Search for school planetarium director continues

By Margie Reins Smith Staff Writer

Planetariums are supposed to be dark. Not 24 hours a day, however. Not locked up tight, without visitors, without director or students.

Grosse Pointe's four-and-a-halfyear-old planetarium at North High School has been closed since August. Plans for its reopening aren't scheduled for any time soon — perhaps not until September. The $225,000 building, which seats 36 people and features a Spitz projector and a 24-foot dome, was constructed with money from the estate of Benja-

The public school facility, one of only a dozen or so in the Detroit area, was carved from part of the Community Performing Arts Center and dedicated on Oct. 27, 1982. Director Tim Skonieczny was hired away from Roosevelt High School in Wyandotte, which had been forced to close its planetarium because of the system's financial troubles. Skonieczny began an ambitious series of community programs and worked astronomy classes into the curricula for elementary, middle and high school students in Grosse Pointe.

"It was an exciting thing," said Robert Welch, director of Secondary Curriculum in Grosse Pointe. "I have nothing but praise for what has happened there."

The facility was closed last August, however, when Skonieczny left for a teaching position at Macomb Community College. He teaches physics and astronomy.

Grosse Pointe is having trouble finding another director. According to Vincent LoCicero, president of the Grosse Pointe school board, planetarium directors are a rare breed. The position is a very specialized field, involving knowledge of astronomy, some mechanical ability, imagination and creativity for development of programs, and a teachers' certificate.

Bob Thomson, director of the planetarium at Adler Elementary School in Southfield since it opened in 1968, said he backed into the position. "I taught astronomy in Ohio for five years. See PLANETARIUM, page 2A

Pointer of Interest Kathleen Bernard

By Peter A. Salinas

Staff Writer "Kelly, you can come down here right away. We found the motherlode."

Those words got Kathleen "Kelly" Bernard packing in a matter of minutes. The motherlode was the Atocha, the 17th century Spanish galleon treasure ship, which was sunk in a hurricane off the coast of Florida more than 300 years ago.

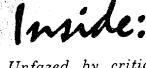

Bernard, a 1979 graduate of Grosse Pointe South, holds a bachelor's degree in anthropology from the University of Notre Dame and a master's degree from Yale University. A long-time diver, she first became aware of treasure hunter Melvin Fisher, the owner of Treasure Salvors, Inc., a Key West-based company that found the Atocha after nearly 15 years of searching the ocean bottom, when one of her Notre Dame professors told her about the company upon her graduation.

"I was hired in 1982 as an archeological research assistant," Bernard said. "I went to Key West because it was a way to combine archeology and diving."

Bernard, 25, said her father, Walter had been a diver for many years and got the entire family of six, including her mother Sally, interested in the sport. She was a competitive swimmer at Grosse Pointe South and at Notre

"I just love the water," she said. Her love for the water brought her to the company which located one of the most significant treasure finds of the century -amove that didn't make her wealthy before or after the motherlode was found.

When her professor told her about the company, she quickly sent off a resume to Duncan Mathewson, the Salvor's archeological director. She was hired a short time later. "I was in charge of sending off the monthy reports on what we were finding to the State of Florida," Bernard said. "I was also involved with map-

Nine Park firefighters graduate from police academy

By Peter A. Salinas Staff Writer

The animosity of the election is over and it's time to move for-

That was the word from one of the nine former Grosse Pointe Park firefighters who recently completed police officer training. The men were officially sworn in as public safety officers at a special ceremony and celebration held at Windmill Pointe Park Feb. 10.

The men spent the last 18 weeks training at the Detroit Metropolitan Police Academy, submitting themselves to the rigors of physical training and classroom lessons designed to weed out 20-year-olds. The average age of the men is about 40.

Till tell you this much," said Michael Smith, former secretary/ treasure of the now-defunct Park firefighters union, "they did a great job training us. It's time to put the past behind, and move ahead.'

The nine men who were crosstrained are Joseph Clarke, Martin Buss, Charles Heinrich, Thomas Court, Casper Allor, Mark Sillman, Joseph Bialk, John Viviano and Smith. Buss is a sergeant and Heinrich a corporal.

Their addition to the ranks of public safety officers in the Park brings the number of fully cross-fighter technicians.

"They have gone through a very significant ordeal," Public Safety Director Richard Caretti

Academy officials, according to Caretti, said the men had the highest scores of any class. It's a credit to them, he said, and a significant benefit to Park residents and to the department.

Assistant Public Safety Director Phillip Costa said he kept in close contact with the men during their training.

"If you look at their faces today compared to several weeks ago, you can see that the weight of the world has been lifted from their shoulders," Costa said.

"Once they get out there and get street-wise, Grosse Pointe Park will have some very valuable employees," Costa added.

The men said they became very competitive at the academy, and despite aching backs, the bumps and bruises from the self-defense lessons and the long hours of studying, it was worth it.

Smith said they must consider themselves as part of a large team now.

"When we go out there we have to back each other up," he said. Caretti said that with the addition of nine men to the ranks, the trained men to 40. There are eight men who will remain fire-ules which will significantly increase police visibility in the city.

On an average day there would be two to three cars on the road at a given time - now there will be four in most cases.

With new 12-hour shifts, officers will work two days and be off for two. They will then work three days and be off for two, then work two days with three days

Every other weekend they will have three days off," Costa said.

The beds and television sets will be removed from the firehouse, Caretti said, adding that the eight technicians will aid with department chores, like processing prisoners.

Mayor Palmer Heenan was glowing over the good showing the men made at the academy. He said that there are many men who would not have made it through the rigorous training, and added that the city and its citizens should be proud of their accomplishments.

Heenan also pointed out that the taxpayers will now get more for their money.

"One week the men will be working 36 hours and the next week 48 hours. That averages out to 42 hours a week, which is an increase of two hours a week," he

Cable rates, installation fees to increase April I

By Peter A. Salinas

Staff Writer

Grosse Pointe Cable television subscribers can expect to pay about 25 percent more for basic service as of April 1.

Mike DeFour, general manager for the cable company, said rates for basic service will increase from $9.80 to $12.95 per month, but that pay services such as HBO or Showtime will decrease in price by one dollar.

Federal deregulation of the cable industry took effect Jan. 1, 1987, prompting many cable stations to significantly increase their basic service rates.

Grosse Pointe Cable reviews its accounts at the end of each calendar year, and DeFour recommended a rate adjustment for April 1. Company officials approved the increase earlier this month.

As part of the increase, two channels are being added to the company's basic service.

Grosse Pointe Cable had a service called Home Theatre Network, but that channel will no longer be provided. In its place, American Movie Classics, a station which DeFour said has a $4.95 a month value, will be added to the basic service. Additionally, Home Shopping Network and VH-I, a 24-hour music station, will be added to the basic service.

"We will be adding another station as well, Channel 32 Lakeshore," DeFour said. "That is the address of the War Memorial. It will be a local access station and will show community events and War Memorial programs."

For new cable subscribers, the installation fee will jump from $17.25 to $24.95.

"That will almost cover our cost," DeFour said. He added that the increase in the basic monthly fee will enable the company to break even for the first time in its six-year Grosse Pointe history.

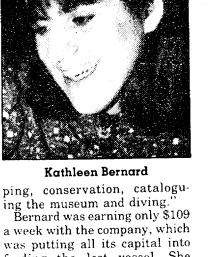

The company is doing better than the national average as far as having its share of subscribers from the homes available in the market.

"We currently have 54 percent of the homes in Grosse Pointe and Harper Woods on line," DeFour said. We are gaining about 1,000 new customers each year. That's because we have a Cadillac channel lineup.'

The cable company offices will remain at their current location at Mack and Seven Mile roads behind JC Penney's despite recently announced plans to construct a new office and retail facility at the shopping center.

DeFour said the major project will be conducted in segments, and that the cable offices will remain, at least through 1989.

"When we were at sea, we would spear fish and catch lobsters for dinner," she said. "We ate well for the seven to 10 days we were out at a time.

To supplement her income, Bernard sewed for a small Key West "I made bathing suits, shorts

Bernard has been giving talks on her work with Treasure Salvors to schoolchildren, a pursuit she enjoys. She was preparing a discussion for St. Paul students. Her experience on the Atocha

Planetarium

Back in 1965-66, space was 'in.' The Ohio school had a small planetarium. I learned how to run it in one year.

"Planetariums are great teaching tools," he said. "They teach the logic of science. They teach patterns, changes, reasons for happenings."

The Southfield facility was open for the public a few years ago, but Thomson doesn't know why there was a lack of interest in the programs. "We had lots of press coverage, ads, literature, brochures. Sometimes only nine or 10 people showed up and it became cost-prohibitive.

Now the Southfield planetarium is used daily for school programs and private groups. Each child in the Southfield district visits at least two or three times each school year.

Larry Sabbath, director of the planetarium at Oak Park High School, said that their facility has been open for 20 years, seats 72 people, and has a Spitz projector similar to Grosse Pointe's. Oak Park's facility is no longer open mily protested." Sabbath said he is a self-taught planetarium director. He has an astronomy background, a teacher's certificate, and some graduate school courses. "Training (someone new) could be accomplished in one summer," he said. "It's a matter of learning to push the right buttons. Grosse Pointe could train a teacher who's interested. Then the director would have a commitment to the district. You also need someone who lives close, so you can open at night. You have to do the public stuff, at least in the beginning," he said.

Dick Ensign, planetarium

director for Crestwood High School in Dearborn Heights, said the district's 66-seat facility is open two nights each month, year-round, and is nearly always filled to capacity. In addition, Ensign teaches astronomy to high school students.

He's been there 18 years, ever since the planetarium opened. He also began as an amateur astronomer, with a knack for electronics, a teacher's certificate, and some eclectic interests - a degree in music, an English minor and a science minor.

James Pike, director of the planetarium at Mount Clemens High School, said because of financial setbacks, the facility is only open for about one hour each day. But every first grader visits once a year; grades two through five visit twice a year; grades six through eight visit once a year. Pike also teaches a high school astronomy class.

"The basics of the mechanical part of the job can be learned in a week," he said.

Ronald Tonks, director of Personnel for the Grosse Pointe school system, said he hopes to find a new director to start next fall. "So far there haven't been enough applicants. We interviewed a few. One was acceptable, but he changed his mind a few days later. We're looking all over the country. Tim Skonieczny gave us a few names to contact. We've advertised. We're all through looking this school year.

"Meanwhile, the planetarium is closed."

oung says Detroit's problems belong to everyone

Staff Writer

Detroit Mayor Coleman Young was welcomed last week when he spoke to the Senior Men's Club at the War Memorial. More than 300 club members and about 20 media representatives attended.

