Out of Africa

Every once in a while, when I'm feeling fat and sassy and ohso-pleased with my life, I need something to come along and put things back in perspective.

That happened Monday morning, on my first day back from vacation. On my desk was a letter from Pat and Virginia Patten, of Manchester Road. They're the parents of Father Pat Patten, a flying medical missionary stationed in Olkokola, Tanzania.

You may remember Father Pat. I wrote about him two years ago when he returned to the U.S. on a quest to raise enough funds to buy a good, used airplane to bring medical relief to the nomadic Masai living in his 23,000-square-mile parish in Africa.

Through hard work and with the help of private and public donations, Father Pat got his plane. The work in Tanzania is hard and he doesn't have much time to write. The Pattens sent me a photocopy of his last letter, which covered a lot of ground. It wasn't what he said that impressed me, but more what he didn't say.

Father Pat is tired. Very, very tired. Mostly from the hectic schedule he keeps, but also because part of his staff is leaving, which piles more work on his shoulders. I also suspect he isn't eating properly. He said it was a very good crop for corn and beans this year and that some places don't even need food aid for a change.

I talked to his brother, Mike, who visited him recently, and he said Father Pat eats mostly beans. It's prepared different ways, but mostly it's beans morning, noon and night. Oc-casionally there'll be some wild game, but not much.

Father Pat said there's absolutely no gasoline, cooking or diesel fuel available at all. Anywhere. He's limited to buying 25 gallons of gasoline a week for the airplane. My car holds more than that.

He was very grateful to his sent. He said the soap and candles would really be appreciated, as well as the dental floss, pizza mixes and granola bars, which help supplement his diet when he's on long airplane flights or motorcycle safaris to villages needing medical care.

He said he really enjoyed reading an old Time magazine sent him, comparing the dress styles and prices of that time with now. He also said it was sad to see that the trouble spots of years ago are the same as to-

A special treat was a six-pack of Vernor's, a box of Girl Scout cookies and autumn leaves pressed in books. I guess gold, red and orange maple leaves can do a lot to bring Grosse Pointe to Tanzania.

So far, he estimates the plane has another 240,000 miles on it since it was purchased. It's easy to see how. In a typical week, Father Pat visits more than 400 people who are treated for respiratory infections, malaria, parasites, burns, snake bites, TB, spear wounds, diarrhea, malnutrition, lion attacks and leprosy.

His presence there has made a difference. More and more people are being helped.

What impressed me was his attitude. He wasn't complaining, nor was he asking for more help. It was just a compilation of facts. It's the way life is in much of the Third World, mom and dad, so how are you? How was Christmas back home? Was there a lot of snow? Did everyone receive some nice presents?

Anyhow, I'm going to try and remember Father Pat the next time I bitch because my steak was cooked wrong, or I have to hoof it two blocks to the local Lawson's for a gallon of milk. But I'm human, and I'm sure after a while I'll conveniently

Father Pat can be reached through the Flying Medical Service, Diocese of Arusha, Box 3044, Arusha, Tanzania, East

Lake laps at top of Pointe seawal

By Nancy Parmenter

On a scale from annoyance to disaster, Lake St. Clair high water levels rank as a nuisance in the Pointes, threatening to break seawalls and flood backyards. No-where have there been evacuations or massive property damage as have occurred further north along Anchor Bay.

It's just an accident of geography that protects the Pointes. They are less exposed to the lake and less vulnerable to wind-driven high water than St. Clair Shores. Probably more important, the Pointes are not penetrated by a network of canals. Last spring when the Army Corps of Engineers contacted the Pointes along with all governments along the lake — about constructing a system of likes to hold back the water, all five declined

But the nuisance is real. With the lake already 34 inches above its long-term average for November (the latest month for which statistics were available) and threatening to add another six inches by spring, flooding remains a concern. And officials refuse to take a rosy view, saying any flooding or lack of it depends entirely upon the weather.

Although most of the waterfront in the Pointes is protected by seawalls, many of them date back to the 1920s and '30s. Some are in crumbling condition and many were built with an ornamental brickwork on top that is not strong enough to fend off the lake when it

Much of the property, especially in the Park and the City, is low where it abuts the lake. Land along the Detroit border of the Park, bounded by Fox Creek, is also low. According to the Army Corps of Engineers, however, most of the sensitive property is either municipally owned park land or marinas.

Public and private dock owners along the lake are faced with making expensive improvements to keep the docks out of water and serviced with utilities. Several cities are considering raising their docks, the Yacht Club has installed devices aimed at preventing and controlling ice buildup, and the Woods is warning boat owners to look for another mooring.

The Park faces the potentially biggest problem. Virtually all of the land south of Jefferson is designated as a flood plain by the National Flood Insurance Program. Although the houses don't often end up under water, the land elevation ranges only one to two feet above the current level of the lake and it is common for streets to flood.

The lake also floods the sewer system. A five-year-old Corps of Engineers study addressed the problem of interceptor sewers along the lake. "One of the issues of the draft was whether our pumping station was adequate to pump back Lake St. Clair," said Park City Manager John Crawford.

The pumping station has a gate valve to keep the lake out, but when the lake water washes over the seawalls and enters the city's combined sewer system, it can cause an overload. The result is that untreated sewage dumps into

Although the Park refused the Corps offer to build a system of cribs to break up the wave action, some action does need to be taken, Crawford said. "(We refused because) it was aesthetically unattractive and not appealing, but we stated that we were in favor of permanent improvements along the shore that would eliminate the flood plain," he said.

Eliminating the flood plain is a tall order involving improvements to seawalls and some diking and landfilling. The city is now considering filling along the shore of Patterson Park, 100 feet back from the water, to a depth of four feet. The shore along the former Nike site is low and lined now with broken concrete. Almost 800 feet of fence at the site was lost this year to wave action, according to Craw-

Park plan to merge police, fire approved

By Pat Paholsky

It's all systems go for the consolidation of the police and fire departments in the Park into a public safety unit. The council adopted a resolution Monday night instructing the administration to begin the process. The vote was unanimous.

The council also approved an ordinance amending the city charter in references to the chief of police or fire chief, substituting director of public safety as head of the combined departments. The ordinance will take effect July 1.

The operational plan submitted by the administration projects that the departments will be fully consolidated by July 1, 1988.

City Manager John Crawford, in introducing the plan, said it was discovered that there would be a cost savings to the community with consolidation. The first objective, he said, was to devise the best plan and after that, determine the

"We believe this operational plan has met both objectives," he

Cost projections, however, do not include cross-training and equipment, since they are considered to be non-recurring administrative expenses. Legal and fessional fees are also not included in the projections.

The fire contract, which expired July 1, 1985, is currently being negotiated. Also the police contract will expire June 30 and the administration is negotiating the public safety concept with the police union.

In the plan, Police Chief Richard Caretti recommends cross-training police officers first in teams of three officers and a supervisor. The two-week in-house training, provided by Fire Chief Phillip Costa, should satisfy 66 hours of instruction required for basic fire fighting. Caretti then recommends that the firefighters begin their crosstraining at the police academy in teams of six. All officers will also be trained as emergency medical technicians. "The cornerstone for successful functional consolidation rests on training," Police Chief Richard Caretti wrote in the plan. "We intend to concentrate on rotating every single officer through the best training programs available

"It should be pointed out that in achieving this level of excellence there is a price to pay," he continued, "that price is the amount of service we will be able to deliver while the training is taking place It is my intention to maintain ade quate levels of service, including the ability to respond to exigent circumstances that might occur by the prudent use of overtime.

In the case of police or fire per sonnel who are unable to complete cross-training because of aca demic rigors or a fear of heights for example, City Manager Craw ford said those employees will be designated as specialists, a position that will be phased out over

I would draw a distinction be tween the employee who has at tempted to qualify and has not be successful and the employee who says, 'I will not try,' 'he said. Crawford added that the opera tional plan did not consider dis missing or demoting any person

About a half-dozen residents spoke for or against consolidation, however, the effort was almost anti-climactic after two years of moving in that direction. The entire proceedings took about to

Water, sewer rate changes proposed

By Mike Andrzejczyk

Although city officials say it's still too early to know for certain what will happen, two of four communities locally receiving water from Detroit have been socked with rate increases of more than 13 percent by the Detroit Water and Sewerage Board.

The proposed rates, which take effect in July, are set by the city board based on a complicated formula of use, times of peak usage and distance the water must be pumped.

Four communities, Grosse Pointe Woods, Park, Shores and Harper Woods are among the more than 100 cities and townships that receive water from Detroit in southeast Michigan. The City receives water from the Farms, whichs pumps and purifies lake

While the Park and Woods will get decreases in the proposed rates of about 8 and 1 percent respectively, the Shores will be hit with a 15 percent increase and Harper that, although the Shores' peak Woods would have its rate hiked 13 period usage had dropped, it percent.

The rate the city charges the Shores for 1,000 cubic feet of water is proposed to increase to $4.42 from $3.85. Harper Woods will pay $3.10 per 1,000 cubic feet under the proposed new rates, up from $2.74.

The Woods' rate per 1,000 cubic feet of water would drop as of July to $2.19, down from this year's $2.21. The Park's rate would fall to $3.06, a near 9 percent cut from the current $3.31 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Village officials have already met once with representatives of the water department and were to have a representative at yesterday's public hearing to formally appeal the hike, according to Superintendent Michael Kenyon.

The water department gave several reasons for the increase. Kenyon said. The department said period usage had dropped, it rounding communities. In addition, the distance the department must pump the water to the village's center has been recalculated, he said.

The water department at one time applied a credit to the village's rate because it was pumping water downhill to the village, Kenyon said. That credit has been eliminated, he added.

The proposed water rate increase that the city charges the Shores will be offset partially by a proposed sewer rate decrease of about 33 cents, according to the chart of rates. The rate for Harper Woods, Grosse Pointe Woods and the Shores may drop from $6.55 to $6.22 under the proposed rates.

Sewer rates for the Farms, Park and City are also slated to decrease under the proposed rate schedule.

The City and Farms are to have their rates fall from $6.55 per 1,000 cubic feet of sewage treated to $6.22 for the same amount starting July 1. The Park's rate is scheduled to drop from $4.33 to $4.28 for 1,000 cubic feet of sewage treated.

Whether the proposed double decrease will mean lower rates in the Park is unclear, according to Clerk-Comptroller Nunzio Ortisi.

The proposed rates may change because of yesterday's public hearing and they have to be approved by the Board of Water Commissioners and the Detroit City Council.

As proposed, the decreases may not be significant enough to mean a change in the rate the Park charges its residents and businesses for water and sewage treatment, Ortisi added.

The city's water and sewer fund is out of the red, however. Ortisi said the fund is now well off.

While the water rate is scheduled to decrease, the Woods won't start calculating a residential rate until after confirmation of the proposed rates, according to City Administrator-Clerk Chester Petersen. The city will also have to wait and see what happens to the sewer rate, he added

While the Woods, Shores and Harper Woods are part of the Northeast District System, the proposed sewer rate decrease may end up being swallowed by the administering agency for the system, Petersen added.

Detroit and Wayne County charge cities throughout southeast Michigan for the water and sewer service they provide. Cities in turn must calculate their maintenance. construction and other costs and add that into the figure before deciding what to charge residents and businesses for water and sewer use.

Four youths suspected of credit card fraud

Woods police suspect four local youths of sifting through garbage for credit card receipts and ordering merchandise charged to an account on the discarded slips. The case was uncovered when a resident alerted police to a note on a vacant house.

