Day care homes in conflict with local ordinances

By Nancy Parmenter

This is a story about a conflict between different levels of government, between different visions of what a neighborhood ought to be — and what happens to the folks who get caught in the middle.

The main characters are a mother who wanted to earn money while staying at home with her children, the working moms and dads who leave their children with her during the day, and a city that wants to provide the kind of neighborhood its residents want: a neighborhood without businesses in it.

Sheila Temkow of Grosse Pointe Woods has operated a state-licensed family day care

Her license, conferred by the state Department of Social Services, allows her to take care of a maximum of seven children. Most of the time, she has about four kids, with others who come and go part time. All of her young charges are from Grosse Pointe.

The city of Grosse Pointe Woods has a rule against operating a business in a residential area. The rule was made to protect neighbors from the noise and traffic congestion usually caused by a business. Like most city ordinances, it gets enforced only when someone complains, because, as a Shores ordinance enforcer pointed out, unless you hang out a neon sign, who's makes an ordinance against day

Liechty said that in most cities, a would-be day care operator can take care of the problem by obtaining a variance through an appeal to the local board of zoning appeals. That process is under way in the Woods case.

But the question could be larger than that. The need for reliable day care located close to home is well documented. Many parents want to leave their children nearby in a home atmosphere similar to their own.

But many city ordinances specifically prohibit it. Ordinances in all five Pointes forbid engaging in any home occupation although ordinance enforcers agree that many home workers slip by. In fact, by DSS count, homes in the five Pointes.

"If I have a dozen homes licensed, there are probably another two dozen operating without a license," said William Puumala of the DSS.

"It's whatever you're getting away with," admitted Dennis Foran, Grosse Pointe treasurerassessor. "The only thing you're actually allowed to do is have an office in your home" - the kind you bring work home to, not the kind that generates client visits

There are plenty of people who teach a few music lessons or babysit for a few kids or paint in a home studio. Nobody stops them, but technically, Foran says, they're in violation of the ordi-

The Woods isn't the only local city where day care is an issue. In Grosse Pointe Park, the building department has ordered a family day care home to stop op-

"We sent them a letter advising them that it is considered a business and isn't allowed by the ordinance," said Assessor James Ellison. "Of course, they always have the right of appeal, but the only ground for granting a variance is hardship." Ellison said the city has never granted a variance for a day care home.

Although Ellison said the Park would take the operators to court if they fail to cooperate.

Compute-A-Care

It works like alarm

By Peter A. Salinas

Imagine being an invalid, fall-ing over and bumping your head. You are unable to call out, perhaps no one will check on you for hours and you can't answer

That last part, not being able to answer the phone, was a blessing for a 70-year-old Farms resident Sunday who is part of the Grosse Pointe Woods Compute-A-Care system.

The system is a resident safety program initiated last year by the city. It uses a personal computer to make daily telephone calls to eligible seniors at no cost and to send help if needed.

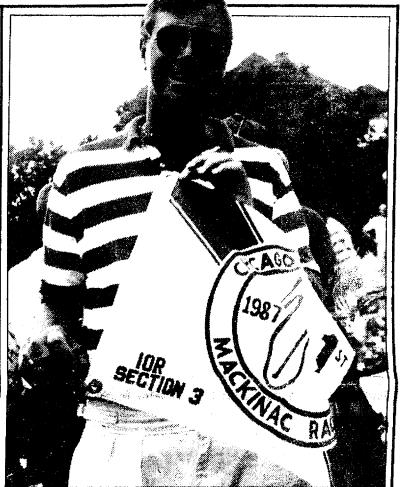

Calls are made by the computer at a pre-arranged time. If no one answers, a car is dispatched to check on the resident. In this case, the man had fallen about one hour before the call came. If he had been out or was simply indisposed, the computer is designed to call back. It did, there was no answer, and the patrol car was dispatched.

The man was taken to St. John Hospital where he was treated and released.

"This is the second time it has worked for us," Public Safety Director Jack Patterson said. "One time the computer had broken down, and the dispatchers were physically making the

Farms gets proposal to subdivide estate on Lakeshore

By Peter A. Salinas Staff Writer

A proposal submitted to the city of Grosse Pointe Farms by Higbie Maxon Real Estate calls for the subdivision of the Harley G. Higbie estate, an 8.5-acre parcel with a mansion, located at Moran and Lakeshore, one of the highest locations in the Grosse Pointes. Director of Public Works John Defoe said the proposal was submitted July 13, but the city has not approved the plan.

"This is just something we have received," Defoe said. "As far as we are concerned, the moratorium (on new housing developments) is still on.'

Defoe's reference was to a moratorium the city issued on new housing developments early this year. Officials felt the impact of the new subdivisions in the area and potential new subdivision of estate land should be studied.

On July 20 the council heard a report from Brandon Rogers, of Brandon Rogers and Associates, the planning firm hired to study the current ordinances governing prime property between Grosse Pointe Boulevard and Lakeshore from Fisher Road to the border with Grosse Pointe Shores.

Rogers proposed several changes in the existing ordinance, notably the creation of a new zoning category for almost the entire area, which would require, among other things, a substantial increase in the minimum lot size for new housing developments, from 11,000 to 15,000 square feet.

Also at that meeting, the Grosse Pointe Historical Society submitted a proposed historic preservation ordinance, which, if approved, would prevent homes that have a historical designation from being demolished to make way for a subdivision. The matter was turned over to the Farms Mayor's Advisory Planning Committee for further study.

Farms pilot goes down in Lake Erie

'If she had to die, she wanted to be buckled in the left seat in the cockpit of an airplane," a saddened Richard T. Allor said of his daughter.

Weather forecasters were working overtime as several tornado sightings were reported in the metropolitan area, and once again driving rain flooded streets in the Grosse Allor, a Grosse Pointe Farms resident, told the Cleveland Control Center that she was running into heavy weather and asked for assistance in maneuvering her plane south around a thunderstorm. Cleveland was monitoring her on radar. She called in around 10 p.m., saying she had lost control of the aircraft. Within seconds, radar detected a drop in altitude from 5,000 to plane, was fine and would be able to make it home. "She had her first plane ride at 10," Richard Allor said. "It was all over after that. She studied her fanny off. She loved flying and that is all she ever wanted to do.

> The case was turned over to the Ontario Provincial Police. More diving was done, but the search was called off Thursday, July 23.

Superintendent H.C. Murray of District No. 1 Provincial Police said Allor has officially been listed as a missing person. He said that because of the altitude of the aircraft when it disappeared from radar, it is difficult to pinpoint the area where the plane crashed. Even though debris was located near Point Pelee, it may have been washed up there after the plane hit the wa-

Judy Ray, a corporate secretary with Jetstream, said that the weather is being blamed for the crash.

"She was trying to work her way out of the storm and around the weather," Ray said of Allor's flight path. "The speculation is that high winds or perhaps a funnel cloud caused her to crash. It could have been a lightning strike. There are so many possibilities we may never know for sure."

Ray said Allor had worked for Jetstream for almost seven months, but that she had been around the Detroit airport for years. She said she was a competent pilot and that she loved to

The question was expected to receive consideration at the Woods planning commission meeting Tuesday. "Under our present ordinance, she wasn't in compliance," said Earl Wakely, director of the Woods safety inspection division. "The planning commission will see if we're interpreting it right."

Planning commission chairman Peter Gilezan said he regarded the Tuesday hearing as an opportunity for both sides to He said there would not necessarily be a settlement of the case that evening.

There was some possibility that the question would be turned over to the city attorney for further interpretation and to see if in fact the commission has any role in it, said former chair John Kennedy. "It's difficult, exciting, controversial," Kennedy said. "There are strong opinions on both sides. It's unpredictable. One possibility is that the planning commission could recommend to the council ways to define limits."

"There aren't a lot of centers in the Woods. There's a need, and people don't want to go to surrounding areas."

Mark Christiansen works for the Woods and has a child in day care with Sheila Temkow. He says he has concerns about the ordinance. "I feel the ordinance doesn't recognize what's happening in today's society, (but changing it) would represent a major change in philosophy."

Kathy LaLonde brings her child to Sheila Temkow too. She is frustrated at the apparent contradiction between the authority of the city and the state. "On the one hand, the state is saying this type of activity is okay," she said, "but the city is saying you can't do it even if you're licensed. But it's a service we definitely would like to continue.'

Parent Bill Wayland said the question should focus broadly on the whole question of home day care, not just on one home.

"I'm interested in the very serious matter of finding a dependable place to leave our children," Wayland said. "A home environment with a mother and fewer children is what we want. In this economy, there are lots of dual-income families. This isn't a luxury so my wife can play tennis in the afternoon. But the zoning ordinance doesn't take these needs into consideration.'

Wayland said he hopes the city can find a way to allow small home day care providers to operate under controlled conditions so that both the neighbors and the users can be protected.

Park approves rezoning for $4 million complex

By Pat Paholsky News Editor

The Park council approved a rezoning request Monday night by developers for property on Jefferson between Westchester and Nottingham, clearing the way for a $4 million complex. The narrow 4-3 vote came after 2 1/2 hours of discussion, most of it by residents opposed to the re-

The three lots in question front Westchester and are zoned residential. The developers, East Jefferson Development Corp., asked for B1 zoning, or local business, instead of OS1, or office service, which is more restrictive.

After an acrimonious public hearing by the planning commission July 21 regarding the matter, the commission recommended the B1 classification with a restrictive covenant:

belt setback from Westchester;

• that there be a 50-foot green-that any development of the property be in accordance with the plans and the model presented to the planning commission at the hearing;

• that the one-story portion of the development located on the three lots in question fronting Westchester be restricted to uses allowed in OS1, as provided by the zoning ordinance.

Many of the residents opposed to the rezoning were not against the development. They expressed fears that the B1 classification would open the possibility of more types of businesses and asked the council to grant the OS1 rating, which would keep the development as primarily an office building.

The developers asked for the B1 zoning, since the rest of the property is zoned for business. Their proposal calls for two phases of construction - one an L-shaped building with two stostory facing Westchester. The building would contain 18,000 squale feet mid their concern is with 3,000 to 5,000 square feet that overlaps the lots in ques-

Phase II would consist of a second building, 12,000 square feet, to be built near Nottingham. It would be linked to the first building by a skywalk.

Developers Fred Ruffner and Alfred Reuther Jr. indicated they would not continue with the project if their rezoning request were not granted.

About 16 residents spoke at the meeting in Pierce auditories facing Jefferson and one rium Monday, most of them to lively applause. One man said, "We are adopting a businessbottom-line mentality and I don't think that's a good reason for changing the zoning." Another resident called the restrictive covenant a "toothless tiger."

A woman said she was in favor of the building as proposed, but after the issue of rezoning to BI and talk about a possible art gallery or bookstore arose, she said, "I feel like we're being sold down the line.

Architect Charles Merz, a Park resident, and Kirsten Frank, chairwoman of the Downtown Development Authority and also a Park resident, spoke in favor of the rezoning request.

Mayor Palmer Heenan said, "I think we're trying to stabilize the area. This project is so beneficial that I have to support it.'

Budget secure for this year; FLEC upgrades youth program

By Nancy Parmenter

After the Grosse Pointe Woods for its youth assistance program July 6. The 1988 program is expected to cost about $43,000, with the six local communities footing half the bill.

With funding secure, new director Pamela Oswald has tightened requirements for volunteers. Starting with the fall training session, volunteers will be required to have a college degree in a field related to psychology or social work.

"I don't think it will make it any more difficult to find volunteers," Oswald said. "It will lend credibility to the program and answer some of the concerns about the credentials of volunteers. If I tell parents the volunteers only have a high school diploma, it doesn't sit too well."

No other youth assistance program has such stringent requirements, Oswald said. FLEC plans to find other programs for otherwise qualified volunteers who lack the specific college degree.

"Some of our best volunteers have degrees in other fields,' Oswald said. "We're looking at other ways to use them.'

Oswald also hopes to expand and revamp the training program. Future volunteers will learn more about substance abuse and family issues and will do more role-playing during their training.

In general, local council members have been supportive of FLEC's efforts to divert troubled youth from the county juvenile justice system. Concerns have been raised about duplication of service and method of financing. Some officials have said the program should be paid for on the basis of usage rather than population.

If it were, the dollar amounts would likely be similar. Oswald said, because the larger cities tend to have more youth using the program. "Besides, we have only one year's statistics to go on - and would a city encourage (the police) to send kids to the program if they have to pay on the basis of usage?"

Referrals to the program are council tabled the budget request coming in at twice last year's three times for further considera-rate, according to Oswald. ses range from carrying a concealed weapon to breaking and entering to turning in a false fire alarm.

