

Grosse Pointe teens get firsthand view of glasnost

By Margie Reins Smith Staff Writer

Mikhail Gorbachev's glasnost has touched a few Grosse Pointe teenagers. A handful of Grosse Pointe teens recently visited the Soviet Union as part of the People to People program, a private organization that arranges small group tours for students.

Lissa LeClerc, an '88 graduate of Grosse Pointe South High School who will be attending the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York City in September, visited the U.S.S.R. last summer. Grosse Pointe South seniors Keith Wilcox, Christiana Grilling and David McMillin, and South Junior Courtney Whithead recently returned from a similar tour this summer.

"It was not a vacation," LeClerc said. "Not like a trip to Hawaii. It was a learning experience. It made me appreciate the U.S. so much more."

Wolter said that many of his stereotyped notions of the Soviet Union proved to be true.

"It was grim. For instance, in a huge mob of people, you'd hear no laughter. No noise to speak of," Grilling said she discovered some misconceptions that Soviets had about Americans. "They said we had no middle class. They thought about 10 percent of Americans were very rich and the other 90 percent were poor. They also asked me about Reagan. They thought he was dying. I said he wasn't. They thought we were being fed propaganda."

"A lot of the people were willing to talk politics," she said.

She added that language wasn't a problem. More than half of the people she met spoke English and she also was able to communicate in French. LeClerc said she had trouble convincing some Russians that the United States really had a free press. "They couldn't believe this."

All five teens were impressed by the traders. They traded American clothing for Russian flags, fur hats and military mousers.

"The traders wanted jeans, sweaters, tapes, Walkman, T-shirts with anything American written on them, Reeboks, jeans jackets," Grilling said.

McMillin said he traded his Hard Rock Cafe shirt, his Hilton Head Polo Club shirt and some old jeans from fifth grade, with Whithead sold black market trading seemed to have a great interest on the Soviet economy.

"There was a big demand for foreign goods and American money," she said. "In the beginning we were stupid, but by the end of the trip we were negotiating and bargaining more with the traders. We were also kind of scared on the way back. We heard some stories about people who were caught."

Board tables 'tattletape'

By Peter A. Salinas Staff Writer

They're not sure exactly how many are missing, but they know people are taking a lot of books from the Grosse Pointe libraries without checking them out.

In a first step toward electronically protecting its public library book collection, the Grosse Pointe Board of Education Monday night discussed the purchase of 150,000 so-called tattletapes.

The $12,750 expenditure was tabled, however, until the board could get more facts on the matter.

In any case, because of the length of time required to install the tapes in the books, the purchase of the electronic sensing devices would be put off until future library expansion plans are determined. Cost of the sensing equipment — which is designed to set off an alarm when a book is removed from the library without check-out — would be about $30,000.

Gerda Bieltz, first assistant to the director and chief of Central Library, said a full physical inventory of books has not been made since 1978. She estimates the number of missing books at about 5,200.

Bieltz said that figure includes 4,150 adult and 1,100 children's books. She said there is no way of determining the actual figure without doing a very time consuming, labor intensive physical inventory.

"The actual number of missing books may be a lot more," she said. "It is definitely not less."

Board members questioned whether or not the technology might improve in the next few years making the newly purchased tapes obsolete.

Library director Charles Hanson was on vacation and did not address the board. With these and other questions raised by the board, Superintendent John Whittier suggested the matter be tabled.

Funds were set aside in the library's 1988-89 budget for the book security system purchase. Because both North and South high schools use a 3M system, the recommendation for the three public libraries was for the same system.

In his prepared recommendation to the school board, Hanson said books are very costly to replace, and even more so when considering the amount of staff time needed to do the reordering. Books may also be irreplaceable because some publishers are printing shorter runs of a title and the book goes out of print quickly.

Bieltz said that library officials haven't fully considered how they would handle the task of installing the tattletapes, but it is hoped adult volunteers would help with the job.

The board will consider the purchase again at its Sept. 12 meeting.

Pointer of Interest

William House

By Nancy Parmenter Staff Writer

You ask him what he does, Bill House is hard-pressed to limit himself to a one-word label.

"I usually just grin, because if I tell someone everything I do, they don't believe it," he said.

Keep asking, and he will answer that he's a designer first, then a teacher. "But I can't take one from the other. It depends when you ask me."

House is an interior designer. He and three partners work together as Creative Environments Plus ("we're the plus"), doing office and hotel interiors.

House teaches design at the Center for Creative Studies. He's also the head of the school's industrial design department.

House is a landscape artist. He works in a number of private and corporate collections. He's represented by Birmingham's Rubiner Galleries and has been doing one-man shows since he was 24.

House is a retired automotive designer for General Motors. He uses to play the clarinet. He's especially in lauding big bands.

House makes furniture — imaginatively. His "elephant" table stands on four sturdy orange-painted fence posts and is decorated with handpainted birds for a country atmosphere. When he's not building or collecting furniture, he might be found painting landscape murals on his walls.

"One thing about designers: They're always designing," he said. "They can't shut up." "When you have something to say, something happens inside. You ask, what can you say that you haven't said a million times before? Can you say it in a different way?"

Esquire Theater hearing rescheduled

By Margie Reins Smith Staff Writer

A condemnation suit by the city of Grosse Pointe Park against the Esquire Theater came before Wayne County Circuit Court Judge Susan Birman on Aug. 12. No action was taken on the matter.

The names of the defendants in the suit were corrected and a new hearing date was set for Aug. 29.

The defendants, Ervin Steiner, Eric Steiner, Deborah McLaughlin and the Esquire Theater, Inc., challenged the necessity of the Park's exercising its power of eminent domain to purchase the property.