The note on the front door instructed that all packages be delivered to the rear and was discovered by the prospective buyer of the hou on Ford Court which has been variant for the past four months.

Police put out an area broadcast to UPS drivers, one of whom responded that he had just delivered a package from Instant Replay, a video company in Waltham, Mass. The house was put under surveillance, Woods Detective Carl Schuster said.

A car with three male youths pulled up and one boy got out and walked up to the house when he spotted the surveillance team. He got back in the car and drove off. The police got the license number.

One boy admitted to the scam and during the investigation, police learned three other names, Schuster said. The investigation is continuing.

The package consisted of three video discs totaling $145. They had been ordered by pitone, according to a company representative. The merchandise was charged to an employee in the Wayne County Prosecutor's Office, who told police he had not ordered the death of a Detroit man Sunday night, who collapsed on Charlevoix at Maryland in the Park.

According to reports, Gregory Cross, 38, of Bewick in Detroit, was driving his 1975 Ford two-door along Charlevoix when he stopped the car, got out and collapsed, police said. His 29-year-old passenger was able to flag down a Park police officer, who called for an ambulance.

Cross had no signs of life when Park ambulance technicians ar-

Investigation continues into the rived minutes later. He was taken to Bon Secours Hospital where he was pronounced dead on arrival seven minutes later, reports said.

Cross' body has been turned over to the Wayne County Medical Examiner for an autopsy, police said. No cause of death has yet been determined.

One of the ambulance technicians reported suffering a possible lower back strain while attending to Cross, who was 6 feet tall and weighed more than 400 pounds, according to police.

Cottage plans cancer care classes

Families and friends of cancer patients who want to learn more about the disease, as well as individuals who are interested in becoming hospice volunteers, are invited to attend the Caring Person Program at Cottage Hospital. The free four-week winter session begins Monday, Jan. 20, at 6:30 p.m. Hospice volunteer training continues an additional four weeks, through March 10.

The Caring Person Program offers instruction in many aspects of patient care and comfort. Chemotherapy and radiation therapy, prescription management, nutri-tion, pain control and respiratory problems are presented by experts in these fields.

Hospice volunteers are specially trained to provide physical, emotional and spiritual support to the terminally ill person and his or her family through the illness, death and a period of bereave-

There currently are over 80 Cottage hospice volunteers helping patients and their families in the hospital and in their homes, but more are needed to assist patients in a variety of neighborhoods.

For more information and to register, call Julia Arango, hospice volunteer coordinator, at 884-8600, ext. 2464.

Cities get few park queries

By Pat Paholsky

The recent vote in Dearborn limiting certain parks to residents only and the resulting controversy has generated some interest in Grosse Pointe's park system. The parks here have always been restricted to residents and their guests. Most of the interest, however, has been by the media.

Officials of the Woods, Shores, Farms and City report that the only inquiries they've received have been from newspapers and radio and television stations

Park officials say they were receiving about a call a day after the controversy first arose in Dearborn in November. About half of the calls were from local people and some from Detroit and Dearborn residents, with the other half coming from the media, City Manager John Crawford said, adding that he hasn't received any calls in the past two weeks.

The interest prompted Park officials to ask city attorney Herold McC. Deason to prepare a statement. The four-paragraph statement reads that the parks "have been developed and maintained at all times since their inception by the sole use of funds generated by taxation of Grosse Pointe Park residents or user fees . .

It also says that the two parks totaling 28 acres service a population of 13,600 or a ratio of two acres per 1.000 residents, less than the 10 acres per 1,000 people recommended by the National Recreation Association.

Restricted to residents only since 1931, the policy continues because the parks are at their utilized by residents, the statement concludes.

Grosse Pointe City Manager Thomas Kressbach said this is the case at Neff Memorial Park which has a total of six acres and that includes the parking lot. The green space is about half of that or about 10 residential lots, Kressbach said. Lake frontage of the park is about the width of 212 residential lots, he

City Administrator Chester Petersen said the situation in the Woods is different than the other Grosse Pointe cities, since Lake Front Park is in St. Clair Shores. The Woods pays taxes to St. Clair Shores and its school district.

Petersen said that years ago, the Woods attempted to have the tax waived on the basis that cities are non-profit organizations. The attorney general ruled that the only way the Woods can maintain a private park is to pay taxes, Petersen said. Otherwise, the park would have to open to the public. Board denies teacher grievance

By Mike Andrzejczyk

The Board of Education Monday night denied a teachers' union grievance that claimed lack of supervision in photography classes at North High School endangered students and violated the union's contract.

The board voted 5-2 to deny the grievance after an hour-long hearing, but requested the administration to forward information next week about the cost of the photography program at the school and what the addition of aides would cost, alternative means of supervision and what other districts do to supervise students in photography classes while teachers are occupied in the darkroom with other students.

The grievance, filed earlier this school year, centers on photography teachers' claims that changes in the law force them and their immediate supervisors to bear the brunt of legal action should a student be injured in class.

Additional sections and larger class sizes make supervision difficult because teachers cannot be in the classroom and darkroom simultaneously. The variety of dangerous chemicals and equip-ment increase the possibility of injury to students.

The Grosse Pointe Education Association asked that, were the grievance upheld, additional safety equipment and teacher aides be provided for the classes.

Photography teachers Renato Marchesi and Eileen Hayes testified at the hearing that the set-up of North's photography room caused certain problems. It is a room within a room, with a separate darkroom as well as a fire door leading to a courtyard, they said.

When they are in the darkroom with students, which happens at least three days a week, the rest of the class is left unsupervised, the teachers said.

While both teachers said they instituted safety rules and expected students to be working on class assignments while they were elsewhere, access from another classroom and to outside the building made that lack of supervision dan-

Under cross-examination by Director of Personnel and Labor Relations Ronald Tonks, the teachers said they didn't require students to wear safety glasses or lab coats. The glasses obstructed vision while working on certain equipment in the darkroom, both said. Marchesi added he asks his students to bring lab coats and rubber gloves to protect themselves from the film-developing chemi-

Although there have been no serious injuries to students in the class, Marchesi added he suffered third-degree chemical burns to his face when he was splashed with undiluted chemicals

"It's my concern that students aren't safe,'' Hayes said. "I've never had to face this kind of situation; walking into another room and leaving students in a class-room with things which they can hurt themselves with.

The variety of cutting and heating equipment in the room posed certain dangers, both teachers said. Marchesi said that in one incident, after returning from the darkroom, he found marks made by cutting knives on photographs on a wall. It appeared three students were throwing their cutting tools at the photos, he added.

Hayes said she has had students enter her room from the adjoining classroom. When a substitute took over the class, three students left the room without supervision, she added

In both cases, disciplinary action was taken, supported by the school's administration.

The addition of aides to the classes "would be wonderful," Marchesi said. Aides could cut the amount of work the teacher now does, help classroom supervision and enhance curriculum.

Aides are used in other departments at the school, in science and other classrooms, to help teachers, GPEA Vice President Richard Underwood pointed out.

John Kastran, North principal, testified that he has visited the photography classes on several occasions and found them to be wellorganized and well-behaved. The addition of aides for supervision purposes is not done in other departments and could set a costly precedent, he added.

Aides in classes such as commercial foods help students with preparation of dishes, Kastran said. Also, in some cases, all teachers may be called away, leaving behind an unsupervised class, he added. Summing up, Tonks said there was no grounds to uphold the grievance. Also, the teachers hadn't done all they could to improve safety in the classroom. "There are steps they can take to lessen these hazardous situations," he said. "When you think safety, it usually results.

Trustee Joan Hanpeter requested the administration forward information about the cost of the photography program and consider alternatives to allow beter supervision. One possibility may be eliminating photography classes at North and having them at South only, where the physical plant is different, she added. The system runs its dental aide program that way

Trustee Carl Anderson who, with Carol Marr, voted to uphold the grievance, told trustees that the hearing raised some valid concerns about safety and supervision. Unsupervised students can do silly things, he said, adding, "We are dealing with a different kind of animal in the 1980s and I think we have to recognize that.

Making the motion for denial was board Vice President Vincent LoCicero, seconded by Secretary Fred Adams.

The union had failed to show the contract was violated by the situation, LoCicero told trustees.

Voting to deny the grievance were Hanpeter, LoCicero, Adams, board President Jon Ganelot and board Treasurer Dorothy Kennel.

"While the board had denied your grievance, we have heard your problems," Gandelot told the union officials and teachers.

The idea of adding aides may or may not come back before the board, depending on what comes out of the information the administration is passing on to the board; school officials said.

Board creates position of drug abuse counselor

The Board of Education Monday night established a new position; counselor/coordinator of student assistance programs.

The new person will coordinate and expand the student substance abuse support group program at the high schools and help the district prepare its master plan to deal with chemical dependency.

The board acted unanimously on m s recommenda tion to create the new position, which was posted for applicants earlier this week and should be filled to serve the balance of this school year.

"This will enable us to keep our support group programs at South High School, extend those groups to North High School and work to support one of the board's goals for this school year," Superintendent John Whritner said.

The new counselor/coordinator will spend two days at each high school and one day on district-wide planning, Whritner said. There will be a transition period for the counseling staff until the position is filled and the coordinator has taken up his or her duties.

The administration decided on after an arbitrator's ruling in December upheld a union grievance filed last year regarding the filling of a school social worker vacancy at South High School.

The arbitrator upheld the union's argument that the school system ignored its own posting by hiring Gail Erickson for the South social worker post, although another school social worker, who better met the requirements, also applied.

Erickson has established a number of support groups for students at the high school. About two dozen students appeared before the board Jan. 6 to ask that some provisions be made to keep Erickson at the school to continue her work in aiding students with substance abuse problems.

While the position appears tailored for someone of Erickson's qualifications, she has no lock on the position. Like other openings, the new one will be posted and candidates interviewed. Should a more qualified candidate come along, the school system will be re-

Local architects honored

Jr., AIA, received one of 15 honor awards from the Detroit Chapter of the American Institute of Architects recently. He was honored for his adaption of the Grosse Pointe Shores Municipal Building.

He was also the recipient of a Michigan Society of Architects Honor Award for his project. The building had been designed in 1918 by Albert Kahn, but had gone through at least six alterations that had erased much of Kahn's design. Replacing the original 13-foot-high arched windows that had been altered to accommodate 9-foot ceilings make the building look more like Kahn's original design.

Other residents honored include William Kessler & Associates who received two awards for historic preservation/adaptive re-use projects. The firm was honored for the Kresge Foundation Headquarters in Troy. This project preserved and adapted a classic 1852 farmstead in the midst of the Big Beaver Road building explosion. The result is a three-acre farm amid several hundred acres of mirror glass.

Another winning firm was honored not for a building but for

Mice and the elephant

When Pierre Trudeau was asked about Canada's relationships with the United States, the former Canadian prime minister often said that they reminded him of a mouse trying to sleep with an elephant.

What Trudeau meant, of course, was that Canada always had to be careful in dealing with the United States simply because the United States is so much larger in population and in the size of its economy than Canada is. And as a consequence Canada does impose certain restrictions on U.S. residents, U.S. investment and other matters to avoid being overrun by people and interests from the other side of the border.

To some extent Trudeau's comment applies equally to the relationships between the city of Detroit and its suburbs, including the Grosse Pointes. The size of the city of Detroit is so vast in comparison with its suburbs that many suburban communities have taken action to limit the use of their public facilities by nonresidents. The recent adoption by the city of Dearborn of an ordinance to exclude nonresidents from the use of some of its parks in a case in point. And it has led to a lawsuit and a boycott against the merchants of Dearborn on the grounds that the ordinance was aimed at the exclusion of blacks and other minorities from certain Dearborn parks.