Offenses vary from one year to another. Last year, offenders were referred for sexual misconduct, felonious assault, possession of alcohol and marijuana, prowling and malicious destruction of property.

Half of the budget comes from grants funneled through FLEC. The other half comes from the five Pointes and Harper Woods, based on population. Grosse Pointe Woods and Harper Woods make the biggest contributions. at $5,995 and $5,194. The Shores contributes $998 and has never used the program.

"As a residential area, they don't even have shoplifting,' Oswald said. "They have no intention of even using the program, but they okayed it before I even said the amount. They were great."

The Constitution and local government

Editor's note: The following essay was written by George S. Blair for The New Federalist Papers and is being reprinted here in observance of the centennial of our Constitution. Blair is professor of government at Claremont Graduate School and the author of "Government at the Grass Roots." According to him, by the time the Constitution was adopted in 1788, Americans already had a long experience of selfgovernment. From the beginning of settlement on the eastern seaboard, they had formed themselves into self-governing communities founded upon written laws. In these local governments, they learned the arts of debate and discussion of public issues and learned to appreciate the value of free argument. This experience at the local level not only prepared them for self-government at the national level, but persuaded them that self-government and good government were one and the same. Blair explores the relationship between local government and the Constitution in this essay.

opular government in the New World was early established in small settlements along the Atlantic seaboard and spread upward, downward and in to the inland communities. Though the names now sound strange, local government had its beginnings in population clusters or land divisions known as manors, shires, hundreds, parishes, gores, ridings, plantations, tenths, liberties and hamlets as well as in the more familiar towns, townships and counties. These units of local government have been part of political life in America for longer than even the 13 original states, and much longer than our national government.

The Constitution does not make explicit provisions for local governments, but implicitly it accepted the prevailing arrangements in the 13 states. This document, in establishing our federal system, recognizes only two tiers of government in the United States, and does not consider the question of how power should be distributed between the states and their subdivisions. This seeming oversight, however, reveals the framers' intent that the creation and supervision of local government was and should remain entirely the concern of the states. Local governments had proven their necessity and desirability in colonial times for holding courts, collecting taxes, organizing the militia and similar purposes.

Even before the adoption of the Constitution in 1788, the federal government had established a direct relation between national policy and local government in the Northwest Ordinances of 1785 and 1787. These laws were enacted by the Continental Congress under the Articles of Confederation as a blueprint for the government of the Northwest Territory. This territory included all of the present states of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin and a portion of Minnesota. Commonly known as the "Land Ordinance," the Ordinance of 1785 is important because it provided for laying out the Northwest Territory into congressional townships by a corps of surveyors under the direction of the Geographer of the United States.

The language of the 1785 Ordinance is clear and specific, providing that "The surveyors...shall proceed to divide the said territory into townships of six miles square, by lines running due north and south, and others crossing these at right angles, as near as may be." This system was used throughout the future settlement of the United States, and the congressional township still remains a unit of government in most midwestern states.

The Ordinance of 1787 outlines the system of territorial and local government for the western lands in greater detail. During the first stage of territorial status, the general government was placed in the hands of a governor, a secretary and judges who were appointed by the Continental Congress. This feature of the act was amended in 1798 to provide for the appointment of these officials by the president by and with the consent of the Senate. The governor was empowered to "appoint such magistrates and other civil officers, in each county and township, as he shall find necessary for the preservation of the peace and good order in the same."

The second stage of development began when the population of the territory reached 5,000 free males of voting age. Powers of legislation passed to a general assembly composed of the governor, a legislative council and a house of representatives with counties and townships serving as the constituent units. The general assembly then prescribed the duties of magistrates and other civil officers.

The 1787 Ordinance also provided for a system of public schools in each township of the western lands, stating "Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." This act also guaranteed the sanctity of private contracts, abolished primogeniture, prohibited slavery and involuntary servitude, and contained a rudimentary statement of human rights.

Civil authority in the Northwest Territory was formally inaugurated on July 15, 1788, and the first county was created 11 days later. Known as Washington County and named for George Washington, it comprised about half the present state of Ohio. The local officers provided for the county included a sheriff, coroner, treasurer, recorder of deeds, probate judge and justices of the county court of quarter sessions and common pleas. Actually, local government had begun in the territory some three months earlier when a group of veteran officers and soldiers of the Revolutionary War settled at the site of Adelphia on April 7, 1788. The community promulgated laws for its governance by nailing them to an oak tree for public inspection and information. This community shortly after rechristened itself Marietta.

Most of the humanitarian provisions of the 1787 Ordinance became part of the Constitution in the first eight amendments, and subsequent Congresses set the course of new states by the provisions prescribed in this important and basic act. Thus the foundations for a direct relationship between the national and loal governments were carefully laid down prior to the drafting of the Constitution itself.

An up-to-date Constitution?

The following essay was written by Glen E. Thurow, associate professor of politics and chairman of the Politics Department at the University of Dallas for The New Federalist Papers. In a preface, he writes that in the Constitution the Founders set down fundamental rules by which we regulate our political life. They were confident that conditions would change and that we would find ways of improving our government.

et us keep our Constitution upto-date. Why should we be bound to the words of people who died a century or two ago? Democracy means that the living majorities of today should rule, not the dead hand of the past." These sentiments are today widely shared, even among Constitutional scholars and judges. And they have led to the opinion that judges should not follow the words and original intentions of the Constitution in deciding whether laws are constitutional, but should rather bring the Constitution up to date by reading into it contemporary understandings of proper democratic procedure.

The United States was the first nation in the history of the world to be founded upon a written constitution. Until recently, this has been a source of national pride. Before the American Revolution, the constitution of a country was considered simply its customary, unwritten way of doing things. An unwritten constitution such as that possessed by England entails obedience to the prevailing customs of the country. Should customs change, the constitution changes.

In contrast, it is of the essence of a written constitution that it entails obedience to words written in the past, regardless of current customs or preferences. Although we may amend the Constitution, so long as the words continue unamended, it is our duty to obey them. In denying that we should be bound to these words, scholars would have us interpret our written Constitution as though it were an unwritten constitution, changing as opinions and customs change.

Why should we be bound to the words of the Constitution written two centuries ago? There is both superficial and a more fundamental answer to this question. The simple answer is that we of the present generation have the right to amend the Constitution. If we do not like it, we can change it.

Although it is difficult to amend the Constitution, it is in fact easier to amend it than it was for the first generation of Americans to establish it. Not only did it take a tremendous political struggle to create the Constitution, but even the formal requirements for ratification were much stricter than are the requirements for amendment. Then it took the unanimous consent of the state ratifying conventions to create a nation of 13 states. Now the Constitution may be changed by a vote of only three-fourths of the states. Were we as determined today to alter the Constitution as those alive in 1787 were to make we could easily do so.

But there is a more important reason why we should be bound to our 200-yearold Constitution. In speaking of democracy as though it were simply the rule of the majority, we forget the difference between this kind of democracy and constitutional democracy. The basic principle of constitutional democracy is the great principle of the Declaration of Independence: that "all men are created equal." This principle means that majorities have no more inherent right to rule minorities than minorities do to rule majorities. Every individual has an equal right to rule himself.

Consequently when a constitutional democratic government is established, the majority does not have the right to rule in its own behalf, but is merely the representative of everyone. In American democracy, the majority rules not because it has a right to pursue its own interests at the expense of others, but because it is thought the form of rule most consistent with man's natural equality and most likely to protect the equal rights of all. In a famous passage of his First Inaugural Address, Thomas Jefferson succinctly expressed this fundamental principle of constitutional democracy:

All, too, will bear in mind this sacred principle, that though the will of the majority is in all cases to prevail, that will, to be rightful, just be reasonable; that the minority possess their equal rights, which equal laws must protect, and to violate which would be oppression.

It is in recognizing that rule by the people is not merely a right but also a duty that constitutional democracy becomes possible. In binding ourselves to a written constitution we recognize that there are limits on what even a majority has the right to do. But because, and only because, these are limitations which we impose upon ourselves in solemn moments of constitutionmaking and which we design to be permanent, we do not become less self-governing by having a constitution but more so. A people that stands by its deliberate and fundamental decision is self-governing; one which allows those decisions to fluctuate without solemn deliberation or to be altered by judicial decision has ceased to govern itself.

To the Editor:

I would like you to know that there is a fine young man from your community who has made a significant impact on the Big Brothers/ Big Sisters program of Mecosta County (Big Rapids) Michigan. The gentleman's name is Mr. Scott McBride.

Scott is a student at Ferris State College and is a leader involved with a springtime student event called "Mock Rock." Mock Rock is a fundraising event that involves students imitating a pop star or group at the Mock Rock concert. The concert is the largest event on campus each year drawing over 6,000 persons.

Scott is involved in the planning and implementation of the event and through his leadership, the concert has drawn praise and support from the college administration and community at large. Other college towns have major problems each spring with student activities such as Mount Pleasant's "end of the world party" or East Lansing's "Cedarfest" that result in arrests of college students. Here in Big Rapids we have a more mature and responsible student activity that this year raised $10,000 for a youth program.

Scott's leadership in this event has made Mock Rock an event that we as an agency are proud to be associated with. Where other students in other college towns become involved with activities that are no more than drunken brawls, Scott has made a major impact on charity. When we read about those other "events," we all wonder what is wrong with college students. I'm pleased to tell you about Mr. Scott McBride as an example of what's right with college students.

Who's the best?

A recent "Best of..." edition of the Metro Times, a Detroit weekly newspaper, named Grosse Pointe Park as the "best speed trap," in metropolitan De-

Park Director of Public Safety Richard Caretti discussed traffic enforcement at the Monday night city council meeting. He told the council that he had received several complaints from residents who said Park officers should be out catching criminals, not writing speeding tickets.

Caretti disagreed, and said that if residents are complaining about getting speeding tickets, this proves that the officers are taking care of traffic enforcement. He showed the copy of the Metro Times as evidence of the strong enforcement.

We doubt whether the statistics would prove the Metro Times claim. The Woods Department of Public Safety is known for its strict traffic enforcement just about anyone, espe cially Director Jack Patterson.

And if complaints are an indication of strict enforcement, then Farms Police Chief Robert Ferber should be applauded for the efforts of his city's Traffic Bureau, which wrote hundreds of tickets, so much so, that even Farms Municipal Judge Peter O'Rourke complained.

Too late for this bird

A protected and somewhat rare black-crowned night heron found at Rivard near Kercheval, in the City last week by Public Safety Officer Francis Thibideau and Lt. Jerry Mehl had to be euthanized.

The bird, which had suffered a broken wing and was severely dehydrated, was taken to the Belle Isle Nature Center by the officers.

Mehl said the heron looked like a seagull with a black stripe down its head and back.

Laura Fabbri-Tucker, senior naturalist at the nature center, said that the black-crowned night heron is a migratory species and protected under state and federal law. It is often found near the water's edge, wading. It feeds on fish, frogs and other aquatic life. It's gray and black and has long white feathers coming from the black areas. "It is a very pretty bird," she said. "If it would be anywhere in the metro area, I would expect to find it around the Grosse Pointes.

The bird was beyond saving and had to be put to sleep. There are others in the area, so keep an eye out and you might spot a relative.

Is there a sign on my back?

Margie Reins Smith, Grosse Pointe News staff writer and mother of three, was walking into Perry Drugs last week at the same time a small boy loaded down with a bag of empty bottles was walking in.

As the boy tried to maneuver through the doorway, one of the bottles fell from the back and shattered on the cement floor.

"The boy looked down at the bottle, then looked up at me and said, 'Will you clean that up for me,' " Margie reported.

Margie wanted to know if there was a sign on her back which stated she was a housewife. We replied that there was not, but asked if she heeded the boy's plea. "No!" she said adamantly. "I just picked up one of the bigger pieces, well, yes, well, yes, I guess I did clean it up.'

We guess the sign is there.

State lawmakers say yes to Michigan

By John Kelly State Senator

With $2.35 million in fiscal 1987 funding for the YES M!CH!GAN program restored by the Legislature last month, ads promoting the benefits of vacationing in Michigan should be back on the air as the summer travel season shifts into high gear. The money, included in a $182 million supplemental appropriations bill, was added to a $7.5 million YES M!CH!GAN budget previously adopted for 1987 by the Legislature.

The governor had initially requested $10.3 million for the program, the same amount that was allocated in fiscal 1986. But the Legislature reduced funding to $7.5 million following complaints from some members that the program was being used by the governor to promote his re-election, as well as to boost Michigan. The result was, money for radio and television ads promot-May, just as the summer tourist season began.