The city of Grosse Pointe Park is seeking the purchase because the Esquire is nonconforming. It's located in an area zoned for general business, which does not include theaters. In addition, the city has said that the theater does not fit in with the Park's master plan.

Fred Steinhart, attorney for the defendants, said, "Dozens of buildings in Grosse Pointe Park are nonconforming. How many of these has the city condemned?"

The judge originally assigned to the case, Robert J. Colombo Jr., disqualified himself because he is related to a partner in the plaintiff's law firm. Judge Forman was then assigned to the case.

John C. Cashen, attorney for the Park, said that it is unlikely a decision will be made on Aug. 29. "The judge has up to 60 days to decide the matter," he said.

If the Park is successful, Cashen said, it may take possession, pay a portion of the compensation, and begin demolition immediately. If the theater owners want a jury trial to decide the amount of compensation, it could take a year or more until the matter is settled.

The Esquire's $1 admission policy has been a source of controversy in the community for more than a year. Residents have complained that the theater attracts rowdy teenagers. Park police reported an excessive amount of calls concerning trouble at the theater since the lower admission price was adopted.

Being an artist means taking chances, House says. "Somebody says, 'here are 30 canvases. There's nothing on them - go to it.' That's the scariest thing."

"You jump off the edge every time."
But jumping off the edge must be addictive. "Alan Rubiner's always laughing at me, because I'll tell him, 'this is the best thing I've ever painted; I don't want to sell it put a high price on it.' Then they sell it, we do another show and I say the same thing again."

As artist, designer and teacher, House says he feels he's putting himself on the line every time.

"You stand up in front of a class for the first time and they're thinking, 'Who is this clown?' When people criticize your work, you feel they're criticizing you personally. Each time, you have to validate yourself to another group of people."

Even when he was working full time for General Motors, House wore a lot of hats. He would come home in the evenings and work on his paintings. Vacations from work meant sketching trips to faraway places like Scotland, or places nearby overlooked by the unimaginative.

"One of my favorite places to sketch was Rochester - when there used to be countryside there," he said. "Now they've put a subdivision on the best spot. But I even pull off the expressway to sketch a patch (of landscape)."

His retirement from GM "cead him up to teach full time at CCS

- and to pursue other design interests. He has become involved in theories about color, both its psychological effects and the chemistry, and has introduced a CCS class in color marketing and design.

He's also working on commercial design projects. Creative Environments. Plus (House, a long-time associate, and two former CCS students) are designing River Place Inn from the ground up. A designated historical site, the building has been gutted and will be completely redone during the coming year. "We will be open for the (Detroit Grand Prix) races," House says.

The 111-room hotel will have 12-foot ceilings in the rooms, which will each be different - though all keeping the ambience of the early 1900s. "We're trying to get the flavor of that period without overdoing or forcing," he said. "That period (after Victorian and almost into Arts and Crafts) wasn't dowdy or old-fashioned - it was flamboyant and used lots of color."

The design team will do the whole thing, from the walls right down to the wall decoration and the bedspreads. Just choosing the fabrics took months. The furnishings and decoration will be a mixture of old and new, antique and reproduction, with the emphasis on good, clean design and hand-crafting done the old-fashioned way.

"The feeling of the touch of the hand is what I want," House said. "Care in detailing ... there's been no problem finding crafts people who know how to do the hand work, especially in Michigan. They aren't widely appreciated here, though."

As a designer for GM, House worked on car interiors. But industrial designers don't limit themselves to nuts and bolts. "Industrial designers design everything around you," House said. "The knives and forks you eat with, door handles, chairs, the knobs on everything. And it's all done as a package: the function, the appearance, the color. That's why I brought color in (at CCS) - I thought we were weak in it."

"I don't know who walks as many avenues as an industrial designer. You see him working on a chair and you think he's a furniture designer. But maybe he just did a pliers."

One of the good things about CCS as House sees it is the fact that most of the teachers also work outside in the real design world, as he does. That puts a little less emphasis on the ivory tower and a little more on real-life competition in the field, which he says is good for the students. Many students come to school leery of taking an artistic chance, feeling a pressure to express themselves as everyone else does - and they need to unlearn that.

"A lot of good artists are stifled by incompetent teachers," he said. "I see it especially in younger children. You see what they do when they're at home and what they do in school (where the emphasis is too often on conformity and such values as coloring inside the lines) - if you insist on enough that (the sky must be blue, they'll switch to another mode of expression where they can find approval ... children have a good sense of design and color."

"It takes time for people to build their confidence, to feel secure in making their own decisions and not produce something like everyone else's. That's what we do: help with the weak points and build the strong points."

"Do I like teaching? I love it."

A Peace Corps volunteer from Grosse Pointe looks back at a year of change — and growth — in Sierra Leone

By Gretchen Schumer
Special Writer

"Give a man a fish and he can eat for a day; but teach him to fish and he'll eat the rest of his life."

That's the credo of the Peace Corps and much the philosophy Pointer Barbara Haug follows as she spends a 27-month hitch as a volunteer in Sierra Leone, West Africa.

If you had asked Haug at one time what her post-college plans were, they probably would not have included time in the Peace Corps.

"In college," Haug said, "I envisioned I would probably continue in graduate school studying child psychology."

After college though, Haug put those plans on hold.

"I wanted to use my skills teaching and at the same time get a good global education for myself," she said. "And I saw the Peace Corps as the perfect place to do both."

At 24, Haug had never been on an airplane prior to her 28-hour flight to Africa. Nor had she explored the world any farther than Illinois.

"It was scary at first," Haug said, "but like anything new it was also exciting."