Some people, including the head of the NAACP who is leading the Dearborn boycott, have been quoted as saying, in answer to a newsman's question, that if they win their case against Dearborn, they won't have to take action against other suburbs, such as Flat Rock, St. Clair Shores and the five Grosse Pointes, that have residents-only parks, because such restrictions then will be "unconstitutional." Nobody knows how widely this feeling is shared by all NAACP members but it is an opinion that worries some Grosse Pointe residents.

Yet the information we have is that the Grosse Pointes are not in the same category as Dearborn in this case because the Pointes have developed and maintained their parks only with the use of funds generated by taxation in the Pointes, by user fees applicable to residents who use the parks, or by contributions from Pointe residents. No federal or state funds have been involved, so far as we know.

The city of Grosse Pointe Park has issued a statement of explanation to people who have been inquiring about the comparisons made between the Pointes and Dearborn. It points out that "because of the minimum neighborhood park space available," the Park has restricted those resources to residents-only since 1931. "The residents-only policy continues to date," the statement continues, "because the parks are at their maximum capacity and fully utilized by the residents of the city of Grosse Pointe

'The total recreational area available in Grosse Pointe Park is less than 30 percent of the national recommended standard," the statement adds. "The neighborhood parks occupy only 28 acres to service a population of approximately 13,600 or a ratio of two acres per 1,000 residents. That is considerably less than 10 acres per 1,000 residents recommended by the National Recreation Association. Even when one considers the 11.9 acres of school playgrounds in Grosse Pointe Park, the ratio is increased by less than one acre per 1,000 residents.'

In the Park as in the other Pointes, the residents-only policy is aimed not only at Detroit residents but at all nonresidents. The parks are fenced and guarded, admission is limited to those displaying resident passes and to their guests, and enforcement of the residents-only requirement is not left to the selective discretion of city employees or officers.

The Dearborn controversy has raised the question about whether the ordinance was aimed chiefly at minorities, but in the Pointes the argument is made that the residents-only policy is aimed at all nonresidents. In fact, the policy has been in effect in the Park since 1931, which was long before blacks became a majority of the residents of Detroit.

Racism is not, of course, unknown in the Pointes any more than it is in Dearborn or in Detroit. But our contention is that the major reason for the residents-only policy in the Pointes is the sheer size of Detroit and other metropolitan area communities in comparison with the size of the parks in the Pointes. On that basis, we doubt the practicability of the proposal by a Detroit reader of the Grosse Pointe News that Detroit residents be permitted to use parks in the Pointes by paying a fee. If a large number of Detroit residents should be willing to share the costs of operating and maintaining the park, the increased usage by nonresidents might simply deprive some residents of their freedom to enjoy parks in their own communities.

In effect, the suburbs are "mice" in comparison with the Detroit "elephant" and, it seems to us, justified in raising barriers to the general nonresident public's use of their park facilities so long as they do not violate federal and state legal requirements.

Voters approved marina expansion

To the Editor:

I enjoyed reading your Jan. 9th article, "Woods Spent 1985 Building, Improving." The city government seems to be doing a good job deciding how to spend out tax revenues Orange and Julian dally enues. Over a million dollars was spent on streets and sewers, $120,000 on a new fire engine, $25,000 on tennis courts, and so forth. These are, of course, worth-while projects and the funds seem to be well spent. The taxpayers must rely on a sound city government to make wise spending decisions since it is impossible to obtain prior voter approval for all major expenditures. However, when specific approval for a project is obtained from the control of the c ect is obtained from the voters, I do expect the city government to respond.

About four years ago, the Woods voters passed a referendum on marina improvements at the Grosse Pointe Woods Lakefront Park, Studies have shown that the marina expansion would be totally paid for by the boat well rental fees. It would cost the taxpayers nothing. Have there been any additions, changes, major improvements to the marina since the elections? Is anything planned for the near future? Has the city government even agreed on any kind of a plan for marina improvements? The answers are all no.

The voters approved the marina issue because the Woods has the worst marina and the most boaters of all the Pointes. Many wells remain unused every year because of a low bridge. This adds up to thousands of lost dollars yearly.

And unlike the other Pointes, the

It seems to me that the Woods government doesn't care about boaters. By its inaction the city government seems to be telling the voters that they made a mistake, it knows what's best for them. Well, I would like to think that I

Clarify term, senior center

To the Editor:

The school survey identifies a subject for which follow-up inquiry is indicated.

Three out of four respondents supported establishment of a Senior Center. When one considers that the typical respondent was over age 61, that is a very significant finding.

Apparently it is perceived that inadequate attention is being given to the needs and interest of senior citizens, and that the current deficiencies could and should be met by a Senior Center.

If the needs and interests of senior citizens were, in the opinion of the respondents, being properly addressed, there would obviously be no interest in or support for a Senior Center.

We do not know what the school system had in mind when it used the phrase Senior Center. That should be readily available.

But the most important item of information we seek is a list of the needs and interests of senior citizens which would be provided through a Senior Center, yet are not currently provided by Services for Old Citizens at Ferry School, the Neighborhood Club, Calvary Center, GP Senior Men's Club, Senior Women's Club, AARP Chapters, the several churches, et crease in the penalty for failing to buckle up. Furthermore, in the five months after the law took effect, the number of people who died in vehicles on state roads declined 47 from the number who died in the same period in 1984, despite a national trend of increasing traffic death tolls. So there is evidence that increasing use of seat belts does save lives.

With that information we would then be in a position to plan the location, equipment, staffing and financing of the Senior Center.

As for the exhaust tests, the chief complaints to date have been about the varying costs and the varying results. The state permits a charge of up to $10 for the test, with some stations and garages charging less. But several instances have been reported of cars failing the test and passing it at a different station.

Owning and driving a car are heavy responsibilities. They include not just the original cost and the continuing operating expenses but also the many regulations imposed on the owner; a license for the car and each driver, required insurance, required seat belt use, and now required testing (in the three-county area) for exhaust emissions. Add to the list the many traffic laws motorists are expected to obey.

It is true that a sense of responsibility cannot be imposed by legislation. But laws that hit the pocketbook when people shirk their responsibilities do tend to promote compliance. Some drivers fail to realize that cars can be deadly projectiles, as well as polluters, which explains why the laws are required to protect the public

Prime Time for senior citizens

By Marian Trainor

Almost never a day goes by that along with disturbing news of catastrophes in the air and threats of terrorists that we don't also read of proposed cuts in Medicare or some prediction that Social Security will become too burdensome for wage-earners to support because of the ratio of those who contribute and those who benefit is shrinking.

Granted that airplane crashes and threats of suicide attacks are much more upsetting than change in Medicare and Society Security, but to those who need and depend on benefits, such news is bad news.

It was noticeable that one of the questions that was put to President Reagan when he gave his speech on Libya was one that dealt, not with that crisis, but with the effects of cuts in Medicare payments to hospitals.

It was pointed out that older people were being sent home before they were ready to go because of the practice instituted by the government in 1983 of paying a standard amount based on the patient's illness, giving hospitals incentives to trim unnecessary ex-

Honoring the question, the president reassured the correspondent that the problem was being looked into and then he moved along to other questions concerning the topic of his speech, which was the United States' boycott of Libya.

It was not an abrupt dismissal of the question but an answer, that coming from the president, contained a measure of reassurance.

It all comes back to a balanced budget. While the goal of a balanced budget is one that we all would like to see achieved, the measures taken to reach that end should not threaten the health and income security of older Americans.

We are told that Medicare is facing legislative cuts of almost $10 billion over the next three years. Previous savings from Medicare cuts came from doctors and other health providers. This is in line with the fact that health costs are rising twice as fast as older persons' incomes. Even so, the cost of hospitalization for Medicare patients is increased from a deductible of $400 to $492 (23 percent).

The fate of Social Security is another bothersome item. Although it is not tied to the federal budget, it is dependent on the contributions of those in the work

Economists say that as the population grows older and lives longer, it is going to become increasingly cause the proportion of older people will have increased to a point where the contribution which workers must pay will be very

We are told that it is possible Congress will more toward a phasing-out of Social Security and toward a phasing-in of private programs to protect retirees.

This new pattern of providing security for older citizens will not affect those receiving Social Security benefits now nor will it affect those in their late 40s and 50s.

A move towrd privatization is being tried out in Great Britain. It is a supplement to their basic retirement program.

British workers, if they so choose, may allot a part of their Social Security taxes to an approved pension plan. Their employers will also pay into it. The worker's fund balance would accompany him from job to job. On his death, the worker would have something tangible to leave his

Experts believe that private pension programs are superior to government programs. This theory of privatization is not one that those now receiving Social Security benefits will have to contend with, however they will have to deal with proposed cuts in Medi-

It is one that older citizens should do more than worry about. It calls for concerned action. In earlier days citizens who disagree with government proposals would take to the street corners and proclaim their displeasure.

Supposedly television has taken the place of those informal street corner forums. For those who can afford the money for that kind of exposure to voice their opinions, that's true, but for individuals, the cost is prohibitive.

Letters directed to elected officials in Washington, D.C., letting them know how you personally would be affected by changes and reductions in Medicare could help.

Your opinion is your vote. The ballot is important to legislators. A written message provides documentation of your opinion as a

If a measure comes up that you have not known of previously, either because you missed it in the paper or it was not given much publicity and you want to protest it, send a wire. There are two Western Union services that will speed your directive on its way. It costs just $2.50 for a 15-word message. There's no charge for your name, organization, affiliations and address'. Write your opinion in 15 words or less and phone the message to Western Union.

These messages are sent directly to terminals on Capitol Hill at the White House or to state capitals. They are delivered in

If you have more to say, send a ed 50 words to present your mes-

Timing is all important. You've got to get your message to lawmakers before they vote on key bills. Keeping track of what bills are coming up is not always easy for an individual. This is where the value of an organization comes in. The technique that has worked successfully is for a group to keep a close watch on key bills that may affect their membership. Members of the group than set off a planned chain reaction to communications to lawmakers before crucial votes

For instance, the members of a group or governing board chooses legislative priorities at state and national levels. Issues are then selected for action in upcoming legislative sessions that you want your representatives to bring before the legislative bodies. Designated members of the group can contact the staffs of congressmen, senators or state legislators and ask that they be advised about the critical stages of legislative bills, when citizen opinion can have the most effect.

Spread the word swiftly with a preplanned telephone network where the legislative "watcher" calls six members and so on. Within hours, hundreds of members can be contacting lawmakers with opinions on legislation your organization cares about in time to affect

Be specific. Tell how a measure will affect you as a senior citizen and generally how it will affect the local economy.

What I don't say

I say

It started early into the New ear; a disquieting gnawing every time I picked up a newspaper or turned on the television. It wouldn't go away. It got stronger. It took me a week to recognize what made my jaw muscles twitch, my palms itch and my back muscles clench

It happened a week ago Tuesday when the staff proofreads the paper. Sitting in the printing plant poring over the pages, I was expounding on my favorite subject; what's wrong with the schools.

A little item set me off. It seems a group offers free exercise classes at South in the afternoons. I wondered out loud why only at South and whether North kids could attend.

I added — to no one in particular - that, since it was my turn in the column rotation, it was time to vent a little anger. Editor Pat Paholsky turned to me and said, "Mike, when aren't you venting your anger?"

Missing a beat, I replied, "When

I'm asleep."
It took me another two hours to recognize my angry knot and an evening of ignoring the telephone, dirty dishes, frozen pipes and laundry to be sure. I was in the throes of impotent rage.