Wisely, the Legislature was able to set politics aside and approlonged the dispute would have meant jeopardizing the livfor economic survival. If this seems far-fetched, a simple look at state tourist industry figures should provide ample evidence to convince even the most hardened skeptic.

Travelers spent a record $13.3 billion in the state last year making tourism the state's second largest industry, according to the state Department of Commerce. About 43 percent of the travelers were Michigan residents. The rest were people from other states, even other coun-

Last year alone, tourism provided jobs for about 300,000 Michigan residents. Recently, the Covernor's Task Force on the Future of Tourism unveiled a plan to create a $20 billion state tourism industry employing 450,000 workers by 1992.

Clearly, this goal would remain out of reach if state lawmakers were to continue quibbling over money for the promotion of Michigan. A positive sign that this battle appears ing Michigan travel dried up in behind us is the recent adoption of an $11 million YES M!CH!GAN budget for fiscal 1988. That amount represents a $1.2 million increase over the prove the additional funding to current year and is only continue the program. To have $300,000 below the amount requested. With competition for tourist dollars heating up, this elihoods of thousands of state action comes none too soon to residents who depend on tourism ensure Michigan a place on travelers' maps.

Already, cities like Chicago and Toronto are aggressively promoting tourism. Recently, they were joined by Ohio, which launched "Take A Break" campaign, targeted at residents of Detroit, Chicago, Indianapolis, Toronto, Pittsburgh, Buffalo and Louisville. The goal of Ohio campaign is to promote the state as a two-to-four day getaway destin-

While it's difficult to believe tourists would find the Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio, more attractive than Michigan's Sleeping Bear Dunes or Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore, it's conceivable Ohio could get more visitors simply by attracting more public attention. It is this sort of reaction our YES M!CH!GAN dollars will attempt to couteract.

While I agree the Legislature must constantly seek ways to spend the state's money more effectively, focusing our debate on the YES M!CH!GAN program is inappropriate. This program represents a mere fraction of the state's $6 billion general fund budget, not enough to even dent most of our other program budgets. Also, its rewards far exceed the $10 to $11 million being spent on it. As lawmakers, we would be foolish to say "no" to a program that so emphatically says "yes" to the people and businesses of Michigan.

Lawsuit seems frivolous

To the Editor:

I feel that the controversy over the Sanders building in the Village is a foolish dispute. As I see it, the owner of the building, Judith Agley, has the right to do whatever she wishes with it. Furthermore, Mr. Agley and his associates have the right to decide what companies can sell in his F&M stores.

I am sure that many people sympathize with Sanders because they are like an institution in the Village, but the facts still side with the owner. The lawsuit seems frivolous. Sanders is making a big deal out of something that could be resolved quite easily.

> Carrie Martin Grosse Pointe Farms

My heart belongs to the underdog

To the Editor:

I read with interest your story about F & M Distributors attempt to remove Sanders from the Village. Apparently Judith Agley of Grosse Point and/or her husband Randolph, who happens to be the founder and part owner of F & M Distributors, purchased a building leased to Sanders Inc. until October 1988. Mrs. Agley wanted to place a women's clothing boutique in the building. Much to their dismay the prior lease agreement was valid and binding. Mrs. Agley now sells clothing from her house or yacht, the Entrepreneur.

Sanders has declined to vacate the premises until the expiration of the lease. In September of 1986, F & M Distributors terminated the marketing of Sander's product lines in their 34 stores allegedly causing considerable loss of revenue ($500.000) and potential harm to a struggling company. One month earlier Sanders was informed that its lease agreement would be terminated at a Lincoln Park Mall of which Randolph Agley is part owner.

This J. R. Ewing tactic would no doubt bring praise from fellow entrepreneurs of Grosse Pointe, "If you play with the big boys you are bound to get bruises." But my heart and no doubt palate, belong to the underdog, Fred Sanders Company. I suspect that if this matter ever gets to a Wayne County jury their sentiments might be the same. Perhaps then Sanders may pantomime a late famous actor's phrase, "How sweet it is!"

If the reported facts in this case are true, F & M's behavior on behalf of the Agleys makes me angry. It seems unethical and self centered. No doubt some would call this "leverage," but to me it suggests extortion for personal gain. It is this illfound corporate behavior that may ultimately force Fred Sanders & Company into financial difficulties and possibly out of business.

The City of Detroit cannot afford to lose another business. Many jobs, hopes and dreams might be lost ironically not because of confectionary competition but due to a woman, her dress shop and a husband who controls or influences strategic marketing avenues.

My family would miss Sanders. How about you?

I wish you could have met Chick

July 6, 1987 I've just left Cottage Hospital. I'm sitting in the parking lot in my car, and can't make myself start the engine and drive away. A great sadness has been building within me and today I am overcome. It's the sadness of saying goodbye for the last time. The sadness of looking back over the years at a friendship and saying, "It wasn't enough time. I wish I'd spent more with him." A sadness that not enough people had the opportunity to be touched by a truly good and nice person, nor he to be touched by them. I had first heard that my friend Chick was very ill a couple of months ago and indeed had cancer. I remember the phone call, another friend letting me know. Neither of us knowing what to say. We said nothing. A feeling of disbelief, shock and numbness accompanied that call. I certainly didn't know what to say to Chick, so I said nothing. My wife stumbled through a call wrapped in love, but did not do much better. He'd been in the hospital for what was thought to be a pinched nerve when, after tests, it was learned that he was gravely ill.

I hadn't known this. I hadn't seen Chick for a few months. The last time I had. it was to stop on the street, and exchange how are you's, what's new, tell a story or two, laugh it up, agree that the last barbecue was great and vow to get together again soon. When you saw Chick, you always left with a smile on your face.

Anyone who knew Chick could count on his enjoying a ballgame. Yukking it up with friends, or food, preferably all of these simultaneously. Among Chick's friends, his exploits as coach of the old Union Street Bar baseball team, his prowess with a knife and fork and his unique ability to befriend people and to have people befriend him are legendary.

One of Chick's friends said something about him that is quite a tribute. He said, "In all of the years I have known Chick, and that goes back many, many years, I've never met anyone who didn't like him." Chick was not blessed with the physique of an athlete although he loved sports, nor was he the prototype of a Hollywood leading man. To the best of my knowledge, he hadn't yet made any earthshattering contributions to science or the arts. He never ran for office or had his picture on the front page. But he had an inner grace and beauty that transcended awards, records and notoriety. Chick loved people, liked to be with them, liked to laugh with them, and to give his friendship to them. That he did those things with and for so many people is truly a great gift and an undying legacy.

Why am I writing this story? Why do I want you to read it? First, to possibly prevent one or more of you feeling the sadness and regret I feel for not taking more time with someone. For putting off doing something with someone because there is always tomorrow. I realize right now more than ever that tomorrow brings no guarantees. Secondly, I wanted you to know who Chick Jordan was. He had hundreds of friends, more than most of us could ever hope for, but was capable of so many more. It wasn't that he had friends, it was him being your friend that was really important. His ability to make you feel good and happy. I wanted people to indeed know that there was a special man who lived here. A man full of life, full of happiness and full of love that too few of us had really the luck of knowing.

I wanted to offer my friend a tribute because he no longer had the time to wait for some group or formal organization to recognize and honor him so. I believe Chick Jordan to be a good man among men and deserved someone telling that it was the last time I talked with Chick. I saw him today, but we didn't speak - he was too ill and weak. I wish you all could have met Chick, then you'd feel like I and his many friends and family do. I wish you all would ask about Chick sometime, then you'd begin to know some of what we know. And I wish that he could have stayed with us

A few months ago on the street, that chance meeting

Bob Mowbray Editor's note: Charles Jordan died July 6. He was 39.

She worked for McGraw-Hill in Detroit as a reporter and a writer for a while, then got married and had three babies within two years.

"I did mother things for seven years," she said. "I lived in Bloomfield Hills and had the perfect American dream - the perfect husband, perfect house, perfect children, even the perfect dog - a springer spaniel named Muffin. I was busy with AAUW, sorority, church, golf, bridge. I was enjoying it all, but I felt like my brain was turning into mashed potatoes.

She went to the Detroit Free Press and asked for a writing job. Instead, she was offered some freelance assignments.

In 1964, she began working full time at the Free Press in the women's section, writing weddings and engagements and soft features. "I didn't know anything about journalism jargon. I remember the editor yelling across the room, 'Hey Mc-Whirter, what's your slug?"' she said. "I got up and walked across the room and whispered, 'What's

You can learn journalistic terms and journalistic techniques very quickly, she said, "but you have to know how to think. You have to have a logical mind so you can identify the correct questions to ask. You have to have a cultural and a historical and a philosophical perspective."

McWhirter moved around the Free Press a lot — to the city room to write hard news - to investigative reporting - to suburban editor/assistant city editor - to chief assistant city editor to entertainment editor. "I wanted to be city editor. But they had one who was male and they'd never had a female city editor. Besides, he was younger and the top management was pleased with his work. I saw that job was closed to me.

"I wanted to quit, but Kurt Luedtke (former executive editor of the Free Press) talked me out of it. He offered me a job as assistant sports editor. I said no. Then I did automotive coverage and a once-a-week column on the advertising industry in Detroit."

When she began getting restless again, McWhirter went to way since 1964 when she began

She said she's generously compensated. She has been sent on some interesting assignments to Monte Carlo for the Grand Prix - to Prince Charles and Princess Di's wedding - to the America's Cup race in Australia. She doesn't have to go in to the office, but instead writes on a computer at home. She said she's still enjoying the fourtimes-a-week challenge.

"Yes, I run out of ideas," she said. She doesn't have any columns tucked away in a drawer for a day when her mind turns blank. "I write for the next deadline. It's more stressful for me, but it works better because they're timely. I do keep a folder full of ideas and clippings. That's my security blanket. I write two to three days ahead."

Several columns stand out in her mind as ones she's especially proud of. "I kept looking for a response from the Oriental community when the Vincent Chin case was news. I saw nothing. In another column she wrote about Detroit's decision to close some public libraries because of lack of funds. "I love libraries. I said something like 'My God, Detroit, grow up.' Brochure for women who drink

"For Women Who Drink..." a free booklet designed to help a woman find out if she has a drinking problem, can be obtained from Brighton Hospital, which has specialized in treating chemical dependence for more than 37 years. According to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, 40 years ago most women in America did not drink. Today more than 60 percent of adult women drink, and most do so with no apparent difficulties. But research shows that approximately one-third of Americans who have drinking problems are women. "For Women Who Drink. . . " includes a list of 27 questions that help a woman determine whether or not she is experiencing problems related to alcohol use. It also provides helpful information on treatment options and on such self-help groups as Alcoholics Anonymous. Important information is included for women who are pregnant or planning to become pregnant.

For a free copy of the booklet, contact Brighton Hospital's Community Relations Department at 227-1211, ext. 276, or write the hospital at 12851 East Grand River, Brighton, Mich. 48116.

The Grosse Pointe Historical Society presented the Farms city council with a proposed historical preservation ordinance, now under consideration by the Farms Mayor's Advisory Council.

The society is optimistic that any future development of the remaining large estates in the Grosse Pointes will include the preservation of the most significant homes and the appropriate utilization of grounds and out-buildings.

Believing that this approach will not only preserve the community's heritage, the society feels it will aid in the retention of the beauty of the Pointes and may present a housing opportunity not presently being offered.

"We see a place in our community for condominium units that can be easily maintained and secured by seasonal residents and those wishing to scale down in housing size and maintenance," according to a press release issued by the society.

By subdividing a large home and preserving the house and grounds, the group

Preservation urged feels that the environment can be maintained and a unique housing alternative can be offered. "This has been done successfully in Boston, Long Island, Philadelphia and Evanston, and other places,' according to the release.

Economically rewarding alternatives are available to those considering demolition and subdividing estate property, the society believes.

"We would be pleased to share the information we have on re-use of large homes with any interested parties,' the press release stated. "We also have information on the re-use of large homes with any interested parties. We also have information on the re-use of school buildings, nomination of sites to the National and State Register of Historic Places, rehabilitating old houses, funding opportunities and other aspects of preservation."

Hugo Higbie said if the property is subdivided, the plan is to subdivide the property under exisiting ordinances, not the proposed ordinance Rogers submitted to the city council July 20.

At that meeting Rogers told the city council that the city should act on his proposal as soon as possible, continue to enforce the moratorium and "not let any new developments slip through the cracks.'