One of the more difficult aspects of Haug's Peace Corps experience was explaining to her family and friends her decision to volunteer.

"I had my reservations," Haug's mother said. "I thought of all the things that could go wrong and the distance, but I know Barb, and when she sets her mind to something she does it."

Haug's father was surprised by his daughter's plans. "I never realized she was interested in going places, but I was supportive and thought if she was accepted it would be a great experience for her."

It was over a year before Haug received notification of her acceptance into the Peace Corps. That was only the start of a series of pre-departure proceedings.

"The Peace Corps are rather selective," Haug explained. "Along with a rigorous personal interview I also had to pass a thorough medical exam and federal security clearance."

Eight references are required of applicants, and on average only one out of seven volunteers is accepted, she added.

After a six-week crash course in African culture, six days of in-state site training, and armed with her allotted three pieces of luggage, Haug headed to Africa.

That was a year — and a number of adjustments to the African way of life — ago.

"When I first arrived, communication was a great frustration for me. Africa has 13 languages and in my village three different (languages) are spoken."

Haug also learned that as for American volunteer, it is unwise to impose western notions of civilization on Africa's poor and primitive people.

"I left with three major goals," Haug said. "To share my culture with another country, learn about African culture, and help Sierra Leone's teachers develop their teaching skills." Accomplishing those goals was tougher than Haug had anticipated.

"I was pretty naive about poverty and Third World hunger. There is so much politics behind it. I also learned to slow down," Haug said. "I am a workaholic and over in Africa they move at a much slower pace. Our ways don't always work in African culture, and I've found that I must respect the culture for its acceptance."

Most people see problems such as no indoor plumbing or electricity or a language barrier as enormous obstacles, but Haug views them as opportunities. Haug says when you go into the Peace Corps you learn to make sacrifices.

"Your job is not to work for them, but with them," she explained. Before a volunteer arrives, it is up to the village to provide his or her housing. The type of accommodations vary from village to village. Surprisingly, Haug said, her quarters are quite spacious and comfortable. She enjoys a bedroom, parlor and a pantry and has managed to make herself at home. By African standards, she feels she lives well.

Haug had not signed up to go Africa with the intention of working off some weight, but since her departure she has dropped more than 30 pounds.

Probably the main topic of talk among other volunteers. The staple food is rice. A Sierra Leonean has not had a full meal unless they have included a plateful of rice. Soup, leaves and sometimes chicken or fish are added, but rice often is a meal in itself in our village."

"You go with what you have," Haug explained. "Our village has a lot of very good bread — but another village may not make bread so they eat more fruit and rice instead."

"You do miss the food," she said.

Haug will end her Peace Corps experience in July of 1989.

Ihrie is new Farms prosecutor

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

Woods resident Robert D. Ihrie was appointed by the Grosse Pointe Farms City Council in July to fill the vacant position of city prosecutor.

The position was made available when former city prosecutor Matthew Rumora was appointed by the Farms council to the vacant municipal judge position this June.

Ihrie is managing partner of Killebrew & Ihrie, a St. Clair Shores agency. He attended Wayne State for his undergraduate studies and graduated from the University of Detroit Law School in 1976.

"Almost since the beginning, much of my practice has been municipally oriented," Ihrie said. He is currently city attorney for St. Clair Shores and prosecuting attorney for East Detroit.

The role of city prosecutor is to prosecute all misdemeanors which occur in the city limits. That includes traffic, assaults, larcenies, ordinance violations, building code violations and criminal charges which involve one resident against another.

He said he has prosecuted literally "tens of thousands" of municipal ordinance violations, with his specialty being prosecuting drunk driving arrests and operating under the influence of liquor arrests.

Ihrie has co-authored a book titled "Michigan Drunk Driving Law in Practice." Published in 1986, it is, Ihrie said, "probably the most widely used resource book for attorneys in Michigan."

Ihrie said there are two reasons he has specialized in prosecuting drunk driving. One is his interest in municipal law; the second is more societal.

"The problem itself is a scourge on most suburban cities, and I find it rather gratifying to successfully prosecute these cases," he said.

Ihrie said that he is occasionally called upon to defend those charged with drunk driving in cities he is not affiliated with.

He said that this does not pose a problem.

"Whatever rights these people (either the victim or the person charged) have, you do what you can to see they get them," he said.

"A lot of people see the job of city prosecutor as getting a conviction at all costs, but the responsibility is to be sure that the defendant is fairly treated, gets a fair trial, and is convicted only if there is evidence to convict them," he said.

"If there's not enough evidence, I will dismiss the case." A dismissal saves the city time and money.

Ihrie said he will be prosecuting most of the Farms' cases, but another lawyer in his firm, Deborah O'Brien, will also be called upon. He said she is a "very experienced prosecutor."

A native of Grosse Pointe, Ihrie now lives in the Woods with his wife and three children.

He said he looks forward to his affiliation with the Farms, which he calls "a peaceful, quiet residential city where people want to continue to take advantage of their ability to walk and drive the streets in peace and not in fear of criminal activity."

Ihrie praised the people he has met who work for the city as being "extremely helpful" and looks forward to extending "the fine prosecutorial reputation that Grosse Pointe Farms has had in the past."

One of his first Farms assignments is to build up a case to prosecute Cracker Jax, a Mack Avenue saloon about which the Farms has received numerous resident complaints. Police said they have been keeping the establishment under surveillance for many months.

The hearing date has been set for Sept. 13.

Advisory council appointed in Park

Grosse Pointe Park's council approved the appointment of an 11-member citizen's council for the TIFA area of the Park at its Aug. 8 meeting.