Young met earlier with Park Mayor Palmer Heenan to discuss flood protection along Lake St. Clair and Fox Creek.

Heenan said Young assured him that an engineering study commissioned by Detroit would be made available to the Park for evaluation.

"We are negotiating with one of the Pointes about a proposed seawall," Young told the audience. "Now is a good time to be looking at the problem. We are interested in doing all we can to prevent flooding.

Young said he hoped the seawall could be constructed in such a way as to not shut off one area from another, but to permit access between the cities.

Young made reference to working with Detroit's neighbors in solving common problems. He singled out Dearborn as being hostile toward Detroit with an ordinance the city passed last year creating a residents-only rule for its municipal parks.

"I realize there have been res-Pointe) for a long time," Young said. He added that there was a difference between the Pointe's longstanding ordinances and Dearborn's, in that Dearborn's was perceived as being aimed to keep specific minority groups out of Dearborn parks.

When he told the audience that he couldn't think of anything more openly hostile toward black Detroiters than Dearborn's ordinance, there were several barely audible mutters from club members.

His meeting with the club, whose members are all 60 and over, prompted some humor from the mayor.

"This is the first gathering I've ever faced in damn near my whole life, where everybody is older than I am," Young said.

Young said that many years ago Detroit paid the taxes for the entire state. He said that the state benefited from the huge Detroit tax base, but that had now changed.

"Detroit public education was ranked among the finest in the country," Young said. "Now the tables have turned.' He said Detroit now needs support in the same way it once gave has become a popular pastime of many outstate politicians.

"It seems the more you rail about Detroit, the more votes you get," Young said.

Young said that areas of common interest between Detroit and its suburbs are greater than the differences, and that the differences will bring strength.

Young drew criticism from statements he made last year about not supporting gun control for Detroit, as long as the suburbs remained "armed and hostile."

He made a lengthy explanation of the comments, put them in the context of how they were made, but offered no apology.

"I'm in favor of gun control," he said, "but I want everyone to lay down their pistols, not just Detroit."

In the face of efforts by the Ku Klux Klan, neo-Nazi organizations and paramilitary groups, Young said it would not be fair to Detroiters to disarm themselves. "Everyone needs a chance to understand each other," Young said. "Discussions like this attempt to explain my position.

"Detroit can't exist without the suburbs, and the suburbs can't exist without Detroit.'

There is a great deal of common ground, Young said, between the Detroit-bashing, Young said, suburbs and Detroit. He pointed to the economic invasion of foreign manufacturers on the American market. He said that Korean, Yugoslavian and Japanese automobiles and Mexican auto parts are something everyone should be concerned about in America.

"I see one of your new members today was a Uniroyal executive,' Young said. "The place where Uniroyal once stood is now a nice, big vacant lot. They don't make those tires here any more, and soon they won't be making them in Dayton either.

"These are the problems we face jointly. Young said he has met with the Grosse Pointe mayors only once officially during the 17 years he's been mayor of Detroit. It was at a gathering of southeastern Michigan mayors at a conference called to oppose federal cutbacks in revenue sharing and Urban Development Action Grants.

Mayor Coleman Young spoke to more than 300 people at the Grosse Pointe Senior Men's Club meeting Feb. 10 at the War Memorial. Young's speech was received cordially by the club members.

Woods Mayor George Freeman who attended the meeting, said he enjoyed Young's explanation of his views on gun control.

"It was a friendly speech," Freeman said.

Farms Mayor Joseph Fromm said Young was correct in saying that there are problems that the Pointes and Detroit have in com-

'We are going to have to work together to solve those problems,'

Senior Men's Club President Martin Hayden, who introduced Young to the audience, said he was glad the mayor had agreed to attend the meeting.

"I thought it went very well," said Hayden, a retired Detroit News editor. "I was amazed at the number of club members who came up to me and said that they didn't know that (Young) was that smart. That is good for them to know.'

Durant won't quit; says criticism of legal system was necessary

Staff Writer

An unrepentant W. Clark Durant says he is glad he spoke up about reform of the legal system and isn't about to quit his position as chairman of the federal Legal Services Corporation.

American Bar Association President Eugene Thomas and several lawyers' union officials called for Durant's resignation last week after he criticized lawyers' stranglehold on delivery of services and called for an end to his own agency.

"It shows I hit the raw nerve of the organized bar," Durant said Monday. "It's reflective of the ABA's reaction whenever people try to open up the profession."

Last week was not the first time Durant has criticized his agency and the system. Similar comment. hen he was first appointed caused controversy. In a January interview with the Grosse Poin .ews, he articulated many of the same themes he laid forth last week in the bar association.

But this was the first time the lawyers had heard it officially. Durant says his position is misunderstood. "I didn't call for abolition (of Legal Services)," he said. "I called for replacement and adequate funding.' There is no question that Durant attacked the legal system for restricting access both through law school enrollment and bar examination requirements. Calling law practice a "cartel," he charged that law school accreditation by the ABA is "not a quality control issue. It is an issue of control under the pretext of quality. The automotive industry . . . does not accredit engineering schools.' As to the Legal Services Corp., Durant says he is not debating whether there should be legal services for the poor. "Of course there should be," he told the ABA members.

"I've demonstrated my commitment to legal services for the poor," he said this week. "But the status quo doesn't meet the legal needs of the poor or anyone else." He told the ABA convention

Grosse Pointe Woods Mayor George S. Freeman said, "This will be good for Grosse Pointe, good for Detroit, and good for the hospital. It will make the corner a beautiful corner."

The Moross office building will be connected to St. John Hospital by a glassenclosed walkway. Two surveys of Grosse Pointe

Woods residents - one in 1979 and one in 1982 - revealed some dissatisfaction with the shopping center as it was. In 1979, those sampled in the survey said they did not shop at the center because of fears for their safety, because of the poor condition of the area, and because they preferred East-

The 1982 survey revealed that more than two-thirds of Grosse Pointe Woods residents shopped at the center, but one-half of those only went there once a month. Reasons cited for avoiding it were: unappealing stores, inconvenient location, and the undesirable area.

Those surveyed said they wished to see stores with higher quality and a greater variety of merchandise. Three-fourths of those sampled wished for more restaurants. Nearly half said they were willing to pay for parking while shopping.

In 1983, the center was renamed Pointe Plaza. Landscaping, trees and signs were added as part of the beautification project

Exhibitionist in Woods

A group of about 10 female workers and patrons at a Grosse Pointe Woods beauty salon got a shock Wednesday, Feb. 5, when a man exposed himself in front of the shop window.

Woods Detective Robert Kwiatkowski said the man, whose face was obscured by a window sign, masturbated, then fled.

Kwiatkowski said a description of the man ties this case to five or six similar incidents that occurred last summer between Hampton Road and the north city

"The man we are looking for is about 18 years of age, 6 foot to 6 foot, 2 inches tall and has lightcolored, curly hair," Kwiatkowski said.

Last summer a man fitting the same description walked into a beauty salon, nude from the waist down. Apparently, the same man also walked out totally nude in front of a bicyclist last summer.

The Woods department of public safety is looking for information which could lead to the arrest of the man.

Bush in 1988? Michigan seen as first test

n case Grosse Pointers hadn't noticed, the 1988 presidential campaign is already warming up in Michigan and elsewhere.

Vice President George Bush is still the GOP front-runner nationally and in Michigan in most polls, but he conceded in Michigan last week he has lost ground because of the Iran-contra arms controversy and its effect on the Reagan administration.

But he also said that he would soon try to define what he would do as president without highlighting any differences with President Reagan. Yet in efforts to become his own man, Bush runs the risk of alienating the supporters of the president, and especially the right-wing Republicans who have been distrustful of the vice president and his supposedly moderate views.

So the next few months could be important for Bush even though he does not plan to formally announce his candidacy until next fall. But even in Michigan, which he regards as "fundamental" to his cause, Bush will face strong opposition in 1988. It will come chiefly from the Rev. Pat Robertson, the TV evangelist who already is campaigning in Michigan and elsewhere as an unannounced candidate, as well as from Rep. Jack Kemp of New York who has a strong organization in the state. Others who have only dipped a toe into Michigan waters may jump into the swim before long.

Even in the Pointes, where Bush defeated Reagan handily in winning the 1980 state presidential primary, the vice president faces a strong challenge. The Kemp forces claimed more precinct delegates than Bush in the primary in the Pointes last August while the Robertson organization claimed at least equality with Bush on a statewide count of precinct delegates. And now there is talk that the Kemp and Robertson forces may put together a conservative coalition.

If they do so in the Pointes and elsewhere, it could spell trouble for Bush when early next year the state GOP picks the first 77 delegates to the 1988 national GOP convention. A good Bush showing would help him in the following Iowa caucuses, which he also led in 1980, and in the first presidential primary in New Hampshire a year from this month. But a stumble in Michigan could dim Bush's hopes.

Perhaps an even more serious blow to Bush's prospects, however, would occur from a continuing decline in President Reagan's fortunes as a result of the Irangate mess. If Bush seeks to disassociate himself too much from the administration, he could be accused of disloyalty. If he sticks too closely to the administration line, he could be further damaged if congressional investigations turn up evidence of White House coverups, law violations or ethical misconduct. He will have to walk a narrow line and caution will not endear him to the electorate.

In Michigan last week, Bush stressed his loyalty to Reagan, saying he had been "proud to have been at his side for six years," adding that these are "good times to be a Republican" and in general defending the president's record and leadership. Yet if Reagan's ratings decline further, Bush will face the same problem that other vice presidents have confronted in seeking the top office on their own. Hubert Humphrey was the classic example of a vice president who sought to break with his president's unpopular policies — but couldn't do so early enough or in a convincing enough fashion.

So far the Democrats have been jockeying for position for 1988 with Gary Hart, the former Colorado senator, leading the polls, Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York running second and a clutch of governors and members of Congress sampling the presidential possibilities. New potential candidates may arise during the coming congressional investigations of the Irangate affair and the Republican administration's participation in it.

In Republican circles, however, the major questions are whether Bush can repeat his 1980 presidential primary victory in Michigan, whether he is so closely tied to a presidential falling star that he soon will be out of the running, or whether he can emerge as an attractive candidate with both moderate and conservative support who can go all the way in 1988.

So far, Bush has fallen back a bit in the public opinion polls but still leads all other GOP candidates, even Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas who is reportedly picking up strength both from moderates and conservatives. It is too early to count Bush out but it is not too early to predict that Michigan could be critical to his cause.