It's been a while since I've had an attack. Usually, I focus my anger and only let it show near vacation. No vacation will help this.

Shaking, unfocused rage is rare to me. Through experience, I've learned how to shut out certain things. As Richard Pryor's Mudbone character says, I've learned how to deal with the White Man's World.

When ignorance, stupidity or such things threaten, I turn away. When they fall in front of me, I work around them. I've learned to smile and agree and, above all, keep my mouth shut.

It's like walking through a cow pasture, though. You can only dance so far before you step in something. Then you get mad.

In the midst of these infrequent attacks, I want to stand up at meetings I cover and give people a good harangue. I'm not supposed to, however, because it will compromise my objectivity. I say nothing and seethe. One thing I wanted to rail against came up at the Jan. 6 Board of Education meeting. The administration formed a committee to study grading. One possible outcome could be a weighted grading system.

A weighted grading system sup-posedly rewards students who take tougher classes by guaranteeing something extra on their report cards. Simply put, a grade becomes a reward for motivation, not performance. The logic behind the system is just as flawed. A weighted system assumes that all students who take tough academic classes go on to college. It also assumes that high schools are farm teams in which college students are trained before they graduate to the big leagues.

Public high schools can't become the college student producing factories into which their non-public counterparts are evolving. From public high schools, kids may choose any direction.

High school is the last formal education they receive and it should be most comprehensive for which people are willing to pay taxes.

Instead of inflating grade point averages, why not just guarantee kids in certain classes a minimum grade? Better yet, make sure they get into college by offering a semester course in which students can memorize past SAT or ACT tests to improve their chances of high scores and getting into college. Johnny will get to Harvard, but he won't know Ralph Ellison from H.G. Wells.

What may have started it all is the blatant self-advertising the news media have been doing. There isn't a newspaper or television news team that doesn't trumpet they "have learned exclusively" or "first reported" something. I wonder how many people have dislocated shoulders from patting themselves on the backs in the newsrooms across the country.

What news media forget is information is our business. Reporting something first is our duty, not our That brings up the item that appeared on last week's editorial page about how 70 percent of people surveyed by the public schools turn to this paper for school news.

If such an item belongs in a newspaper, it belongs on the editorial page, which is the property and purview of the publisher. In an ideal world, a publisher refrains from tainting news columns because he has the opinion page on which to express himself.

I admit I am grateful for the recognition and even a little daunted by it. I'm also pretty embarrassed as well.

I read further into the survey and found that, of 442 people asked, 22 said they wanted more news coverage of their schools. While grateful that seven of 10 read school coverage, I also know that 6 percent think I need to work

So, anyone who thinks the schools aren't getting the coverage they deserve, send along your story ideas or topics to me at the newspaper. If there's an issue I've missed, a subject I've ignored or a mistake I've made, let me know.

I'm not kidding. An article about education writers I once read said school writers should be driven by "anger in the face of the promise unfulfilled." That anger should drive us all, from the superintendent to the parent whose child is starting kindergarten. We often have to drag people - kicking and screaming - to get them to do the right thing.

You know something? That knot inside is loosening a little. If you'll excuse me, I've got dishes to do, a phone to answer and stories

Police warn of phone solicitors

Grosse Pointe Park police are warning residents about a telephone solicitation that they say falsely represents itself as being affiliated with local police departments as it attempts to raise money.

The department was alerted to the fundraising, which has been going on for the past two weeks, after residents called to ask about it, according to Sgt. David Hiller, president of the local Fraternal Order of Police chapter.

"They are not raising money for Grosse Pointe Park police or any other Grosse Pointe department.

The company is called Police Post No. 1278, according to police. The company, when confronted by police with resident complaints, denied they were misrepresenting themselves, Hiller added.

Should residents have questions about this or other fundraising campaigns, they can call their local police department to inquire, he added.

be done to protect it. Considerable damage has already been done to the marina facility there.

"Much of the main pier and most of the finger piers are under water now," Crawford said. "The finger piers are being pushed up, the main pier is being pushed down."

The electricity and water lines serving the docks were severed by similar action last year. City workers relocated the lines to the tops of the piers, but this year they were severed again.

"We may just have to cut off the utilities," Crawford said.

Meanwhile, Fox Creek is brimming only inches from the top of the berm along Alter Road. Some of the residents on the other, lower side have sandbagged their

When the creek crests, it floods the parking lot at the park. That hasn't happened yet, but Crawford wasn't feeling optimistic..."Once it gets over the top (of the berm), it's straight downhill to Grosse Pointe

Park,'' he said. Department of Public Works employees in the Shores are spending all their spare time filling sandbags for a wall to be built at the park by March. The village took elivery of a truc load of sand and 5,000 bags in December. Approximately 600 to 700 feet of frontage along the village park shoreline is expected to flood.

"We decided to start early so we can fill the bags without over-time," explained Village Manager Michael Kenyon. "We have to get it done before the ice breaks up.

The City's improvement project is likely to be much more extensive. Seawalls at two city-owned properties are old. Already, lakewater is lapping within two inches of the top of the walls, with levels projected to rise at least six inches.

Officials are now reviewing the possibility of raising both walls at least a foot and a half, according to City Manager Thomas Kressbach. An immediate problem is erosion behind the seawalls, caused by water washing over and around. Of equal concern is the city marina, where water is lapping at the bottom of the docks. The docks, which were raised once in 1973, when lake levels were at another record high, will be completely under water if levels keep increasing. As in the Park, property along Jefferson drops sharply to the lake. Several of the houses in that area were sandbagged in 1973,

Kressbach said, but have improved their seawalls since that time. (High water) does put a strain on sewers and building footings in those areas, so we kind of have our fingers crossed," Kressbach said..."But we don't have the type of situation where folks are walking around in waders. At the Grosse Pointe Yacht Club, management is trying to stay ahead of the problem. Assistant Manager Ralph Mason said the club has installed 16 impellers, underwater agitators to keep the ice from forming. "They relieve pressure, so when surges occur, they cause less damage," Mason said. The club has also expanded its bubbling program to 60 boats. This also helps keep the harbor free of ice and allows the pressure to break through in designated areas, according to Mason.

"We can't do much about wind-driven ice across the lake," he said. "We just allow it to come up over the seawall. In that sense, high water is almost a blessing the ice goes over the wall instead of crushing it.

U.S. professionals see real world of People's Republic

By Nancy Parmenter

From small beginnings huge enterprises grow. Fifteen years ago, Grosse Pointer Dr. Robert Everett hadn't even thought of coordinating international exchanges between Chinese and American professionals; in 1986, through his independent not-for-profit corporation, China-U.S. Exchanges, he expects to send 200 professional delegations.

The object is to present China through its own eyes. The American participants in the 17- to 19-day trips spend at least half of their time involved in professional activities - lectures, roundtable discussions, factory tours — with their Chinese counterparts.

Mealtimes, which are also coordinated by China-U.S. Exchanges, offer an opportunity to socialize with the Chinese and talk about business in an informal way. Participants end up with an almost dawn-to-dusk immersion in things Chinese.

There are so many tours going on where you look at foreigners as if they're in a zoo," Everett said. "(Our participants) learn and understand more about the problems that these people face, earning a living every day just the way we do.'

Between 15 and 24 people participate in each mission. Because a delegation with less than the China-U.S. Exchanges is organized best. under IRS regulations, the trip is tax-deductible for the professional participant and partially tax-deductible for a spouse. The spousal deduction came about because of the great importance placed upon the family unit in China, Everett said.

Each delegation centers around a particular profession. When he started, Everett took mostly members of his own profession dentistry - but now, miners, farmers, lawyers, teachers or journalists are just as likely to go.

Both the delegation leader and the participants are required to bring something to the trip in a professional sense. Resumes and written goal and accomplishment statements help assure that each participant has something to contribute to a roundtable discussion

It takes nine months to organize a delegation. "I work slowly," Everett said. "I don't want to take

What takes so long is that the leader of any prospective delegaition has to submit a proposal to the appropriate Chinese ministry, which — upon approval — issues a iformal invitation and suggests an itinerary.

The process had resulted in an extensive network of Chinese government and embassy officials for Everett, who works with the ministries of science and technology, railways, performing arts, light industry, banking and whoever else is necessary to design a mission to suit individual

By now, China-U.S. Exchanges is the biggest such organization in the state. Everett says it's just good fortune. "I was lucky to get the idea at a time of upswing in Chinese relations," he said. "I'm just a bloke on Mack Avenue, there at the right time with desire and energy.

Thus far, the delegations have kept relations on the purely professional plane. Despite the enormous respect for and interest in family life in China, the Chinese tend to be too reserved to invite people to their homes until they have developed a deep friendship.

But now, owing largely to the complex network evolved through several years of organizing. Everett is starting to work home visits into the itinerary. "Just for tea, for example," he said. "It's not the custom to invite (casual) visitors to the house.

The usual thing for business acquaintances is to mix socializing and business in a more formal setting. "In China, you're doing business all the time - people are always asking you questions," Everett said.

The exchange works the other way, too. Some of the money raised through participant fees is used for scholarships to bring Chinese professionals to the United States for a year of study. Delegations from the Chinese ministries also make visits.

The two-way exchange of understanding has promoted good feeling between the two countries, Everett believes. It may also have brought about a change in the way the Chinese do things.

"When I first started this, I used to write letters all over the world and just wait to see who would respond." Everett said. "China always used to write and say there were no rooms. Imagine a country of a billion people - and no rooms!

Public school advertises for local students

By Mike Andrzejczyk

What do University Liggett Middle School, Detroit Waldorf School, Grosse Pointe Academy and Trombly Elementary School have in common?

All four will have open houses this month. And all four have advertised the event, even though Trombly is part of the Grosse Pointe Public School System.

Trombly's open house Sunday from 2 to 4 p.m. at the school on Beaconsfield is a little more elaborate than those held in other public schools. It's also the only one advertised throughout the elementary school's district by direct

More than 1,600 flyers went out to announce the event. The PTO planning committee for the open house spent most of its $250 budget on the production and mailing of the hand-addressed invitations.

"The invitations were sent to every household in the district,' Principal Shiela Joyce said. "We plan to showcase Trombly to its fullest to show what a critical institution it is to our community.

The school decided to hold its open house in January because it's traditionally the month that parents begin deciding where they will send their children to school in September, school officials say.

"We hope to lure every schoolage child in the district to attend school at Trombly," Joyce adds.

But according to school system census data from 1984, Trombly already has the third-highest percentage of school-age children attending public school. According to the district's biennial census, the school's district attracted better than 83 percent of the 859 5- to 19-year-olds living in the elementary school district in 1984.

The two elementary districts with higher percentages of schoolage children attending public schools were Poupard, with little more than 87 percent, and Defer, with just about 83 percent, according to the census.

Of the 859 school-age children counted in the district, 155 attended non-public schools. According to the recently completed residents' survey of attitudes about public schools, close to 31 percent who send their children to private schools said they sent their children to non-public schools for the religious instruction available.

Other responses to the question of choice of non-public over public schools showed those surveyed saying they sent their children to non-public schools because it was a tradition (13 percent); they felt non-public schools had higher academic standards (9 percent); there was stricter discipline in nonpublic schools (6 percent); and offered a better reputation and better curriculum (6 percent).

While the 50 or so students who could be lured to attend Trombly wouldn't bring any more money to the school system, which is out-offormula and doesn't receive direct aid from the state Department of Education, the extra children could eliminate the needs for "flexgrades" at the school, according to school personnel.