The new citizen's council will advise the city council and the TIFA board concerning the implementation of TIFA's development plans.

According to TIFA Chairman James O'Dell, the new council is required by law, and members are required to live in the TIFA area.

The TIFA board is considering the purchase of some residential properties on Mack Avenue, O'Dell said, with the idea of creating parking lots. The zoning changes necessary for these require the existence of a minimum nine-member advisory council of area residents.

Those appointed to the citizen's council: Shirlee Miller, Ann Parker, Grace Crone, Glenn Woodside, Edward Somand, Claudie Somand, Shawn Tyree, Richard Case, James Leamon, Michael Murphy and Curt Murawski.

Adolescent suicides are up; experts offer prevention, tips

By Margie Reins Smith
Staff Writer

Adolescent suicide is increasing at an alarming rate.

"Do we know why?" Grosse Pointe psychiatrist Douglas A. Sargent, M.D. asked. "No."

Sargent recently directed the American Medical Association and the American Psychiatric Association's joint national study on physician's suicide.

He's a former director of the Wayne County Juvenile Court's clinic for child study and former medical director for Northeast Guidance Clinic. He's also a graduate of Wayne State University's law school, teaches family law and psychiatry at Wayne State University's law school, and heads the Neuroscience Consultation Group, a medical and legal consultation firm that deals with medical and legal problems, like suicide.

Adolescent suicide remains an enigma even to those most qualified to explain it.

Sargent cited statistics for the state of Minnesota, which he said were typical for the nation.

"Incidents of adolescent suicide for ages 15 to 19, are up 60 percent from 1984 to 1985 — and they continue to rise," he said. "The rate for children 10 to 14 has increased also." Males commit suicide four times as often. Women attempt suicide more. Men succeed more.

Melissa Duprat, public information coordinator for the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry, said that incidents of suicide for the age group 15-24 have risen dramatically over the last 30 years, but have leveled off recently.

In 1950, she said, 4.1 adolescents and young adults (ages 15-24) per 100,000 committed suicide. By 1980, the number had risen to 12.5 per 100,000. "Between 1970 and 1978," she said, "the suicide rate for that age group rose 41 percent, while the rate for the rest of the population remained stable."

Duprat said that suicide is the third leading cause of death for teens, after accidents and homicide.

"Speculation is that the reason is the increase of alcohol and drug abuse in that age group. Also, it's believed to be related to increased stress on teens and the changing structure of the family," she added.

J.P. Leleszi, D.O., medical director of adolescent mental health for Bon Secours Hospital said that teenage suicides are becoming more violent.

"It's very scary. More are using guns or hanging themselves, as opposed to using pills."

The biggest statistical jump in suicide attempts, he said, is at ages 12-13. "This is the age at which children develop the concept that there's an alternate way that will change their families. Thereafter, suicide incidents increase as age increases," Leleszi added.

Sargent offered some speculations as to why adolescents are redoubling their efforts to kill themselves:

- Publicity. Adolescents pick up and amplify trends, Sargent said. "Clusters of adolescent suicides occur around well-publicized bizarre suicides."

- In 1986, the New England Journal of Medicine published a study that observed that teen suicide rates (but not adult rates), increase following news coverage of suicides. The study speculated that imitation is a particularly teen phenomenon, even more so for girls than boys. The study concluded that any TV attention to suicide, no matter how non-sensational, has a lethal impact on susceptible teenagers.

- Increased pressure on adolescents to succeed coupled with diminished opportunities to succeed.

- The hardening of society's attitudes of disapproval of suicide. "Suicide rates go up when opportunities for rebellion and defiance of the social norm are suppressed," Sargent said.

Suicide is an attempt to solve some aspect of a relationship, he added.

"And almost every suicidal person wishes to be rescued. The attempt usually occurs in the context of a relationship with someone he cares about."

The formula — the prototype — he said, is someone who is consciously or subconsciously saying: "I'm suffering and you don't seem to care. I'll put my life at risk and give you an opportunity to rescue me. If you rescue me, it proves you care."

"And if you don't rescue me, my blood is on your hands."

Increasing knowledge of the meaning of pre-suicidal symptoms — and the ready access to treatment — should do a great deal to reduce the incidence of adolescent suicide," he said.

Some warning signs:

- In general, any change in a child's mood or behavior.
- Declining grades.
- Isolation.
- Looking sad.
- Giving lots of hints like: "When I'm not around . . ."
- Comments about suicide.
- Increased anger, which may be a mask for depression.

He said the best response for a parent who is concerned about an adolescent's suicidal thoughts, is to discuss it directly with the teenager and get professional help.

"It's folly to treat a suicidal person with a grab-bag of pop remedies. It's like treating cancer with a home remedy," Sargent said.

He emphasized the importance of recognizing a pre-suicidal state and taking prompt action. "Don't hold back. When in doubt, ask. It won't make a person more suicidal to ask him what's wrong."

Leleszi said that parents and teens who are worried about a potential teen suicide attempt should ask for help.

"There is no stigma to getting mental health care." He emphasized that a weak attempt at suicide should be considered just as if it were a serious attempt. "Don't make light of the fact the teenager took just two or three pills."

Leleszi said that there are some hopeful trends. Medical schools are providing better training for doctors in the recognition and treatment of depression. Also, he said, "Teens are helping other teenagers. Friends get help for their peers."

"It's tragic that the media is getting a bad rap for the (copy-cat) suicides," he said. "However, the public health aspect is that people are more aware of pre-suicidal conditions and may prevent some suicides."