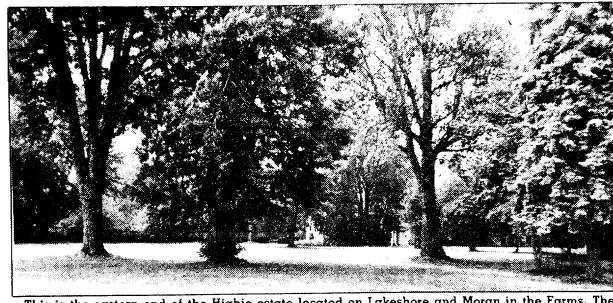

The matter of which ordinance the new subdivision, if approved, would fall under would, therefore, likely be a topic of significant discussion between the developers and the city.

Hugo Higbie said there is no plan to demolish the existing mansion.

"I think there is a great deal of value in that home," Higbie said. "It is one of the last fine lakefront homes available of a liveable size. It is located on probably the highest piece of land in the Grosse Pointes. Because of the value of the home, I'd not like to see it demolished."

He added there is a possibility that one of the family members might use the home as a resi-

Higbie stressed that the plans that have been submitted are not the final plans, and the whole question is under study.

The Harley G. Higbie estate is included in "The Buildings of Detroit," a book on local architecture written by W. Hawkins Ferry, a Grosse Pointer.

According to the book, the Higbie house was built in 1926 by designer George D. Mason.

Fire damages Yorktown home

Woods firefighters found the family room of the Catalfio residence on Yorktown engulfed in flames with heavy black smoke pouring out of the basement when they arrived at the scene Saturday evening, July 25, according to officials.

Venting itself through a large picture window, the fire in the family room was already well started when firemen arrived at the scene shortly before 7 p.m. Back-up units from Grosse Pointe Shores and Harper Woods also responded to the threealarm blaze.

The south wall of the family room was heavily involved, officials said, and a second fire had erupted in the basement.

Despite thick black smoke and outdoor temperatures in the high 80s, there were no reported injuries to firefighters. Family members were able to escape safely.

The duct work acted like a vacuum, sucking flames and possibly embers into the basement, which ignited some papers and started the second fire.

Firefighters were able to bring the family room fire under control in under 10 minutes, but they still had to battle the smoke in the basement to extinguish that blaze.

'The post-fire investigation has revealed that the fire started near the south wall of the family room adjacent to a couch and some electronic equipment," Patterson said. "The cause of the fire is still under investigation."

The Michigan Lottery is constantly searching for ways to make its games more appealing to players. In the case of instant games, the Lottery occasionally runs bonus promotions, providing players with another chance to win. The following tells more about the games and the promotions calls. At one location there was no answer and the resident needed our assistance."

Generally, entry forms are sent to a special address along with non-winning tickets. Or, entries can be hand-delivered to any of the Lottery's seven regional offices. The Lottery then conducts random drawings to select the sweepstakes winners.

Woods crime prevention Officer Sally Beghin said this last incident points to the need for this kind of program.

"When we first implemented Compute-A-Care, there was a lot of interest," she said. "It has started to taper off, but maybe someone will read this and see that the program works."

The way the system operates is that the service recipient tells police about what time of day he would like to be called. An application is filled out and additional information is collected, such as medical history, medications, allergies, house key location, physician name and family phone numbers.

Calls are made once a day within the selected time slot. The subscriber need only pick up the phone, listen to the recorded message and then hang up. If the line is busy or no one responds, two calls are attempted at 15-minute intervals. After three attempts with no response, a police officer is sent to the home.

For further information on the service, call the Woods Public Safety Department at 343-2410.

Youths arrested

Four Park 16-year-olds and one 17-year-old were arrested last week after being stopped in Detroit by Park police in connection with several tire slashings in the St. Paul/Nottingham area.

The youths were stopped earlier in the night for questioning by a Park officer. After asking for an identification check and sending them on their way, a call came over the air for the vehicle, wanted in connection with the tire slashing.

Park police made a search of the area, and spotted the car on Outer Drive in Detroit. The car was pulled over. Police found two switchblades in the vehicle.

Two break-ins

Two break-ins were reported in the Park last week, resulting in about $400 in losses.

The first incident was reported Sunday, July 19, when someone entered a Bishop Road home, reportedly through an unlocked door. A purse containing $360 was taken from a counter sometime between midnight and 11

Gravton resident reported that his wallet was taken from the kitchen table July 20 while the owner was in the next room. The incident occurred sometime between 8 and 9:30 p.m.

Typewriter, TV stolen

A typewriter and a color television were stolen from a Stanhope Road home in the Woods sometime between July 11 and July 21.

Woods public safety officers reported that a search of the entire home was made. Burnt matches were found in nearly every room, indicating the perpetrators had used them to see at night.

Burglary attempted

Three break-in attempts at a home on the 21000 block of Goethe in the Woods were made early Sunday morning, July 26, but the would-be thief was unsuccessful.

The resident told police he heard glass breaking shortly after midnight Sunday morning, but thought the noise was coming from the street and went back to sleep.

Officers found pry marks on a door wall window, a broken outer basement window, and a cut screen and broken window on a door to an attached garage. Apparently all three break-in attempts failed. There was no sign of entry.

Police found a pry bar and pair of gloves and are holding them as evidence. There are no suspects at the present time.

An application for a cluster devlopment shall not be approved by the City Council if:

- ment would be contrary to the health, safety and general welfare of the developed and established residential areas in the immediate vicinity; or

Such wall shall not extend into the required fron yard setback nor be placed closer than five (5) feet from the side lot line.

Discarded household goods can be repaired, recycled

By Margie Reins Smith Staff Writer

August is a time to clean closets, basements and attics — time to sift through children's outgrown clothes before back-toschool shopping begins in ear-

But what can you do with the outgrown stuff? You can't trash the patent leather dress-up shoes that were worn only three times. What about the too-small shorts and the too-short jeans and the too-tight shirts? In fact, what can you do with an old black and white TV set? A couple of dozen paperback romance novels? A typewriter that needs some minor repairs? Maternity clothes, a crib, a toy box, Halloween costumes worn once, a battered BMX bike, a prom dress. How about a broken refrigerator? A stack of bricks left over from your patio project? An empty aquarium? A sleeping bag with a broken zipper?

Grosse Pointers who are looking for places to donate furniture, appliances and clothing can direct their donations to an organization whose goals they support. Some agencies will even send a truck to pick up the items.

"Tell the ladies of Grosse Pointe that we don't pick up husbands," said Stanley Wegrzynowicz, director of stores for the Society of St. Vincent De-Paul in the Archdiocese of De-

Patrick Adamcik, executive secretary of the same organization, said the society provides food, clothing, furniture and some financial aid for families that need it. In 1986, he said, they provided $830,000 worth of items to 9,309 families in southeastern Michigan. They gave away, free, more than 3,500 beds, 4,300 orders for furniture and appliances and more than 4,900 clothing orders.

St. Vincent started as an agency to help people with emergency needs and it has grown to include 14 resale stores where donated items are sold or given away. The stores also provide employment for about 100 people, and any surplus money from the stores' operations is put toward a children's camp and 11 emergency food depots. "We're one of the largest church network groups in the Detroit area. We're bigger than the Salvation Army or the Goodfellows," Adamcik said.

The society is made up predominately of Catholic members, but other denominations are involved. Their purpose, said Wegrzynowicz, is simply, "to help the needy - whoever they may

The Society of St. Vincent DePaul accepts anything — furniture, large and small appliances, beds, matresses and clothes. They will do simple, minor repairs on furniture and appliances before recycling the items. Call 567-1910 to arrange for a truck to pick up your discards. A truck can usually get to your home within a week.

Kym Kaye, director of public relations for Goodwill Industries, said their organization is the product of a merger of the League for the Handicapped and Goodwill Industries. Its purpose is to give people with physical, mental and social disabilities the opportunity to live as independently as possible and to obtain employment. Only 2 percent of the organization's funding comes from its thrift store operations. Goodwill is better known for its sheltered employment opportunities, job skills training, job placement service and mental health programs. "We do $6,000 a year in sales subcontract manufacturing," Kaye said. "We make home energy analysis kits for Detroit Edison and other utilities, license plates, and lots of industrial sewing contracts."

Kaye said Goodwill suspended pick-up service of donated goods 10 years ago because it wasn't cost-effective. Instead, they have a number of drop-off centers in the metropolitan area. They will have a Goodwill trailer parked at the Grosse Pointe War Memorial for two weeks, Mondays through Fridays, Aug. 24-Sept.4, with an attendant to help people unload their donations.

Goodwill accepts clean, useable items and is looking for good furniture, clothing and housewares. They will not accept mattresses, large appliances, building materials or car parts. Kaye said that the Junior Group of Goodwill Industries, the fundraising arm of the organization, is looking for antiques and estate items for its annual antique show and sale at the Michigan State Fairgrounds in November. Call Claude Sheridan to arrange pick-up of antiques: 964-3900, ext. 350, Mondays, Wednesdays or Fridays. For information about dropping off ordinary items, call 777-4410.

The fund-raising arm for the Military Order of the Purple Heart actively solicits donations of resaleable items by telephone. Katherine Kelly, managing director, said the organization will pick up any useable items except large appliances or console TVs. They resell the items to a profit-making organization called Veterans Thrift Stores, which resells things - as is - in large print and Braille. We have Value Village stores. There are six in the Detroit area.

Kelly said the Purple Heart Foundation is a public service organization for veterans. They operate an information hotline with tapes on different subjects for veterans - such as where to tions and referrals. They take on get benefits, how to make claims, how to apply for burial benefits, VA home loans, disability compensations, and so on.

Purple Heart has a route schedule for trucks, and employs 20 drivers, an office staff of five, and 150 phone solicitors for the area serving Wayne, Macomb and Oakland counties. If someone calls for a pick-up, Kelly said, they may not be able to pick up the items until the truck is in the area.

The American Council of the Blind, a national consumer advocacy organization, has 15 resale stores in the midwest — three in the Detroit area. They also solicit donations by phone and by word of mouth. They'll take any kind of donations, but most often deal with used clothing, shoes, appliances and toys. Donated clothing is sorted, repaired and cleaned, if necessary, before it's resold.

"We once accepted a large motor yacht," said Roberta Douglas, director of development. "Income from our stores supports the programs and services of the council. We offer information and referral for sighted and blind people about aids for the blind, medical questions, scholarships, benefit programs, sources for reading materials in cassette, information about anything and everything concerning blindness and low vision.'

Douglas said the organization also provides free legal consulta-a few precedent-setting cases, they provide scholarships in academic and vocational schools, and they publish a bi-monthly magazine, which is free and is available on cassette, in Braille and in large print. Douglas said the council is also involved with legislative monitoring. "We go beyond lobbying, because we work with federal agencies on legislation and regulations for blind and vision-impaired. The Salvation Army also operates 16 retail stores in the greater Detroit area and raises a few million dollars a year, according to Maj. John Werner, assistant administrator for the Salvation Army Adult Rehabilitation Center. He said the donated items are a way to raise money to support the army's program and is their only source of funds. "We have no federal, no state, no United Foundation funding," he said.

Werner said the 16 stores employ 160 people. Approximately 170 of the army's clients also work in the stores while they're recovering. Clients are alcoholics, homeless, drug addicts and parolees. "They can work in our stores while receiving lodging, therapy and food — and they're $\,$ learning what it is to get up, go to work, and handle daily problems. They receive a small gratuity for their work while we take care of their physical needs."

The Salvation Army has 30

trucks and will pick up anything. Donations are taken to one of two warehouses in Detroit, unloaded, inspected to determine if they need any repairs. They're either sent to a store to be sold or to a specialized repair

The organization is looking for furniture, especially solid wood pieces that need minimal repairs, large appliances that are in working order, and small appliances that need only minor repairs. They do not accept pianos or organs because they're too heavy to transport. For pick up, call 965-7760. Werner said the trucks are about two weeks behind in pick-ups.

Wegrzynowicz, of St. Vincent DePaul, said two items stand out in his mind as the most bizarre ever donated. "Someone gave us a pony once. We sent it to the children's summer camp. Another person donated a 250pound hog. It was slaughtered and donated to a food bank.'

Student painter putting the dropcloth on the competition

By Peter A. Salinas Staff Writer

She's living like a college student. Two lawn-type chairs adorn the nearly naked front room of the rental house. The most important equipment is close at hand - an inexpensive stereo, the tapes, a small black and white portable television and an electronic slide rule calculator.

This house, however, is in the midst of transition. It is slowly becoming a freshly spackled, primed and painted dwelling. That's because Shelly Erholtz, franchise owner of Triple A Student Painters Ltd., has bartered her talents in exchange for a summer's use of the home.

