Park drops tree tax proposal

By Joanne Gouleche

The Park Council last week refused to place on the Novem ber ballot a 1 mill tax request by the city's Beautification Commission that would generate at least $150,000 over the next four years for a reforestation program.

"Being against trees is like being against motherhood, but so is being against our roads, sewers, and police and fire departments," Councilman Douglas Graham said.

"Our responsibility is to spend money wisely and to give priority to projects that are most important and not necessarily turn our responsibility over to citizens," the councilman said.

CITY MANAGER JOHN Crawford recommended that the proposal be turned down because the city already spends $93,000 on tree trimming, removal, planting and spraying.

"We feel we are keeping up with the tree program.'

But the proposal also hit a sensitive note with the council which was grimly reminded of spring meetings that forced them to delete $200,000 of capital improvement and equipment items from a bare-bones budget.

At that time the council tabled a proposal to finance capital improvements through a bond issue because of unfavorable bond rates.

To come to the council four months later and ask that a mill proposal be put on the November ballot for trees is not good timing, Crawford said. He labeled the capital improvement expenditure "a greater priority."

"Our records indicate that our tree program is ahead of schedule. Since 1952 the city has removed 1.520 and will have planted 1,712 by the end of the year," Crawford said.

The Woods Council last month approved a one-half mill tax levy to go on the fall ballot to finance a four-year $500,000 tree program.

Park Tree Committee Chairman Michael Krag told the council the major thrust of the mill proposal is to get trees in the ground now.

It's back to the classroom

By Susan McDonald

Almost 9,000 kids made their way back into the public classroom yesterday to begin the first school year of the new decade. Given the hefty agenda of decisions that faces the board of education in the year ahead, 1980 may be one of substantial change for the kids and their schools.

FIRST OF ALL there's the question of who'll take over the top position as superintendent in Grosse Pointeone of the best paying jobs in public education in the state. Current superintendent William Coats has made clear his desire to be released from his five-year contract to take a job next summer at University of Michigan.

that raises about the costs of maintaining all 15 public school buildings.

The board earlier committed itself to keeping all buildings open through the 1980-81 year. It also has promised, in a set of goals approved last month, to seriously address the issue of "building utilization" this year. Ad-ministrators have already started preparing studies of local demographics, building conditions and possible transportation patterns, should school closings become a consideration.

"Building utilization" study was one of 17 goals for 1980-81 that were presented to the board and approved unanimously Aug 11 Other goals range from a commitment to strengthen high school graduation requirements, to a study of the public library system, to development of new programs in music.

Mourad and Catherine Brierly, all three candidates in the spring election who said they heard repeated concerns and complaints from parents about the middle school program.

Mourad noted that "while it's short, in terms of words, (the goal) can bring change and I'm satisfied that it will

Some areas of the curriculum were touched on in the annual statement of goals as well. There are plans to increase the use of micro computers to help teach students in all grades and a new emphasis on the need to challenge advanced students at all levels and to "extend their opportunities beyond basic studies."

Woods prepares census challenge

By Susan McDonald

Grosse Pointe Woods' city administrator put the finishing touches this weekend on a thick document he hopes will prove that more than 3,000 residents of his community were missed when the U.S. Census Bureau conducted its decennial count this summer.

Administrator Chester Petersen said he's confident he can provide enough proof of an undercount to convince the bureau to recompute its data.

The Woods, along with three other Grosse Pointe communities, showed a substantial decline in population according to preliminary census data released at the end of June.

According to census figures, the Woods lost 14.7 percent population between 1970 and 1980, a total of more than 3,000 people. Petersen contends the loss during that time period was only 100 to 200 people.

"We were 21,878 people in 1970 and the census bureau says we're down to 18,600 now," Petersen said. "I say we're closer to 21,680."

TO SUBSTANTIATE that claim, Petersen has spent "hours and hours" pouring over voter registration records, water bill lists, park permits and the tax rolls.

"It's been a struggle to get all this information. We've spent a lot of money on overtime to do it. I hope its not all in vain, because if our figures prove out, it will be well worth it financially."

The Woods receives more than $1 million a year from state and federal programs that depend on population figures for distribution.

Population counts are likely to remain the biggest single factor determining state and federal allocations for the next 10 years to come, Petersen said

The man who will evaluate the Woods' formal challenge to the count is Pointer John Schonenberg Jr., who was manager of the Warren district census office until it officially closed Aug. 29.