The school was one of four elementary schools found to have at least two extra rooms in a study done late last year by the administration. The school currently has 11 self-contained classrooms, according to the administration survey.

The school began making its open houses more a community event to attract possible students when the first rumblings of school closings began. Trombly's enrollment is just under 250 students, the smallest of the nine elementary schools. The school itself is the second-oldest elementary school in the district and the third-oldest school building.

Since the school has begun wider advertisement of its programs, which include all-day kindergarten and latchkey as well as high ability and computer classes, the school's enrollment has been rising. Trombly was projected to have begun this school year with 224 students in September, but Fourth Friday counts actually counted 247 this year. Some of those children are converts from non-public schools, according to Joyce, who adds that after the recent mailing of invitations, she has already started getting calls from parents asking about the services and curriculum at the school.

'The advertising goes along with the board of education's goal of telling the story of the school system," she adds. "This is a chance for us to put our best foot forward for the community.

What the open house can do is "build spirit and pride in the Trombly community," Joyce adds. Emphasizing the community part of the open house this year will be an appearance by Park Mayor Palmer Heenan, who will speak briefly about the school system as well as talk about the millage, school officials say.

The open house will also show off programs at the school, with the classroom tours and displays of the art department, BABES and Green Circle substance abuse programs, computer demonstration and a history of the school.

Also speaking at the reception in the auditorium will be Suzanna Sippola, president of the PTO; Debbie Saros, open house committee chairman; and Joyce.

Saros and Monna Terrell cochaired the 16-member planning committee.

The Board of Education accept- to pay some of the expenses for an educational field trip and to buy classroom materials for teachers.

In past months, board members have been questioning whether the donations by PTOs at different schools is resulting in an inequitable distribution of equipment and materials among the elementary schools.

Questions have also been raised, chiefly by trustees Carl Anderson and Carol Marr, whether some of the donations are being used to buy equipment that the school system should rightfully be buying.

The administration is working on developing a gift policy, according to Superintendent John Whritner. Officials hope to have a draft of the policy in a couple months.

Parcells to give benefit concert in Detroit

By Elsa Frohman

For many performers, "paying your dues" is a euphemism for the years of waiting tables or driving a taxi cab while struggling for every bit part that come along. It is the difficult period in a per-former's life when he or she breaks out of anonymity and becomes a household word.

For Grosse Pointe Elizabeth "Betsy" Parcells, paying her dues has meant a steady job in a respected European opera company. As a member of the Solo Ensemble of the Frankfurt Opera, in Germany, since 1983, she has been singing roles is productions such as "The Magic Flute" and "Tales of Hoffman."

Parcells has come back to Grosse Pointe with two purposes in mind. The first was achieved last weekend as she married her German sweetheart, Dierk-Echhard Becker. The second will be achieved this weekend when she gives a benefit concert for the Orchestra Hall renovation on Jan. 18 at 8 p.m.

Parcells' involvement with the concert comes through her mother, a member of Ibex, which is sponsoring the benefit. Ibex is a local organization for the support of the arts. Ibex has been supportive of the Orchestra Hall renovation project for several years.

For Parcells, the concert will be a gala homecoming. But soon after she takes her last bows, she must return to Frankfurt and her regular job.

"Germany is the only place where an opera singer can have a steady job with a salary," Parcells said. She explained that most American companies, in-cluding the prestigious New York City Opera and the Metropolitan Opera, only hire singers by the night. If you are singing, you get paid. If you don't have a role in tonight's production, forget it.

"The only steady job with the Met is in the chorus," she said. "And if you are in the chorus, you can kiss a solo career goodbye."

In Germany, where the government supports state operas, singers are hired as part of the opera ensemble. They have a regular job with the company and work in many different parts, depending on what the company is currently producing.

"A state supported theater has a responsibility to the public," she said. "We have to do fairy tales, children's productions, light opera and operettas. We get to do one or two interesting things a year. I can't be center stage all the time, but nobody starves in in Wiesbaden, Germany. He was the public relations man for the opera. The couple were married in a civil ceremony in Germany, but repeated their vows in church, here, over the weekend.

"In Germany, the civil ceremony is required," Parcells said. She explained that most German couples simply have a civil ceremony, only those with a strong attatchment to the church

"I don't think people here would stand for the strict social system they have in Germany," Parcells said. "It's a wonderful place for old people and artists. You don't see poverty in Germany. Every fall, singers by the hundreds go over there and audition. Once you get that job, it kind of grows on Parcells knew she wanted a career in music at an early age. However, the decision to pursue a career in opera came much later.

"I was nearly through the conservatory," she said. "I just didn't know. I thought maybe I'd make a career of singing the 'Messiah' year-around.

Her earliest experiences with music came from singing in the choir at Grosse Pointe Memorial

"Even as a child, I had a very sweet, pleasant voice," she said.
"Usually, the best children's voices come from boys. I was not good at sports, not particularly popular. I wasn't full of that kind

A turning point came for Parcells when the choir director singled her out one day, to show the rest of the children how the song should be sung.

"Everybody was staring at me," she said. "I thought then, I want to be stellar. I couldn't wait for every Tuesday, for choir practice. Children interested in music are often that way."

Parcells attended high school at Liggett, but did her senior year and graduated from Interlochen where she could prepare for a conservatory. She then spent the next six years, for both a bachelor's and master's degree at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston.

"That was the best thing for me," she said. "To stay in one place and concentrate. But I didn't have any fun at all."

During most of her time at the conservatory, Parcells concentrated on concert music, a very different field from opera.

"In opera, the visual is important. You have to move, dance having the second, religious, and act. The quality of your singborn with the proper voice to be ceremony. She attributes the Gering, at best, comes second. In a developed. ing, at best, comes second. In a concert, you can be clean and precise. You can concentrate on the music. The visual aspect is null and void," she said.

Because of the intensity of an operatic performance, the singers are taking a higher risk of injuring their voices than concert singers.

"It is the same as with athletes," she said. "Just like you can ruin your back. (In opera) you put a lot of strain on the organism. You're asking a lot and you run the risk of breaking something. A singer must be conscious of this. With a good trainer, you improve the shape of your vocal cords. You work hard but don't damage them.

It takes years of training to develop an operatic voice, according to Parcells. But before the work starts, the singer must be developed.

"You have to be born with it." she said. "But that's only a small part of the battle. I was lucky to have the genes. I have five brothers and sisters and they all have pleasant voices. They all could sing if they wanted to. But there isn't any reason for us to become the Jackson Five. There's a lot more of it. You have to have the drive and will and it's not for everybody. Even if you do come up with the genetic material, it's not a guarantee.'

The hard work on the way to becoming a singer discourages all but the most determined.

You really have to love it a lot to take it up as a profession," she said. "You have to love it enough to get you over the days when you hate it. There is the drudge work

Weddings

Dr. and Mrs. William Jennings Stevens-Jennings

Anne Mitchell Stevens, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Stevens of Grosse Pointe Farms, and Dr. William G. Jennings, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Jennings of Grosse Pointe Woods, were married on Nov. 29, 1985, at St. Paul Catholic Church.

The Rev. Edward Ritter, cousin of the groom's mother, celebrated the 6 p.m. nuptial mass, which was followed by a reception at the Grosse Pointe Yacht Club.

Using the fabric from her mother's antique ivory satin and lace dress, the bride designed her gown with a fitted bodice trimmed with pearls over a full chapel-length skirt. The cathedral veil, edged by Brussels lace, was gathered onto a matching lace-over-satin cap trimmed with pearls. She carried an arm bouquet of white roses and baby's breath.

The bride's sister, Carol Stevens of Montclair, N.J., was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Carol Jennings, sister of the groom, Detroit; and Cynthia Ann Steves, sister-in-law of the bride, Mountain View, Calif. The attendants wore periwinkle blue taffeta tea-length dresses and carried arm bouquets of cream-colored alstromeria liles, roses, blue bachelor buttons and baby's breath.

The best man was Dr. Michael Jennings, brother of the groom, Harper Woods. Groomsmen were Dr. Thomas Gebeck, Grosse Pointe; and Capt. Richard Stevens, the bride's brother from Mountain View, Calif. The groom's nephew, Brandon Jennings, was ringbearer, and the ushers were Jimmie Bloink Jr., Dr. Jan Lehman and Steven Hicks of Grosse Pointe; and Sheldon Hall Jr., Urbanna, Va. James Motschall Jr., of Grosse Pointe, and Joseph Newberry of Chicago, Ill., were lectors.

The mother of the bride wore a lavender chiffon tea-length gown with a corsage of cream-colored cymbidium orchids. The groom's mother wore a dusty-rose chiffon, tea-length gown, also with a cream-colored cymbidium orchid corsage. After a brief honeymoon, the couple will live in Grosse Pointe Woods. The bride is a graduate of the University of Michigan and earned a master's degree from Pennsylvania State University. The groom, a life-long resident of Grosse Pointe, graduated from the University of Michigan Dental School. Club information wanted

In editing this section, I often find that I would like to contact a club or organization and find that I don't know who the contact person is or how to reach that person. Most of you publicity chairmen have been very good about including a contact number on your news releases, but if you haven't turned anything in this week, and I'd still like to get in touch with you — I'm often left wondering who to contact.

To help me stay in better touch with you — I'd like to put together a directory of club and organization contact people. This information will not be published — so don't worry about your address and phone number becoming public information. I'd just like to have the information so if I suddenly decide that this week I'd like to do a feature on your club, I'll be able to reach someone.

If you'd like to have your club listed in my directory, please fill out the form below and return it to: Elsa Frohman, Features Editor; The Grosse Pointe News, 99 Kercheval, Grosse Pointe Farms, Mich., 48236.

Academy receives Timmis memorial

George A. Haggarty, president of the board of trustees of the Grosse Pointe Academy, has announced the receipt of a gift of $500,000 to the Second Century Fund from Michael and Nancy Timmis. The gift is given in memory of their daughter, Laura Elizabeth Timmis, a 1984 graduate. This major gift will provide the funds for the construction of a new building which will be named in Laura's honor, as well as renovation of the existing Early School.

The Grosse Pointe Academy located on Lake Shore Road in Grosse Pointe Farms, is celebrating its centennial year and has provided primary education to many residents of this community. The Early School at the Grosse Pointe Academy is distinguished as the largest and oldest Montessori School in the State of Michigan, dating from its founding in 1962.

The Grosse Pointe Academy was an important part of Laura's growing up years, as she attended the school from preschool to graduation in 1984," Timmis said. "This gift reflects the appreciation of the family and is a fitting memorial to Laura. The Early School manifests the philosophy of the academy's founders and is the cornerstone of an academy education. This expanded facility will continue to provide the excellent education for which The Grosse Pointe Academy is recognized."

Ground will be broken for the new building and the renovation of the existing facility in mid-March 1986 and all work will be completed in time for the opening of the new school year in September. The new building will implement the recommendations set forth in the school's long range plans prepared by J. Michael Kirk, noted restoration architect. The new building will be 4,680 square feet and will contain an activity room, a gymnasium and an additional class-

This construction is made possible by the Second Century Fund campaign which was initiated in the spring of 1984. The campaign, under Haggarty's chairmanship, has raised more than $2 million for support of scholarships, building renovation, chapel support and endowment of faculty salaries. More than 100 volunteer parents, trustees, alumni and friends have devoted a considerable amount of effort to making this campaign a

Stacks of Christmas presents, nursery and church schools were 1,843 to be exact, were the special gifts of Grosse Pointe school children to the foster care children of Wayne County this holiday season.