Erholtz, a student at Hillsdale College, has been operating the company in the area since early June. Now after about 20 jobs later, her three crews of painters have earned good summer wages, and she has already earned more than enough to pay for a couple of semesters of col-coverage, handles all bookkeeping and payroll and even provides an avenue for discount materials.

At 21, she has youthful energy, soft blue eyes and blond hair highlighted with a white oll-based primer.

Erholtz provides her own transportation and pays for onetime cost items, such as ladders, rollers and brushes.

Though she runs the business. she is almost an employee of the firm. She doesn't sign the payroll checks — they come from the company's Mount Clemens office. She does the hiring and the firing and determines salaries for the painters, mostly young college or high school students. Salaries range from $5 to $7 an hour for her employees, and the company gets 22 percent of the franchise's gross proceeds.

"At first they give you a thick manual," Erholtz said. "It is a painter's bible. It tells you how to estimate a job, explains all kinds of painting problems and even tells you about employee and customer relations."

After studying the detailed manual for several weeks, a group of five prospective managers from Hillsdale College, where Erholtz is a junior, were flown to Toronto in January for additional training. They were tested on the manual's information and did role-playing in dealing with customers, estimating and handling employees.

"It was a crash course in busi-

Erholtz said she had little full workmen's compensation ness," Erholtz said. "We learned about handling payroll and selecting the right employees.'

Two of the three foremen for her 14-person crew are college students who live in Grosse Pointe. John Coluni of the City and Richard Jones of the Farms, both 21, are earning money toward their college tuitions. Both have had almost five years of painting experience for other companies, and are happy with the kind of operation Student Painters and Erholtz are run-

"I've been painting for five years," Coluni said. "It is good work and easy money,"

Jones said while he is not earning quite as much as he has made with other painting companies, he more than makes up for it because Erholtz' franchise is for the five Grosse Pointes only, and he doesn't have to drive a long distance to get to a

"We go home for lunch a lot," Jones added.

Erholtz said that the monetary benefits for her are very good, but the business experience and dealing with people surpasses the financial rewards.

Auto industry takes back seat in job market uncontested leader in opportunities for Wayne State University graduates, has taken a back seat to the service sector for the first time in recent years.

In making this observation, John Crusoe, director of Placement Services at Wayne State, pointed out: "This is a major sign in not only the changing strengths of the job market, but the entire national economy.'

Crusoe says the manufacturing related jobs have given way to the service sector of the economy. Engineers aren't in demand the way they used to be, he notes, with jobs like sales managers, bumping them out of popularity.

Checking the recruiting scoreboard at the WSU Placement Office, Crusoe notes that the "Big Three automakers might more aptly be temporarily called the "Little Three" in terms of job recruiting on campus. "In fact," he says, "General Motors won't be recruiting at all this fall and employment needs at Ford and Chrysler appear to be way down.

The hot names in the recruiting field these days are such staid accounting and consulting firms like Touche Ross & Co., Arthur Andersen, and Plante and Moran. Crusoe says more than 500 recruiters from all professional walks of life visit the WSU campus each year. But that trend is changing too. Innovative job fairs where employers can host one huge recruiting program in one place are becoming increasingly in vogue this year mostly for economic reasons and as a better and more efficient drawing card for collegiate iob seekers.

The first such omnibus affair in WSU history will be held March 25, 1988 in cooperation with Eastern Michigan Univer-

The auto job market, once the sity on Oakland Community College's Orchard Ridge campus. The first Michigan Collegiate Job Fair is targeted for 200 employers and upwards of 2,000 Michigan graduate job seekers.

Right now, Crusoe says business administration graduates are having the best luck finding jobs. Other high demand fields include nursing, pharmacy and allied health professions. Generally speaking, he says engineers and others involved in the manufacturing sector of industry are limping along, virtually moving towards last place in terms of job prospects.

Recapping the recruiting "tote board," Crusoe reports that the shining stars in the line-up are business and liberal arts majors (primarily service sector employment) and their outlook remains good. He estimates that recruiting for business jobs has jumped 30 percent over the past two years, with a staggering 81 percent gain in recruiting for liberal arts graduates. In contrast, he notes, engineering recruiting has slumped 47 percent in the same time period.

Looking to the future, Crusoe sees little change in the job mix of opportunities. He feels we're becoming more and more of a service-oriented economy and doesn't expect the manufacturing sector to soon regain its first place status in the job market.

His advice to students planning a career? Go where the action is in such fields as marketing, management, selling and merchandising. If you're determined to be an engineer, he warns the competition for the reduced jobs in that field will be fierce and maintains that auto industry recruiting may never regain the front seat position it once enjoyed on college cam-

Woods Presbyterian Church reaches midlife; sets future goals

Staff Writer

This is the third in an occasional series on the churches of Grosse Pointe.

Grosse Pointe Woods Presbyterian Church was born in Mason Elementary School on Palm Sunday, 1937. It was called Lochmoor Sunday School and counted 138 people in attendance at that first Sunday morning worship service.

This year, 1987, is the church's 50th, and just like people marking their first half-century on earth, the Woods church is having a midlife crisis.

those who have suffered a loss, and to visit those who can't get out.

Back in 1937, there were no churches at all in the village of Lochmoor, according to Lillian Witherell, one of 123 charter members of the church. "The two closest churches were St. Joan of Arc, a Catholic church in St. Clair Shores, and Grosse Pointe Memorial Church, a Presbyterian church in Grosse Pointe Farms." Witherell was present at the birth of Woods Presbyterian Church. For the first few years, services were attended by people of all Protestant denominations in the

The Rev. Jack T. Ziegler, the fifth senior pastor at Grosse Pointe Woods Presbyterian Church, said he hopes the church is perceived as one that is keeping up with the times. The church, he said, "is keeping its fingers on the pulse of the community and will respond with innovation, imagination and creativity."

fifth full-time pastor of the church, said, "I think churches go through growth periods just like people. This church has been through several stages. It began - a young church - going great guns - with lots of members and lots of vitality. Now I see it as a middle-aged church with all the problems and possibilities of middle age. This church is sitting back and mying, 'Where are we? Who are we? What is the community now and how can we meet their needs?"

Ziegler said Woods Presbyterian Church, like a person in midlife, "has enough youth (to be energetic and enthusiastic) - and also has the experience and maturity which - if properly focused - offers possibilities for all sorts of things.'

Ziegler came to Grosse Pointe from central New York state and has been on the job all of two months. "I see my role as being the one to pull everyone together and give strong, solid direction to where this church will go in the future. Primarily, this will be worship experiences. The other things, such as educational and social activities, are spin-offs.

The Woods Church has had a unique commitment to senior citizens in the Grosse Pointe community for more than 10 years. Diane Heavner, director of the church's Senior Adults' Ministry, said, "Grosse Pointe is a community of older people and needs a church that cares about them." Heavner began the Food and Friendship program in 1976, when it was one of the first programs of its kind for seniors.

Neighborhood Open House. another activity for seniors, began in the '40s. Heavner said the program currently attracts about 40 to 50 members to the monthly midday meetnigs. The group gathers for a catered meal, then has either a speaker, entertainment or a trip. "The food is only part of it." said Pat Bakeman, director of Christian Education. "The interaction -- the caring for one another - is a joy to behold.

The goals of the Senior Adults' Ministry, according to Heavner, are to encourage older people to keep active, to help those who need home care, to area - Methodists, Baptists, Lutherans, Congregationalists, Presbyterians and more.

"The charter members represented 16 different denominations," said Audrey Marr, another charter member.

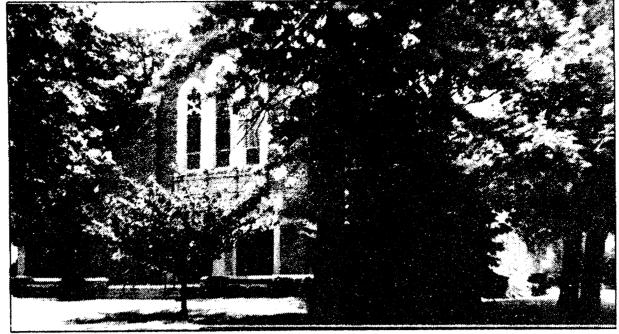

"Grosse Pointe Memorial Church was very supportive and helped us during those years," Witherell said. They helped pay the rent for the use of Mason School, they donate als for the tiny five-member choir, they donated Sunday school materials and a large chunk of money for the new building. The fledgling group voted to affiliate with the Presbyterian denomination in May 1939, and had raised enough money to complete their church building in 1948. The building, at 19950 Mack Ave., sits on land that was donated by Grosse Pointe Memorial Church members, Dr. and Mrs. H.N. Torrey.

During the early years, the number of youthful church families rapidly doubled and tripled. The congregation regularly grew out of their church building and seemed forever to be embarking on yet another fund-raising campaign to enlarge the facilities. A church office and minister's study were added in 1949. The manse was built in 1950. The education building's first floor was completed in 1951; the second floor in 1953. A lounge, chapel and recreation room were added in 1956, and the church's nave was enlarged in 1960.

Marr remembers the first rummage sale - now an annual sale that is well-known in the community. "Nobody had heard of a rummage sale in 1941," she said. "We thought it would be a good way to raise money for our new building. We rented a hall and had a one-day sale of items we collected from members. This October will be our 46th consecutive rummage Witherell remembers the first rummage sale. "Our church women went up and down Lakeshore Road asking for donations. We made $100 profit and we were thrilled.'

Audrey Marr said they didn't really make $100. "It was not quite $100. We got our husbands to throw in the

In addition, the church is home for a Christian preschool and for the Mother's Day Out program, a one-daya-week babysitting service for preschoolers.

Bakeman said the church has seen a cycle completed. "The kids (of the founders of the church) have grown up. They have stayed in the area. Now I see younger families moving in. We notice more young families that weren't around five or six years ago. Now we see more inter-generational activities.'

Witherell agrees that the Woods Presbyterian church could be viewed as a church in midlife. It's a church that is keeping up up with the times, however, she said. "They're going to show an AIDS video soon. This is something we need desperately. I'm glad our church is taking the lead in this matter. Some people in my age bracket say we don't have to worry about such things, but I think it affects us all.'

Ziegler said Woods Presbyterian Church will soon begin holding three worship services. In addition to the usual 9 a.m. and 11 a.m. Sunday services, the church will offer an alternative - a Saturday evening service at

Communational is helping fight an old foe

By Peggy O'Connor Feature Editor

ack in the late 1950s and early 1960s, it took a lot of showmanship to get Americans to bring their children out for the Sabin oral polio vaccine. Certain Sundays were set aside for public polio immunizations to be held in an entertaining, circus-like atmosphere. The "Sabin Sundays" were effective, as polio was rendered all but forgotten in the United States and other highlydeveloped nations.

That same approach is being used today in countries throughout the world because polio is still a very real threat to children in many countries.

According to world health authorities, 75 children die each day from the highly contagious viral disease, poliomyelitis. An estimated 275,000 children worldwide will contract the disease each year - and that figure reflects only reported cases.

Of the 120 million children born in the world each year, only 20 million are vaccinated against polio. Some 60 million children receive no vaccine of any kind, so immunizing the world's children against what has become a rampant disease seems a monumental task. But it is one which Rotary International has undertaken.

Rotary International has developed a program called Polio-Plus which will provide polio vaccines for five years to any country which has a World Health Organization (WHO)-approved national or regional immunization program. To do this, the Rotary must raise $120 million. Despite the enormity of that figure, Rotary International has embarked upon that fundraising effort in its inimitable style, already committing $40 million to purchase the vaccine, confident that Rotarians in 22,000 clubs in 160 countries will raise the funds necessary to complete the ambitious project.

John L. Sever, M.D., Ph.D., of Potomac, Md., has served as the Rotary's national and international representative regarding PolioPlus for the past several years. He is chief of the Infectious Diseases Branch of the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke, professor of pediatrics at Georgetown University Medical School, professor of pediatrics and obstetrics and gynecology at George Washington University School of Medicine and attending physician at the National Children's Medical Center.

Sever, a Rotarian since 1964, was the featured speaker at the Grosse Pointe Rotary Club's regular Monday luncheon this week at the War Memorial.

He asked a ballroom full of Rotarians and their wives if they remembered the days when Americans froze in fear at the thought of their children contracting the disease. He asked the audience to recall the newsreels of polio-stricken children in iron lungs and the donation cannisters which were passed around. And Sever brought back memories of swimming pools closed for fear of spreading the disease.