Sargent described a typical scenario for an adolescent suicide attempt:

"An adolescent girl, the youngest child, reaches her last year of high school. She realizes that one of her parents is an alcoholic and the other is chronically depressed. She believes that when she leaves home, they'll either kill each other or go down the tubes. She sees no way to avoid leaving these two. So, she flips out. Her marks go down. She makes suicidal gestures. Sometimes they're just gestures. Some actually succeed."

Another scenario:

"A high pressure early admission student at a prestigious university gets to school and finds he can't keep up the pace and there's no honorable retreat. He overdoses on pills prescribed by his family doctor for stress."

Or:
"A student with a lifelong mood disorder is struggling to keep up his academic work; his love affair terminates."

"But this is a highly treatable disease," Sargent said. "The biggest problem is recognizing it." He said number of things are helpful:

- Recognizing the suicidal person's suffering.
- Enlisting the support of his family and friends.

Is the GOP losing clout in the Pointes?

Republican leaders who were interviewed for Peter Salinas' story in the Grosse Pointe News last week appeared to be confident that Vice President George Bush would be elected president but they also expect a hard fight.

That is an intelligent position to take at this early stage but there are a couple of straws in the wind that suggest that the Grosse Pointe Republicans may have some problems, even on their home grounds in the Pointes.

One is the fact that in the August primary election, Democratic Sen. Donald W. Riegle Jr. defeated his Republican foes in both the City and the Park, even though Riegle was unopposed for the Democratic nomination and Republican votes were split between the two former GOP congressmen, Jim Dunn, who won the nomination, and Robert Huber.

In addition, Democrats ran well in the Pointes in several other races. One reason for the strong Democratic turnout in the Pointes probably was the lack of GOP contests except for the U.S. Senate seat. But another reason no doubt was the popularity of Bruce D. Kennedy, the police chief and public safety director in the City, who challenged Sheriff Robert Ficano in the Democratic primary and, in fact, outpolled the sheriff in all five Pointes.

Despite the explanations, the strong races run by Riegle and Kennedy prove that the Democrats can muster votes in the Pointes in greater numbers than they often have in the past, and especially when they have strong candidates.

The other factor that ought to cause local Republicans some concern is that not a single one of the delegates to the GOP National Convention this year was from Grosse Pointe. In the past, the Pointes have provided many delegates to the GOP convention as well as state and national leaders and GOP public officials.

The lack of 1988 delegates from the Pointes is especially surprising in view of the fact that Bush carried the Pointes in 1980 when he won the presidential primary in Michigan and did well here and in the state in this year's delegate contests in GOP caucuses which helped him clinch the presidential nomination.

Barbara Gattorn, a Republican activist from the Shores, probably put it best for the Bush people when she said the election is Bush's to lose. However, the polls still showed him losing to Michael Dukakis, at least before the GOP National Convention from which Bush expected to derive major benefits.

Because both candidates have public records that are open to public inspection, it appears that this will be a rather nasty campaign with comparisons being made between their positions in 1988 and in earlier years and questions being raised by each side about the physical and mental fitness of the opposition candidate for the highest office in the land.

Even Bush, who has been critical of the policy differences he finds between Gov. Dukakis and his more conservative running mate, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, now finds himself under attack on the grounds he has sharply shifted position on such controversial issues as abortion, the United Nations and Reaganomics since he campaigned in 1980 for the presidency.

The New York Times reported last week that some Republicans also fear that President Ronald Reagan's efforts to help Bush may backfire. Reagan's vigorous and visible campaigning, or so the argument goes in the Times, could keep reminding voters why the president has remained such a popular figure and why Bush would have trouble living up to the president's performance as a national leader.

Whatever the value of that argument, a question arises over how much of Reagan's popularity can be transferred to Bush in view of the fact the president failed to help the GOP retain control of the U.S. Senate in 1986 even after an active campaign.

In short, can a lame duck still fly well enough to elect his chosen successor who so far is not as popular with the general public or with the party's right wing as the president himself has been?

The best of the alternatives

When the first of the combined editions of the Detroit News and Free Press appear this weekend, the Detroit area will get an idea of what the newly approved joint operating agreement will mean for the Detroit dailies and their readers.

In fact, readers began to learn what the JOA will mean to their pocketbooks when both dailies last Sunday announced increased subscription prices for newsstand and home delivered papers. Higher advertising rates also are scheduled. Those increases obviously mean losses for readers and advertisers but they do permit both papers to shift almost instantaneously from red to black ink by setting rates that will make them profitable. And that was one of the aims of the JOA.

The agreement approved by U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III also will cost the jobs of 500 to 1,000 full-time and part-time employees of the two papers. Most of the losses will come from the consolidation of the circulation, advertising and production departments but some jobs also will be lost in the news departments because of the joint publication on Saturdays and Sundays.

While the joint weekend publications will cost the public news and other services, approval of the JOA guarantees news competition five days a week and the expression of different opinions on the editorial pages seven days a week. Those are certainly better conditions than would have been available in a one-daily city, and they explain our support for the JOA. It is simply the best of the available alternatives, in view of the Free Press decision to shut down if the JOA were not approved.

Child care now a U.S. issue

Whether you're in Grosse Pointe Woods or on the campaign trail with one of the presidential candidates, you'll find that child care has become one of the hottest issues of 1988.

The Woods has been involved in controversies over home care businesses for several years and has sought unsuccessfully to write an acceptable ordinance to regulate them. Now it is involved in a lawsuit prompted by the fact that a state-licensed home day care operator has been shut down by enforcement of a city ordinance that bars residents from operating businesses out of their homes.

Whatever the outcome of the Woods controversies, both Vice President George Bush and Gov. Michael Dukakis have proposed their own solutions to the rising demand for more day-care centers to accommodate the children of working mothers.