Through Operation LINC's 12th annual Foster Care Children's Christmas Gift Program, students in 14 Grosse Pointe elementary, able to donate toys, or hats and mittens to deserving, but often neglected foster care kids.

Program co-chairmen Jeannie Noto and Maggi O'Brien reported that 213 more gifts were received by the program in 1985 than in previous years.

"Even though one elementary school chose only to have their kindergarten class participate and fewer students were actually involved in this year's drive, the children were even more generous than before," she explained.

Foster Care children are in temporary homes through no fault of their own, and the State only provides $10 per child for each foster mother to buy Christmas gifts," added O'Brien.

While the tinsel, ornaments and lights have been put away for another year, the success of LINC's other holiday programs continue to bring happiness to many needy people in 1986. Among the many generous con-tributions to LINC agencies from the community this season: the Michigan Candy Dealers Association provided 425 candy-filled Christmas stockings; the Richard School Daisy Girls Scout Troop gave handmade stocking stuffers; the Gold and Silver Trefoil Association contributed many personal care gifts; and 12 beautiful, hand-made dolls were brought in by a talented local citizen.

And because of thoughtfulness such as this the annual LINC Tov Chest and Gifts Program was able to present toys, candy, personal care items and food to: Adult Service Centers, Inc.; Detroit Anti-Hunger Program; the Renaissance Health Care, Inc.; La Casa Community Youth Service; Brown's Chapel Missionary Baptist Church; Jefferson House of the Capuchin Community Center; Conner House of the Eastwood Community Clinic; and the Assertive Community Treatment Program at ACT-Hegira Programs,

With the advent of the New Year, an important request for aid comes to LINC from the Rehabilitation Institute of Detroit's Therapeutic Recreation Department. According to Melinda Callahan, director of therapeutic recreation, the institute needs a VCR (VHS) to show movies to patients, a stereo with tape player and turntable, a microphone, and the expertise of a knowledgeable volunteer to help institute workers choose and implement and appropriate sound system for patients.

The institute serves a wide variety of disabled patients. Among these are people suffering spinal cord injuries, closed head those with neurological disorders, such as multiple sclerosis, and burn patients.

We need these systems," said Callahan, "not only for music therapy — for patients learning to walk again who are aided by the beat of music, for example — but also as a way for patients to relax and find enjoyment as a release for their pain.

"Each evening we have different musical groups come in to provide live entertainment for our patients but we desperately need a sound system to be able to reach all the patients," she said.

Area residents who might be able to donate equipment or volunteer information may contact Melinda Callahan at 494-9786 or the Operation LINC office at 882-6100.

Operation LINC anticipates many new requests for help from numerous metropolitan area agencies we serve in 1986. We need your time and contributions. As a nonprofit, volunteer organization LINC depends on your support. To volunteer or donate useable items at any time of the year, please call LINC at 882-6100, between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m.

"The Scarab Club has been conservative, compared to some activities in the art field," Scanes Scanes explained that American artists in general used to be quite a bit behind their counterparts in Europe.

"Modern art is about 115 years old," Scanes said. "But it was the 1913 international exhibition in New York when American artists were first exposed to modern

For Scanes, it is impossible to talk about the history of the Scarab Club without mentioning the famous Scarab Club Ball, that was once one of the premier social events in Detroit. Dating back into the "teens" the costume ball was first held at an amusement park near the shore side of the Belle Isle Bridge. Later it was held at the Greystone Ballroom and still later at the Scarab Club's historic building on Farnsworth.

"It was your typical artists" ball," Scanes said with a touch of mischief, "involving a small degree of nudity. The Scarab Club Ball was where the movers and the shakers used to go.'

Today, Scanes enjoys his retirement with travel and a continuing interest in drawing, painting and sculpture. He accepts an occasional commission to do a painting, but generally paints for his own pleasure. He is currently working on a painting of a 1964 Corvette that he owned until it was stolen in the 1970s. He is working from a photograph of the car, taken during a vacation in the upper peninsula.

"It's a photo with the Mrs. in it, taken during a rare October snowstorm," Scanes said.

He often works from photographs, though he also work from life, sometimes starting to paint a scene he sees from his motel room door while on vacation.

"The only thing that separates artists from other people is artists are using their eyes all the time.' Scanes said. "It's a matter of observation. Learning the technical skill is very facile. It's having

Casseroles go oven to table for simplicity

NBA game in Pointe? In 1960, it was no big deal

When the glamorous Los Angeles Lakers and the Detroit Pistons get together for a game at the Pontiac Silverdome, the place is usually pretty well sold out weeks, if not months, in advance. And most years, the Ellay squad makes only one stop in Motown (or, if you will, Po-Town).

That wasn't always the case. Back in 1960, the Pistons and the Lakers (who then called decidedly-unglamorous Minneapolis home) were set to engage in divisional playoff action. Except that the Pistons couldn't find a place to play when an ice show moved in and took over their "home" - Olympia Stadium. Their usual alternative, the University of Detroit's old Memorial Building, was also book-

So they wound up in Grosse Pointe, in the unfamiliar confines of the old Grosse Pointe High gymnasium, capacity: 2,800.

The game was moderately big news in Grosse Pointe - the Grosse Pointe News even ran a front page story two days before the game. It was a 10-inch story, which took a back seat to headlines like "Park Blamed for Pollution" and "Elm Tree Spraying Program Okayed by Park Council," but it was still front page news.

I say "moderately big news" because this paper didn't cover the game or even do a follow-up story about the attendance, the effect a pro game had on Grosse Pointe, or even print the final score. It was almost as if pro basketball (yawn) came to the Pointe every

But hey, that was 1960. Things were different back then.

For example, according to the Grosse Pointe News' pre-game story, tickets to the game were unreserved, sold on a first-come, first-serve basis. Imagine that at the Silverdome today. And they could be purchased at the laughably-low price of $3 for adults, $1 for students, which is about what you'd pay for parking these days.

Those who wanted to see the game merely had to stroll on over to Gray's Sports Shop at 106 Kercheval - where the Christian Science Reading Room is today.

And back then, the Pistons and Lakers played 12 games against one another each season, six in each city. Think of being able watch Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Magic Johnson take on the Pistons six times each year. But that's now.

Then, the Pistons and the rest of the NBA were sort of a dog-and-pony-show type of operation. Which is probably why not too many people even remember the day the NBA playoffs came to Grosse Pointe.

South High athletic director Chuck Hollosy was teaching at Austin High back then, but he remembers hearing about the Piston game, even thought the version he heard had Oscar Robertson and the Cincinnati Royals as Detroit's opponent. "In those days, it wasn't that big a deal," Hollosy says. The NBA was playing in various high school gyms when the arenas were booked. They probably picked Grosse Pointe because it was the largest gym available at the time since East Detroit's — which is bigger than South's gym — probably had high school districts going on.

Imagine that — the NBA running a distant second to high school tournament play.

Even Nick Kerbawy, the general manager of the Pistons that season and the man who had to do some frantic phoning to find a game site, can't quite recall the outcome of the whole affair.

"I have the feeling we lost and were eliminated. But that's been a while and I'm really not sure," Kerbawy says. "I do remember that the Minneapolis Lakers had Elgin Baylor, one of the NBA greats. The Pistons? We had Gene Shue, who is now the general manager of the Washington Bullets.

"Oh, we were a road show back then. We did everything to sell tickets. And quite often, we played in front of 15,000 empty seats. TV is what changed all of that," he adds.

Even the Pistons aren't sure what the outcome of the game is. Piston employee Ted Pitynski is working on an "origin of the Pistons" feature film to run at halftime during an upcoming nationally-televised game. It was Pitynski who called me, looking for some background information - anything on the day the Pistons came to Grosse Pointe. Seems even the Piston record books aren't too clear on the outcome of that game.

Pitynski's request got me interested in the whole thing. But in 1960 I was a mere 2-yearold toddling around Detroit and no one I've talked to who was around back then can seem to come up with any more details about the game on March 12, 1960. Even though it was televised nationally over NBC's 200-station network (but blacked out in Detroit . . . which just goes to show that some things never change) there just doesn't seem to be anybody around who remembers.

Saturday is 'Hockey Night in Grosse Pointe'

It might just be the fact that the North-South game has been decided by one goal in three out of four instances, that the team is favored to win never has, and that three times, either North or South has come back from two-goal deticits twice in the last four minutes of the game — to win and send their fans home happy.

"Any North-South game and the kids come to play." says North's Manzella. "The crowd plays a big factor. A lot of kids aren't used to playing in front of 1,000 people. We're not going to change anything. We've tried hype and we've tried to approach the game lowkey. This time, we're going to let the kids take charge.

man thought he'd strangle the next person who asked him about the upcoming North-South game. He shouldn't have been to surprised by the question: after wondering in the pre-season if his sophomoreladen squad would win five games in the whole year, Zimmerman's Devils got off to an attention-grabbing 7-3 start . . . just like their crosstown rivals.

Still, Saturday's game is just another one on the schedule for Zimmerman

"I'm probably the only one in the rink who approaches it that way, but it's just like any other game to me. Whether we win or lose, I'll be doing the same things on Sunday morning I always do.

"Sure, this community lives for the North-South game. But really, what does it prove? Nothing . . because there's always another Zimmerman says with a Zimmerman does admit that Saturday's game is a big one — in the standings. North is just behind South in the Michigan Metro League and Zimmerman says he's glad that his team is hot right now.

"We've got the great attitude we've had all season long. With eight sophomores, I think that's outstanding. And Billy (Tecos, South's senior goalie) is going better now than ever.

Tecos will have to contend with the Norsemen's hot line of Casey Quick, Peter Guzzardo and Tom Ugval. "Quick's line has started to carry the team," North's Manzella says. "That line was fabulous against Fraser — they got two goals and we won — but they were a little off against Cranbrook and we got beat.

Right now, my major problem is defense. It's come a long way since the beginning of the season - Wayne Houle and Brian Nettle are playing very well — but I've got every defenseman out with the flu. That makes it tough," Manzella adds.

North's strategy is to pepper the South net with as many shots as possible. "We know that we have to do two things: beat Tecos and shut down Rob Wood. We do that and everything else will fall into

"I'll tell you one thing. We cannot get into a scoring match with North. They've got more depth than we do, their defense is solid and last time Dennis (junior goalie Matt) stoned us," Zimmerman counters.

To beat them, we've got to stay with them. I'm stressing just what I have all year: poise and discipline. So far it's worked. As young as these kids are, they haven't gotten flustered and I don't expect them to on Saturday," he adds.

North is 4-2 in league play, while South is 5-1. "We win and we're tied at 5-2 in the league and it's a whole new ballgame," Manzella

One thing's for sure: never underestimate South High," he

Basketball Blue Devils open 1986 with two victories

By Stephen Ebner South High

Wins over Fraser, 51-42, and Port Huron, 61-55, signaled a new year for the Blue Devil varsity basketball team.

At Fraser, South fought hard in the second half, to overcome a 22 percent first half shooting percentage. Fraser's 50 percent shooting percentage won it a nine-point lead at halftime. The victors from South were led by center Gordie Langs, 19 points, 11 rebounds; and forward Tim Hudson. 14 points. Guards Ed Gramling and Sean Bruce each netted nine points, and assisted on six and seven baskets, respectively.

Last Friday, Jan. 10, South opened its EML season at Port Huron. An 18-point Blue Devil lead at halftime didn't weaken home-favorite Port Huron. "In the second half we didn't execute well," said coach George Petrouleas. "Port Huron scored on every one of their possessions.'

Top efforts for South were Bruce with 22 points; Hudson hit for 15, and Langs had 11 points along with 10 rebounds.