"That same thing is happening now, today, in India and Mexico and Guatamala. And don't think that the mothers there love their children any less. They dread this disease and they want to learn what they can about it," Sever told the group. He showed slides which included a photo of an Egyptian artifact, which displayed the figure of a man. The man's thinner-than-normal right leg was evidence of polio, Sever said. "It's been around for centuries, but it is preventable," he added.

"THE MOST COMMON form results in weakness in the lower extremities. The majority of kids have legs which can't move. They crawl around, pushing themselves with their arms. They're known in the Third World as 'Crawlers'. And because they can't walk, they go to the cities and beg for their livelihood," Sever explained.

Because of the lack of stimulation, the polio victim's lower extremities atrophy and shorten up. "To treat that, we can cut the tendon in the leg to make it straight and put the patient in crude leg braces and on crutches. It helps them to stand erect and makes their lives somewhat eas-

"But it's completely unnecessary when you stop and think that the child need not have had polio in the first place. All we need to have done is to have immunized him against it. A couple of drops of vaccine can prevent this from ever happening," Sever said.

So Rotary International decided to do something it had never done. "Rotary had never before been able to tackle a worldwide problem in a unified way, but the board voted to tackle the job of immunizing the world's children," Sever said.

For five years, Rotary International will provide the vaccine to those countries with WHO-approved distribution plans, and will also work to help them make the program a reality through performing volunteer services such as planning, evaluation, publicity and actual immunization.

The cost of the vaccine is just 4 cents per dose and at an average of three does per child, it takes 12 cents per child to prevent polio.

"The vaccine is being purchased through UNICEF and the WHO, which insures Rotary International that it is of the highest quality," Sever said. It also makes it easier to move the vaccine over international borders which might not otherwise accept a vaccine from a foreign country.

A big part of the Rotary's work is making sure that the people know that the vaccine is available. "The program has to be publicized, just as it was in this country back in the 1950s." In India, the Rotarians there were able to communicate the program to people who might not have been able to read the signs notifying them of immunization. The people of India are big movie fans; it's a national pastime of sorts there. So when the movie reaches the peak action scene, they stop it and show the slide publicizing the polio vaccine days and times. "It works, there were six or seven thousand kids at the immunization. Who wouldn't go home and tell about the interruption of the movie?," Sever said with a chucpurchase the cold carriers which are necessary to maintain the cold temperature of the vaccine in order to keep it effective. Rotarians must also be ready to go door-to-door to be sure the people will come out, Sever said, and even become involved to the point where they provide lunch for those involved in the immunization process. "You don't want your program to fall apart because you didn't remember to give these people a lunch," he

THE PROGRAM IS moving rapidly, Sever noted. Through PolioPlus and the efforts of Rotary International Mexico conducted two national days of immunization in 1985. More than 11 million of the country's 12.5 million children were immunized.

"It's safe to say that by 1991, all the countries in this hemisphere will be immunized," Sever predicted.

The ultimate success of the program depends upon the fundraising and volunteer efforts of Rotarians worldwide, Sever said. Locally, the public can participate by donating to the Grosse Pointe Rotary's fundraising efforts such as last weekends' soft drink sale in the Village. According to Rotarian Dave Sanderson, who helped bring Sever to Grosse Pointe, the sale raised a total of $605. "We can and will do it again, many times over the next five years," Sanderson told

Back on May 30, the junior group of the Detroit East Suburban Alumna Association of Kappa Kappa Gamma held a Mobile Scavenger Hunt to benefit the Detroit Rehabilitation Institute. The first annual Mobile Scavenger Hunt was a big success, raising $1,000 for the Rehab Institute, which is the largest non-profit adult rehab facility in the midwest. As a member of the Detroit Medical Center, the 175-bed hospital maintains specialty units or programs for spinal cord injury, stroke, rheumatology, musculoskeletal disorders, geriatric rehabilitation, pain management and closed head injury.

More than 100 tickets at $15 per person were sold; 23 cars registered for an afternoon of treasure hunting. Participants had to answer a page of clues for each of their eight destinations. The final destination was the Riviera Terrace Clubhouse, where a great party - complete with beer, wine, pizza and salad - was held.

Winners — those with the fastest time and the most correct answers to clues - were Jim and Elaine Farquar, Gary and Sharon Davis, and Jim and Kathy Slaughter, all of Grosse Pointe Farms. They split the cash prize of $150 and won a $100 gift certificate to Sparky Herbert's. Prizes were also awarded to those in the most confused car, slowest car and fastest car.

The Kappas say they are looking to double the ticket sales for

The Sabbath principle: Taking play seriously

By The Rev. Gregory P. Sammons Christ Church-Grosse Pointe

A man came in from the office at 7:30 p.m. His briefcase was crammed with unfinished projects. His family had already eaten. He muttered a weary greeting, threw together a sandwich and went to his study. He emerged at 10:45 p.m. to go to bed. The night seemed short when his alarm went off at 5:45 a.m., propelling him into another hectic day. He felt limp, unmotivated and angry. But what else could he do?, he wondered.

All of us would agree that a person who never does anything productive with his energies and abilities, one who deliberately loafs through life, has a serious flaw. But do we recognize that overwork is also a sign of a serious disorder?

The Biblical idea of the Sabbath is meant to help us avoid this disorder. It is a spiritual principle that many of us over-committed people in Grosse Pointe need to take to heart.

The Sabbath is a day of rest in the midst of six days of work, written into the fabric of creation itself. However, the Sabbath was meant to be more than just a single day - it was meant as a sign of a whole way of looking at one's life. The Sabbath was a weekly reminder that bodies, minds and spirits need daily moments of reflection, prayer and play in order to be spiritually whole. Thus, the Sabbath is meant to be sprinkled into every day. Here are some reasons why:

First, the Sabbath moment gives us a healthy distance from our work. Our worth is not how much we produce or own. Our essential identity is not wrapped up in our work. Christians believe, instead, that it is impossible to earn the approval and love of God; his acceptance of us is a free gift. He values our uniqueness apart from our work. A "Sabbath break" in our day is a reminder of this wonderful fact.

Secondly, Sabbath moments help us confront the "god pretender" within each of us, the part of us that believes that we are (or ought to be) in charge of everything. Much overwork is the result of an exaggerated sense of self-importance. Clergy, for example, are somewhat disposed in this direction. We often have problems not feeling guilty about taking days off.

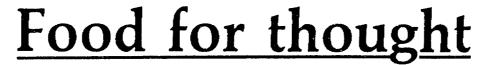

Recently, at the institution of a new pastor, the preacher handed a Frisbee to the new pastor with the words: "This is an essential tool of your ministry. Remember that God, not you, is really in charge here. Therefore, you may set a good example to your flock by remembering to take play seriously."

Third, the Sabbath moment reminds us to pay attention to our significant relationships. No one's loneliness or emptiness was ever overcome by simply working extra hours at the office. The relationships which are meant to heal us, to restore our balance and sanity, are our nearest and dearest. If these relationships have come unraveled for us over the years, could it be because we ignored the Sabbath reminder to be nurtured by family and friends?

Lastly, the Sabbath reminds us to take into account our primary relationship - our friendship with God. St. Augustine wrote: "We are made for Thee, Lord, and our hearts are restless till they find their rest in Thee."

Daily and weekly Sabbath times are meant to nudge us toward God. We are, thus, reminded that nothing, absolutely nothing, deserves a more important place in our lives than God.

In moments of fatigue and stress, the Sabbath beckons us always to rest in Him who is the source and ending of all things. "Come to me, all who labor and are heavily burdened and I will give you rest." (Matthew 11:28).

Collections for poor reflect parishioners' concern, serve as Catholic community's response to papal visit poor of Michigan.

By Peggy O'Connor

Feature Editor Among the receptions, dinners and presentations to be given in honor of the September visit of Pope John Paul II, one thing may stand out among the rest: last weekend's Archdiocesanwide food drive to benefit the

The Spirituality and Catechesis Committee for the Papal Visit developed the idea in order that an appropriate response to the first papal visit to Michigan might be made. Collection bags printed with the papal logo were distributed to Archdiocese churches and parishioners were asked to fill them with cans and boxes of food and return them to the churches over the weekend of July 25-26.

Nearly one ton of food was collected at St. Ambrose Church in Grosse Pointe Park. Church officials called the response from the 500-member parish "terrific", but not unexpected.

"This goes on in our parish all the time. Every Lent we have what we call Weight Watchers for Crossroads, a similar food collection for the poor which has great response from our parishioners," said Sister Helen Edward. O.P., who with Sister Irene Marie Kerich, O.P., coordinated the St. Ambrose collection. They serve as Parish Community Workers at St. Ambrose.

"While we have some affluent parishioners, we are not an affluent parish . . . far from it. What needs to be recognized is that this sort of collection goes on all the time here at St. Ambrose. In our parish we have become sensitive to the real needs this community has.'

Sister Helen Edward and The Rev. Timothy Pelc with just a portion of the food collected by the St. Ambrose community last

Each parish within the Archdiocese was asked to distribute the food collected to the programs it normally assists. St. Ambrose sent its collection to Crossroads, a local food pantry.

"Crossroads is our preference because it is an organization which enables people to break the cycle of poverty," Sister Helen said.

St. Ambrose pastor The Rev. Timothy Pelc called the collection an appropriate response to John Paul II's upcoming visit.

"Jesus spent time caring for the poor, both spiritually and physically. The Holy Father's duty on earth is to carry on that task. To honor him by making this sort of food collection is absolutely appropriate."

"It's also good timing. You know, there are always huge food collections made during the holidays. Food is needed during the summer, too, so this is especially appropriate," Pelc added.

No final totals were available for the collections at the other Grosse Pointe Catholic churches, St. Clare of Montefalco, St. Paul and Our Lady Star of the Sea. But officials at all three churches expressed satisfaction with parish collections.

According to Sister Eileen

Meyers, St. Paul food collections will be distributed to St. Paul's regular recipient, St. Bernard parish, and to Rice Bowl II. The Rev. Paul Panaretos said that the "large amount" of food collected at Our Lady Star of the Sea will be distributed at St. Philip Neri in Detroit, where Star routinely assists. And because of a conflict with another collection, St. Clare did not conduct the papal collection last weekend, but will collect food this weekend, Aug. 1 and 2.

Star's Panaretos cautioned people to remember that the collection is not a gift for the pope. "He's coming to Detroit in the name of Jesus Christ and as preacher and herald of the gospel. Christ asked us to be mindful of the needs of those around us and the Holy Father comes to us in the name of Jesus Christ So the food collection is made keeping in mind the gospel and in solidarity with the teachings of Christ and of His representative on earth."

And that may have been apparent perhaps nowhere more than at St. Ambrose last weekend, Sister Helen said."In that collection were two bars of soap given by a man who depends upon GA (general assistance) to get by. That soap is something which he can't buy with food stamps, but it was obviously something which he felt strongly enough about giving to have spent his precious money on.

"I think that is the essence of giving."

Lecture series planned

Paul II's visit to Hamtramck this fall, St. Ladislaus Parish will host a series of four talks entitled "Understanding Pope John Paul II," Aug. 17-20 in the school gymnasium, 2650 Caniff, at 7:30 p.m. each day.

The final talk of the week will be given on Aug. 20 by Father Eugene Edyk, professor at Ss.

Grosse Pointe A Unique Community

A Romantic Past As a Grosse Pointe resident, you'll walk upon grounds that were once the swamp, marsh and meadow haunts of deer, buffalo and beaver. It was this profusion of wildlife—plus fish from the 460-square-mile Lake St. Clair—that attracted the French farmers who first settled the area in 1701.

During the century that they fished, farmed and traded with the local Indians, many legands began. And many infamous locations were indelibly named: Fox Creek, graveyard of the Fox Indian nation; Bloody Run, where a company of British soldiers from Fort Detroit were ambushed and killed.

From Pristine to Prosperous After a brief period under British rule, the area began its history as an American settlement. Its beauty and bounty made it an ideal resort area for families from the growing city of Detroit. Between 1875 and 1925, Grosse Pointe became the elegant summer residence—and then permanent home—of families who had amassed fortunes in lumber and automobiles. In the midst of the lavish mansions, farm cottages and resort ambiance, there gradually grew a year-round community of quality homes for families from all walks of life.

Where were you?

Okay, since it was just over 20 years ago that the fires demolished the city of Detroit, maybe we should think back just shy of three years and recall the hoopla that surrounded the corner of Michigan and Trumbull.

After all, the Tigers are right in the thick of things in the American League East, so why don't we consider the possibilty that they could be in the fall classic showdown again this October.