A conciliatory Detroit mayor

ayor Coleman Young of Detroit was on his good behavior last week when he addressed the Grosse Pointe Senior Men's Club and called for better cooperation between his city and the suburbs that on other occasions he has said are "hostile." We hope he truly meant what he said here.

But observers familiar with the mayor's performance will not accept his appeal at full value until they read and hear what he has to say to his own constituents the next time a city-suburb issue comes up.

Over the years, the mayor has found it expedient to identify the suburbs as "racist" when any controversy arises between Detroit and the suburbs. Even Grosse Pointe Park, which is trying to work cooperatively with the city of Detroit to protect residents of both cities from the flooding of Fox creek, has been burned by that epithet. Yet Detroit, after promising cooperation, has been dragging its feet on meaningful action to protect housing in the area.

It is true that both city and suburbs will fare better if they cooperate more and argue less. But because it usually takes two to cooperate, Pointers will watch Detroit's efforts in this direction with renewed interest now that the mayor has spoken out as he did to the senior men's club here.

The Mayor explained — but did not apologize for - his comments on Canadian TV last year that he opposed gun control in Detroit while "hostile suburbs were still armed." He said he had been needled by a TV show moderator about the city's bad image when he had expected to be interviewed about the "No Crime Day" demonstration led by Detroit Pistons basketball star Isiah Thomas.

After the needling, the mayor said he had responded: "I would be damned if I would disarm the people of Detroit in the face of hostile suburbs that all had their guns and in the boondocks you had the Ku Klux Klan and all these zealots practicing for the next race war."

Even the explanation indicates the mayor is still justifying an armed civilian population in Detroit to defend itself from the hostile suburbs and the crazies in the boondocks. Yet the facts speak for themselves. Most of the victims of crime in Detroit are Detroiters and most of those who cause it also live in the city, even though such facts don't make those who live on the borders of the city feel any more secure.

There is evidence of racism in the Pointes. There is evidence of reverse racism in Detroit. But if the mayor makes more pilgrimages beyond his city's borders and speaks in the conciliatory tones he used in Grosse Pointe, he ought to attract the same kind of friendly responses he received to most of

been hibernating

To the Editor:

As many readers will recall, the Michigan Coalition For Animals spent a great deal of time in the Pointes throughout 1986, primarily to gather support for our campaign to ban steel-jaw leghold

With the holidays, and of course, the onset of our less than balmy Michigan winter, that campaign slipped into low gear. As soon as the weather permits, we will once again take to the streets, not just in the Pointes, but all across our state, until ultimately, the use of steel jaw leghold traps anywhere is prohibited. However, if anyone believes that M.C.A. has just been hibernating these past few months, I would like to assure you that nothing could be further from the truth. The leghold trap is only one of many forms of animal abuse and/or exploitation that we are addressing. Other issues that we have been actively engaged in fighting include: pet overpopulation, pound seizure, factory farming, the slaughter of our wild horses and burros, and the sale of primates from the Detroit Zoo to be used for vivisection, just to name a few. On Saturday, Feb. 21, we will be having our annual/ new member meeting at the Neighborhood Club, in the Green Room, at one o'clock in the afternoon. I would like to extend our invitation to all of you to attend. This will be a great opportunity for all of us to plan, together, the strategy that we will employ in the coming years to ease the suffering too often inflicted upon our friends, the animals.

If you have any questions, please feel free to call one of our volunteers at: 886-8890 or 778-0496.

Outraged

I was outraged at the recent cartoon in the Grosse Pointe News about a basketball player from Forsyth County in Georgia. The racial problem in this country is the number-one internal problem we have and this type of journalism only helps exasperate this crisis.

If the Grosse Pointe News would publish this list of racial harmony sayings I have been collecting over the years, they could partially redeem themselves for their recent bad judgment.

his speech last week. 'Amerika' under communism

Thether ABC's "Amerika" is worth watching or not - and there is a national debate on the issue — the TV miniseries does reflect the fact that artistic creations can and do express a variety of viewpoints that may or may not appeal to the public.

In the case of most TV productions, however, popularity, meaning high ratings, is the major goal. Regardless of the quality of "Amerika," it received so much attention that its early ratings were good. Whether viewers will stay to the conclusion Sunday night is another question.

In Detroit, the TV critics gave the series a mixed assessment, based on the previews they were permitted to see. Some critics said it was worth watching, even though, as one said, it is "preachy, muddled and slowpaced." Others saw more enduring values, especially in offering Americans an inkling of life under a Communist dictatorship.

In the New York Times, TV critic John J. O'Conner found "Amerika" to be "a staggering muddle, a fill-in-the-blanks hodgepodge that is likely to leave observers on most points of the political spectrum fuming." He concluded the series was made, not by people interested in leftist or rightist politics, but by "entertainers interested in grabbing an audience."

But whether the series was made as an antidote to the ABC's "The Day After," a 1983 saga of the effects of a nuclear war that was roundly criticized by conservatives, it obviously was intended to be entertainment with high ratings that would appeal to big advertisers. While Americans will view it for a variety of reasons, they are unlikely to keep watching in large numbers unless they find it to be entertaining.

The theme, incidentally, is strikingly similar to the one in Kingsley Amis' comedy, "Russian Hide and Seek," in which the British author did for England what "Amerika" does for the United States. It is a 21st century report on an England ruled by the Russians and what this situation meant to both sides, and especially to the English, who were subjected not only to Communist rule but to rampant inflation, shortages of fuel and food, and major revisions of their culture, religion and way of life. It's an entertaining comedy - with a serious thrust which "Amerika" does not seem to match.

Those from either the right or left who don't like "Amerika" can simply turn it off. No doubt many have done so and perhaps more will do so as the series enters its final laps. Fortunately, however, not even the critics will force "Amerika" off the tube. which is what the Russians recommended and which they do on their own TV networks to productions that do not follow the Communist line.

In a free country, we Americans prefer to let the public rather than the government dictate what we can read, see and hear, whether it is in popular culture or more serious artistic productions. Thus in the end it will be the public - not the government and not ABC - that will decide whether "Amerika" was worthwhile entertainment.

To the Editor:

My name

Pat and I'm a foodaholic. I will eat anything as long as it's not moving and covered with fuzz. I love to eat. And I don't care what they teach in biology - I know that when I was a mere fetus floating in the amniotic sac, the first things to develop were my taste buds.

There was a time when I could blithely eat a banana split or two every week without a second thought. Then a couple of things happened: 1) I quit smoking and 2) I got older.

Gradually, my clothes got tighter and then one day, I found I couldn't get my ring off my finger. My shoes pinched because my feet were usually swollen. I had to ask my daughter to button my skirt while I held a chair and my breath. My heart would pound and I got out of breath from bending over to put on my

That's when I knew it was time to go on a diet. Talk about fourletter words. Do you realize that the word "die" is in diet? That should tip people off right there.

But what the heck. It's really our national pastime, the American way. So I signed up for a program that made sense to me, bought one of these cute little Say it except herbs and such. It was bye-bye Bernaise,

I cooked separate meals every day. In the oven was my flaccid fish and on top of the stove was their sensuous spaghetti, bubbling and beckoning. It was a difficult period, but my family stuck with me as I grimly stuck to the

It was a month, then two months, then half a year. Triumphant, I allowed myself little rewards - a second glass of wine, a small piece of cheesecake, one chocolate candy. I gained a pound. It was nothing, are you kidding me? I could afford another pound or two.

And with those famous last words, my clothes got tighter, my ring wouldn't come off my finger, my daughter offered me her Jane Fonda workout tape. What a revolting development. I had fallen on the food wagon.

I retrieved that cute little scale from the top cupboard and went to see the diet counselor again. It's back to soda water with a twist of lemon at social gatherings and salad for lunch everyday. It's back to drinking eight glasses of water a day and sloshing when I walk.

The other day, we were watching a movie at home and my family was eating chocolate Valentine candy while I munched on a cracker that resembled compressed sawdust. But the pounds are coming off slowly. The counselor says to think of one-quarter pound off as a stick of butter that's being shed. That makes me feel better.

Even so, life is unfair.

Nathan C. Judson, the Grosse Pointe North band instructor, got a surprise during the winter concert at the high school Jan. 28.

Sr. Mary Mansour, SSJ, of Detroit, reports that after intermission, student conductor George Deeb took over the dais to direct the tuning up.

When Judson made his entrance into the auditorium, Deeb directed a clash of cymbals and the playing and singing of "Happy Birthday."

When the students implored Judson to give his age, he replied that he was born the year John Philip Sousa died.

Some like it hot

Our society editor Elsa Frohman noticed that her birth section this week was a little larger than usual — about three times usual.

The 14 births that occurred from mid-January to the first week in February marked one of the biggest population bulges we had seen in a while, so we decided to turn back the clock and see if there was a reason for "amore" nine months ago.

We checked our paper and couldn't find a record of any power outages, but from May 28 to June 2, 1986, temperatures hovered in the high 80s and low 90s. There was a major storm on June 5, which dumped 1.77 inches of rain on Metro Airport.

Not very scientific, but we feel we can safely say — some like it hot.

The pink flamingo award

Recall earlier this year when we ran the photo of the underconstruction home on Merriweather complete with the large plastic pink flamingo affixed on

We received a couple of calls on that flamingo, which noted that there was inded a lengthy history behind the bird, which we won't go into here.

We have been asked, however, whether we would like a similar addition to our building for, shall we say, erroneous services beyond our call of duty.

Last week we ran a wonderful photo of a Grosse Pointe elementary student on our front page. Unfortunately a typographical error had us referring to Dana Casazza as Dan. We must apologize, but we note, there was a recent precedent for that error.

Several weeks ago we inadvertently ran a photo of a sledder, Kyle Stockman. Unfortunately, we identified Kyle as Sarah Murphy. We ran Kyle's photo again with an apology.

Just as soon as this week's error hit the streets, we got a call from a Moran Road resident who pointed it out to us. She said that Kyle and Dana are neighbors, and asked if we had it in for Moran Road residents.

She then wondered if we shouldn't be awarded a pink flamingo for our efforts.

Perhaps a flamingo wouldn't be as fitting as an ostrich, because after all, we'd like to hide our heads in shame.

They definitely added insult to injury, but tempered their barb with the gift itself.

On Jan. 18 Farms Police Chief Robert Ferber injured in index and middle finger of his left hand in a snowblower accident. The serious injury has begun to heal now, but a Hall Place traffic committee thought it would try to cheer up the chief.