Schonenberg said the deadline for filing challenges passed about six weeks ago, but added that, since his office has closed the Woods' document will be forwarded to the Detroit regional office for consideration,

"They'll look at it in Detroit, but (the Woods) has to show some pretty solid documentation to get anywhere, because we have some pretty solid documentation to back up our figures," Schonenberg said in a telephone interview last week.

"If we missed something, I'm going to be pretty surprised."

SCHONENBERG SAID the local census information was checked thoroughly by about 50 field workers - all Grosse Pointe residents - who went door-to-door to certify results.

He said he is not convinced that counting park permits is a good indication of total population. "Permits aren't counted the same way the census counts people. University students, for instance, are counted in the city they attend school in, but'if their parents live here, they receive park permits."

Tentative figures for the other Grosse Pointes show the following:

• City, an 11.7 percent decrease, from 6,637 to 5,858.

• Farms, a 10.4 percent decrease, from 11,701 to 10,486,

• Park, a 13.7 percent decrease, from 15,641 to 13,498.

• Shores, a 1.5 percent increase, from 3,042 to 3,082.

The Woods is the only local community to dispute the figures.

Farms merchants upset over new licensing law cal tree sale programs are not enough to curb the loss of diseased trees in the Park, Krag charged.

The proposed reforestation program would have coincided with the efforts of the city's Public Service Department to pay for private tree surveys, plantings in parkways and parks, and spraying of public and private trees. Trees would in effect become "community assets" like roads and sewers.

"No one objects to planting trees," Mayor Matthew Patterson said. "I feel the council has done the right thing about trees, but' people are going to be shocked next year when (Continued on Page 4-A)

Despite some difficulties with details of his release, school board members are planning not to waste any time looking for a replacement. They anticipate a nation-wide search for a suitable candidate and, for the first time in Grosse Pointe, interviews will have to be held in public under new state laws, probably sometime this spring.

Next on the agenda will be an issue that is bound to be even more painful the loss of almost 4,000 students during the last decade and questions

SEVERAL OF the objectives reflected campaign promises made during the race for election to the board of education this spring. Included are an administrative assessment of the counseling program that will zero in on "communication with and personal services for students" and a directive to "review and upgrade standards for student performance and study skill development at the middle schools."

The latter objective was suggested by trustee Joan Hanpeter, Roger

The administration also was directed to improve achievement in language skills and to assess needs in vocational, special and music education.

City Manager Andrew Bremer said the Farms intended to send letters to merchants and blamed the failure to do so on a "mixup."

"Somehow or other it didn't hap-pen," he said. "We still haven't determined why."

Bremer said because the merchants were not notified by mail the deadline for registering for an exemption was pushed back to Oct. 1.

A building department spokesperson said the city would publish another notice in the News, but would not send out any letters, relying on the notice and word of mouth to inform the approximately 121 merchants throughout the Farms. Twenty-one have registered so far.

A caring carnival helps Reye's

By Joanne Gouleche

Chris Nesi thought real hard for just a second and said matter-of-factly that the most logical thing to do with the money was to turn it over to an organization that saves lives.

What would a 10-year-old do with $218 anyway?

While most kids spent their summer vacation biking and swimming, Chris and some special friends from Trombly School spent theirs a little differently by raising funds for Reye's Syndrome.

Chris says he "just thought of" putting together a carnival to raise money last year when he was sent home from school with a flyer about Reyes, a disease that strikes children when they seem to be recovering from chicken pox, the flu and other viral infections. If untreated, it can be fatal

The idea was passed along to Chris' friend Roger Drabant, and the two got excited when they began to dream about their carnival.

It took a lot of hard work, but now Chris says with a big smile, the carnival in the Drabant's Balfour yard this past July was a huge success. Between 20 and 30 people came that day. There was popcorn, hotdogs and kool aid for everyone.

Oh, but tell them about the African jungle, said David Lonbart and Nayiri Partamian, other friends of Chris who gave up their summer to build (Continued on Page 4-A)

Woods tavern law gets the test

By Gregory Jakub

Grosse Pointe Woods' ordinance limiting liquor and tavern licenses is barely a month old, and already city officials are faced with an applicant who may test the new law.

Will Ouellette of Pear Tree Lane notified the council at its Aug 18

Correction

In last week's issue we incorrectly reported that a Sept. 7 organ concert at the Punch and Judy Theater was free to the public. Tickets are $4.

Winners of the Farms Fishing Rodeo were incorrectly identified in last week's page one picture. David Nurmi won a trophy for a 15¹4 inch sucker and Jamie McEntee won a prize for his 2331 inch carp meeting that he is planning to start a specialty restaurant on Mack avenue and requested consideration for a tavern license at that address. His letter was dated Aug 4.

OUELLETTE'S proposed restaurant is just down the street from Le Cafe Francais, a tiny French restaurant which became the center of a year-long battle over the Woods' license law. That battle resulted in two court suits, a substantial revision of Michigan's liquor laws and the new Woods ordinance, which was approved by voters in the Aug. 5 primary by a narrow, 1,759-1,495 margin.

The new ordinance restricts the number of liquor serving establishments in the city to the current sixfour with hard liquor and two with lavern (beer and wine) licenses,

Woods administrator Chester Petersen said Ouellette's request will be forwarded to the state Liquor Control Commission, despite the fact that the newly-approved ordinance prevents the council from reviewing it or any other tavern license

Ouellette, however, sees some hope in the fact that he applied for his license the day before the new ordinance was approved.

Ouellette, a Blue Cross-Blue Shield of Michigan employe who manages the national accounts department, said last week he also is in the process of obtaining a lease on a building for his restaurant. He said his establishment will have a specialized menu featuring fondue, an idea he's had for a long time. Such a restaurant could contribute to the city's tax base, he added.

Ouellette is also a pilot and a Major in the Air National Guard, which he has served for the last 15 vears go the same procedures as any new business to obtain a license to operate.

Law irks Farms merchants

That includes a charge of $50 for the primary owner and an additional $15 for each additional owner as well as the building, fire and police inspections

The police check includes taking fingerprints for the purpose of determining whether or not the new owner has a record of any criminal activity or arrests, a procedure usually limited to the issuance of liquor licenses.

Carl Sterr, manager of the men's store on Kercheval, echoes the sentiments of many of the merchants in denouncing that method.

"They talk about fingerprinting and checking criminal records," he said. Not only to it and culous, but it's against the law. If they (the city) can show how it can be helpful, fine. But the city fathers are not cooperating with us."

According to Bremer, however, the city attorneys say the fingerprint check is legal.

The merchants are also irritated at the city for not personally notifying them of the ordinance's adoption. One of the most vocal businessmen in this regard is Frank Selden, owner of the Bookshelf.

"All of us are disturbed at not re-ceiving any letters," he says. "It's the same thing as when we got the increase in rates on the parking meters. If they had let us know beforehand and told us the reasons, we could have prepared our customers.

"Public relations is the easiest thing to do, but it does take a little time and thought," he continued, "If we had known beforehand, (about the ordinance) the nasty side could have been eliminated."

While the merchants are upset with the fingerprinting aspect and the fact they were not directly notified, most seemed to feel the ordinance itself is not harmful or dangerous.

Michael Burns, past president of the Hill Association, thinks the ordinance is a service to shop owners. He says it will now enable the city as well as the merchants to meet and discuss new business operations should any objections arise.

However, council member Gail Kaess said the ordinance is not designed to control or regulate the types of businesses opening up in the Farms. She maintains the council passed the regulation so that the city would at "least know who and what types of businesses open beforehand."

She also denied that its adoption had anything to do with the Salem Square/Perry Drug situation. When the drug store chain bought out Salem's lease back in January, many of the Hill merchants discussed the need for some type of control of new businesses coming into the area.

City Manager Bremer concurred with Kaess that the new ordinance isn't meant to provide that type of control, however.

"We were concerned that businesses were changing hands and we did not know who was going in and whether they were permitted usage under our zoning ordinance," he explained

"This merely allows the city to take a look at any new business before it opens."

they see more than 1 mill for trees on the ballot." If the council had approved the mill proposal last week and it passed in November, it would not have taken effect till the 1981 fiscal year

KRAG SAID THE city's expenditure of $15,000 for planting trees is a "pretty small investment out of a $4 million budget."

"All we're asking to do is to step up the situation and do something more.'

Manager Crawford criticized the reforestation program for not replacing the $93,000 tree allocation currently in the budget. The mill prothe carnival's cardboard ticket booth from an old refrigerator box.

Along a narrow pathway of pines and thick brush in the Drabant's yard, the kids constructed an "African jungle" and hid a tape recorder in the bushes that played wild animal voices. David told the story about a friend who didn't quite make it out of the jungle.

"We wore beads and things, People really liked it," David said.

The one-day carnival featured seven exhibits, including a wishing well made out of a bucket and some bricks. The kids donated their own toys as prizes.

At 10 cents an exhibit, the kids raised $108 for Reye's, but a nearby neighbor matched their take and another donated $10.

Besides the carnival, Chris and his friends raised money by pedaling school board election flyers and pulling weeds,

"Whew, that was hard work," said Chris' 7-year-old brother Joshua.

"Yea, but we got $24 doing it," Roger reminded him.

When their dream carnival ended. Chris, Roger and Joshua promptly and proudly took their check for $218 to Children's Hospital,

"When we gave the check to the hospital, they looked at us, then at the check and their mouths flew open," Chris said.

For their efforts the two were given a tour of the hospital.

"We're probably going to do it again next year and maybe shovel some snow this winter to raise money," Chris said

"Are you kidding? That's harder than pulling weeds."

"No it isn't."

Well, anyway, Chris promises the details will be straightened out by next summer.

Maybe Chris would like to become a doctor someday and help Reye's victims?

"No, I can't stand the sight of blood.

"I think I want to be a surgeon." David boasts.

"Hey, wait a minute. Last week you said you wanted to be an air. plane pilot," Chris said, Fingerprint businessmen?

Many business and professional people in Grosse Pointe Farms have discovered to their surprise that under terms of a city ordinance enacted last Jan. 21, they are now required to register with the director of public services to carry on any trade, profession or business within the city.

In fact, the deadline for registering passed on July 1 but so few business and professional people had complied that the city council now has extended the deadline to Oct. 1. Those who register by that time will obtain an exemption from the ordinance that will require a $50 business license from all those starting up a new trade, business or profession in the Farms in the future. THE PURPOSE OF the ordinance appears to be constructive, if not above criticism. It requires the fire chief to certify that the applicant complies with the state and local fire regulations. It calls upon the police chief to certify that the applicant has filed a list of any arrests or convictions and has not violated any federal, state or local law showing "a disregard for the safety or welfare of either employes, patrons or business residing or doing business nearby."

The ordinance also seeks to make certain that no new business or enterprise operates contrary to the health, morals, safety or welfare of the public, is unlawful, irregular or fraudulent in nature; or is unauthorized or forbidden by any city ordinance, rule or regulation.

Members of the Hill Association, many of whom heard about the ordinance for the first time at their meeting last week, complained about two aspects of the problem. They lished in the Grosse Pointe News last Jan. 31. And they questioned the requirement that applicants for new licenses, or operators of existing businesses who do not register by Oct. 1, will have to be fingerprinted when they get their licenses.

of Circulations

The critics appear to have good grounds for both complaints. If business and professional men are to be required to register under a new ordinance, they ought to get individual notices of that requirement. And while the police may wish to fingerprint applicants in order to check on possible criminal records, that requirement seems to call for an unwarranted invasion of personal rights and to fly in the face of the traditional American acceptance of a per-son's innocence until he is proved guilty.

Yet the council deserves sympathy, too. In enacting the ordinance, the council in part responded to com-plaints that it had failed to take any action to delay or prevent the de-parture of the popular Salem Square The part of the Adult Educa-tion Program; while "Moth-er's Aide" and "Put Your Best Foot Forward" are part council in part responded to comgrocery store last year. The neigh- of the Youth Enrichment boring City council faces similar Program. criticism in its handling of the Pointe Pedlar dilemma. But what was the council supposed to have done? It's still a free country and if a person follows the laws and ordinances, he still ought to be able to start up and run his own business without government intervention.

Presumably the reasoning behind health practices, and the the enactment of the ordinance in elimination of environmental the first place was that it would give hazards. Farms' officials additional time and information to check up on those bootth main with the care of children to Maire School, starting any new trade, profession or business in the Farms. That seems a reasonable objective so long as the Democrat servants or masters?

One of the traditional issues debated by Democrats and Republicans has been the extent of government control and regulation of the lives and businesses of private citizens. Now Hugh Sidey of Time magazine has come up with a statistic that helps explain the Democratic Party's continuing support for Big Government.

Sidey finds that more than 40 percent of the delegates to the Democratic National Convention in New York were public officeholders or government employes in some capacity. The Democratic delegates, for example, included 372 teachers, chiefly from public schools, which means teachers constituted more than 10 percent of the 3,381 convention delegates.

IT IS TRUE, of course, that public employes like the rest of us pay taxes, feel the pinch of inflation and are hurt by recessions. Yet it is also true they have selfish reasons for wanting certain public services and programs continued, well funded and even expanded. Their own jobs are at stake. Furthermore, the more people each bureaucrat supervises, the bigger his responsibilities and the larger his paycheck. So there's a built-in incentive to government expansion, Employes of local and state governments do not always have political and economic interests identical with those of federal employes, of course. Yet the federal government of, by and for the propleoften fosters spending by local and state governments through the use of federal grants and matching funds to help finance programs and services mandated by federal laws. The interaction among all levels of government tends to increase public 3 approximately 9,000 stu- On behalf of the Board of use of instructional media spending, not limit it.

The Democratic National Convention was more representative of the general population than was the GOP convention in numbers et women, to school kids minorities and young voters taking part. But in numbers of public employes serving as delegates, the Democrats easily out listanced the GOP, a fact that offers one explanation for the popularity of government programs and spending among Democratic policy makers

THIS IS NOT the only explanation for the growth of government, of course. Services and programs are instituted to meet needs of or demands by interested parties. And school, grades K through six many government programs on the federal as well as the state and local levels are worthwhile.

Yet when government employes and officials begin to play such an influential role that they can enforce their demands for higher salaries, better working conditions and expansion of programs, they listort the where demonstration on servants of the people reconse the masters, which is Lady consistent with the American relict mark overmoret

From Another Pointe Of View by Janet Mueller

It's billed as "The Sale of Sales" and it can't help but live up to its billing. It takes place Saturday, October 11, in Reddick, Fla., latest (and last) home of Don and Jeanne Ford's Lancer Arabian Stud.

For years, from the time they lived in The nte through the time they lived in Brighton bugh the last few years in Florida, the Fords e been building up their superb group of Ara-Pointe through the time they lived in Brighton through the last few years in Florida, the Fords have been building up their superb group of Arabian horses.

It's been a fascinating project/passion, taking Don (and Jeanne, too, as frequently as she could find time to accompany him) to Egypt many times, for Lancer Arabians are all straight Egyptian.

Now the Fords are selling all breeding and show stock: 26 imported animals, the balance bred in this country from that imported blood. Among them is the fabulous Asadd, 1975 National Champion Stallion, who became a double National Champion by winning the 1979 English Pleasure Championship.

They are, the Fords believe, the finest group of Arabian horses ever offered at auction-and there are few who would dispute that claim.

Even the Egyptians are impressed. "We Egyptians are very proud of your production of 'our' horses," said Dr. Mohamed El Marsafi, on a recent visit to the United States and to Lancer Arabians. That's high praise indeed from the man who himself bred Asadd, the Lion of Egypt.

The sale promises to be an extraordinary event, with exquisitely beautiful actress Jennifer O'Neill as mistress of ceremonies and Kenneth Sherbahn and Gerald Bowie as auctioneers.

The schedule calls for Open Barn Friday morning, October 10, followed by lunch. The horses will be formally presented and shown at liberty from 2:30 to 5 o'clock that afternoon.

The horses will be shown again Saturday morning, from 10 o'clock to noon, and the barn will be open in the early afternoon. Later, there'll (Continued on Page 8-B)

Want to make Rover a star? Is the next Benji, Lassie or Rin Tin Tin just lying around your house doing nothing? He could be out developing a career. Michigan Opera Theater wants to make the right dog a star in its upcoming production "Of Mice and Men," an opera by Carlisle Floyd from the John Steinbeck play. A special casting call has been issued and audi-tions are scheduled for next Thursday, Sept. 11.

Dwight Bowes, MOT director of productions, emphasizes that he is seeking a character dog rather than an ingenue. "Nothing cute,' he warns, "and no poodles!" "We need an old bunkhouse mutt — mixed breed, mangy, docile and on his last legs. He has to lie quietly under a bed throughout the opera's second ac and he is not to join in the boisterous singing a round him. "In fact, ad libs of any kind will be frowned on.'

The chosen dog will be needed for rehearsals beginning Sept. 19 and for per-formances Sept. 26 and 28 and Oct. 1 (matinee), 3 and 4. For further information or to schedule an audition, call 963-3717

Michigan Opera Theater will pay a very small stipend to the lucky animal, although the primary benefit will be in terms of career development. "It will," Bowes points out, "look terrific on a resume."

Two Pointers, BARBARA GUTWALD, (left), of The Farms, a nurse at the Harper Division of Harper-Grace Hospitals, and KAREN M. WOLFE, of The Woods, a billing clerk at Cottage Hospital, are among 10 finalists from whom "Miss Torchy," who will represent the United Foundation and its 137 Torch Drive-supported charities at 1980 campaign meetings, luncheons and media events in Wayne, Oakland and Macomb Counties, will be selected today, Thursday, Sept. 4, at final judg-ing at the Detroit Plaza Hotel. The other nine finalists will serve as hostesses at Torch Drive meetings and make appearances throughout the 1980 campaign period: Oct. 13 through Nov. 6. The finalists were chosen from 39 women representing organizations and companies throughout the tri-county area which received Honor Awards for their participation in the 1979 Torch Drive. Honor Awards are based on the percentage of total employes contributing to the Torch Drive, and the organization's percentage increase over the previous year's contribution.

Three breast cancer experts at the Michigan Cancer Foundation have edited a book on new concepts in the control of breast cancer.

They are Dr. Michael J Brennan, of The Pointe, president and medical director of the MCF; Dr. Marvin A. Rich, of Detroit, executive vice president and scientific director of the foundation; and Dr. Charles M. McGrath. of Port Huron, chairman of the foundation's Tumor Biology Department.

"Breast Cancer: New Concepts in Etiology and Con-trol," has been published by Academic Press, a subsidiary of Harcourt Brace Joyanovich. It is the culmination of an earlier workshop held at the MCF to develop new research strategies for more effective treatment of breast cancer.

One section of the book emphasizes the foundation's Bieast Cancer Prognostic Study, in which more than 110 practicing surgeons, pathologists and medical oncologists in Southeastern Michigan participate.

The Prognostic Study is identifying the characteristics of breast tumors. The Michigan Cancer Foundation is a Torch Drive-VE United Way Agency.

And after that . . . , well, you can't put what has been one of the most fascinating phases of your life behind you without feeling a bit of sad-ness. Even when you know it's time to move on.

Fortunately, Don Ford is keeping something special to move on on. He"s retaining the Arabian stallion Sidkii as his personal mount.

Three Cheers for Dr. Connelly!

Dr. Richard C. Connelly had been associated with Bon Secours Hospital since 1926. He's director of Medical Education there now-and, frankly, it's about time someone thought to throw him a party!

So we're delighted to report that Dr. Connelly will be especially honored Friday, October 17, at the Friends of Bon Secours formal dinner dance at the Grosse Pointe Yacht Club.

And, fittingly, proceeds from the benefit fesivity, with entertainment provided by the Mike Carney Orchestra featuring Lee Evans, will be applied to furthering the hospital's expanding Medical Education program.

Honorary chairpersons are Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Hannon Jr. and Mr. and Mrs. Prewitt Semmes. Committee heads, under the direction of Miss Marilyn T. Meier and Dr. Roger F. Mc-Neill, include Mrs. Hans Gehrke Jr., patrons; Rog-er Hull, programs; Mrs. Clarence McLeod, invitations; Mrs. Leo Marx assisted by J. Addison Bartush, tickets; and Peter E. O'Rourke, special effects. Edmund M. Brady Jr., current president of the Friends of Bon Secours Hospital, will be assisted by William L. Hurley, director of development, in a liaison capacity with the hospital.

Further information and/or dinner dance reservations may be obtained by calling the Bon Secours Development Department, 343-1520.

GROSSE POINTE NEWS

It's that time of year again ...

It's time for touchdowns, last-second goals and threepoint plays . . . and time for the Grosse Pointe News to send out its fall cry for help. The News' sports section needs the help of folks who follow fall sports (football, soccer, basketball, field hockey, iee hockey, etc.) and would like to submit stories, game highlights and stat-istics to the News for publication. No Pulitzer prize-winners need apply - anyone who can write down game scores, highlights and team names can help. Unfortunately, the News cannot pay a fee for the stories-but the authors get a "byline," the News gets some help in covering the endless schedule of fall sports, and the community gets information about the area's athletes. Interested persons (that includes students, moms, dads, coaches, players or spectators) should contact the sports editor at 882-0294, during business hours.