Take a step back in time and try to remember where you were.

It was mid-October and a team from the west coast and a team from the Motor City were clashing in a fall spectacle.

The Padres of San Diego and the Tigers of Detroit were about to embark in game Five of the 1984 World Series on October 14. Where were you?

Well, a vivid memory is embedded in my brain. I had followed the first four games on a little portable pocket radio. It was my best friend for that week and a half as I sat in the middle of an intramural field on the campus of Central Michigan University. But, after operating properly for four games, it finally went blinko on me!

I was just like any other normal, yet envious human being who didn't have a ticket to witness history first-hand, so I had to compromise.

My radio was not the greatest piece of equipment, but it served its purpose. Being stuck in a Cushman in the middle of a softball complex was not my first choice in seating arrangements, but with Paul and Ernie blasting through the air waves, I was seemingly compensated.

As the sun light disappeared and the moon light took over, I tried to think of the lights, hot dogs and other fine aromas that fill the air at Tiger Stadium. With a little imagination, I went a long way.

I tuned in my so-called radio, but much to my dismay, it was a bit fuzzy. I couldn't hear as well as I wanted to, so I improvised. I found a stray piece of aluminum foil from a hot dog wrapper, and tried desperately to attach it to my radio for better reception. Did you remember ever doing that? Anyway, my valiant effort to clear Ernie's and Paul's voices failed. So, back to a muffled voice and a few understandable spurts of English I went.

As the first pitch was thrown, my radio should have been thrown too. I suddenly lost all possible touch with the baseball world and felt compelled to find a way back into it. As I struggled once again to hear Paul and Ernie, I understood a few words, "At the end of one inning, Tigers 3, Padres 0."What a major disappointment. I didn't get a chance to clap my hands or stomp my feet in rhythm with the rest of the crowd. And as for the wave, all I could

'Trader' rides winds to capture victory

Fred Detwiler, skipper of "Trader", gathered his eight-man crew and captured the Chicago to Mackinac Sailboat Race on the weekend of July 18. Detwiler and company had a record time (based on corrected time) for the 333 statute mile course. They sailed their way to a time of 22 hours, five minutes. In elapsed time, they finished 32 hours, 40 minutes, three seconds. "Trader" eclipsed the old record by approximately nine hours. The old record, set back in 1911 by a 100-foot sailboat, was just over 31 hours. Detwiler and his crew went on to compete in the Port Huron to Mackinac Race which began, with a delayed start, on Saturday, July 25 and concluded some time Monday, July 27. Details on the finish and the race were not available at press time. A full report will be outlined in next week's News.

By Rob Fulton

Sports Editor In less than 24 hours, Fred Detwiler nailed down a place in history with a strong wind and a top-notch sailboat.

Detwiler skippered the 'Trader' to its first overall victory in the Chicago to Mackinac Sailboat Race during the week of Detwiler, who has only owned his 40-foot boat for one year, scooted through the water of Lake Michigan in a corrected record time of 22 hours, five minutes. The course covered 333 statute miles.

"It was just a fabulous sailboat ride," Detwiler said. "I've never gone that fast for that long of a time."

The reason why it seemed Detwiler darted through the water is, according to him, his new sailboat. It is a 1985 boat, and it is the first year he has raced in

"It's a very technical boat," he stated. "There are boats designed for specific ratings to compete in world class competition, and I feel this is the best boat to have."

"It's a world-class boat," he said about his One-Ton class boat, "For the size and weight, you get more speed out of it than some other styles.'

Detwiler bought the boat because of its sleek style and intricacies, but most of all, he wanted it to compete in the One-Ton

"There is a lot of competition in the One-Ton class," Detwiler claimed. "I thought I would buy this type of boat because of the great competition in the class.'

According to Detwiler, not only is the One Ton filled with competition, but the entire fleet at the Chicago-Mackinac Race was also something to write home about.

"It's a very big race," he said. It's especially nice because there are a lot of boats from around the country, and it was particularly nice because of the type of competition."

It actually took Detwiler and company 32 hours, 40 minutes. and three seconds to complete the course, but once the handicap was considered, he was the overall winner.

"It was great," he said about the feeling of the overall title. "The entire crew was so excited, but I think it took a little longer for it to sink in for me."

It probably took Detwiler longer to grab a taste of the feat he just accomplished, but his eight-man crew was more than willing to help him along.

"They kept coming up to me saying 'Fred, you really don't know what you've just done," said Detwiler. "I was extremely proud and happy that something like this could happen to me."

Not only did Detwiler win the overall competition, but he eclipsed a course record (based on his corrected time) by approximately nine hours. The record (just over 31 hours) was set back in 1911 by a 100-foot sailboat.

The District 2 Babe Ruth Baseball Championship game is one that may be talked about for years to come.

With Kerby Field as the sight, Grosse Pointe Woods-Shores defeated Grosse Pointe Farms-City-Park 4-3 to take the championship in a game that lasted nine innings and was played over two Mike Rancilio was the hero for GPWS as he not only hurled six shutout innings of relief pitching, but was instrumental in scoring the winning run. He led off the ninth inning with a triple and then rode home on a sacrifice fly off the bat of Kevin Endres.

In the bottom of the ninth, GPFCP threatened as they had two runners aboard, but Rancilio was able to get the final out on a pop up to Endres.

The first seven innings were played on Monday, July 13, but darkness and rain forced the conclusion to the following day. GPFCP scored two runs in the third and one in the fourth, while GPWS scored single runs in the second, fourth, and fifth

To get to the deciding game in the double-elimination tournament, GPWS defeated GPFCP 8-2. John Cartwright hurled a four-hitter and his teammates broke open a close game with four runs in the sixth inning, including a Rancilio homer. Catcher, Scott Schorer also contributed a first-inning home run. Ray Roxas led the Farms-City-Park team with two hits and Mike Montagne added a double. This was the second game that GPWS won when they faced possible elimination from the tournament.

The first time their backs were to the wall, they turned it around with a 7-4 win over L'-Anse Creuse. Here, Rancilio and Lou D'Angelo combined on a five-hitter, with Rancilio chalking up the win. Hot-hitting Tony Jaboro clubbed a GPWS home run with a man on to lead the offense.

In the first of three games, and the game that saw GPWS slip into the losers' bracket, GPFCP used a four-run third inning to cling to an 8-7 win.

Bill Isbey tossed a strong game for GPFCP in the opener and Brian Downs pitched in relief. Bill Leins led the hitting attack with three singles and Mike Montagne and Isbey cranked two singles each. Brian Letcher, Matt Wysocki, Ed Suzor, Kevin Nugent and Chris Stebbins supported the GPFCP attack with Both teams were matched up after disposing of their first round matches. GPFCP ripped L'Anse Creuse 8-5 and GPWS thumped Detroit West-7, 12-6. Montagne picked up the win for GPFCP and also had two hits, while Matt Wysocki collected five RBI, including a home run. GPWS manager Phil Hage said, " Winning our District is very rewarding. The team from GPFCP played very well and it was a shame one of the teams had to lose. We are very happy to play in the State Tournament. but it will be extremely difficult four our kids to repeat their performance from two years ago.

"But, don't sell our team short. They have shown that as long as they play together as a team and everyone contributes. there is no telling just how far they can go.'

As badly as I wanted to turn it off to cease my frustration, I couldn't. It would have been like turning my back on them so I vigorously shook the radio and hoped it would tune it. I got a faint response, but nothing worth cheering about. As time passed, so did my patience. The next thing I caught was the score at the end of four and one-half innings was Detroit 3, Padres

Now it was time to start the nail biting. But, I couldn't. I wanted to bite the radio, but didn't want the dentist bill. Stuck between a rock and a hard place, I opted for the top of the Cushman. On top of that I sat. Diligently praying that the sound waves would ring the speaker. In the meantime, I heard Ernie mutter that the Tigers had extended their lead to 5-3, but the Padres pulled within one, 5-4 in the

Knowing full well that my radio was on its last leg, I turned it off for a quick moment in hopes that it would do some good, but it turned out to be one of the biggest mistakes of my life. As I turned it on, much to my delight, it worked. The crowd noise was crisp and clear and the only question I had was, "what happened?"

"Gibby has just hit one out of here off Goose Gossage to give the Tigers an 8-4 lead in the eighth inning," said the crackled voice of Ernie Harwell.

I was floored. But, I didn't know whether to be happy that my radio finally worked, or kick myself for turning it off. Did you ever remember a time like this? Anyway, I was ecstatic. The Tigers were the World Series champs with an 8-4 victory.

At least I was able to learn something from this rather disheartening situation; the next time the Tigers get to the World Series, I'll have to buy a ticket and not a

I'm hoping that the Tigers can allow history to repeat itself this season and they can bring home another championship. It looks like it's possible, so I better get out and buy a new radio; just in case my seat is already sold.

Needless to say, the radio is not around any longer. In fact, I had a great idea, but didn't follow through on it. I was going to ship it to the Padres as a gift. I thought that if I couldn't hear the game, then the Padres couldn't hear how they lost the World Series four games to one!

Do you remember that?

A day at the Port Huron-Mackinac sailboat race

The 63rd Annual Bayview Yacht Club's Port Huron to Mackinac Race got underway Saturday, July 25, only after an approximate hour delay. Pictured at the right, is "Gold Rush" and its colleagues approximately a quarter mile into the race. They were running deck-todeck until "Gold Rush" sailed out to a short lead. Below, many of the boats in the PHRF start began slowly, but surged ahead as they took off in hopes of finishing the race at Mackinac Island. Only a lew yards separated the boats until they could pick up some more headway and sail en.

many of the boats had to scoot through the bridge over the Black River on their way to the starting line. The bridge would open allowing the draw boats' masts to clear the way, otherwise the boats with large masts would never be able to travel the Black River; which housed many of the boats the night before the race. At print time, the first unofficial boat to cross the finish line at Mackinac was Sassy. Nitissima, of the Bayview Yacht Club, was the first area finisher at 9:47 a.m. Monday. Photos by Rob Fulton

Instead of changing weather fronts with the typical heavy air beat to the finish, as experienced in most of the previous eight annual challenges, this year's event saw mostly light easterly winds. The significant challenge in this year's event was overcoming the frustration of becalm-

The first leg to Goderich was a light air beat with most of the 44 yachts drifting around the Goderich mark. From there to Mackinac Island, it was light downwind sailing, often with St. Joseph to establish a new spinnakers at near collapse. The overall record elapse time of 77 Numbers two and three and working head sails never left the sail bag while mental anguish became the predominant stress factor for skippers as they became victims to zero air pockets at Goderich, Presque Isle and the finish. Some yachts found it took hours to complete the last quarter mile at Mackinac Island.

Half of the 44 skippers who raced to Mackinac were also racing concurrently in the world's longest freshwater singlehanded sailing event, the Huron/Michigan Singlehanded Challenge. This challenge starts at Port Huron, but does not end at Mackinac Island. It continues on down the length of Lake Michigan to finish at St. Joseph, Michigan.

For those continuing on to St. Joseph, the light air frustration of Grosse Pointe Farms, was the continued. Half of the 22 skippers decided they had had vision. From the start, Jan Geougeon's trimaran "Ollie" worked its way well ahead of the fleet and was able to avoid most of the light air frustrations and finished at Mackinac Island only a few hours slower than the 26 hours elapse time established by Jan in 1985. Jan continued to hours, 40 minutes, eclipsing the time of 125 hours set by Fred Locke's old "Katy" in 1981.

For the rest of the fleet, the elapse times were much slower. Cheryl Cameron's "C-Spray" was the first monohull boat to finish at Mackinac Island and at St. Joseph. However, on corrected elapse time, she placed third in the big boat Super Division at the Island, but was unable to hang onto first in the big boat division at St. Joseph. Jim Ratliff's "SGT. Pepper" captured first place with Lee Schraff's "Twentyfour" taking second in the Superior Division at Mackinac Island. Fed Locke's "Katy" placed second in the big boat division at St. Joseph.

Some things not to do

Runners, I see you along Lakeshore at races and at tracks doing stretches and exercises that are potentially harmful to you.

I've even stopped some of you to offer my advice, which most of you don't seem to appreciate. Will the printed word help?

It is recommended that you do not do the following exer-

HURDLER'S STRETCH: This manuever can cause gradual, harmful stretching of the ligament on the inside of the knee and of the tissue in the groin; resulting in fascial groin pulls.

In older athletes, this exercise frequently causes back pain by stretching the sciatic nerve. This particular exercise is one of the two prime offenders for causing back pain in runners — not their running or jogging.