Ferber was the recipient of a bottle of Two Fingers Tequila, which he said goes down smooth with a little salt and lemon - and eases the pain of his injury at the same time.

Senders of this barbed gift were Greg Berendt and John De-Hayes, both of Hall Place, and Greg Wheeler of Radnor Circle.

Late last year, three standard-production Saab 9000s were taken to the Alabama International Speedway in Talladega, Alabama for an unusual test drive: Twenty days straight at top speed.

The result? Twenty-one new world and international records including the highest average speed (E32 mph) ever recorded for a production car driven this distance.

Of course, you probably shouldn't directly apply these results to your everyday driving. But the fact remains, not one, but all three Saabs finished. Which would certainly seem to say something about their performance and endurance abilities.

Abilities you're invited to test drive yourself. Albeit over a shorter distance. And preferably at a much reduced speed. February 19, 1987 Grosse Pointe News Our Legislators Say

There's no time to waste

By William R. Bryant Jr. State Representative

Why would a Republican legislator applaud a Democratic governor for making a speech which talks about ideals and working together and having a vision of the future? A cheap shot answer would be "because it's so rare to hear such a speech," but I wouldn't say that. Or would I?

Well, sort of! Part of my reason for saying that Gov. Blanchard's State of the State was good was purposefully attempting to engage in self-fulfilling prophecy by telling the governor, as I did in a letter, "You did a good job" in the speech.

In that I mean that I am hopeful that the governor has the intention, at least, of doing all he can to set a course for Michigan

I am cautiously optimistic the governor may have decided to be a leader. The caution derives from the fact that the Democratic governors from all over the country have discussed and had consultation with advisers as to how to appear visionary, how to appeal to the rise of yearning for spirituality by appearing to share it, and how to appear as if one is prepared to enter a new, more cooperative realm of political thought, word and deed.

And the speechwriters for Gov. Blanchard are keyed into this new advice to Democratic gover-

City of Grosse Pointe Farms Michigan NOTICE OF HEARING ZONING BOARD OF APPEALS

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT the Zoning Board of Appeals will meet in City Hall at 90 Kerby Road, Grosse Pointe Farms, Michigan on MONDAY, MARCH 2, 1987 at 7:30 p.m.

to hear the following:

1. The appeal of Richard E. Russell of Russell Homes, Inc., owner of the premises located at Lots 7 & 8 of the proposed subdivision development of 207 Lakeshore, from the provision of the Zoning Ordinance that parcels located in an RIAA District have frontage on a street equal to the minimum lot width of 100 feet. Lots 7 & 8 are located on a cul de-sac and have lot widths of 40 feet and 60 feet respectively, thereby requiring a variance from Sections 1513 and 1300 of the City's Zoning

2. The appeal of Mr. Dennis Egan, owner of the premises known as 194 Lakeview, who has applied to the City of Grosse Pointe Farms for a lot split. Section 1516 of the Zoning Ordinance provides that a lot may not be divided unless the Director of Public Service finds that the remaining lot, as well as the parcel created meet applicable regulations of the Zoning Ordinance. The Director of Public Service has determined that the proposed lot split would create a non-conforming condition with respect to the new lot, for which Mr. Egan is seeking a variance from the requirement that parcels located in an RI District have frontage on a street equal at minimum to 50 feet in width, as the frontage on Lakeview of the new lot is 33.9 feet in width.

The Hearings will be public. Interested property-owners or residents are invited to attend.

Koerber said that the North seniors described the break-in and damage as a senior prank.

tween us and day care," said Kathy Kasiborski, president of the cooperative. "Day care is babysitting. This is a nursery school."

The school, however, is not primarily concerned with academics. Foremost is the socialization process. Its reason for being, according to a statement on the literature, is "the need of young children for a positive group experience, and their parents' belief that it makes good sense to share in that experience."

Along with children interacting with other children and adults, they learn large and small motor skills and how to listen. But for the most part, a positive group experience is important.

"We want them to go to kindergarten with smiles on their faces," Kasiborski said. "The alphabet is not as important (yet) they should like school.

Teacher Judi Zimmer says, "We're trying to give children two hours away from their home environment. They're learning to interact with other children, finding other friends - not their neighbor and not someone their mother picks out for them. They learn to share equipment and they don't always get their own way.'

This is what children need to know before they get to kindergarten, Zimmer added. "So when the kindergarten teacher gets

"There's a big difference bethem, they will have a child who can sit and listen and will know how to follow directions.'

Academics, however, is part of the program.

"We play games with numbers," Zimmer said, "but no child is asked to sit and write. What they learn is on the fly."

There are field trips to the zoo, to the Detroit Institute of Arts and there's even a trip planned to the teacher's house, "so the children will know she has a bed and a kitchen." Kasiborski said.

Parents share of themselves in other ways, by explaining their jobs, like firefighting. There is a visit scheduled by a dentist who will bring toothbrushes for everyone.

Before the children went to a dance program at Wayne State University, they tried on tap dance shoes and ballet slippers. Kasiborski, who is a gym teacher, says she enjoys playing on the mats with the children when she assists.

Jean Cornelius, who was a teacher at the cooperative about 25 years ago, said the school's philosophy was not to push teach-

"This was a time for children to learn to be away from mother for awhile and learn to play. The benefits for the children are great, but the benefits for the parents are greater," she said.

The school was started by mothers looking for an outlet for their children to play, Cornelius said. "There just weren't any cooperatives around and I think this was the first in Grosse Pointe."

But it takes more than noble ideals and good intentions to be successful. It takes knowledge of the law, familiarity with insurance requirements and plain good business sense to make it work. The cooperative is licensed by the state. Every two years, it has to reapply for licensing, which is granted following a thorough inspection, Kasiborski said.

The school is incorporated and the state requires that it carry workmen's compensation and liability insurance. The premium for liability three years ago was $150. Today it's $1,600, an amount that is taking a big bite out of the school's $7,000 to $8,000 annual budget, according to Kasiborski.

"We have never had a claim, but we're lumped with day care,' she said.

The school is self-supporting through tuition and an annual fundraiser, a fall auction. Tuition is about $250 a semester for 3year-olds who attend twice a week, and about $350 for 4-yearolds who go three times a week. There are two semesters in the school year.

At The Grosse Pointe Academy, our students begin their formal learning at a very early age. Our preschool, called the Early School, is a Montessori educational facility. Over 40 years ago, Dr. Maria Montessori wrote, "The most important period of life is not the age of university studies, but the first one, the period from birth to the age of six. For that is the time when man's intelligence itself, his greatest implement, is being formed. But not only his intelligence; the full totality of his psychic powers...At no other age has the child greater need of an intelligent help, and any obstacle that impedes his creative work will lessen the chance he has of achieving perfection."

We believe in the Montessori theory and methods. That is why, in 1962, The Grosse Pointe Academy became Michigan's first Montessori school, enrolling children between ages 21/2 and 5 years of age.

Recent studies on young children's learning have done nothing but confirm the Montessori methods. Distinguished Professor Benjamin C. Bloom of the University of Chicago, wrote in the 70's, "From conception to age 4, the individual develops 50% of his mature intelligence; from ages 4 to 8 he develops another 30%...This would suggest the very rapid growth of intelligence in the early years and the possible great influence of the early environment on this development."

Consider giving your child the best possible start. Look into the Montessori education at The Grosse Pointe Academy Early School. You are only a child once. If you believe the finest minds, you understand there are sensitive periods in each person's life when learning is easier than at any other time in one's life.

Local celebrities talk about being in the public eye

By Peter A. Salinas Staff Writer

Celebrity panelists at a recent War Memorial program had several things in common - they eat at the 1940 Chop House, know Mort Crim personally and deny having attained celebrity

The program, moderated by Neal Shine, Detroit Free Press senior managing editor, was titled "The Pluses and Minuses of Being in the Public Eye." Margot Kessler and Aphie Roumell of the Council of Sponsors presented the event Feb. 11 at the Fries Auditorium.

Grosse Pointe panelists included Hal Youngblood, Beth Konrad, Joe Weaver, Rich Mayk, Roger and Pam Stanton, David Wagner and Charlotte Craig. Scheduled guest Diane Hofsess was unable to attend.

"We are now in the third year of this program," Shine told the audience. "It is getting tougher and tougher to find people. As you can see, we are right on the cutting edge."

With that laconic comment, Shine introduced each guest, and told a story about what it means to be humbled.

He said that a number of years ago he was asked to speak at a dinner honoring Detroit Tiger sportscaster George Kell. Shine said there were numerous wellknown sports figures on the dais, including Gordie Howe and Al Kaline.

When the talk was over, there was a rush of people, including many children, to the main table. There were about 25 nameplates on the table, and the kids grabbed them for a memento of the event. When the rush subsided, there was only one nameplate left -

Hal Youngblood had to be the first speaker, since he had taped the first hour of his radio show. WJR's Nighttime Detroit, and had to get back to the station to complete the last two hours.

Youngblood was executive pro-taking a job in New York. He recently returned to Detroit - a move which brought hearty applause from the 200 people in the audience.

He said that he was more in the 'public's ear" rather than the public eye, and commented on his relative anonymity. He said that because people only hear him, he is not recognized unless someone hears his distinctive voice.

Youngblood said his voice is recognized regularly, but that most people think he's J.P. McCarthy, the popular WJR radio show host, whose show he herself a celebrity, and believed that newspaper people are especially anonymous because of the medium.

"I have a certain degree of anonymity - especially at home," she said in reference to ple who are staring at him bethe long hours she puts in at the paper.

Craig said that her job provides many opportunities to meet bona fide celebrities, and one of her greatest fears is being at a function and not remembering people by their names.

She related a story where she had to practice horseback riding with the Detroit mounted police before being allowed to spend a

She said she didn't consider and unfortunately stuck on the words, Jesus Christ, while he had run across the street for a cup of coffee and a doughnut.

"I didn't last long at that station," he said.

Weaver said he often sees peocause they feel he looks familiar, but can't place where they have seen him.

"Then they say, 'I know you, you work for Chrysler,' "he said. He had attended the Detroit Auto Show with a young news crew for one of his patented editorial perspectives. He was getting a lot of hellos, but most of the comments were coming from

She related her story about her days as editorial director, when a strange caller continued to harass her for months. He finally got her home phone number and called her there, often during the middle of the night.

Rich Mayk, WDIV-TV newscaster, joined the station in 1979. He said that attending the War Memorial program was a little like Christmas and New Year's rolled into one because, "Mort Crim is away, and I'm filling in." Mayk was described by Pam Stanton, owner of the Football News and Basketball Weekly, as Mort Crim's son.

"It is much easier being on TV than it is speaking in front of 100 people," Mayk said. "For the first couple of years after I began working on television, I couldn't figure out why I was always getting these strange looks from people. I didn't put it together that they were recognizing me from

He said he wears a baseball cap and sunglasses to avoid being recognized while running errands in the area.

Just about everyone mentioned the 1940 Chop House as a place where they have dinner. Several said that it is not the type of restaurant where people come up to ask for an autograph. They said that the middle-of-the-road eateries breed the most autographseekers.

Roger Stanton, owner of the Football News, said he didn't consider himself a celebrity, but that his job often gave him the opportunity to meet some.

Stanton recalled a visit with A. Alfred Taubman, real estate developer, businessman and former owner of the Michigan Panthers football team.

Stanton said he and his wife attended a dinner at the Taubmans which he said was very impressive. He said that Taubman had just returned from a fishing trip at his private stream in Iceland,

Mrs. Taubman had just returned from a shopping trip in Paris, there were four servants waiting on just four diners, and after dinner they viewed a private screening of a film that hadn't yet been released to the theaters. During the question and answer session following the program, the newspaper people were asked what they thought about the impending joint operating agreement between the Detroit News and Free Press.

Craig said she didn't really believe it was going to happen.

"It's like the tooth fairy," she said, "It doesn't really exist for me. I am kind of depressed about it, but the only thing that is more depressing is the thought of losing one of the two papers.'

With that comment, Shine said, 'Better JOA than DOA."

Shine said he has spent 38 years with the Free Press, and during that time he has always been in a competitive posture with the News. Everytime the Free Press would beat the News on a story, or get an advertising account the News had, he would get satisfaction from knowing that it would hurt the News.

"I have always felt that there has to be a reward in competition," Shine said. He added that that aspect of the newspaper business between the two dailies would be gone with the JOA.

"I have a very narrow Irish view of competition," he said. "Someone has to be laying on the ground bleeding. It is unfortunate that this has happened."

He said that newspaper readership has never been a problem for the two papers. The amount of advertising for the two papers is, however, because it appears there is not enough revenue to support both newspapers.

Shine said that the trend in the nation is toward morning newspapers, and the Detroit News claims it is the country's largest evening daily.

"I've always likened that to being the world's tallest midget.'

Beth Konrad, former editorial director for Channel 4 and vice president for community development at Channel 58, spoke about what it's like being a celebrity in the Detroit area. A panel of Grosse Pointe residents, all in the media, gave their feelings on the subject in the program presented by the Grosse Pointe War Memorial's Council of Sponsors Feb. 11. From left are Roger Stanton, Rich Mayk, Konrad. Dave Wagner and Charlotte Craig.

to share with J.P.," he said, "passing along her cold in the process.'

He told a lengthy story about shopping in a store and meeting Mort Crim. People asked if he knew Crim. The story ended with Youngblood realizing he forgot his wallet, but he had his checkbook and no identification. The store owner shouted from across the store. "He's all right, he works for WJR."

"I have no name," he said, "just a set of call letters.'

Charlotte Craig, a Detroit Free Press writer and editor since 1979, was named assistant editor of the paper's The Way We Live day with the officers. After proving she could handle a horse, and being told she could ride with the officers, four of them grabbed her and tossed her into a manure pile.

"I went back to the office without taking a shower to be a little rude to my fellow workers," she

Joe Weaver, whose work at WJBK-TV in Detroit spans three decades, said his beginings were humble.

He was an announcer for a radio station in Toledo, when he was putting together an early morning Sunday show. He put on a long-playing record which was a recording of a Christian show. The record had a scratch on it,

"One of the guys on the crew asked me if there was anyone under 60 who knew who I was," he told the audience.

Weaver said he is recognized often. On a recent trip to Hudson's he wore his red golfing pants. Another Grosse Pointe resident asked him the next day what he was doing wearing his red pants to Hudson's.

Being recognized can be both a plus and a minus, most of the panelists agreed, but Beth Konrad pointed out the darker side of fame.

A veteran radio and television reporter, she became editorial director for a Detroit television station and was also a public af-

St. Valentine, according to one charming tradition, wrote words of peace and love on heart-shaped violet leaves and distributed them to passersby, and we know that Lincoln, bowed down with the cares and responsibilities of the Civil War years, sought rest and respite in the garden and in the songs of birds.

In the medieval flower calendar the flower of February is the primrose, or primula. There are many, many sizes, varieties and colors of primroses, and the name is derived from the Latin, Primus, alluding to the early flowering of so many of the species. The tropical world of orchids is the Detroit Garden Center's answer to grim, gray February weather. On Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 21 and 22, Ron Ciesinski of Taylor Orchids will present a sale and display of these levely blooms. On Saturday the hours are from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. and on Sunday from 1 to 3 p.m. at Moross House.

A lecture about orchids will be featured at noon and at 2 p.m. on Saturday and at 2 p.m. on Sunday for those who wish to learn about the life of those wonderful blooms and how to grow them. There will also be a potting demonstration following the talks. Admission is $1. For more

The orchids to be especially featured by Ciesinski are the phalaenopsis, or moth orchids, with their arching sprays of flowers which resemble flying moths. These make excellent house plants and with minimal care provide glorious, colorful bloom for long periods of time. They are native to the jungles of Maylaysia, Burma, the Phillipines and Australia.

Orchid fanciers are invited to join the Michigan Orchid Society which holds its meetings on the third Sunday of the month. It is worth the $7.50 dues just to see the members' orchids on display at the meetings, not to mention the annual show on Palm Sunday at the Tel-Twelve Mall. Bob Neuhauser, 31581 Lamar Drive, Farmington, 48024, is the membership chairman.

The library at the Detroit Garden Center, and the library at the Grosse Pointe Garden Center both have beautiful and informative books on orchid culture for your pleasure and information.

Are your Christmas poinsettias still flourishing? Many of them are and if you have a pink or white one you have probably decided that the color at least looks more springlike than Christmas red. Joel Poinsett was the United States Minister to Mexico early in the 1800s. It was he who developed the poinsettia from a native Mexican plant. He cultivated them in his Charleston, S.C., garden and named them after himself.

Incidentally, you can tell if your potted plants need water by tapping on the pot. If you hear a thud sound your plant has water; if you get a hollow sound, get out your watering pot.

Theatre. These are two particularly bright spots."

Suburban volunteers can feel especially needed in the Orchestra Hall project, Vititoe said.

"With the DIA (Detroit Institute of Arts) and the historic museum, the city of Detroit is the owner," she said. "That sort of changes your outlook. Orchestra Hall is owned by a private, non-profit group. It gives it a different dimension than with public property."

Both Thurber and Vititoe feel that Orchestra Hall is an important part of the rebirth of downtown Detroit."

"This hall is a marvelous part of old Detroit," Thurber said, "and it has a place in new Detroit.

"There is room for many activities and productions downtown," Vititoe said. "Just in the space of two years, the neighborhood (around Orchestra Hall) is changing. It's coming right along."

In the early '70s, the future of Orchestra Hall looked like demolition and redevelopment. But a group of private citizens who believed the deterioration of the building could be reversed changed all that.

"It was truly a grassroots thing," Thurber said. "Only recently have a great many leaders taken a second look at Orchestra Hall. The initial thrust came from grassroots people for the most part."

Thurber was one of the first people to look inside the hall when the restoration project was first proposed.

"It was a complete derelict," he said. "The roof leaked and there were rivers of water running down the aisles on the main floor. The ornamental plaster was destroyed. Vandals had set some minor fires. The hall was a pigeon roost inside. The birds were flying in and out. It was a very discouraging proposition. But little by little, we've brought it back. It was an act of faith by a great many people."

The hall was built in 1919. In its early years, it was the home of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. In the '40s, it was called the Paradise Theatre and was the home of many popular musical performances. It was used sporadically in the '50s, but was closed in 1958 to stand empty until 1970 when it was threatened with destruction.

"We have scheduled 130 events this season," said Jeffrey Montgomery, public relations director for the hall. "More than 150,000 people have been here."

The Orchestra Hall preservationists worked with the idea of getting the hall open as soon as possible, rather than waiting until enough money could be raised to complete the entire restoration

"The whole thrust was to get the hall open and lighted up,"

Thurber said. "It was to prove it was a viable community resource. It might have taken years to raise and bank enough money for the complete restoration. Meanwhile, it would not be accomplishing what it was intended for."

The hall was opened for business as soon as it was declared safe and the restoration was carried out bit by bit over a period of years.

"It is not fully restored by any means yet," Thurber said. "But it is beautiful and on its way back. It has enabled patrons to participate in the restoration. It is the difference between being able to enjoy a present in a single package, or being able to put it together yourself. People have a proprietory interest in the hall. You sense it. They feel like it's theirs."

"That's why we're so enthusiastic," Vititoe said. "We're part of it too."

The restoration continues season after season. Thurber explained that the main floor restrooms and the loge area still need renovation work. In addition, the hall still needs air conditioning so it can be used during the warm months.

The Show Boat Ball will be an opportunity to see the hall at

"This is the one night of the year when the hall looks its best," Thurber said.

The fund-raising aspect of the event is important to the programing efforts at the hall.

"With any cultural program, if ticket sales cover one third to one half the cost, you're doing well," Montgomery said. "To operate in the black, we must muster that much support."

"This event is productive," Vititoe said. "But it's also so much fun that people have come to expect it."

A sit-down dinner with a Southern menu will be served on a platform built over the seating area on the main floor of the hall. Musicians from the DSO will donate their services to provide music for listening and dancing pleasure. The souvenir program will feature articles on Jerome Kern and on Show Boat, which has been called the greatest American musical.

Tickets for the popular event are going fast, Vititoe said.
"We had 100 reservations before we sent out the invitations,"
she said.

Tickets for the Show Boat Ball are $150 per person for guests, $200 per person for sponsors and $250 per person for patrons. The committee for the event includes: Thomas V. Going a mile or two

When we were given directions for our first destination in the Detroit area, we were told to get off Interstate 94 at Eight Mile Road (Vernier). I was fascinated with the name "Eight Mile." I wondered at the time whether or not there was a Seven Mile Road and a Nine Mile Road.

After living here awhile I learned that the Mile Roads go all the way from one to at least 37. (This numerical arrangement certainly helps a person to judge distances from downtown Detroit and to find destinations.)

Two roads in particular are pertinent to the Christian life. The one is the "Two Mile" Road. Jesus said to his contemporaries (who could be conscripted by Roman soldiers to carry burdens), ... if anyone forces you to go one mile, go with him two miles. This is the so-called extra or second mile. Friends of Jesus are to be more than minimal people. The extras make the difference. In marriage, for instance, each partner should be willing to go not merely halfway, but the whole way. Every community or church is better because of the "second mile" givers and doers. Libraries, museums, art centers, parks and social service agencies usually are the product of people who go the second mile.

But there also is the "One Mile" Road. This is the mile which one walks in doing what is expected and in fulfilling ordinary responsibilities. Believe it or not, some go the second mile but neglect to go the first mile. Every home would function more smoothly and there would be less friction if each member should take care of his or her chores and appointed duties.

Many churches are crippled in their ministries because their members do not carry their share of the load. Some have to go the second mile because others do not walk the first mile.

Every city pays the price because some of its residents fail to walk the first mile in keeping the streets and properties clean, in driving vehicles responsibly, in respecting other people's rights.

Let the day come in which more and more people travel both the "One Mile" Road and the "Two Mile" Road.

St. Clare of Montefalco celebrates 60th anniversary

. St. Clare of Montefalco Catholic Church, Grosse Pointe Park, officially celebrated the 60th anniversary of its founding as a parish at special liturgies held Feb. 7 and 8, and with a party sponsored by the parish PTO in the church hall on Saturday, Feb. 7.

Preceding the festivities was a Solemn Mass of Thanksgiving concelebrated by the Revs. Burkhart, Molnar, Scheible, Pizzo and McDonnell, associate pastors, as well as several priests from neighboring parishes and a personal representative from Most. Rev. Edmund Szoka. The Rev. John Lambert, pastor of St. Clare, presided.

In his sermon, Lambert congratulated the entire St. Clare faith community on its many accomplishments during its 60-year history, and spoke of the many challenges which St. Clare Parish looks forward to.

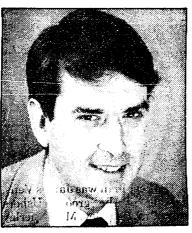

In 1926, Bishop Michael J. Gallagher, acting upon petitions made to him from Catholics in the Grosse Pointe Park area, authorized the formation of St. Clare of Montefalco Parish under the supervision of priests of the order of St. Augustine.

The first mass was celebrated in October 1926 in the Colony Theatre, Mack and Balfour roads. In 1927, the parish school opened its doors and soon the convent and rectory buildings were added to the parish plant. Delayed by the Depression and war, construction of the current church building was completed in 1952. In 1964, the Sweeney Center school building was opened.

In its 60-year history, St. Clare of Montefalco Parish has grown into one of the largest and most active parishes in the Archdiocese of Detroit.

Hockey coach turns columnist

A columnist turned hockey coach, or a hockey coach turned columnist? This week, readers have their choice.

Last Thursday — I hate to admit — Peggy O'Connor did a fantastic job coaching South's hockey practice. The players enjoyed the break from me. Now it is time for me to live up to my end of the deal.

Writing a column isn't as easy as everyone thinks. With unlimited options, it's more difficult to narrow down the subject matter. So I decided to write on a potpourri of topics.

Personal Information ...

My name is Tim Zimmerman and I am the varsity hockey coach at Grosse Pointe South High School. I am not employed by the school system, but by Macomb Intermediate School District. My position of para-professional/substitute teacher allows me to work with Severely Emotionally Impaired high school students. I am part of the physical education staff at Neil Reid School. I graduated from Wayne State University in 1985 with a degree in education. My masters program will be in Sports Administration.

Thinking Out Loud ...

After four years of coaching in Grosse Pointe, will someone please tell me why in sub-zero temperatures, people still wear no socks in their shoes? Don't their feet get cold?

Winning and Losing ...

"Is winning the primary purpose of sports?" Most people would say: "Absolutely not, it is to teach kids about sportsmanship, teamwork and discipline.

But what people say and what people do usually doesn't jibe with the previous statement. Many times after leaving a high school sports event, disgruntled players and parents complain about the coaching and/or the officiating. Sometimes they forget about the sportsmanship, teamwork, discipline, and more importantly, the quality of the game. All some parents and players see is the scoreboard. To me that is really sad.

Coaches are put in a precarious situation. They are supposed to win, but also teach morals and values at the same time. It is too bad that people tend to forget this. In today's world the winners are rewarded with everything, while the losers are looked down upon. Coaches are only normal, so sometimes they will cut down on teaching values and put more emphasis on winning.

Which is more rewarding, value objectives or winning a championship?

To me the most rewarding thing about coaching is being able to be an integral part of a student-athlete's development . . . whether it be on the playing surface or learning to deal in a competitive, marketable world.

Every day, the hockey players at South remind me how much I love coaching.

Thinking Out Loud II ...

After my first practice as JV hockey coach at University Liggett, I went into the locker room to evaluate the session. As I am talking, the players are removing their equipment. I look around the room and everyone and I mean everyone — had BOXER SHORTS on! Now, I can remember seeing only my father with these shorts on. I couldn't believe it!! Ninth and tenth graders with box-

Evaluation of Peg's Practice . . .

At Peggy's practice, she started off very hesitantly, but as the practice wore on, she demanded the attention of every player. I think Peggy enjoyed the "power" of being a coach. Making the players crawl or do "25" seemed to be the highlight of her session. The skating ability of Ms. O'Connor resembled that of an ostrich and the Community Rink's boards were very exhausted from Peggy's constant leaning. Her organizational techniques and use of audio-visual aids needs improvement, but that will come with experience. Peggy's puck control and shooting were uncoordinated, probably because of the whistle on the gloves. Overall, not a bad job!!

Owners say GPCR is not up for sale

Rumors that the Grosse Pointe Community Rink has been sold to the St. Clair Health Corporation are "absolutely untrue," according to spokesmen for both organizations.

"The arena has not been sold and is not for sale," said Paul Huth, attorney for the group which owns the GPCR, located on Canvon between Warren and Mack in Detroit. "The report that it was for sale appeared in the Detroit Free Press on Jan. 29 and was later retracted, but it has caused us a lot of aggravation," Huth said Monday.

Michael Kairis, associate director of media affairs for the St. Clair Health Corporation, confirmed that the GPCR was not among the buildings purchased in that area recently. St. Clair Health Corporation has purchased the Grosse Pointe Tennis Club and the old Austin Catholic Preparatory buildings which immediately surround

"We have had no discussions with St. John's about selling the arena. We've had lots of calls from people who use our facility who are concerned about the future of the arena. We want them to know that we are here to provide a hockey arena for the community,' Huth said.

The GPCR has, in fact, been undergoing numerous repairs and improvements in recent months, he added. New stick racks and hooks have been installed in the locker rooms, the parking lot has had lighting added and it is possible that new blades will be purchased for the Zamboni ice resurfacing machine, Huth said.

"We're working together with the Grosse Pointe Hockey Association on making improvements and that story doesn't help us one bit because people say 'why are they making improvements when they're selling the arena?""

Yancey

High-scoring junior is center of attention as he helps key ULS cagers' dramatic turnaround

By Peggy O'Connor

Newspaper reporters wanted to interview John Yancey even before the University Liggett School point guard had played a single game with his basketball team. And even though the 6-3 junior is averaging 24 points and 9.8 rebounds per game for his undefeated squad, he says he still isn't too sure what all the fuss is about.

"When I first got here, people told me that we'd have a couple of freshmen in Kevin Crociata and Kandia (Milton) and I knew they'd had a pretty bad year last year, so I thought we'd be an average team. I'm kind of surprised we're undefeated," Yancey says in his thick North Carolina accent.

"We're good. But then again we haven't played a lot of tough teams. We'll see what happens when we get into the ULS head coach Chuck Wright is quick to point out that despite his obvious talent, Yancey is not the sole reason for the Knights' dramatic turnaround from the 1985-86 season, when they won just five games. (The 1986-87 Knights were 14-0 at press time).

"There's no doubt that John Yancey sets the tone defensively for us in every game. He is absolutely the on-court leader emotionally. But John Yancey — or any one player no matter who he is - doesn't win a game by himself. And that's true of any team sport. John is an excellent player on a team where pretty much everyone knows his role and contributes," Wright says.

Still, Yancey is seen by many as one big reason why the Knights have turned things around this year. And the soft-spoken transfer student realizes that many people — including his teammates — look to him for leadership on and off the court. "Sometimes I feel a little bit of pressure. Like last year I was a sophomore and I looked up to the older guys on my team. This year, I'm only a junior and a lot of guys are looking to me for leadership. It was kind of strange at firet, but it's getting easier."

DESPITE LIGGETT'S unblemished record, no one involved with the squad has gotten carried away by the obvious improvement. "We have a long way to go," Yancey says. "We don't really have a 'big man' and we're really not a physical team so when we go up against a team like St. Clement (No. 2 in Class C) we don't know if we'll be able to measure up. And we could play St. Clement in the first round of the districts.

"We've only had one close game, so we haven't been tested. I can't see us getting blown away by anyone. I'd like to see us win a couple (in districts) be-fore we're through," Yancey says. Yancey is well-liked, ULS officials say. He admits to having a difficult time at first adjusting to the move from North Carolina following his father's business transfer to the Detroit area. "But I've made some friends here . . . and I've gotten a little more used to the weather," he says with a slow smile. Yancey is also ranked in the top 25 nationally in tennis in his age group, and may pursue that sport in college. He is seen by many coaches as a "natural athlete."

"John is a quiet, clean-cut kid. He's almost too shy," Wright says. "He spends a lot of time with adults and is really a coach's dream, personalitywise. He's the kind of person that almost draws people to him naturally.

Basically, he's just a nice kid . . . a real pleasure to be around.

"But that's the kind of players we have on this team. We're close. When we went to Charlevoix last summer for a tournament, the kids slept on wrestling mats and just had a great time being together. They still talk about it," Wright says.

And the result is obvious. ULS has outmanned every single team in the Michigan Independent Athletic Conference this season and won its first tournament (the Maumee Valley Tournament) since 1981. Tomorrow night, the Knights could clinch the MIAC championship with a victory over oncebeaten Plymouth Christian.

"People say we should be ranked, but we don't worry about that because we really haven't played anybody tough. And we still haven't reached all of our goals. Every kid on this team knows that I won't be satisfied until we can be the best team possible in every game," Wright says.

"That's what we're shooting for." Or as John Yancey says, "I'd like for us to make a name for ourselves in

Don't tell Pontiac Catholic, but beating Pontiac Catholic, 13-15, Our Lady Star of the Sea actually won the 1987 Catholic League Class C volleyball championship way back on Jan. 29. Officially, the spikers captured their first played St. Clement on Jan. 29.

A perfect record

The Lasers (above) finished the soccer season in first place with a 7-0-1 record. The league's leading scorer, Adam Rouls, led the Lasers on offense, averaging over three goals per game. The Lasers also got good goaltending all year from Brad Cenko, Matt Shiriila, Justin Matthews and Eric Neufux. Steve Owen, Brendan Walsh, and Ryan Karles helped provide the spark up front, while Tim Lindow, Scott Gallagher, James Moon, Jimmy Thompkins, Casey Perry and Richard West anchored a strong defense. The Lasers were coached by Doug Rouls (top row). (We realize that the Lasers' season ended long ago, but for one reason or another, their photo didn't get published. This photo was just too cute to toss, so here it is.)

their minds and said 'Hey, we can compete; we are good," "said Star assistant coach Margaret Spin-

The result was that Star's game against St. Clement that evening was "flawless." Earlier that evening Star coach Valerie Johnson had taken spiker Beth Allor aside and told her that she would have to join team captain Doreen Pellegrom in being team leader. Allor did, according to Spindler, and Star's game just took off.

"From that point on, these kids didn't think they could lose,' Spindler said. And against Cabrini in the first round of the league playoffs last week that attitude came in handy. Star and Cabrini played a three-hour volleyball game, which saw undefeated Cabrini win the first game, lose the second to Star and see-saw back and forth with the Tunas in game three.

"It was 16-15 them, then 17-16 us, 18-17 them, 19-18 us and finally we won it 21-19. The momentum carried us the rest of the way to the championship,' Spindler said. "What was neat about Cabrini is that after that grueling match, they came over to cheer us on in the second round against St. Alphonsus. That showed a lot of class.'

Against PC on Monday at Bishop Foley High, Star began the game slowly, trailing in the first match 9-0. "It was nerves mostly, but these kids didn't give up. They came back," Spindler said. "Buffy Stumb and Allor with their height, Tracey Walker and Jeannie Purrenhage with their setting and Bridget Sullivan, Doreen and Kelly Kiefer with their defense just made it.

"We're just in our glory today," Spindler said.

The Tunas face the Public School League runners-up at Denby High on Saturday before Class A league titlist Marian plays the PSL winner. The pre-districts begin for Star in March.

By Peggy O'Connor Sports Editor

Horrendous.

South High hockey players know that when their coach Tim Zimmerman uses that word to describe their play, he means business. Oddly enough, it's also a perfect word to describe my performance as South's "coach for a day" in practice last week.

It seemed like a good idea when Zimmerman proposed that we switch jobs for a day. He'd write a sports column (after all, anybody can write - check out his work on page 1C and see if that's true) and I'd coach a Blue Devils' practice. I chuckled to myself at the notion that coaching was tougher than writing.

Now, it's not so funny.

Since I hadn't laced on a pair of ice skates in three years, I practiced my skating for a couple of weeks before the big day, which was scheduled for Feb. 12. Funny thing, Feb. 12 seemed a lot farther off when I agreed to this stunt back in January.

The morning of Feb. 12 came and I found myself quite nervous. Why, I wondered? I kept reminding myself that it was just a bunch of high school hockey players I was trying to impress here, not Team U.S.S.R. By midday, it had dawned on me that I hadn't prepared much for the practice beyond getting nervous and buying new skate laces.

Luckily, I'd saved Zimmerman's practice schedule from two days earlier, when I'd gone to observe South in a real practice. I supplemented that with two hours study in the Grosse Public Library, reading "Hockey is My Life" by Phil Esposito and even picking up a stickhandling drill from a forgettable book on hockey by the even-more forgettable star of the 1960s New York Rangers, Rod Gilbert.

I arrived at the Grosse Pointe Community Rink at the appointed time, looking about as eager as a person entering the dentist's office for six hours of drilling and filling. It took me five minutes to put my skates on and 10 or 15 more to kid around with Zimmerman about my lack of inventiveness when it comes to designing a practice. (Well, I never said I was Jacques De-

As it turned out, I was more like Jacques Cousteau when it came to hockey - in way over my head. At 5:02, I had 22 hockey players looking at me, waiting to see what I would come up with. In retrospect, I'm not sure it was worth the wait.

Warm-ups (thank goodness for warm-ups) took 10 minutes. My first "drill" only took five minutes instead of the 10 I'd allotted for it. I moved around the ice like a Zamboni with a blown engine. I got numerous bits of advice from Zimmerman and team manager Jeff Metry (thanks, guys, but I could have used it before practice). And the Rod Gilbert Stickhandling Drill was a bust - getting the cones in place was more exciting than the drill.

In the end, I discovered that as a coach, I make a better writer. The same organizational skills I use to put together a four-page sports section, take photos, write columns and manage numerous stringers and columnists didn't get me far in coaching. At one point, I felt a little lost with players sweeping past me on skates, not hearing my tiny voice in the big arena. I kept looking at the clock, remembering how much one hour of ice time costs. All the while, I felt like a woman whose prized string of pearls has broken, strewing stones everywhere, and having to chase them down without much success.

It's not that the kids didn't listen. They did. It's just that a coach has to have a lot more than just the ability to command attention. Practices must be thought out to the last minute. A coach has to monitor each player's movement in the practice, get on the guy if he's dogging it and do it in a way that neither diminishes the player nor makes the coach his enemy.

It's tough to do, even for a day. And we're not even talking about games here. With the help of Zimmerman, Metry, assistant coach Dave Seagram and manager Mark Nesler, I got through the hour. I'm sure the kids didn't learn anything (except maybe a little tolerance for people who mean well but haven't the faintest idea of what they are doing). But I learned a lot.

I learned not to swear. South imposes a 50 cent fine on those who use obscenities. I now owe the Blue Devil "Cuss Can" about three bucks (although I didn't find out about the rule until I was in the hole for $1.50).

I learned that you can't get coaching preparation out of a book, no matter what Phil Esposito says. (Esposito coaches the Rangers and after reading his book, I know why they're

I learned that coaches who get the most out of their players are the kind who are firm and tough when they need to be, yet open and approachable at the same time. They don't have to be arrogant, win-at-all-costs screamers or moody, silent types to get their players' respect or get the job done. And good coaches know when to give their kids a little break and arrange something fun, like asking out-of-shape, slightly-disorganized sports writers to take over practice for a day.

And, while it was lots of fun, I have also learned never, ever to do this again. At least not without wearing double-runners.

Cagers pummel Greenhills, set sights on championship

The University Liggett School varsity basketball team went on a tear in the second half to defeat Ann Arbor Greenhills, 73-54, on Feb. 11 at ULS. The win enabled the Knights to remain undefeated and on top of the Michigan Independent Athletic Conference.

Greenhills came out strong and led at halftime, 32-31. But early in the third quarter, the Knights began to take advantage of the Greenhills defense which was designed to slow down leading scorers John Yancey and Kandia Milton. The result was that William Middlebrooks scored eight of the Knights' 19 third quarter

ULS led by nine going into the fourth quarter. Greenhills gambled with a full court press. It was effective at first, but gradually guards Kevin Crociata and Yancey looked up the floor and found Bill Lucken and Middlebrook all alone for lay-ups.

Back in the third game of the season, the Knights had managed to squeak out an 84-82 triple overtime win at Greenhills on Dec. 9. But this time, the Knights outrebounded Greenhills 41.20 and shut down its high-powered running game. "In some ways, this was our best game of the season," said Coach Chuck Wright. "Coach Facciolla and I have been emphasizing rebounding and beating people to spots the last few weeks and tonight's game was the reward for the hard work."

Yancey led the balanced ULS scoring attack with 21 points. He also had a personal season-high 16 rebounds and 10 assists. Middlebrooks hit for a season-best 19 points and nine rebounds. Milton added 15 points, 10 rebounds and five assists; Lucken chipped in 11 points.

Coaching — a serious business

A mass of orange jerseys, white pants and black numbers, they followed their coach off the field to the far side of the playing area. The children removed thier helmets. glanced at the parents spectators and stood together in front of the coach with expectant little faces. "You stink . . . every one of you, the coach roared on and on.

The basic job of a coach is to teach children, especially 6 to 12-year-olds, the rules and techniques of play while allowing that competition is an inevitable aspect of sport. The winning losing aspect should be de-emphasized. Allowing all children to participate together on as equal a level as possible and not always having the "first team" on the field is important, particularly to the pre-adolescent. It's miserable enough being a bench warmer when you're 16! The kids are out there to have FUN. They should be allowed to do that.

Parents must watch and experience the relationship between their child and the coach. The child probably shouldn't be involved unless the parents are completely confident in the coach and can give their trust and support.

Sport is a parenting vehicle that allows another group of individuals to take care of your children. Parenting and teaching are synonomous: Good parents are teaching; good teachers practice parenting. It's the same with coaches. They become very important in a child's life.

Self-esteem

Sports are an oppositunity for a child to enhance his or her self-esteem. Sports allow a child to learn and accomplish. Children who participate in sports seek enjoyment, an activity that organizes time for them and gives them an opportunity to recognize their own performance. Youngsters can learn a number of lessons through sports. Sports have rules, violations, clear limits and social interraction - all of which can be used in other areas of life and experience. They can also learn how to progress from one point to another, to think strategically and how to cope when things don't turn out as they expected.

Role models

The ideal role model for a coach would be Mr. Rogers of Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood, He says important things to children, primarily that he likes them just the way they are. He affirms and teaches at the same time. He's the kind of a man who places values at a premium. Like him, parents and coaches should remember the distinction between the act and the individual. Harsh or degrading behavior is not motivational. Emphasis should be placed on the fact that this is an opportunity to be with friends, to enjoy the spirit of the game and to benefit from physical exercise.

Parents' responsibility

Don't push. Too often, if the child does not do well, momand dad don't say "That's okay. Johnny, you played a good game." They say "What happened, why didn't you do better?" The child knows he's trying his hardest and he's still not pleasing Mom and Dad. Therefore, he reasons that he is not getting the recognition and love he thought he

February 1 Grosse Pointe Sports-related eye injuries on the increase

The thrill and excitement children experience competing in sports is overshadowed by an epidemic of eye injuries, according to the National Society to Prevent Blindness (NSPB).

The Society says that most of the 160,000 eve injuries suffered

A 1983 U.S. Consumer Product

Face protectors like this one are mandatory high for school and youth hockey players and are credited with lowering the number of hockey-related eye injuries.

Mary

Safety Commission report showed that 5 to 14-year-olds suffered an estimated 2,389 injuries from baseball, 1,010 from football, and 915 from basketball. There were 275 injuries from ice and field hockey. The Society estimates that at least 90 percent of these injuries could have been prevented if proper eyewear had been worn.

For the past several years, the Society's Sports Eye Safety Committee has led a vigorous compaign to promote the use of eye protection in sports. Paul F. Vinger M.D., a Concord, Mass., ophthalmologist and committee member, crusaded to make facial protectors mandatory in hockey. That was approved in 1976 by the Amateur Hockey Association. By 1980, nearly all U.S. and Canadian amateur hockey association organizations mandated face protectors.

In Grosse Pointe, face protectors are mandatory for both youth hockey and high school hockey players.

In 1985, the safety committee recommended that baseball batters 5 to 14 wear helmets with face protectors. This type of guard protects not only the eyes, but the nose, mouth and facial bones.

"But for most amateur players, the guard is seldom used," said Edward H. Hall, manager of the NSPB's Eye Safety and Corporate Health Programs. "Perhaps because parents, coaches and players have not been made aware of the potential for injury. Wearing proper eye protection could make the game more enjoyable - not only for the players, but for parents who surely don't want their child to become part of next year's tragic statistics."

The Park's Art Getz, who supervises area leagues for the national Little League organization, said that it is not mandatory for Little League players to wear face protectors. "It is, of course, mandatory for players to wear batting helmets and for catchers to have helmets attached to their face masks. We do encourage the use of mouth protectors and although face protectors are not mandatory, they are recommend-

Getz added that Little League Baseball has developed a pamphlet listing safety devices and precautions the organization suggests its members employ. The 1986 playing rules and regulations booklet also outlines some safety measures, including the requirement that catchers wear face masks when playing and when warming up pitchers, and that players who wear glasses should be encouraged to use "safety glasses."

For more information on baseball and other sports eye safety, free copies of "What's Your Game" may be obtained by writing to the National Society to Prevent Blindness, 79 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y., 10016. Enclose a stamped, self-addressed business envelope.

Food fetishes

There are many reasons why we eat and for most of us the first reason is not hunger. We eat to be festive, to avoid unpleasant tasks, to mend a wounded heart, to escape loneliness, to relieve boredom or to assuage guilt.

Food has always been a basic part of man's culture, not merely to meet his biological needs, but to serve as part of man's social and religious customs as well. Today, where large varieties and quantities of foods are available. eating is tied into most aspects of life. And now, more than ever in the history of our country we have become a gluttonous and dangerously overweight people.

Anthropologist Hortense Powdermaker in her essay, "An Anthropological Approach to the Problem of Obesity" (from the Psychology of Obesity: Dynamics and Treatment, Charles C. Thomas, publisher) pointed out that in this age of "plenty," our focus is on consumption. Television, redio and the media encourage us to buy more and more - new cars, computers, foods. It's an ongoing race to have the newest and the best. The message is made clear that if we are to keep prosperity alive, we must increase consumption.

The role food plays in our lives is further complicated by the contradictory values of the last 10 years: much attention has been given nutrition and physical fitness, but in spite of that focus, obesity and overweight continue to be problems for many. In her essay, Powdermaker observed that while slimness is a sign of social status, the banquet tables of the affluent continue to be laden with rich foods in ample varieties and amounts.

WE HAVE given food too much power. It is meant to keep us alive, even enhance our lives.

but, when a bag of chocolate bonbons holds our entire purpose for living, we know our focus on food needs to be readjusted. External circumstances should not dictate our eating habits. Until we separate our need for food from our need for love, affection and selfesteem, overweight and unhealthy bodies will continue to be a problem. Food is a destructive counterfeit when it is used as a substitute for emotional well-

One of the first steps towards understanding our real need for food is to listen to the body's messages. It will tell you when you are hungry or whether or not your trip to the refrigerator is out of restlessness. Accurately defining your behavior will enable you to make a change. Here are some examples of when we use food beyond our nutritional needs:

Avoidance

You have a task at hand and .you are prograssinating getting it started. You decide to have something to eat while you wait for the urge to hit you. Maybe after the doughnut or whatever you'll feel more like doing the job.

Anger

You feel your family, your boss or your (fill in the blank) has been totally unreasonable. You've had the refrigerator and eat something that is almost always empty of any nutrition but loaded with "junk" to assuage your feelings. (Not many people choose a carrot stick or celery when they are upset!)

Social pressure

You have anticipated an evening out with friends. You want people to like you and find you easy to get along with, so you don't make a fuss when the evening gets longer and longer, laden with foods and drinks into the night. You had promised yourself you would go easy, but you didn't want to appear out of step with the group. Everything looked and smelled so good, until you got home feeling bloated and uncomforable.

Rejection

Maybe you didn't get the job or promotion you thought you had, or a boyfriend or girlfriend found someone new. You feel hurt and insulted. Your self-esteem takes nosedive. You take solace in a piece of cake, a bag of chips or a big bowl of ice cream? The more you eat the more miserable you feel and you find yourself going in a vicious circle.

Learning to exchange negative behaviors for productive habits that help build and maintain feelit! You stomp to the cupboard or ings of self-worth takes training.

To begin, make a list of activities that are rewarding for you. With concrete ideas in hand you can redirect your inclination toward eating. Reaching for alternatives must become natural.

• Eliminate the junk foods stored in your house. Admit that they are often there for you and not because the kids, spouse or friends like them. No one needs those types of food!

• Take time to enjoy eating. Remember that "compulsive foods" are those that can be gulped rather than chewed.

 Plan to eat small amounts of food throughout the day. Put everything you eat on a plate. You now have a visual picture of eating and will feel satisfied, not deprived.

Also, eating small amounts in regular time frames will eliminate the physical discomfort of starving your body, and actually aids in digesting and using the food more efficiently!

Henry David Thoreau believed that "He who distinguishes the true flavor of his food can never be glutton." We should pay heed to that wisdom. Not only will we gain greater reward from the eating experience, we will be more healthy. Food will meet our needs without gaining control over our

'Cats' brings its special magic to Detroit

By Marian Trainor Special Writer

There's magic afoot on the stage of the Fisher Theatre and it's all due to a bevy of felines who come padding down center stage and work their spell as they peer at the audience over the footlights. They are an engaging lot who conjure up all sorts of pleasurable entertainment as they strut and dance and sing.

Their routines are based on a book of verses, "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats" by T.S. Eliot, a gentleman who obviously understood the peculiar charm, detachment and surprising resilience of these furry, beguiling creatures. So also has Andrew Lloyd Webber who has put together this enchanting produc-

Although we know that these talented performers are people garbed in the most realistic colors of cat fur, we are beguiled by the fabulous sets and their catlike mannerisms. We willingly suspend all practical judgment and accept them as cats - they are so artfully made up and costumed. They have the faces of cats and they come in all varieties, the sleek and pretty, the scuffy and bedraggled, the young and vigor-

The night begins as we see green and yellow eyes peering out of the darkness. As the moon rises, the cats come crawling out of an abandoned wreck of a car and a huge storm sewer, or drop down from perches from the great junk piles.

The set here does not spill out into the theatre as it did in productions in some of the other cities, but the same effect of the cats lurking in the audience is gained as they slither in and out of the aisles on their padded

While the junk is confined to the stage, there is enough of it to satisfy the audience's curiosity if they choose to go up and examine it during the intermission.

The storyline is loosely held together by the event of a gathering of a group of cats who call themselves the Jellicle Cats. They gather each year under a full moon to meet with Old Deuteronomy (Calvin E. Remsbert) who will pick one of them to be re-

The technical effects that highlight the presentations are fantastic such as the one featuring

It would be difficult to single out one performer over another, although Grizzabella's (Janene Lovullo) moving rendition of "Memory" stands out. She has just the right range and tone to make it a moving experience.

Memorable also is "Moments of Happiness," a hymnlike tribute to Cld Deuteronomy. It is woven in with a sci-fi synthesizer that lends an aura of ritual to the gathering.

A McGuire Sisters-style group provides a boogie-woogie for Sally Ann Swain's Jerranydots tap number and Skimbleshanks has an eye-catching Broadway production routine. Make no mistake about it -'Cats'' is a phenomenal theatrical experience done on a grand scale. It pulls you into a mystical world where cats present an intriging panorama of human dreams and emotions, joys and sorrows while at the same time never veering from the illusion that this is a cat's world.

LOOK HOMEWARD - a Life of Thomas Wolfe

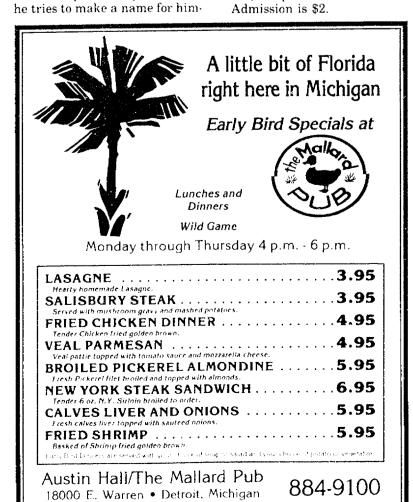

by David Herbert Donald

This exceptionally learned and well-written biography is a fine accompaniment to the extraordinary literary talent of Thomas Wolfe.

Donald's well-researched book will answer many questions for those who have read Thomas Wolfe with awe and amazement, for here the reader will learn exactly how much of Wolfe was incorporated into Gant and Webber (a lot). how much of Wolfe's work was born from his relationship with editor Maxwell Perkins, and how deep was the well of anguish which fostered his remarkable novels.

The biographer succeeds in placing the reader in the middle of Wolfe's tumult, and although we know how the story will end, we are enthralled throughout. It is, too, a lesson in how a good biography should be written.

THE BESTJAGUAR EVER BUILT:

Breeding tells. While trends in automotive design come and go, the 1987 Jaguar XJ6 remains defiantly true to its heritage: lithe, graceful and utterly distinctive.

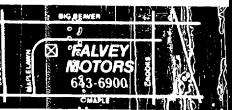

It is the nature of automotive styling to be transient. And it is the nature of Jaguar to create cars of classic grace: cars whose beauty endures long after the fads are forgotten. Such a car is the Series III. Combining beauty of form with quick response and notable luxury, the XJ6 rewards its driver in many ways. Come in and experience the pleasures that have been bred into the best Jaguar ever built.

Substitute transportation new available. Falvey Motors will leave a vehiale for your use when me pick up your Jaguar at your home or office. After servicing your Jaguar we'll return it to your doorstep.
