. "You're simply incorrigible."

"But how are we going to get there?"

"A plane, my dear, the one I flew from Jerusalem. This is a land of great distances. Barring mishaps we should be in Bagdad this afternoon."

"Wonderful man! The magic carpet of Ronnie al-Rashid."

From time to time, as they reached an elevation, he turned in his saddle to look backward. But there were no signs of immediate pursuit. Evidently the death of Hassan Isar had put a temporary damper on their warlike operations.

"But if they are so many, aren't your men afraid?"

"The Anazeh don't often cross the line of the Jebel Hauran. We have already taught them several lessons."

Rosy signals had already been sent up from the horizon before Jebel Hauran showed its exact proportions — a great hill aspiring to be a mountain rising out of a grove of palm trees. Men came reconnoitering. El Kerak's men, she found, and in half an hour they were in an encampment very like Hassan's but much larger and set in a cleft of the mountain which had grown bigger as they approached it and commanded a view in all directions.

Here, she realized at once, were the headquarters of El Kerak, Ronald Barker's home in the desert, for there seemed to be an air of permanence in the setup of the tents. He made her lie in a hammock outside his tent while he saw to the preparation of the plane for immediate departure. And then breakfast — a solid breakfast of eggs, native bread made into toast, and coffee. "Are you still game?" he asked her. "Or hadn't I better send you back to Beirut with some of my men?"

She grinned at him. "If I wouldn't go before when you asked me, why should I go now? As a good sportsman—"

"You want to be in at the death? Right! It's your hunt now as well as mine."

Ronnie had decided to take Yusuf with them and he entered the cockpit full of joy at the venture.

Camilla realized as they climbed the air that she had been less with Ronnie than with Hassan, and that here at last was Ronnie as she had always thought of him, whether she was with him or not, sure, determined, cool, commanding, no longer the fantastic creature of the many disguises but a real individual of flesh and blood, to whom, in spirit as well as fact she had given all her friendship and all her affection. There had never been any other. With Ronnie beside her, that purposeful look in his eyes, it was Hassan who was now fantastic and unreal. She had wept a tear or two as she remembered his many kindnesses, but had dried them quickly when she remembered what had happened last night.

One event followed another so quickly that the remainder of her pilgrimage to Bagdad, beginning with the exaltation of her swift flight in Ronnie's plane was more like fancy than reality. And as she tried to remember what had happened, she saw a series of pictures, recalled a series of conversations, like the shifting colors of a kaleidoscope. The Syrian desert, unrolling like a tapestry beneath them, thrilling her with an alarming sense of the spaciousness of the earth, an infinite variety of patches of green that were oases; other patches, like inkspots, that were the tents of the Bedouins; crawling worms of caravans that twisted and turned among the hillocks.

There wasn't much time to spare and having discovered that the two ancient men were alone in the house, Ronnie quickly pushed Osman Khali down upon the divan...

It seemed only a moment before the four tall minarets and the dome of the Kazemian came into sight against the distant background of the city, a shorter while again, before the nose of the plane tilted down and the earth seemed to come up to meet them with alarming rapidity.

"There's Kufah nearby, Camilla, and here is where we land."

He did it skillfully in a flat place alongside the river which seemed to be a landing field. A few thank-you-ma'ams rather joyous than dangerous, and the plane taxied to a stop. Then, after one deep breath, as if in relief, it was silent.

The pictures became very definite now — mud houses and a plane or two under a roof of thatch, Yusuf getting out with Ronnie and talking to a man who seemed to be in charge of the place.

She remembered that Ronnie said something that made the keeper of the airport begin salaaming at once, and then, when Ronnie gave him money, led them around the huts to a dilapidated car of an early vintage in which Ronnie presently drove them along a good road toward a grove of orange trees which surrounded a house on a hill. There was a pretty little garden at the side where a man in white was sitting in a camp chair under the trees. When Ronnie came up the path with Camilla, mentioning the name of Gertrude Bell, the man in the camp chair seemed to uncoil himself and attain a great height, making salutations like a dancing cobra. He was well over six feet and his face was black with age, his beard scarlet with the stains of henna, while on his head a great green turban framed his head majestically like a crown. With the name of Gertrude Bell still upon his lips, he gave Camilla a toothless smile and led the way into a room where another man sat reading and smoking a narghile.

He was a little man with a round pot-belly, a scraggly gray beard, and watery eyes set in pouches of purplish flesh, partially concealed by spectacles which rested lightly on his little pointed hooked nose. He relinquished his water pipe with evident regret and rose salaaming to Camilla while Ahmal made the introductions.

This insignificant person, she found, was Osman Khali, the man whom all the trouble was about, the only true descendant of the Prophet with a pure line, the multi of Jerusalem, the symbol of the Moslem faith, and the leader of modern thought throughout the eastern world.

There wasn't much time to spare and, having discovered that the two ancient men were alone in the house, Ronnie quickly pushed Osman Khali down upon the divan and wrapped his head in his white robe in which he gasped and sputtered ineffectually while his hands clawed vacancy. The Saied Ahmal, taken completely by surprise, stared helplessly at Osman and Ronnie and didn't awake to the necessities of the situation until Yusuf, who had been waiting for this moment, had blocked the doorway. But the old man was game and struck at Yusuf with his bony fist, then, at the sight of a pistol sank feebly beside Osman on the divan.

"It's really a pity," Ronnie said, as he tied Osman's arms with a rope that Yusuf had brought, then tied the arms and legs of Ahmal, "for they are two very respectable old gentlemen."

By this time Osman was stricken with terror at the sight of Yusuf's gun and gave them no trouble whatever, yielding to Ronnie's persuasions as his hands were tied behind him. They needed his legs for purposes of locomotion.

"We are very sorry, Affandi," Ronnie said quietly, "that it was necessary for us to make this visit, but the presence of Osman Khali is most earnestly demanded in Jerusalem. If he gives us no trouble he will be treated with the utmost respect and consideration. As for yourself, Saied Ahmal, you will doubtless be released before we have been gone more than a few moments."

He thought it too ironical to wish that Allah be with them and so he merely bowed and walked out of the room with Camilla, peering before them for signs of enemies, while Yusuf came leading the descendant of the Prophet to the car. No one was in sight at the moment and Osman was so terrified at the sight of Yusuf's gun poking at his ribs that he sat quite peacefully while Ronnie drove away.

"I'm not much used to—to hijacking," Camilla gasped feebly. "What will happen when we get to the landing field?"

"That," Ronnie said, "is in the lap of the gods."

"But suppose," she insisted, "that the man there tries to prevent our flying away?"

"That might create a difficult situation," he replied calmly. "But there's always a way out."

As they sped back toward the landing field they were aware of a commotion from the garden where Ahmal, who had succeeded in releasing himself, was yelling and waving his arms so that his robes flapped in the air like the wings of some gigantic bird. The noise that he made was extraordinary and they saw people come running out of the fields from all directions.

Ronnie drove out on the flying field near his plane and helped Osman and Camilla up into the cabin. By this time the cries of Ahmal and his friends had reached the flying port and its keeper came running out to see what the noise was all about. As the plane began to move, a suspicion of what was happening seemed to come to him, for he rushed out and took hold of the wing of the plane. But when Yusuf fired a shot past his head, he relinquished his hold, stumbled, and fell into the sand. The plane gathered momentum and before Ahmal could reach them they were already off the ground and clearing the huts and palm trees. Shots were fired but Ronnie only laughed while he gave his plane the "gun," soared over the minarets of Kazemian, and squared away for the West.

He was afraid to stop at Hit for he knew the wireless would soon be busy and Moslem planes searching the sky. So, after a satisfactory glance at his gauges, he made directly west for Jebel Hauran. According to Ronnie, the party was not to be a complete success until the descendant of the Prophet could be securely placed behind bars in a British prison where no one would know his identity.

And so Camilla's pilgrimage successfully ended. They stopped at the camp of Jebel Hauran for a short rest and sleep and then they took off again for the distant mountains to the West where in a few hours she would be in touch with Josie and her friends in America. "Is it to be Jerusalem?" she asked.

He nodded. "Jerusalem and then perhaps the fortress at Acre. My job's done. The camp at Jebel Hauran is to be broken up before the Anazeh can sweep down upon it. El Kerak, the sheik and robber baron, passes out of the picture and becomes again the name of a village. Syria will see me no more. I'll fold my tents like the Arabs and silently steal away."

"The death of Hassan Isar will make a commotion?"

"Naturally. I won't be coming east of the Lebanon for a while unless I find another identity. I'm afraid my usefulness for England in the East is gone."

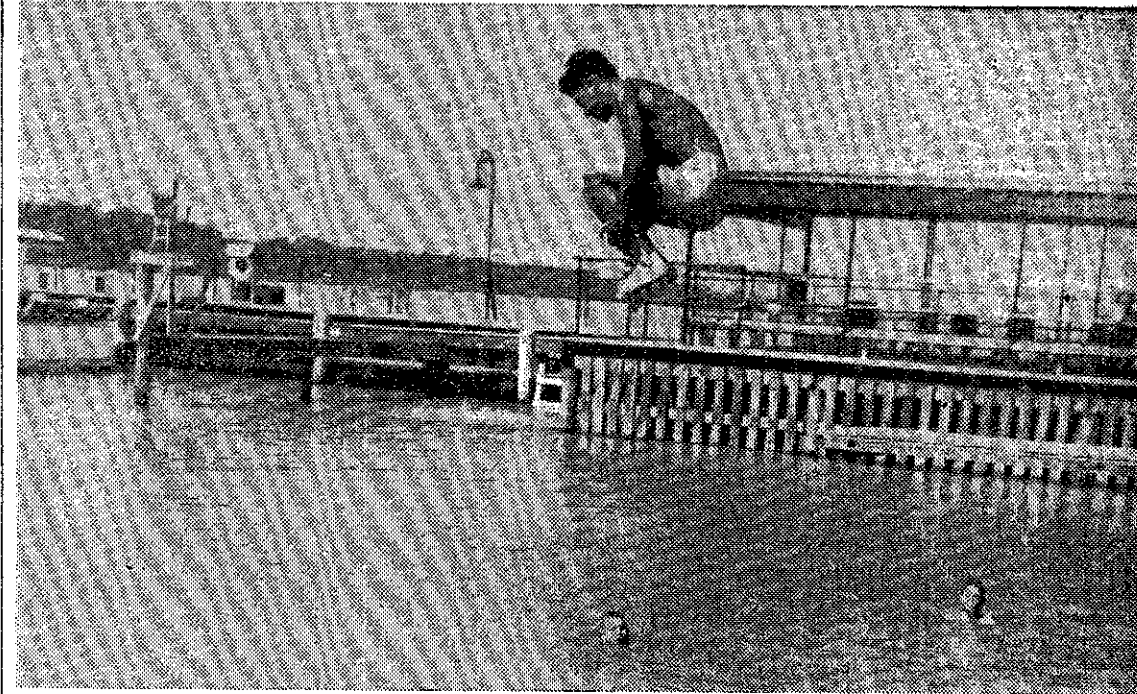

"I suppose you'll think I'm selfish when I say I'm glad."

His glance questioned. "Just that there are other purposes, other utilities for a man of your talents, I might say another identity—"

"What?"

"Why not your own? Hasn't it occurred to you that you've taken enough risks for England — that you've a right to become Ronald Barker himself, a man with two countries instead of a man without

"WE LEAD, OTHERS FOLLOW"

CHARLES A. POUPARD

We pay tribute this week to Charles A. Poupard, pioneer Grosse Pointe resident, who has just completed a quarter of a century of service to our community, as a member of the Grosse Pointe board of education.

Mr. Poupard has watched Grosse Pointe grow from a farming district to one of the finest residential sections in the United States. He has watched the development of our educational system from the one-room school house to one of the finest groups of schools in the country. In that phenomenal development he has played a very important part.

Of the 25 years he has been on the school board, he has been treasurer of the district for the past 24 years. This is indeed an honorable record of public service. Those who know Charlie personally, and there are few Grosse Pointers who do not, know him to be a man of sterling quality, honest and fearless. His charitable nature is well known and many a needy family in the Pointes has received assistance from him when things looked darkest.

We assume that Mr. Charles A. Poupard will be a member of the board of education just as long as he feels able to shoulder the burden that he has carried for the past 25 years. That is because he is the kind of a citizen that is needed on such an important public body.

We congratulate Mr. Poupard upon his splendid record in the past and we trust that God will spare him to round out many more years of public service.

Government of the World

I pledge allegiance to my flag
And to the world for which it stands,
One planet indivisible,
With liberty and justice for all.

To reach a solution where the people of all nations might repeat that pledge together seems to be the broad aim of the present day. This has probably been a general aim of humanity ever since mankind first inhabited the earth.

Now, with the world at war, the hope of mankind is, as it has been in all major wars of the past, that this will be the war to end wars.

As each nation in the world becomes more and more international in its trading and in its thinking, most every nation agrees that its welfare depends upon the welfare and activities of other nations.

There are many in America who would like to build a wall around our country and forget the rest of the world. But without considering the arguments for and against such an isolationist policy, all of us now realize that our government is pledged to a policy of internationalism. Whether we like it or not, our interests have been thrown in with the interests of Europe, Asia, South America and Africa. And our nation's leaders are trying to envision a League of Nations, stronger than anything dreamed of in the past, which after the war will lead all countries to work together under a government of the world.

It may not be in the lifetime of any of us now living that such a solution will become an actuality. But it is good food for dreams. The trouble is that wars, while they breed friendships between allies, at the same time deepen the enmity between those fighting one another.

When Orson Welles frightened thousands of people with his radio dramatization of an invasion by the people of the planet Mars, he perhaps hinted at the solution. If the world had a common enemy - an enemy that demanded the uniting of all nations on the globe to defeat it - that would bring about the world solidarity being sought.

But perhaps some day we can agree that war itself is the enemy of the whole world and unite in a crusade of all nations to drive it from the face of the earth.

STIMSON VS. WHEELER

America took a real step forward toward the much-tooted unity which we are seeking when Secretary of War Stimson apologized to Senator Wheeler for charging him with possible treason and when Senator Wheeler accepted his apology.

These two men are at opposite poles so far as their views on this country's participation in the war are concerned. Secretary Stimson had accused Senator Wheeler of actions near to treason, charging him with deliberately circularizing soldiers to resist the extension of military service.

Senator Wheeler had countered with the charge that Secretary Stimson was leading a "smear campaign of warmongers." It looked like a knockdown, drag-out fight when Secretary Stimson dramatically issued a statement saying:

"I believe that he (Senator Wheeler) has shown the absence of any intent on his part to circularize the soldiers in the training camps. I am sorry that on the basis of incomplete evidence I made a statement last week which carried a contrary implication."

Following that statement, Senator Wheeler commented: "It was a very decent thing for him to do."

This doesn't mean these two men are any closer together in their views. But it is reminiscent of that famous statement attributed to Voltaire:

"I disapprove of what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it."

There is no better expression of the type of freedom of speech which has made Democracy work in this country. It is heartening to know that even in these perilous times, government leaders are willing to pause in their battle over our nation's aims to give recognition to the right of an opponent to speak his mind.

WOMEN in the NEWS

By Hope Chamberlin

Third Time Charm

Under the matrimonial wire for the third time, the former "Peaches" Browning is now married to Joseph S. Civelli, a San Francisco department store manager. Her first mate was the millionaire E. W. ("Daddy") Browning, now deceased. She divorced her second husband, Bernard J. Hynes, Denver theater manager, four years ago.

Declines Movie Test

Evidently a career in Hollywood holds little appeal for 17-year-old Gloria Vandebilt Morgan. The New York heiress spurned screen tests offered her, while she was visiting on the West coast. She was once the center figure in a three-cornered custody court battle.

Girls Begin Bombers

Women will enter the field of bomber-plane manufacture in San Diego, Calif., in response to a direct request from the Office of Production Management, by co-director Sidney Hillman. Four hundred young women will be trained and employed by the Consolidated Aircraft corporation, there, in light mechanical operations. They employ 9,000 men.

Women Without a Country

The tiny Estonian freighter, Harjand, docked recently at Philadelphia, with Stewardess Salmie Tammi and another woman who smilingly refused to give her name. Since Russia seized Estonia and ordered the ship home, an order which was refused by the captain, the 1,005-ton vessel has sailed from port to port and the two women have no other home and no legal entry to another country. The unidentified woman who was smartly dressed, has been acting as cook aboard the ship.

Angels of Mercy

Santa Catalina Island was the scene recently of extensive maneuvers by more than a thousand members of the Women's Ambulance and Defense Corps of America. Spectators voted the demonstration of technique and training a thrilling spectacle of what American womanhood can and will do for their country.

AMERICA FIRST MEETING

Robert Vietig, executive secretary of the Michigan division of the America First Committee, will preside at a meeting of the Detroit division at Cass Tech auditorium tonight at 8 p.m.

Vietig has just returned from Cleveland where he met with Colonel Lindbergh and other America First leaders.

Today and Tomorrow

Trap — Lies

The other day I heard an undersized 12-year-old boy solve all the problems of the world. It all sounded very easy. He knew what was wrong, why it was wrong and what ought to be done about it.

I don't know who the boy was, I just overheard him talking to his aunt in a restaurant. I picked up my ears when I heard his eager voice say, "Gee, if I could only be dictator of the world for just 24 hours!"

"You must do something to get the problems of the world off your shoulders," his aunt told him. "But I suggested that he join the Boy Scouts, go away to camp and enjoy the things other boys his age are enjoying. 'You're too nervous and high-strung for a boy your age,' she said.

But he would have none of this getting-away-from-it-all stuff. He wanted to stay right in the thick of things.

"You don't understand what's going on," he informed her. "But I can see the world's walking right into a trap. I don't mean the war. The war's just part of it. I mean a trap made of lies. The trouble today is that you can't believe anybody."

"Lookit," he went on confidently, "how can you expect people and countries to get along together when you can't believe anybody? Even my history books are just written to tell me what somebody wants me to believe. No kidding, there's nobody I can trust—not Roosevelt, or Churchill or my teachers, or even my friends. And that's what is going to ruin the world!"

Ambition — Youth

My young philosopher friend was just as excitable when he talked about going off the parachute jump in an amusement park as he was over the problems of the world. Although precocious, he still had an interest in boyish things.

But it was hard to believe that the discussion of the world situation, to which his conversation always went back, was coming from the mouth of the small boy at the table next to me. He really intended.

MICKIE SAYS—

ed to do something about it and his ambitions were limitless.

"Lookit," he explained, "when I get a little older I'm going to start working for votes. First I'll run for the senate and then I'll be President of the United States. By that time all of the other countries of the world will be so weak that I can take an army to Europe and gradually conquer the whole world without shooting anybody. Then I'll make myself dictator, tell the world how Truth is the answer to everything and then set the people free!"

It sounded as easy as pie. Coming from an older man it would have sounded like the ravings of a madman, but from this boy, although amusing, it merely exemplified the scope of ambitions which youth can feel before experience rears its discouraging head.

Thinkers — Practicality

Most adults laugh at the impulsive, untested ideas of youth. It is a common practice among most of us to put a damper on them—to puff up with experience and say, "Wait a minute! Not so fast! Hold on! I'll never work! You can't do that! It's impractical! Too theoretical! You'll learn!"

But maybe we are the ones who are wrong—adults who laughed at the idea of a steamboat, mocked the horseless carriage, guffawed at the telephone, and thought the Wright brothers were a couple of lunatics who wanted to be birds.

The ideas of a 12-year-old boy, or an 18-year-old boy may need a lot of tightening up and adjusting, but basically these youngsters may have something new to add to our store of ideas—new angles that represent the philosophy of 1960.

Ideas — Birth

Before we put the clamps on Junior's ideas, it's worthwhile to review our own thinking before we reach maturity.

Do you remember the ideas you had when you were in your teens? I know I do and I think in general I had better ideas then than I have ever had since. Maybe a lot of them weren't practical, but secretly I cherish them.

Look up in the attic of your mind. Dust off some of those wild conclusions which at one time meant so much to you. Maybe they were rough-edged and incomplete, but don't they contain something basic, which, if they hadn't met so much resistance, might have been of some use to you or to the world?

It is the theory of some philosophers that no new ideas are ever added to the world's original fund of ideas. All the ideas, which we call new, according to their theories, are just a reshaping of old ideas.

But if there is such a thing as a new idea — if society is going to discover better ways to get along — it seems likely that those ideas will be borne to new minds rather than old. We are all pretty familiar with the workings of the leading adult minds of our day. For something new, let's look to the new models—the minds which have been untested but may come to us with fresh, original thoughts.

Summer Theatre

The more humorous aspects of high school existence are portrayed in all of their glory at Will-O-Way Playhouse in Bloomfield Hills this week as Clifford Goldsmith's "What A Life" continues to please capacity audiences.

Gene Reynolds, a Hollywood player who has appeared in "Boys Town" and other movies of that variety, plays the part of the harried Henry Aldrich, whose troubles have since been carried on every Thursday night over the air waves. Reynolds training as a somewhat dead-end kid did him well, for the part of Henry Aldrich was that of a kid who gets in more trouble than a dead-end kid ever thought of.

While we're at it, the title of this play is "What A Life" and not "What A Night" as previously reported in a newspaper we won't mention. We don't know what they could have been thinking of.

One young gentleman had a recurring bit in this show that kept us howling all the time. We almost had to explain to those sitting near us that we weren't a relative, at all. He was advertised as Sherwood Jackman, of Cranbrook and "The Early Days of Pontiac" over the radio. You know what Cranbrook boys look like — short, hair parted in the middle, shell-rimmed glasses and a big sweater with a "C" right in the middle. They're all athletes, you know. But this fellow didn't look Cranbrookish at all. As for the "Days of Pontiac," we'll leave that to you. But Jackman, playing a walk-on, or run-on as the case seemed to be, took command of the stage every time he entered. His particularly loud voice and slightly wacky expressions brought forth laughs in generous portions.

When he had been kept during lunch hour for speaking out of turn, he gave forth with the best line in the show. He wailed, "Now the lunchroom's closed and I'll have to eat the lunch my mother fixed." We thought we'd die.

This lad has a great future. If he keeps his voice and facial expression he's a cinch for "Hellzapoppin" in a few years.

There were three or four excellent characterizations of school teachers that seemed very accurate to us, as well as howlingly funny. Violet Koppy as one of these school marmos contributed to the general wackiness very well.

The adult female lead was the secretary to the principal of the high school. And here we believe Director William (I'll show you the) Way Merrill has tried something that will undoubtedly revolutionize the whole play-producing business.

He will go down in history as the man who first thought of letting a secretary play the part of a secretary in a play. It was uncanny how this girl played the part of the secretary — she must be a secretary. Only a secretary could have read lines the way she did, and only a secretary would open her mouth so wide, except for a dentist.

Vance Hallick as the principal of the school gave an excellent portrayal, although he was just a bit Sherlock Holmesish at times.

Betty Jane Smith played the juvenile female lead, and was just too sweet. The high school girls we know of that age couldn't have been so sensitive and sweet. Then, of course, we've led a sheltered life. But she had a nice voice.

On the Cuff — The rest of the theatre front is all quiet, except, of course, "Life With Father" at the Cass which seems to be going to go on forever... Up at Michigan the Summer theatre is presenting this week Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Gondoliers"... in which they use everyone enrolled in the Summer school.

This Week IN WASHINGTON

Women standing six deep at the stocking counters in department stores indicate that the war really hit home when American women were informed by defense authorities here that they may soon be unable to buy any silk stockings at all. Although the protests were few, since most American women oppose doing business with Japan even if it does mean the end of silk hosiery, the buying panic brought even closer the day when the supply will be exhausted.

Cutting off our $100,000,000 annual purchase of raw silk from Japan, plus the great use for silk in parachutes and other defense items, probably means that silk stockings will be unavailable by Fall. There will also be a major scarcity of nylon hosiery, since nylon production equipment is not able to fill more than a small portion of our nation's demand for silk, and nylon is also being used in defense industries.

Although this is in the nature of a minor tragedy to fashionable women, a real tragedy faced the 175,000 workers in the silk weaving industry in this country who were threatened with loss of their jobs. To protect them, the Office of Price Administration issued an emergency order that all rayon yarn producers set aside a portion of their stock and of their daily output for a government pool which will supply the material to silk mills so that they may make rayon stockings and dresses to replace their silk production.

This order, however, is creating a scarcity of rayon in the factories which will call for further adjusting and a future scarcity of rayon. It also is likely to lead to major increases in the price of silk, nylon and rayon stockings, unless prices are curbed by government control. The many complications caused by a sudden scarcity of one material are well illustrated by this crisis in the hosiery industry. It is, however, only one of many domestic industries which is being disrupted by similar scarcities, including such necessary defense materials as aluminum, steel, rubber, tin, copper, etc.

Another example is the situation in the automobile industry which was brought into the limelight when the United Automobile Workers of America asked that a program be worked out by the government to cope with the possible loss of jobs by hundreds of thousands of automobile workers. Most of us thought these workers would be absorbed in the defense work if the threatened 50 per cent cut in automobile production goes through. But they pointed out that the defense business would not absorb their workers, since the reason for a drastic cut in automobile production would be a scarcity of material rather than manufacturing facilities and man-power and that they understood it would lead to the closing of many big automobile factories.

Curbs on gasoline in the East also are expected to cause major disruptions, due to need for less workers in service stations and in delivery work. The seven o'clock closing idea is not expected to cut gasoline consumption enough and it is now anticipated that rationing may go into effect after Labor Day.

Because of such situations as these, a flood of control orders are being issued here and legislation is being sought to protect the interests of both workers and consumers.

One of the major pieces of legislation which has been heatedly debated is a measure making it possible to put ceilings on prices and on rents. The President has warned that such legislation is needed to prevent prices from spiraling upward on everything from automobiles to food products.

The majority in both houses of congress immediately saw the need for such legislation, as analysis showed prices on many products already have gone up considerably. Chief opposition came from the farm bloc in congress, which didn't object to ceilings on prices but also wanted a floor on farm prices — a guarantee that prices wouldn't go below a certain level. The suggested ceilings on farm prices was 110 per cent of parity, which was satisfactory to most farm groups.

Another major objection to the measure which is being given serious consideration, is that it does not call for any fixing of wages. It is evident that major wage increases would force prices up or force a loss to the manufacturer or producer.

The tax bill changes suggested by the President, which included reducing the income tax base to include single persons with an income of $750 and married couples with an income of $1,500, were rejected by the house ways and means committee, which already had presented a complete measure, but his suggestion will undoubtedly influence the senate bill.

Congressmen face a difficult job in pleasing their constituents over both the price fixing bill and the tax bill, but because of the emergency it is expected that both measures will be put through with a minimum of delay. When they are signed by the President the consumers and business men of the nation will have a much easier job of making their plans for the future.

Auto Design Opens New Mural Mode

NEW possibilities in the field of mural painting, particularly for outdoor work, may have been advanced in creation of the above futuristic design. This entire scene was done in lacquer with an air-brush. Experts believe it is the largest such project ever successfully completed with a lacquer spray, and some had even felt that use of lacquer in an air-brush was impossible on such a large scale.

The scene above forms the backdrop for the Fisher Body display in the General Motors Parade of Progress. The artist is applying a finishing touch to one of the super-aircraft he perceives for the World of Tomorrow.

The painting, having been done with lacquer, has a degree of brilliance and blended effect which could not have been obtained by other means. It was completed more quickly than would have been possible with water-color or oil. Furthermore its surface, being identical to the finish of an automobile, will resist rain or sun rays just as will automobile duc, and it also may be cleaned just like the body of a car.

The entire scene is 14 feet long by 35 inches high.

Down the slide come the dancing girls who entertained the crowd at the Woods Community celebration last Saturday. Here we have: Wave Dawn Currey, Dorothy McManus, Adele Stackman, Shirley and Joyce Briskorn, Jean and Patricia Loring and Margaret Langley.

1/4 teaspoon mustard
Juice of 1 lemon

Cook this over hot water until it thickens. Cool. Fold it into 2 cups Carnation Milk, whipped. Combine with the fruit, which has been well drained, add the nuts and fold in the marshmallows carefully. Put in refrigerator overnight, and when serving, surround with crisp lettuce.

Cut out this recipe and paste it on a card for your recipe file.

CHILDREN SAFER THAN ADULTS: Credit for the steadily downward trend of child pedestrian fatalities during the last 15 years is due largely to systematic safety training in schools and the work of school safety patrols. School efforts should not be diminished, but much more attention must be devoted to informing adults of street dangers to improve their record. (Data for the above chart is from a Connecticut study of pedestrian fatalities over a 15-year period.)

How to become A SKILLED DRIVER

By RAY W. SHERMAN

LET THE ENGINE HELP YOU BRAKE

At any speed—other than very, very low—let the engine help you brake. It doesn't hurt the engine and it doesn't require any gas. In using the engine for a brake, leave the clutch in until you are nearly to the stopping point. Then kick the clutch out and make the stop. In the illustration, the left foot is getting ready to depress the clutch pedal when the brake and engine have slowed the car down to the proper speed.

If you can see far ahead that you must make a stop, the engine can do much of the braking for you and thus save the brakes from excessive wear.

Shirer's Book Is Popular

More than 340,000 copies of William L. Shirer's book, "Berlin Diary," are now in print.

The book is largely the story of Shirer's experiences inside Nazi Germany while Berlin correspondent for the Columbia broadcasting system.

Shirer never expected to find his book a best-seller.

"I'm pleased, too, naturally," he said from his office in CBS headquarters in New York.

He has a stream of visitors, each carrying the books to be autographed. Shirer is going right ahead with his broadcasting work. On August 21 he takes the place of Elmer Davis, CBS news analyst, who is going on vacation.

Alfred Knopf, publishers of "Berlin Diary," are also surprised at its success. "It's selling more copies at a faster rate than any book we've put out in 25 years of publishing," they say.

Shirer started the diary habit in 1930 when he went to India to report news of the Ghandi movement. "I'd like to have that diary now," he said. But he doesn't know where it is. In his travels for news he has left boxes of belongings at various points. He thinks the India diary is either in Geneva or somewhere in Spain. He was living in Spain when the civil war broke out there. Loyalist troops seized his possessions, so if the India diary was there, he has given up hope of finding it.

Shirer is a believer in the diary method. "When you don't write down notes on big events, you can never bring them back with crystal clarity—no matter how good your memory is."

Shirer began keeping a very complete journal after the war started. "I would jot down notes as I went along, sometimes on a pad held on my knee while bumping along in an army car."

At night he would write the notes up fully in the diary. He said it was very hard sometimes after an exhausting day. He wanted to sleep.

"But generally in the excitement of war you could get along with very little sleep," he said.

Shirer can't explain just what made his book successful. "I suppose it was a combination of timing, material—and some luck."

He noticed a current best seller at the time he was writing "Berlin Diary" that was full of blood and thunder episodes.

"That made me think mine might not go over, because I had no blood and thunder tales."

But he said he had something to say, so just kept working along and said it.

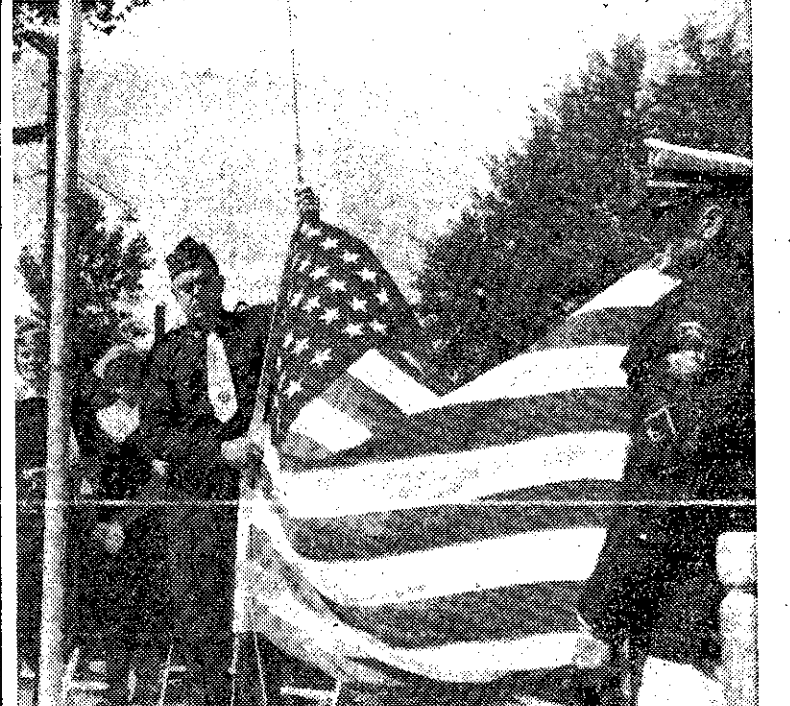

At the moment Shirer is taking a little vacation from diary writing.