The Hurdlers Stretch is performed in a seated position on the floor with one leg stretched out in front and the other leg bent at the knee behind you. Why take the chance?

The other prime offender for causing back pain in runners is Toe Touching.

TOE TOUCHING: The toe touching manuever puts enormous strain on all the structures in the lower back and stresses ligaments beyond their normal limits. The muscles of the back can't give any support when you are toe touching; you are actually stretching and hanging by your ligaments. This stretching exercise is one of the prime causes of back pain in runners because it puts undue stress on one of the main supporting ligaments in the spine: the posterior longitudinal ligament. It also is possible to rupture a disc in an adult who has underlying disc problems.

When stretching AFTER your run, remember to do the following to protect your body: 1) Stretch slowly and gen-

2) Hold the correct position (gentle) for 15 seconds until the muscles relax and then stretch a "little" further. Hold for 15 seconds. Never stretch drastically to the point of pain. Trust your ability to distinguish between the safe feeling of stretch and the harmful feeling of pain.

3) The goal is to stretch toward the normal range of motion, not excessive over stretch. An over-stretched joint is unstable and can cause injury.

In addition, here are some common exercises to avoid:

Do not beunce or jerk. Do not hyperextend your ioints.

Do not arch or hyperextend the low back or neck. Do not swing arms and legs out of control. Do not do any exercise fast.

Avoid neck rolls and waist

Avoid shoulder stands, back bends and back arches.

Try to remember that when you are standing, your knees should be slightly flexed, abdominals tight and shoulders down and relaxed. You need good stabilization in order to prevent injuries. Be aware of your body and remember to use control. Treat your body with respect and you'll find that you reap many benefits. Take one day at a time and make each day a healthy one.

Takes a little more fitness to become more fit

There's no doubt about it.

Every year, more and more Americans participate in sports and fitness activities. They have many goals; improving fitness, weight loss, more energy, better health or to improve in their favorite sport.

Yet, when surveys report on the number of people who exercise regularly at levels of vigorous enough to achieve these goals, the number of true participants drops. You see, it takes a little more than just a weekly game of tennis or an occasional swim to become fit.

First, to improve the fitness of your heart and lungs, it is necessary to do some form of cardiorespiratory endurance exercise at least three times each week for a minimum of 20 minutes each workout. This form of exercise, known as aerobic exercise, uses large muscle groups and requires a lot of oxygen. As your heart pumps hard to bring oxygen and nutrients to your muscles, it gets stronger and healthier. Some popular aerobic exercises are walking, jogging, swimming, aerobic dancing, cycling and cross-country skiing.

Muscular strengthening exercises are also important. Strong muscles are less likely to be injured and they make it easier to do endurance exercises for extended periods of time. Also, strong abdominal muscles help prevent lower back pain, which is a common problem today.

The most popular way to build strength is with equipment. Muscle strength is increased when you make a muscle group work harder than it normally does. This usually means performing an exercise eight to 10 times (this equals one set) and doing a total of three sets with a brief rest between each one.

For some people, a two pound hand weight will be all they can manage. Stronger people will require a heavier weight. The important thing to remember is to choose the weight and equipment that is right for you. It's always good to get some expert help when you're just beginning.

It's recommended that a minimum of two, twenty-minute sessions of strengthening a week be performed. Three or four are fine, as long as you don't do all your workouts consecutively. Your muscles need at least 24 hours to recuperate from a strength workout.

Exercises such as pushups, situps and leg raises build muscle endurance, which is the ability to repeat a movement requiring strength over and over again without resting. Muscular strength and muscular endurance are closely related. You must achieve a certain degree of strength to have high levels of endurance.

Finally, no program is complete without flexibility exercises. Stretching all the major muscle groups on a daily basis is important to ease such health problems as lower back pain and possibly arthritis. When your muscles and joints are flexible, you are less likely to get injured and you will feel better overall.

Always remember to warm up your body before doing any type of vigorous exercise or before you do your stretches. Walking in place, arm circles, knee lifts and other limbering exercises raise the temperature of your muscles and make it easier, and safer for you to do your workout. At the end of your workout, gradually come to a stop so that you don't put too much stress on your heart. Stretch as part of your cooldown also, to relax your muscles and help improve flexibility.

Headaches

Headaches. Just the mention of the word can bring on the thought of pain which thousands of people suffer from daily. An estimated 40 million Americans consult their physicians yearly for relief from this malady. Headaches are fast becoming the most common physical complaint of our time, with a whopping 1.2 billion dollars spent on "over-the-counter" remedies in one year. Most of these remedies do help to alleviate the pain, but eliminating the cause in the first place could prove to be far less expensive. Basically, headaches fall into two types: vascular, involving the arteries in the head; and tension, involving the muscles and their contractions. There can be many reasons for a headache. Emotional stress can play a major role. Other contributions are tension, eye strain, sinuses, fatigue and even food and drink. One or more of these factors can cause a headache. Knowing these causes can be the first step to stopping headache pain before it be-

Tension headaches are usually described as a dull, steady ache in the back of the head or across the forehead. They are primarily caused from a constant contraction of neck and scalp muscles. One avenue of relief may be a pain reliever; but by simply learning to relax and control the body's muscles, many tension headaches can be relieved.

One simple relaxation technique begins each practice session with the person tightening sets of muscles, starting with the feet and working your way up the body, including the muscles in the neck and face area. This voluntary tightening of the muscles during the relaxation practice sessions allows you to become aware of how your body feels when the muscles are under tension. Then, when you experience this tightening beginning to build up in your muscles, you are more likely to notice the tension quicker; take 10 minutes to sit and relax all the muscles, relieving the pressure before it is allowed to build. It is recommended that you practice a relaxation session for 10 to 15 minutes each day. Everyone can benefit from allowing this small amount of time to be alone on a short, mental "mini-vacation." (A relaxation guideline follows this article).

Certain foods and dietary habits can contribute to headaches. Low blood sugar may also cause headaches, or even percipitate migraines. When some people begin a diet program or decide to make a complete change from their old eating habits, headaches can occur. If they have previously consumed large amounts of refined sugar, the brain becomes accustomed to this high intake. When this level drops, the body must become adjusted to the change. It is only a temporary condition, and if the headaches continue beyond the first or second day, consult your physician. When changing your eating habits or beginning a diet, it is important to remember to eat your meals on time; spaced throughout the day. Never skip meals or allow a long time frame to pass without taking in some type of nutritious food. Fruits, such as an apple, are excellent choices for "in-between"

Many people suffer from a caffeine withdrawal when attempting to reduce their coffee or cola intake. Caffeine causes the blood vessels to narrow. When no caffeine is consumed, the blood vessels enlarge, occassionally causing a throbbing pain. Cutting down caffeine intake slowly will help alleviate the withdrawal symptoms.

A group of chemicals called tyramines can stimulate the nervous system, also causing headaches. Tyramines are found in alcoholic drinks, cheeses, avocados, raspberries plums, raisins, papayas, bananas, yogurt, sour cream, aged meat, liver, soy sauce, and chocolate. Cured meats, such as frankfurters, bacon, ham, and salami, also contain nitrates that may have an adverse effect. Not everyone has a problem with tyramines in foods, or with nitrate-containing foods, buy by becoming more aware of our bodies, and how they respond to foods, will help determine which foods to avoid or use sparingly in our daily eating program.

By learning to relax, eating nutritious foods and on a schedule, we may help to alleviate many headaches.

RELAXATION TECH-NIQUE

1. Sit in a comfortable chair. 2. Starting with the feet, one foot at a time, tighten the muscles, hold for 5 seconds, relax. Repeat this exercise, tightening, relaxing, using each set of muscles, working your way up the body, even the face muscles, tighten, then relax. Remember to breathe easy, slowly.

3. Now gently shake your arms and legs, letting them go limp, along with your entire body.

4. Take three cleansing breaths, breathing in through your nose, out through your mouth.

5. Visualize yourself in some special place; this could be the beach, the mountains, or a room. Anyplace that gives you a sense of peace and quiet. Take your time picturing each part of the scene; how the sky looks, the water, the colors, etc. You love it here, and you are completely relaxed and at ease. (Spend at least 15 minutes on this "mini-vacation") Do not look at a clock. Each time you practice this technique, you will be able to time yourself naturally.

6. Now open your eyes, take three more cleansing breaths.

7. Get up slowly out of the chair, stretch like a cat, breathe easy, be aware of how relaxed and refreshed you

Try to set aside these 15 minutes each day. You will be glad you did!

Entertainment

'Sound of Music' is good, solid entertainment The music is what makes this played by Carolyn Val-Schmidt, but she carries her role well

By Pat Paholsky News Editor

"The Sound of Music," now playing at the Fisher Theatre through Aug. 9, is a peoplepleaser. Twenty-eight years later, after the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical opened on Broadway, the music and story are among the most familiar of the genre and have become clas-

Based on the real-life experiences of the Von Trapp family, the story of a family that chooses to live in exile rather than under Nazi rule can't help but capture the hearts of the audience. It has all the ingredients for wide appeal - a good love story, a bunch of wholesome children, evil Nazis, a little bit of religion Rodgers and Hammerstein score and a lot of good music.

production special — it's enhanced by some of the best trained voices around.

The main character, Maria, played by Debby Boone, may surprise people who only know her as the daughter of Pat Boone and the singer of the 1977 hit single, "You Light Up My Life."

presence as well as a good singing voice and dancing ability. And it's unexpected to hear her yodel as well as she does in "The Lonely Goatherd," one of the play's lesser-known numbers.

The rest of the cast does the justice. The Mother Abbess, lets go on "Climb Every Mountain," and sends chills to listeners. The captain, played by David Cryer, has a deep baritone that makes you wish he had more songs in the musical.

In fact, there's not a mediocre voice in the cast. And that's important to a play with as many familiar numbers as "Sound of Music," such as the haunting "Edelweiss," the bouncy "My Favorite Things," the slightly silly "Do Re Mi" and of course, the title song.

Everything about this production is professional, from the costumes to the sets to the seven children. The youngest member of the cast, Kristen Minor, who plays Gretl, is the only person without prior stage experience, even though she overdoes it at times.

Everyone else in the cast has legitimate theater and television experience, and it's obvious in this production. It's good, solid entertainment, suitable for the whole family.

A good indicator of the audience's response to a play is their comments in the lobby during intermission and at the end when they're clogging the aisles and slowly filing out. There were plenty of good comments in both instances, indicated the paying public liked it.

The only thing that might preclude families from seeing this play, however, is the price. Tickets are $33 and $20 for evenings and $30 and $20 for matinees.

'Jaws IV' is good escapist summer

By Michael Chapp Special Writer

Like most fish stories, the "Jaws" saga gets a little bigger and a little more outrageous each time it's told. And like most fish stories, this tale's proximity to reality is highly suspect. Once that is understood, though, there is a certain amount of fun to be had with "Jaws IV: The Revenge."

Sheriff Brody (Roy Scheider) bit the dust two movies ago. So did the killer great white shark that caused so much terror for the people of Amity Island. But Brody's younger son is now the sheriff of Amity, and his older son is a marine biologist in the Bahamas. Needless to say, the

101 PRAYERS

THANK You for prayers answered St. Jude and ST. John Berchmans.

PRAYER TO

SAINT ANTHONY O Holy Saint Anthony, gentlest of Saints, your love for God and charity for his creatures made you worthy, when on earth, to possess miraculous powers. Miracles waited on your word, which you were ever ready to speak for those in trouble or anxiety. Encouraged by this thought, I implore of you to obtain for me (my request). The answer to my prayer may require a miracle, even so, you are the Saint of Miracles. O gentle and loving Saint Anthony, whose heart was ever full of human sympathy, whisper my petition into the ears of the sweet infant Jesus, who loved to be folded in your arms,

and the gratitude of my heart will ever be yours.

EVOLUTION OF THE SPECIES

The New Breed Jaguar XJ6

Introducing the 1988 Jaguar XJ6. Like its forebears, its sleek form is taut and well-muscled. Yet it faces the wind with greater aerodynamic efficiency.

True to Jaguar tradition, its new aluminum alloy, fuel injected six cylinder engine has double overhead cams. However, the added sophistication of 24 valves further enhances power and high-speed response.

supple leather and fine wood, the new XI6 adds advanced computer-age technology in everything from its climate control system to its Vehicle Condition Monitor, which continually checks 27 critical functions.

The 1988 Jaguar XJ6. It is totally new, yet it reflects the finest traits of its forebears. It marks the evolution of a legendary species. It's little wonder that upon previewing it in Europe, CAR magazine called it "the best sedan in the world:
