RABAUT IN CENTRAL AMERICA

WASHINGTON — The six Central American republics are small in size, but their importance to the United States is great. Together with Mexico, they provide the overland link between the United States and the Panama canal, which joins the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific across the Isthmus of Panama. Economically also the Central American states are linked closely to the United States. Economic problems were included in the subjects discussed with leading statesmen of Central America by the committee of United States congressmen who visited 17 good neighbor republics under the leadership of the Hon. Louis C. Rabaut of Michigan. He is shown photographed at the time of his visit to Managua, capital of the republic of Nicaragua.

While in Managua, Mr. Rabaut was presented by President Somoza with a magnificent table top made of Nicaraguan mahogany. Inlaid in the table was a map of the 21 American republics made of other valuable native woods, while a line marked the course of the trip taken by Congressman Rabaut and his colleagues.

Every day to the frequently held misconception, the Central American countries do not consist only of tropical jungle lands, but contain some of the most varied, beautiful and enjoyable areas of the western hemisphere. A large part of this area is covered by the great mountain range which here connects the Rockies of North America with the Andes of the southern continent. Up in the highlands the climate is cool and pleasant, giving to this section of the Americas the name of "land of eternal spring." Some of the world's best coffee comes from the highlands of Central America.

Flanking the mountains on either side, however, are the tropical lowlands where the major industry is banana farming. American fruit companies have played a leading role in developing the production and handling of bananas and other tropical fruits, the larger part of which is shipped to the United States.

Close economic ties with the United States have been in part responsible for better friendship on the part of these six small states. All of them declared war on the Axis powers very shortly after the Japs attacked Pearl Harbor. As allies of the United States, the Central American republics are helping us defend the Panama Canal from attack or sabotage, and are participating in the construction of the inter-American highway which will shortly give us an overland route from Texas to the canal.

The importance of economic relationships between the United States and the other countries of this continent was stressed by Congressman Rabaut in the report of his committee following their extensive trip through 17 countries of Latin America last year. Referring to the already great progress made in trade relations with our sister republics, the report said, "There is an opportunity afforded at the present time to work out a plan of hemispheric economic solidarity that can be no less effective for our future well-being than the political solidarity that we aspire to for the immediate future."

Largest of the Central American countries is Guatemala, situated just south of Mexico, a country that was the first of the ancient Mayan Indians to settle. Keeping pace with the measurements of modern civilization, it has now become an important center of textile production, and has a long record of successful...

Mason School N-E-W-S

This year more than ever before, it is vital that each and every person does his bit. At Mason school, the safety patrol and the service club are two important student organizations designed to aid in solving the problems of conduct arising from the growth of the school, both inside and out.

Twenty boys are serving almost seven hundred pupils as safety patrol members. These boys are patrolling corners at 14 different intersections. This week the Mason school club is striving to contact every pupil in order to acquaint him with the duties of the patrol boys. One of the important things being stressed is the time at which patrol boys are on their respective corners. We are urging pupils to cross streets at these times:

8:45 a.m. to 9:10 a.m. 11:55 a.m. to 12:15 p.m., 12:50 p.m. to 1:10 p.m., 3:55 p.m. to 4:15 p.m.

Five boys are on duty each day as bus boys. The co-captains of the patrol are Jack Rowe and Dick Nightingale. The lieutenant is Wallace Swayne.

Within the building itself the service girls, or "duty" girls are accepting responsibilities similar to those of teachers' assistants. They help enforce the safety rules in the halls. Another important duty is to assist the teacher on duty in the lunchroom. Since an average of 150 pupils stay for lunch every day, the service girls are greatly needed in passing out milk and seeing that each child gets a seat. The captain of the service girls is Barbara Carter, and June Riodes is lieutenant. These are just two of the ways in which children learn how to accept responsibility.

All of the rooms were gaily decorated in celebration of Halloween — featuring pumpkins, mysterious cats, and witches galore. The children enjoyed the seasonal treat of apples, popcorn and cookies.

Football Interpretations

—By J. DUNTON BARLOW—

Before proceeding to a general discussion of the punt it would seem that once again we should remember that there are four different kinds of kicks in football. (Five including the kicking over decisions.) These kicks are: First, the free kick which was discussed last week. 2. The kick for goal. 3. The kick from scrimmage. 4. The return kick.

In football, penalties for rule infractions are governed as they relate to the spot of enforcement by possession of the ball at the time of the foul or infraction. In the interscholastic code there is no such thing as a "free" ball. The ball may at times not be in possession of any player but it is always in team possession. Hence when a ball is in the air or on the ground following a kicking it is a loose ball and is in possession of the team that kicked it. It is treated as a kick and in the kicking team's possession until the receivers recover it. The interscholastic code treats all kicks in the same manner as far as the enforcement of penalties for fouls occurring during the kick is concerned. (Remember it is a kick until the receivers gain possession of it.)

The kick from scrimmage, commonly referred to as a punt, is one that is made by a player of the team in possession of the ball from a position behind his line of scrimmage. The punt is a method of kicking the ball and is the one usually used in kicks from scrimmage, however, a drop or place kick may be used, so this type of kick cannot properly be called a "punt." A punt is made by dropping the ball and kicking it before it touches the ground. It may be dropped by a player other than the one that kicks it but this is most unusual. A drop kick is made by dropping the ball and kicking it as it or after it has touched the ground. A place kick is one where the ball is held on the ground by one player for another player to kick. If any one of these is made from behind the line it is a kick from scrimmage.

For the purpose of conserving space the following discussion will be limited to kicks that are not intended to score a field goal, or free kicks. Any kick (remember it is a kick until the receivers gain possession of it) that goes out of bounds between the goal lines belongs to the receivers at the point where it went out of bounds regardless of whether it crosses the line of scrimmage or not. Example: St. Ambrose vs St. Paul. Third and 10 yards to go for St. Ambrose on their own 20 yard line. St. Ambrose kicks and Otto of St. Paul's blocks the kick. The ball rolls toward the side line and just before the ball goes out of bounds on St. Ambrose's 10 yard line Gory of St. Paul touches the ball. St. Paul's ball, first and goal to go. Many people confuse this touching with the rule that applies on a fumble that goes out of bounds which says that the ball belongs to the team whose player last touched it before it went out of bounds. The play in question was not a fumble but rather a kick.

If a kick does not cross the line of scrimmage for any reason the players of either team may pick it up and advance it. After it crosses the line, only players on the receiving team may advance it. If after crossing the line it is first touched by a member of the kicker's team the receivers may advance the ball without fear of losing possession by fumbling for if they do fumble, the receivers may take possession of the ball where the kickers first touched it.

Example: Grosse Pointe vs Mount Clemens. Mt. Clemens kicks to Grosse Pointe from the 50 yard line. Mt. Clemens' end touches the ball first on Grosse Pointe's 10. Grosse Pointe player picks the ball up and runs to his 30 where he fumbles. Mt. Clemens recovers. Grosse Pointe has the choice of letting Mt. Clemens have the ball on the 30 or taking possession of the ball back where first touched on the 10. They naturally would take the latter choice so it would be Grosse Pointe's ball, first and 10 to go, on their own 10 yard line. In other words, the receivers have the right to take the ball wherever the kickers have touched the ball, providing the kickers touch the ball first.

On any kick that crosses the line of scrimmage the kickers cannot advance the ball if they legally recover it. Example: Team A kicks across the line. Player of Team B touches but does not catch the kick. Player on A team recovers the ball. Team A's ball, first and 10. If on this play a Team B man had caught the ball and then fumbled and team A had recovered the ball before it struck the ground, team A could advance the ball because the kick ended when Team B got possession. If team A had recovered after the ball struck the ground, he could not have advanced it, not because of the kick advanced in the air, but rather because of the fumble rule which says that a player is not to advance the ground may be recovered but not advanced by the team that did not

THE RETURN KICK
This is a kick seldom used but it won a game for U. of D. once. Example: Team A kicks (kick-off or kick from scrimmage), player of team B catches the kick and instead of running with the ball kicks it right back. That is a return kick. It may be made any time during the game providing the player kicking the ball has received it as a kick from the opponents. The rules relative to touching and out of bounds referred to in kicks from scrimmage apply during a return kick.

THE FAIR CATCH
The fair catch is no different than any other catch as far as the mechanics of catching the ball are concerned. The difference lies in what the player who catches the ball does after he catches it and that it may only be made in catching a kick (any kick). It would seem that the name is a misnomer in that a "free catch" would be more descriptive of what actually happens.

A player who is about to catch a kick may see his opponents closing in on him so fast that he feels that a fumble is likely to ensue if he is tackled right after the catch is made. In a case such as this the rules provide he may signal his opponents that he will not take more than two steps after catching the ball. This is a fair catch. The signal for a fair catch is made by raising either hand over the head with the arm stretched out straight.

After this signal no member of the kicking team may hit the receiver in any manner. To do so would call for a 15 yard penalty from "the spot of the catch." As explained in a previous article the kicking team may put the ball in play either by scrimmage or free kick at "the spot of the catch" or any place on a line, parallel to the goal line, drawn through "the spot of the catch." The only exception to this is that if the catch is behind the goal line a free kick cannot be made. If there is a foul on the play the free kick may still be made from the point where the penalty takes the ball. If a receiver does not make the signal as described above, but rather puts his hand up with his arm cocked instead of straight, that is an invalid signal and his team is penalized 15 yards from where the ball was put in play with the kickers getting the ball back first and 10 to go. If the receiver takes more than two steps his team is penalized five yards from "the spot of the catch," and the choice of free kick is not allowed. If one player signals and another one catches the ball before it strikes the ground the ball is dead. In this case the free kick cannot be chosen.

It should be borne in mind that the receivers have a right to signal for a fair catch until the instant the ball is caught. In view of this the kickers cannot interfere with the receiver's right to make a fair catch.

Example: Team A kicks. End of team A is down the field and in front of a potential receiver. The receiver running up to catch the ball runs into the end. Ruling: Interference with opportunity to make fair catch. Penalty: 15 yards from where the ball was put in play with the kickers getting the ball back first and 10 to go. If the receiver takes more than two steps his team is penalized five yards from "the spot of the catch," and the choice of free kick is not allowed. If one player signals and another one catches the ball before it strikes the ground the ball is dead. In this case the free kick cannot be chosen.