The Blue Devils, 1-0 in the Eastern Michigan League, 4-3 overall, travel to Anchor Bay tomorrow, Friday, Jan. 17.

JV drops two

South's JV basketball team opened 1986 with road losses at Fraser, 52-42, and Port Huron, 55-44, where it opened its EML season.

Coach Al Devine explained. "The turnovers are killing us." South turned the ball over 15 times at Fraser and 16 times at Port Huron. "Most of the turn-overs are just bad passes," Devine added. Combining last week's two games, South averaged between nine and 10 players scoring a game.

Bright spots against Fraser were Marty Saad's 14 points and Mike Finch's 10 points, which helped him earn Player of the Game honors. Jim Johnson had 11 rebounds.

Against Port Huron, co-captain Bryan Jones led South scoring with 11 points, while Johnson added 14 points and 10 rebounds to net Player of the Game honors.

The JV, 0-1 EML, 2-5 overall going into Tuesday's Mount Clemens game, will play at Anchor Bay Jan. 17.

South's freshman squad suffered its first loss of the season last week, to Notre Dame, 39-28, dropping its record to 4-1. The Blue Devils scored just one point in the final quarter, against the Fighting

Tankers unbeaten

South's boys' swim team remained unbeaten in dual meets, defeating Ann Arbor Huron, 93.5-78.5, and Birmingham Seaholm, 98-74. The decimal score against Ann Arbor Huron was caused by a rare tie.

Individual winners facing Ann Arbor Huron were: Dick Clarke, 200 free and 500 free; Rick Leonard, individual medley and 100 breast; Matt Smith, whose time in the 100 fly qualified for state play. Dick Clarke, Matt Smith, Billy Thompson, and Scott Frame touched first for South in the 400 free relay.

At the Birmingham Seaholm meet, individual winners were Dick Clarke, 200 free; Matt Smith, 200 individual medley and 100 fly; Rick Leonard, 50 free; and Jeff Clark won the 100 backstroke. South also took first in the 200 medley relay, consisting of Jeff Clark, Leonard, Smith, and Frame. Winning the 400 free relay were Thompson, Dick Clarke, Frame, and Leonard. Coach Fred Michalik com-mented, "We have depth. We can afford to lose first place in certain events, because we place second and third in many events.

The swimmers will meet Roseville today, Jan. 16, and Dearborn on Saturday, Jan. 18. Both meets will be at home.

The Blue Devil wrestlers dropped two matches last week, to North High, 41-24, and at Anchor Bay, 55-15.

Winning matches for South were Gordon Muir, Paul Andreponte, Barry Brookes, Dave Morinelli, Tony Smihal and Mark

Boosting their record to 7-3, the Blue Devils hockey team conquered Ann Arbor Huron 3-0 in its only game last week.

Senior goaltender Bill Tecos had his second shutout of the year, even though Ann Arbor outshot the Devils, 25-21.

South's first goal was scored by junior John Nicholson from sophomore Tim Jerome, while the Devils were shorthanded. The second was a power play goal by junior Andy Roy, from senior Eric Warezak and junior Evan Frakes. Senior Rob Wood notched South's final goal on assists from Jerome and Frakes.

Spikers sweep

The volleyball season began last week for all three levels of play. Both the varsity and the JV teams were victorious.

The varsity beat Port Huron Friday night, 15-6, 15-3. Four girls had two kills each - Megan Keller, Mary Ann Montagne, Theresa Schulte, and Heather Imel. Montagne, the team's only setter, was good on 20 of 26.

South's JV also conquered Port Huron — 15-8, 16-14. Sophomores Patty Pentecost and Lisa Van Tassel did well setting, as did sophomore Stephanie Dinka on defense. Sophomore Meg Peterson and freshman Chris Shulte had some nice spikes and sophomore Barb Denler had a good block. Sophomore Carolina Gaskins made five unreturned serves in a row.

North's varsity basketball squad raised its overall record to 5-2 (1-0 in the Bi-County League) with victories over Warren Woods Tower, 57-54, and Lake Shore, 49-35, last week.

The Norsemen, paced by Rob Skuras' 16 points, Dave Bryer's 15 points and Chris Dudeck's 10 points, defeated Tower on Jan. 7. North led by one point at the half and the two teams were tied, 37-37, at the end of the third quarter. The Norsemen were able to perform well enough in the final quarter to record the 57-54

'We won and Chris Dudeck did a good job," said coach George Olman after the victory.

Against Lake Shore last Friday night, North blew many fast break opportunities and committed several turnovers allowing 1-6 Lake Shore to keep the game close. "We didn't play well, but we got the win and that's the sign of a good team," Olman said. He also had commendations for junior Tom Shehab, saying Shehab "really gave us a lift in the fourth quarter with some big rebounds

Dudeck led the Norsemen with 16 points; Bill Miller had 13

In summarizing the season thus far, Olman said 'We have a good win-loss record, but we're not playing as well as we can record on the right track."

North's next game is Friday, Jan. 17, at Roseville Brablec. Game time is 7:30 p.m.

JV wins two

The North JV basketball squad had its best week of the season, winning two and running its record to 3-4. North beat Warren Woods Tower, 52-26, on Jan. 6, behind the 10-point performance of Steve Langs. Nine other players got into the scoring column.

On Jan. 9, the JV destroyed Lake Shore, 60-18. Mark Demanigold had 14 points to lead the balanced scoring attack. "We had a hard time starting out, but now we're playing a little better and I'm happy about that," said coach Martin Letzmann.

the Knights defeated highly rated Class A Howell High School, 4-3, in an excellent game of hockey. "We had everything to gain and the South game, we were ready to play. We skated with great intensity and desire from start to finish," said Jewett.

Maitland had a hand in each of the Knights' four goals, scoring two himself, and assisting Bob Jewett and Birgbauer on two others.

Cagers struggle

The ULS boys' varsity basketball team continued to struggle as its record dropped to 1-7 with losses to Troy Zion Christian and Plymouth Christian last week.

The 42-40 loss to Troy Zion Jan. 7, was a terrific effort which fell just short. The entire game was close and with 16 seconds left in the game, ULS had the ball with a chance for a tie. The Knights reversed the ball against the Zion zone and tried to get it to the middle to Kevin Darby but the ball was deflected away.

Darby led the Knights with 16 points while John Travis, who played his best all around game, chipped in with 10.

The 60-42 defeat at Plymouth on Jan. 10 was another heartbreaker. Plymouth jumped out to a 21-7 lead. Behind an aggressive and penetrating Kirk Haggarty, the Knights scored 14 straight points. The game was nip and tuck until two minutes into the fourth quarter. With ULS leading, 37-35, Plymouth went on a 12-2 tear and put the game away.

Haggarty scored 15 points and

Darby contributed 14. "Our team is very disappointed and frustrated, but nobody, I repeat nobody, has quit trying. We will continue to battle every game!" coach Wright declared.

Maybe it's because the NBA was the Rodney Dangerfield of pro sports back then. Or because jaded Grosse Pointers had already sampled the NBA's wares when the Lakers beat the Pistons, 120-101, in a 1959 exhibition game played to benefit the G.P. High Dad's Club. At any rate, all I've been able to determine is that back then, the NBA, the Pistons and their stop in Grosse Pointe turned out to be no big deal.

As Kerbawy recalls, "we came in and we left . . . and didn't disturb too many of the good people of Grosse Pointe."

But it's beginning to drive me crazy, wondering about the final score of that playoff game. So if there's anybody who actually stopped in at Gray's Sports Shop, bought a $3 ticket and wandered over to South High for an afternoon of NBA action back in 1960. please call me up and give me the final

If you won't do it for me, think of all those poor Grosse Pointe News readers who have been hanging on every word printed for the last 26 years.

"Out of Africa" is a triumph

By Marian Trainor

If you are not a visitor from outer space, you have heard or read by now what an unforgettable, beautiful movie, "Out of Africa" is. Believe it. It is a magnificent accomplishment. The acting is superb. The story is both romantic and powerful and the cinematography is a pictorial epic

The film tells the story of Karen Dinesen Blixen (Meryl Streep) who wrote under the name Isak Dinesen. It is based on her lyrically evocative book recounting her life in Africa.

It was a book that was acclaimed by readers, critics and other writers. Ernest Hemingway, when he accepted his Nobel Prize in literature in 1954 deferred to several authors who should have won the honor before him, among them "that beautiful writer" Isak Dinesen.

Filmmakers before Sydney Pollack had longed to make the memoir into a movie, but the elegant classic was too anecdotal. There were too many gaps and mysteries.

It was Kurt Luedtke, script writer, who researched and wove into Karen's account her personal and somewhat moving story. Much of the material came from a book by Judith Thurman, "Isak Dinesen: "The Life of a Storyteller" (St. Martins Paper, $9.95)

In her book Dinesen wrote: "I had a farm in Africa, at the foot of the Ngong hill . . ." The film begins with those same words as we see her as an old woman sitting at a desk in her mother's house, recalling her life in Africa.

With that brief introduction, the story begins. We see her as a lovely young woman proposing a marriage of convenience to Bror Blixen (Klaus Maria Brandauer). He has a title and no money. She has money and wants to get away from

The pact is made and she follows him to Nairobi where they are to be married.

From the very beginning the audience recognizes her as a woman of poise, somewhat complex, haughty and levelheaded.

All of these qualities are displayed as she arrives at her new home. She is met by what looks like an army of workers, who by their very numbers might have frightened a lesser woman, but she alights like a queen and walks through their midst as she dispenses instructions on the careful handling of the fine china and furniture she has brought with her.

Karen was made aware soon after her marriage to Bror that he was a womanizer and a ne'er-do well, albeit a charming one. Their difficulties are aired with civilized cynicism. Yet she keeps looking for him to change. For all of her self-sufficiency, she desperately longs for someone who belongs to

This need for someone of her own is a plaintive note that runs throughout the film.

Even when Karen meets and falls in love with Denis Finch Hatten (Robert Redford), a man who cherishes his freedom above all else, she still hopes.

She gives her heart and mind to running the farm, mastering the details of coffee growing and entering into the life of the natives, but even that she cannot possess.

As a viewer, it would be easy to be overwhelmed by the lush beauty of Africa — the endless green plains, roving herds, a flock of flamingos, a lion stalking in dry grasses under a burning sun. It is truly another world, a beautiful world. But even the magnificence of the scenery does not eclipse the grandeur of Streep's performance.

There are so many scenes that we recall with pleasure. We remember her in the candle light holding Denis and his friend Berkeley Cole (Michael Kitchen) spellbound as she recites a tall

We feel for her as she sits around a campfire with Denis plaintively trying to talk him into marrying her and we experience her joy as she soars with him in her first airplane ride.

There are other memorable vignettes, all of them drawing power from her quiet, intelligent Redford plays his role well as Finch Hatten. Clearly in love with Karen, he has a terror of emotional commitment. The role demanded a bigger-than-life star and in Redford, it has one of the biggest.

"Out of Africa" is a triumph but not an easy one. The film took 101 days to produce on location near Nairobi. Ten thousand people worked in it, including Richard Leakey as an adviser.

It was worth it.

Black Moon Rising: Tedious, but with a shining ending

By Mike Andrzejczyk

It's not that I didn't like John Carpenter's new film, "Black Moon Rising," which opened Friday throughout metro Detroit. I got in free, after all.

If I had paid to see the movie, I think I would have walked out halfway through. But then I would have missed the best part.

The plot spirals around Sam Quint, portrayed lethargically by Tommy Lee Jones. Quint is a thief and reasonably good at it, so he's hired by the FBI to steal a cassette tape of accounting records from a Las Vegas company the feds are

He's only reasonably good, however, and sets off an alarm on his way in to steal the cassette. He ends up racing out of the company's offices followed by a hail of automatic weapon fire.

The film then cuts to a desert test track, where three men are perfecting the Black Moon, an experimental car that, from what little comes up in the movie, runs on hydrogen stripped of water molecules. The lightweight black beauty does, if we can believe the flashing read-outs, somewhere between 300 and 1,000 mph.

played by Robert Vaughn, who, like any good movie businessman, is a little twisted. He lusts for Nina. Vaughn's character also has a penchant for putting video cameras in anything and everything.

Needless to say, Quint is under pressure from the FBI to turn over the tape he's stolen; Hamilton wants to get away from her current lifestyle and Vaughn's character; and the developers of the automobile want the Black Moon back.

If you can get through all the work that goes into developing the plot, you're in for a good time when the team decides to steal the car back. The action builds steadily to a powerful, prolonged climax that had me fidgeting in my seat.

The trouble is, the best part of this movie comes after you're almost numb from sitting through the first two-thirds or so. It's a steady stream of tedium punctuated by mediocre jokes by Jones that the audience laughs at not because they're particularly amused, but because they want to keep in the movie.

Carpenter, basically a horror movie-maker, wrote the story for 'Black Moon Rising" and, aided by Desmond Nakano and William Gray, did the screenplay as well. Production was handled by Joel Michaels and William Gray, with Harley Cokliss directing.

The only thing that keeps the audience in the movie are some horror movie tricks: odd camera angles, light and shadow tricks and characters popping into the camera's view. It's really not enough to make up for the slow story, though.

Nothing could make up for the less-than-enthusiastic acting by Jones, Vaughn and Hamilton. Bubba Smith's performance as an FBI man, stereotypical and short as it is, is at least believable. But I could never be sure watching Jones, whether he was smirking and arching his eyebrows as part of his characterization or because he knew the movie wasn't very good. The movie works best when the characters do a minimum of talking and a maximum of doing.

So, if you go to see "Black Moon Rising," stem that impulse to leave halfway through. You'll miss a great ending. And leave the kids at home. They probably won't learn any new words or see anything they haven't seen before on cable, but you won't have to put up with their wiggling around when the movie bogs down.

Wambaugh's latest police mystery has power, wit

By Marian Trainor

The Secrets of Harry Bright By Joseph Wambaugh 341 pages, William Morrow, $17.95

Cruelty, compassion, comedy all of these are woven into this riveting police drama involving a case that should have been left unsolved. It is also a moving story about a police detective's search for the meaning of his son's death and his own life.

It will not come as a surprise to readers of Wambaugh's previous books that Sidney Blackpool, the central character in his latest novel, is a Los Angeles Police Department homicide detective. But this time he moves out of glittering Palm Springs with its country clubs and suntanned celebrities to Mineral Springs, a sand-blown, down-scale outpost.

Seventeen months before the story begins, Jack Watson, a handsome, wealthy young man, was incinerated in his father's Rolls Royce on a dark canyon road. At first it appeared to be an accident. But a bullet in his head proved pense allowance and entry into

"I want revenge," he tells Blackpool whom he has personally sought out to work on the case. He thinks Blackpool will understand his terrible grief because he also has lost his only son.

But Blackpool is reluctant to take the case. He argues that it is out of his jurisdiction and that he has not come to terms with the death of his own son Watson, who is not a man to be put off, appeals to their common bond of grief and adds another incentive. He promises Blackpool a six figure retirement job. Blackpool accepts the offer and enlists the help of his partner, Otto Springer.

Ofto is so impressed with the assignment that he thinks he has died and gone to heaven. Victor is a generous employer. The two detectives are set up in the finest Palm Springs hotels, given a hefty exany one of the exclusive golf clubs. Otto takes well to the good life. He likes to eat well and drink, in either order. He makes no secret of trying to find a rich wife as a bonus to this windfall assignment.

The reader is inclined at first to misjudge Otto as somewhat of a clown, but he is far from that. He is shrewd, alert, observant and an invaluable ally, as we later

While the detectives enjoy their life of opulence, they know that there is work to be done. It is work that throws them in with a group of police officers gathered together by Paco Pedroza, chief of the Mineral Springs Police Department.

They are a motley crew. Being a cop in a town where bikers, burglers, nudists, robbers, dopers and drunks live who do not want a police force of any kind, is not

Their escapades and their tough, explicit talk adds considerable humor to the book. And their goings-on are not the only sources of humor. There are such characters as Beavertail Bigelow, a true desert rat who drinks a quart of gin a day, a dwarf who hangs around the local bar trying to entice the ladies, an elegant houseboy who entertains lavishly in his employer's mansion when he is not there, and a burly ex-cop who heads up a kingdom of bikers high up in the hills. "Home from Harlem" is a stage adaptation of Paul Laurence Dunbar's "The Sport of the Gods." It is the story of the Hamiltons, a black family struggling with the social upheaval in the United States at the turn of the century. The focal point of the Hamiltons' personal upheaval is the conviction of Berry, the head of the family, for a crime he did not commit. Leaving Berry behind, his wife and their two children move to Harlem to escape the stigma associated with her husband's "crime." Their hopes to build a better life in Harlem are threatened by nightclubs, dancing girls and smooth-

'The Color Purple' shines with brilliance, compassion

By Marian Trainor

"The Color Purple," is a testament to life and a tribute to love and its power to sustain the will to survive no matter what cruelty, sorrow or physical suffering must be endured. It is a lesson in learning how to care for one's self when no one else does. It is a film that is put together with feeling, compassion and understanding for all people who strive under terrible circumstances, not for wealth or power, but for survival, some happiness and to be loved and valued. Celie Harris (Whoopi Goldberg) is one of those people. She is raped by her supposed father and abused by her common-law husband (Danny Glover) whom she never refers to by any other name than Mister.

While still a child herself, she bears two children, both of whom are taken from her and sold. There is misery portrayed as Celie clings to her newborn being torn from her arms, for in the child she sees a human being to love and to return

Later in the film Celie encounters the woman who has her babies. She follows the woman into the store and starts a conversation. Eagerly she inquires about the child. Her eyes pleading, she asks to hold the baby. She is pleased is learn that the child is called Olivia. a name that Celie had embroidered on diapers when she was preg-

Life for Celie settles into one of drudgery and insults. "You sho is are almost the only words she hears from Mister except orders to get his dinner, wash and iron his clothes and take care of his six children.

The only comfort she has is her ability to read. One of the lighthearted scenes shows her sister Nettie, who goes to school, teaching Celie to read. She labels every item in the kitchen and has Celie read and spell the word. Seeing the two sisters together is a joy to behold. They play and run and laugh like children, which they Viewers in the midst of all the bad times suffered by Celie will remember most the opening scene in the film where the sisters romp through a field of pink violet cosmos and chant rhythmic handclapping games. It establishes a theme that the innate joy of being alive is a flame that is hard to ex-

While Celie's story dominates the film, there are other characters and their stories that not only add interest but help to relieve the emotional drain of what is essentially a story that gains power from scenes that are intensely moving.

Whoopi Goldberg's portrayal of Celie is powerful and moving. It is difficult to believe that this is her first movie. Her experience has been as a comedienne in fringe theaters and in her own Broadway show, but it is not unlikely that in this her first film appearance, she will be on the list for an Academy

Margaret Avery is outstanding as the blues singer, Shug, who befriends Celie. A high point in the film is her belting out her blues songs in a juke joint. She is sensuous and exciting. Co-producer Quincy Jones has earned four Oscar nominations for movie sound tracks and he should get another for this one. "Miss Celie Blues," sung by Tata Vega, who does Shug's vocals is outstanding. Another roof-raising is the gospel song led by Shug as she leads the group from the bar to a church where they join the choir in a rip-roaring revival number. Avery and Goldberg are ably assisted by an outstanding supporting cast. Danny Glover (Places in the Heart) is superb as the brutal Mister.

Desreta Jackson is great as the young Celie. Rae Dawn Chong is pretty and pert as Harpo's girl-friend, Squeak, and Willard Pugh turns in a fine performance as the bumbling Harpo who falls through the roof so many times trying to repair it, that Sofia does the job herself. Adolph Caesar lends a bit of comedy as he tries to take charge of Albert's household. A small wiry wizened man, he looks like a bantam rooster standing up to Albert who is tall, broad and threatening.

Behind all the brilliance of "The Color Purple'' is Producer Steven Spielberg and Dutch screenwriter Menno Meyjes. They have made Alice Walker's Pulitzer prizewinning novel into a memorable film experience that should win a few prizes of its own.

waiting all day for you. If Wobegon didn't exist according to lexicographers, it certainly has been put on the map by Garrison Keillor with his radio show and now his book, "Lake Wobegon

Days. It is doubtful that any town of such anonymity has been so well described, identified and minutely chronicled day by day, year by year and season by season as

"It's a town that time forgot and that the decades cannot improve," the author writes. With warmth and gentle humor he proves his point.

He tells us, "Left to our own devices we Wobegonians go straight for small potatoes. Majestic doesn't appeal to us. We like the Grand Canyon better with Clarence and Arlene parked in front of it, smiling. We feel uneasy at momentous events.

Wobegon is a town where people like order in their lives, eating certain things on correct nights macaroni hot dish on Thursday, liver on Friday, beans and wieners on Saturday, pot roast on Sunday.

What makes the town special? For one thing, the Statue of the Unknown Norwegian. Probably the sculptor meant him to exude confidence in the New World but the author says that in the late afternoon, shadows make him look wor-

It is this kind of imagination and nudging humor that makes the book so appealing.

The author enlarges on his characters and presents them with all their eccentricities, but the reader gets the feeling that he is showing in all its honesty and adherence to principle the kind of place and the sort of people who enjoy the simple life.

They lived by unwritten rules and adhered to them. They evolved a pattern of life and found peace in the stability it afforded them.

No one worried about crime. Nobody locked doors or even knew where the keys were. New-fangled contraptions like dishwashers they believed lead to degeneracy. Air conditioning was looked upon as a useless invention. If you worked up enough sweat the shade ought to feel good enough. Air conditioning, they believed, was for the weak and indolent. "It was inventions like AC that brought down the Roman Empire. With AC their windows were shut, and they couldn't hear the barbarians coming.'

Every day at 6 p.m. the fire alarm goes off and everybody heads home for the tuna casserole made with mushroom soup. Winter starts in fall and ends when Mr. Berges maroon 1949 Ford is towed annually into the lake on Groundhog Day. The Lutherans all drive Fords, the Roman Catholics, Chevys. In Lake Wobegon, car ownership is a matter of faith.

In Wobegon people took enormous pride in their accomplishments, such as raising the biggest tomato. You can imagine the pride of one gardener when her tomato reached 22 pounds, her dismay when it fell off the vine and cracked and her triumph when patched with masking tape and filled with liquids with a syringe, it weighed in at 25 pounds and won first prize.

The book is filled with such stories, all told with the same charm that makes Garrison Keillor's 11-year-old radio show, "A Prairie Companion," so popular. It is an old-fashioned variety show that each week features different guest musicians. Keillor delivers monologues about Lake Wobegon "where all the woman are strong, all the men good-looking and all the children above average.' The show may be heard in Detroit on WDET-FM, from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. on Saturday and again at noon on Sunday.

It is a delightful show and the book is a delightful book — one that could be read right through or read a little at a time to savor the humor and brighten a dull day.
