Patriotic Gas Station Man Would Donate Rubber Money

A Well known service station man in Grosse Pointe who modestly requests that his name be withheld, urges that the money which gas and service stations receive for the rubber they collect should be turned over to the Red Cross or the Army or Navy Relief.

It is the general theory of Detroit defense directors that no patriotic gas station man would not be called until the end of the month, if Army defense directors are to receive an alert any time. If they did the OGD would of course cooperate in it.

Day of Reckoning

A great body of public sentiment is fast crystallizing in this country with respect to the war effort. This sentiment will soon take definite direction and the responsible gentlemen had better chalk off on their calendars the first Tuesday after the first Monday next November.

There are 435 members in the lower House and approximately 30 in the Senate who are due to pass in review before this bar and they are praying to high heaven that certain embarrassing questions may not be too insistently shoved under their noses between now and election day.

The rank and file of the people are just now concerned with only one thing, which is to win this war. Relatively, they don't care a tinkers damn whether Bill Jones or Jake Smith is elected to the Senate or House.

It is a sorry affair to our rubber problem when the President of the United States suggests the Government may have to take the tires off the private cars of the country. The people will be willing to give up their cars, or vastly more important things, if necessary, but they are not at all composed in the face of the open squabbles between different groups in the oil business who are apparently more concerned with the rapid loss of adjustment of their businesses than with the quick making of synthetic rubber to first win the war.

The people of this country can be trusted to do everything called for to win this war. They have already given their sons to the count of several millions to face death in every form that modern war invites, but they are growing more impatient daily with the confusion, hesitation and timidity that has accompanied so much of our preparatory work.

They know but little of what is going on behind the scenes but will not be forever satisfied to remain quiescent under the injunction that "information valuable to the enemy might be disclosed."

They have been remarkably patient in accepting war production figures as palliatives against a long list of major defeats which we and our allies have suffered in the broad field of world conflict. We still have unbounded confidence in the quality of our fighting men and in their leadership.

They will not endure indefinitely however, the political timidity of lawmakers, nor the new social order bent of an Executive, to drift this Nation down the stream of economic suicide before the big guns of our actual conflict begin to shoot.

Nelson's Speech

Donald Nelson, generalissimo of our national war production effort, gave a speech at the Book-Cadillac in Detroit last Friday night that was a masterpiece of fact and prophesy. Speaking to the Automotive Council on War Production he ranged over a far greater horizon than the mere conversion of the great automotive industry to a complete war production basis, which is the goal that is being achieved. The output of plants formerly devoted to the manufacture of automobiles or their accessories, he said, now represented approximately one sixth of the entire national output of war materials and this ratio will be maintained if not exceeded.

New York Cavalcade

By LOUIS SOBOL

Lloyd Moore is back in New York after five years abroad during which he spent several months in a Nazi concentration camp, many more months in a French detention camp. He was released from the Drottingholm at 6 o'clock Monday night and immediately headed for the streets of Manhattan and every so often, although he hadn't had a drink, he would raise his hands in jubilation.

He was examined and cross-examined by the F.B.I. He didn't mind. He said nothing and let them do what they pleased with him more than the news when the Drottingholm came into the port than that the Federal spies had come aboard. For he and many more of the passengers had been arrested by German spies aboard, deliberately planted among them, posing as refugees.

The question, "Who was your father?" brought the answer: "The question, he went down to Moore, although one of America's wealthy young men, arrived here without baggage, with nothing to wear except a tattered jacket, a frayed shirt, faded baggy pants and a pair of worn-out shoes had been worn off of a few pennies in change. When I got to the hotel, planning to get between his first clean sheets in six months and the time of his arrival around there, he said, he was going to Washington, try to clear some official record and exist in the Marine Corps."

Charles Kandel, brother of Allen Kandel, the famous novelist, served with distinction and valor in World War I. That silver of ribbon he wears indicated that he is a member of the order of the Purple Heart, the military organization for the wounded. Kandel is a lieutenant. Lately, still feeling sentimental about men in the armed forces, Kandel became shirt-maker and has been tailoring shirts for all his soldier friends. That has been his contribution to the war effort—a gift of tailor-made army shirt for every enlisted man or officer he knew or whom he knew.

Charles Kandel has been classified IA. He rejoins the army as a buck private within a few days.

Ludwig Bemelmans, the humorist-artist, became an Elmer Davis man Monday. George Jean Nathan is agenting a musical by Bill Saroyan—actually has a producer for it. Saroyan spent an hour with Saroyan outlining an idea. The Fresno Flash pointed to him recently by this Friday, including the score which he would whistle.

No matter what you read, the courtship of Gargantua and Pantalo is a complete flop. Gargantua remains suitably different to the lady's eye advances—and the honeymoon which never was never will be. Pierre Laffort former editor of the Paris-Soir, now working for the Office War Information, is in this country. He is desperately ill.

Have you heard the "Star Spangled Banner" played with more martial vigor than the military band sounds it just before the first curtain of "This Is The Army"?

Guests at the Whittier Monday afternoon were startled by the strains of "Jingle Bells" emanating from the adjacent room. Investigation proved it was only the members of the Grosse Pointe Rotary club trying to dupe themselves into thinking it wasn't as hot as the thermometer outside indicates. They had, naturally, the dining rooms at the Whittier, facing right on the river were as cool as any spots we found that day. Maybe the song helped that.

Rare Night-Blooming Flower Identified by Horticulturist

The horticulturists of the Pointe area were greatly intrigued by a story carried in the News in the issue of June 18 about a mysterious flowering plant in the home of Mrs. Clarence Thompson of Hollywood boulevard in the West. The shrub was a perennial first grown by Mrs. Thompson several years ago but its botanical name and common appellation had remained a mystery until now. From the fact that it blossoms only at night and that the blossom quickly perishes it might have been presumed to belong to the family of the night-blooming cereus but the marked difference in the flower set it apart from this group. The blossom was a bright yellow about two inches across and in form was more akin to the wild rose. A patient hunt for identification by a News man among Pointe horticulturists dug out the facts. Mr. DePetris, the well-known florist and botanist of Green Pointe boulevard gave the answer. Now we have the name Biennis grandiflora, if you know what we mean.

Victory Gardening

By V. R. DEPETRIS COMING EVENTS So much has been written in these columns regarding the general culture of garden vegetables that this writing relating to coming events in the Victory Garden Program may be a welcome relief to the whole readers. This should not be misinterpreted as casting disparaging reflections on the veteran gardeners who have worked diligently to add more knowledge to his or her horticultural background. On the contrary, the discussion of the coming Fall program is in itself evidence that definite progress has been made. Victory gardeners are therefore in a position to review their own accomplishments and show the community the fruit of their patriotic efforts. The Victory Garden Council for Grosse Pointe has decided to give every one the opportunity to exhibit vegetables from these gardens at the Neighborhood Club on Saturday and Sunday, September 12th and 13th. This exhibit will occupy one third of the hall and will be held jointly with the annual show of the Grosse Pointe and East Grosse Pointe Horticultural Society. Victory Gardeners are requested to prepare for this event now and save some of the choicest vegetables for exhibition. The schedules are being drawn up by members of the Council representing the various sponsoring garden clubs in all of the Grosse Pointe communities. There will be no charge for entering in any of the classes and no admission charge for Victory Gardeners or their friends and guests. In addition to this program for exhibits, there will be opened a general information booth where leaflets as well as instructive pamphlets issued by the United States Department of Agriculture may be obtained. Information relating to all phases of home gardens as well as canning, preserving and dehydrating of foods by the latest scientific methods may be obtained. In addition to the foregoing, recognition of the best individual garden will be given. Also, the Victory Garden pennant will be awarded to the best group of gardens.

Fort Wayne Post Employs 2,500 Michian Workers

More than 2,500 Michigan men and women are now employed at Detroit's historic old Fort Wayne which now serves the Armies of the United Nations as the central Quartermaster Motor Supply Depot. These war workers are recruited from all parts of Michigan by civil service personnel chiefs on the basis of their skill and background, and the roll call at this busy Quartermaster Depot shows scores of Michigan home towns from Stambough to Monroe. The growth of civilian personnel from four workers in September, 1940 to 2,500 employees today tells part of the dramatic story of the expansion of motor transport activities at century-old Fort Wayne. According to Co. Harz there are now 718 women employees working as stenographers, mimeograph operators, typists, bookkeepers and other office jobs and 1,904 men employed as truck drivers, inspectors, messengers, packers, shippers and scores of other occupations. Fort Wayne civilian employees are on civil service payrolls and work 48 hours each week. For many months most Depot activities have been on a secondary, 24 hour basis and millions of dollars worth of Michigan-made trucks and supplies have been flowing day and night to fighting fronts throughout the world. At the opening of the fiscal year on July 1, 1941 there were 144 employees at Fort Wayne. The increase of personnel during the past twelve months was accelerated during the last sixty days when numerous Motor Transport units of the Quartermaster Corps were transferred from Washington and Baltimore to Fort Wayne. Besides utilizing old barracks for office space, the Quartermaster Corps has leased commercial warehouses and storage areas throughout the metropolitan area and has taken over four floors of the Buhl Building in the heart of metropolitan Detroit.