There is no question about the need but there are sharp differences in the approaches being taken by the Republican and Democratic candidates. Bush proposes a tax credit of $1,000 for any child under four years of age in a family earning less than $10,000 a year, if there's at least one worker in the household. The theory is that these families will use the money to buy the day care they choose. The cost is estimated at $2.2 billion.

Dukakis, on the other hand, has endorsed the Democratic congressional plan, True, some weekly newspapers had hoped to get a larger share of the Detroit advertising market if they had had the opportunity to compete against only one Detroit daily. If they maintain their current advertising rates, they still can compete against the higher rates coming in the dailies. However, it is unlikely that any weekly would have had the resources to fill the news void that would have occurred in the Detroit metropolitan area if the Free Press had closed down.

Approval of the Detroit JOA, now the largest such combination in the country, does hint at similar agreements in other cities. Detroit now becomes the 20th city with a newspaper JOA and the approval here no doubt will encourage other applications. The trend toward JOAs and the shrinkage in the number of independent papers now seem to be economic facts of life for modern daily newspapers, whether we like them or not.

Consolidations and takeovers occur in other businesses, too. But we think the newspaper business is something special because one of its major aims is to serve the public interest, sometimes to the detriment of its own cash box. Unfortunately, consolidations often improve the profit margins more than they improve the quality of the newspapers.

In Detroit, we will defer judgment on whether the JOA will enhance or reduce the quality of the News or Free Press as newspapers until we see how well they do. Improvement in quality is not guaranteed under the JOA even though the continued existence and profitability of both papers now seem to be assured.

the $2.5 billion Act for Better Child Care Services for children up to age 12. Most of the money would go to communities to buy child care for low and moderate income families in the form of vouchers or state payments to providers.

Whether the Democrats succeed in passing their bill before the November election or not, the competing plans of the Republicans and Democrats for child care already make it a major issue in the campaign. With 50 percent of mothers with preschool children now in the work force, and that includes half of all married women with infants under age two, it is clear there is a strong interest in such legislation in the electorate, especially since the demand for day care facilities has far surpassed the supply and the cost has exceeded many families' ability to pay.

Under the Reagan regime, proposed social programs were usually sidetracked because of the enormous deficit. Now it appears that a social need will require some kind of federal program to help finance day care for the working poor and perhaps for the middle class as well.

One thing is for sure: Politicians in both parties have found that kissing babies is not enough to win success on the modern campaign trail. Now they have to make promises to many tiny constituents who won't even vote until the 21st century.

Group welcomes readers

To the Editor:
I would like to ask anyone who might be interested in joining a Great Books Discussion Program to know that we have a group which would welcome them.

We meet to discuss the writing of some of the great western philosophers, using selections from the series chosen by the Great Books Foundation, originated in Chicago some years ago. These selections range from short to medium in length, requiring from one to four hours of reading time.

Each selection is the only thing we discuss, without bringing in personal experience in reading or living. This means each individual commands the same respect whether he holds a doctorate or a grade school degree.

The object is to read carefully; to analyze with others the ideas which were presented and what their meanings might be... and how it stimulates other thoughts and applies to modern living.

Our discussions are pretty lively and always fun. Everyone does not have to come to the same conclusion. We do have a leader to help direct things, however.

Please call 884-8562 or 393-5253 if interested.

More research is necessary

To the Editor:
Your recent article, "Educators concerned over failure of special education mileage," demands an informed, intelligent and timely response. I have been a special educator in Wayne County for the past 20 years and can speak from first hand information regarding the plight of special education students enrolled in the county.

Presently, there exists great disparity between school districts in the WCISD area. Children in Grosse Pointe receive more and different services than children in Detroit. Students in Wayne-Westland areas receive more and different services than children in Grosse Pointe. Little, if any, attempt has been made by the present county administrators to bring equity of services to all districts in the county.

Eight years ago I served on a task force, meeting several times each week at the WCISD offices to work on a plan for implementing a new and accountable method of offering special education services. As in so many bureaucratic organizations, the plan still lays idly on some administrator's desk and no actions have been taken to rectify a grossly unfair system.

Contrary to the statements in your article that this issue was invisible—the issue was voted down by informed citizens who trudged to the polls to make their feelings known in an otherwise rather uninteresting election. Please note the small number of qualified voters making themselves known at the polls.

I consider myself to be an informed and active citizen who also happens to have a vital interest in special education. My suggestion to the WCISD and local administrators is to present an accountable statement, backed by positive reform, combined with a much needed change in the monitoring practices of WCISD before requesting that another item be listed on the next ballot for hoped for approval.

At present, if a school district is out of compliance with the state laws, there are no "teeth" to bring the district into compliance. Therefore, monitoring at the present time is a waste of money — money which would be well spent in adding quality and quantity of programming for needy students and their families.

Am I maturing or getting old?

There are times in every person's life when they must come to grips with certain truths they just don't want to face. Either they face them head on, and deal with them in a healthy manner, take the new-found truths and grow; or ignore them and stay where they are.

I'm at one of these points in my life. And I don't really know what to do.

I think I'm getting old. There are things I find myself saying and doing that I wouldn't have done, say, just a few short years ago. I don't know if I want to stay where I am, or grow.

I do things my mom does — like exchange recipes, ask friends' advice on how to decorate my apartment. I clip coupons and even call them "koopons" instead of "cyupons." And I now sort my laundry into whites and colors, instead of washing one extra-large washing-machine-motor-damaging load. And it is with deep regret I must confess that I (gulp) actually iron my clothes. This past week I even used spray starch.

And I do things my dad does — like watch golf. Can you think of a more adult pastime than watching golf? I watch bowling, too. I can give people flawless directions to wherever they are going, and can tell them how long it will take to get there. I begin stories with "When I was in college..."

While I'm busy turning into my parents, I think, "Hey, wait a minute!" I'm not so old I can't still enjoy Mighty Mouse. I'm not so old I can't remember the words to the bawdier songs I learned in my teens. (Although there aren't too many places I can find to sing them anymore, or too many people who like to hear them.)

I Say

I talk about work. I talk about clothing sales. I volunteered to babysit for my 1-year-old nephew — for free. I clean my bathroom every week — well almost every week. I leave things unsaid (although that may be hard for some to believe) and I even write thank you notes. Have I become an adult? Or is there hope for me?

I take naps now. It's not like my life is so exhausting. Is it because my body is getting older and can't take a whole day of walking and talking and breathing and sitting in front of a computer terminal anymore?

I never in a million years thought I would be so old I would say "No, I'm too tired to go out tonight, and anyway, I have to do the dishes." Or worse, "Excuse me, Miss Cashier, I think you made a mistake. The plums are 79 cents a pound, not 89 cents." I used to kick people who said things like that.

I let it slide when people in the "Cash only" lane write checks and when people sneak 16 items in the "15 items or less" lane. I used to ask those people if they could read.

I repeat myself and laugh at my own jokes. I untie my shoes before I take them off. I hang my clothes up. I button up my overcoat. I buy vegetables. I eat vegetables. I read editorial pages. I pay bills ahead of time. (Although I still staple, fold and bend the portion I'm supposed to return with my payment, especially if they tell me not to. If they want my money, they'll take it how I give it to them.)

I don't shop in stores where the sales clerks don't trip over each other to help me. I leave bigger tips to better waitresses. I flirt with waitresses (I used to kick my dad when he did that.) And I don't kick people anymore.

There may yet be hope for me. I read the funnies every day. I still call people "weenies." My favorite movie is still "The Wizard of Oz," but "Moonstruck" is edging its way in. I laugh at Larry, Moe and Curly, and always at Shemp. I get scared sometimes at night. I call my mom when I have problems. I can quote Dr. Seuss extensively, and I recently bought Cap'n Crunch cereal just for the figure of the Cap'n which was inside.

I'm in a state of limbo. Not quite adult, not quite child. It's a state which allows me to be whoever I want to be, whenever I want to be it. It's a nice, if not confusing, state of mind.

But it's a state of mind I like. I don't ever want to be so adult that I can't remember what it's like to splash through a puddle of water. Or to sing those bawdy songs and laugh. Even if no one else sings and laughs along, at least I know there's still a little child inside of me, which keeps me smiling, through the paying of my bills, and the planning of my future.

Pet of the Week

The Grosse Pointe News is pleased to present the first in a "Pet of the Week" series. Bear, above, is a 5-month-old terrier mix. His former owners were moving and couldn't take him. He is not completely housebroken, but is very willing to please and seems intelligent and alert. He's good with other animals and children.

If you'd like to participate in the Michigan Humane Society's Adopt-A-Pet program and take Bear home, visit the shelter at 7401 Chrysler Drive in Detroit from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday. Or call 872-3400.

Don't give me a headache

Saw a from-the-heart letter to the Farms police department from a recipient of a parking ticket.

A woman had received the ticket while she was out shopping. Seems she woke up that morning with a migraine headache. Her husband had called from the office and told her what he would like for dinner because it was his birthday.

The letter explained that there was no food in the house because the two had arrived home the night before from a week's vacation. Not only was the cupboard bare, but the unfortunate ticketee later burned the food she did manage to scare up. When she went out shopping for something to replace it, she got the ticket.

She didn't think that was very nice, but she paid her fine on time.

Rollin' in Grosse Pointe Rollerblades Club and Metro Ski and Sports will host a demonstration touring van at the club's next meeting on Monday Aug. 22, from 4 to 8 p.m. at 20343 Mack.

Grosse Pointe Park resident and club president Sarah Eatherly says the demonstration touring van comes from Rollerblades company headquarters in Minneapolis and is loaded with skates of all sizes and models.

Bush backer

At least one former Grosse Pointer attended this week's Republican National Convention in steamy New Orleans.

Mark Patrosso, 32, of Cupertino, Calif., is attending his first national convention as an alternate delegate for George Bush.

Mark, a former Woods resident, is a graduate of North High School and the University of Michigan.

He has been employed by Lockheed of Sunnyvale, Calif. for eight years and is executive vice president, Northwestern Region, of the California Young Republicans, Inc. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Patrosso of the Woods.

Smooth sailing

With both Lakeshore Road in the Farms and Mack Avenue in the Woods recently black-topped, I'm finding it difficult to stay below the posted speeds while I'm driving around the Pointes.

Not sure what's worse — paying for the wear and tear on my car's suspension or for the traffic ticket I'm bound to get for speeding.

Sorry about that

We ran a little item here last week that upset a few people and we want to apologize.

The item was about the misfortunes of one of our reporters who accidentally stepped into some wet cement.

In the article some of the information about the event the reporter was to attend was incorrect. We had only intended the piece to be a humorous anecdote, but apparently it fell far short of that mark.

We apologize to the members of the Lakeshore Optimist Club for the misunderstanding.

Yesterday's Headlines

Aug. 15, 1968—

The New York Times reported that the first three months of official conversations on Vietnam ended with the United States and North Vietnam locked in the same disagreement where each blamed the other for blocking progress.

Three city agencies of New York jointly told the Board of Estimates that the standards of some of the new subways were unacceptable. The agencies asserted that despite their criticisms and modification demands they were in substantial agreement of the state unit's proposal of the $1.27 billion construction program.

In a speech to black doctors, President Lyndon Johnson disagreed with his political critics who claimed that the nation was seriously ill and taking the wrong medicine to cure itself.

Johnson maintained that America is essentially healthy, and getting healthier. He said he believed that because remedies have shown to take hold, Americans should work harder toward the goals of getting better.

A record 33 Long Island railroad trains were cancelled by the line's top management. The cut made it clear that the railroad was counting on a federal court injunction to end a slowdown by union car men. There appeared to be no improvements in car availability for at least another week as negotiations continued.

Diseases related to narcotic addiction were shown to cause more deaths among New Yorkers than murder, suicide, accidents or natural causes.

The number of narcotic deaths in all age groups, 85 percent of them in one age group, totaled 450 in the first six months of the year.

Dr. Milton Helpem, the city's chief medical examiner, reported that 90 percent of narcotic fatalities were caused by an acute reaction to the injected substance.

In Grosse Pointe, many residents attended an airing of Bon Secours Hospital's request to expand its facilities. Spokesman for the hospital, Januarius A. Mullen, a member of the board of trustees, emphasized that the expansion would enable Bon Secours to support the most advanced techniques in medical care.

Mullen asked that the ordinance be amended to reclassify the block of property near Cad-ieux, Maumee and Notre Dame to residential terrace classification, which would permit the expansion. The Board of Appeals was presented with a petition of 1,160 signatures from Pointers wishing for an approval.

Only 12,823 of the registered voters in the five Grosse Pointes cast their ballots at the primary and special elections on Aug. 6, with Republican candidates for office outdistancing Democratic opponents by a wide margin.

Republican majority was shown in the race for Congressional representative when candidate Peter O'Rourke received 5,309 votes compared to 1,819 for Lucien N. Nedzi, Democratic incumbent, who was unopposed.

A study of comparative costs of educating pupils in school systems similar to Grosse Pointe's was revealed by Superintendent Dr. Theos Anderson. Anderson said that in a poll of 45 member districts, 28 had responded with estimated figures.

The study showed Grosse Pointe's system spent an estimated per pupil cost yearly of $943.32 which placed it 19th on the poll.

Flooded basements were the topic of a council meeting in the city of Grosse Pointe Aug. 12. At the meeting the city's engineers presented a report on the Fox Creek sewer overload situation that had residents of Lakeland, Lincoln, Washington, and Rivard mopping sewage from basements. Officials at the meeting explained to residents what caused the problems — sewers being cleaned — and what steps were being taken to remedy the situation.

Wouldn't you really rather shoot in Grosse Pointe?

It looked like a set in California.

Directors checking light and angles. Models sitting around looking... well, like models look. Director's assistants running around with clipboard in hand, making sure everything was in order. And the creator, walking around, doing nothing, but looking very important.

But it wasn't California. It was the Hill in Grosse Pointe Farms. You could tell by the curious throng that watched. And by the Farms police who redirected traffic as the project was shot.

The project was a commercial for the 1989 Buick Skylark, written by Park resident Bob Schneider, an account executive at the Troy-based advertising agency of McCann-Erickson.

The 30-second spot, titled "Little Limo," is designed to show how roomy and stylish the new Skylark is.

The spot opens at the Punch and Judy Building where a woman closes up her flower shop and says she has to go pick up her dogs which are being groomed. She extols the virtues of her Buick Skylark, as she drives "through the town" to 131 Kercheval Center. When she gets there, there is a white stretch limousine in which a toy poodle sits. She pulls up and two beautifully groomed afghans hop in the back, and she drives off happily ever after.

"We wanted a very upscale atmosphere, and Grosse Pointe has that," Schneider said.

Jim Weideman, a former resident who attended Brownell in 1950 and now lives in Dearborn and operates Academy Dog Specialist, a professional animal trainer, was brought in to handle the dogs.

And he should know how. He trained Old Yeller, (yes, that Old Yeller), Tramp on "My Three Sons," Duke, from "The Beverly Hillbillies" and the animal everyone always wanted to own — Arnold, the pig from "Green Acres."

Don't let him near your parakeets, though. He trained some of Hitchcock's birds.

The shooting took place over several days at both buildings. Grosse Pointe has been very accommodating and easy to work with, Schneider said. "The police have been really helpful, diverting the traffic."

Schneider says the commercial is scheduled to air in September during the summer Olympics.

Trip to China an eye-opener for special education director

By Peter A. Salinas
Staff Writer

Among over 500 special education directors from around the world at a conference in Beijing, China last month was one of Grosse Pointe's educators.

Claire Hunt, director of special education in the Grosse Pointe school district, received a federal stipend for the eight-day trip.

The conference which Hunt addressed was sponsored by the Council for Exceptional Children, an international special education organization.

Hunt said over 20 countries were represented at the meeting, and 30 percent of the delegates were from North America.

"The rest were from all over the world," Hunt said. "China has only recently recognized special education — since 1983. To day they have programs for the visually, mentally and hearing impaired, but no programs for emotional problems."

The Chinese are beginning to take more action in dealing with the special education needs of the country, Hunt noted, but programs are only available for students until they reach the equivalent of grade nine.

"There was a lot of sharing of ideas," Hunt said. "I gave a paper on the optimal length of the special education school year."

Hunt said the findings of her study into the duration of the school year for the handicapped were mixed.

"Some students, (young mentally impaired students) do well with a fuller school year," Hunt said. "Autistic children in later adolescence do well in a shorter school year."

Hunt said she found Hong Kong an alive and vibrant city.

"The trip itself was fascinating," Hunt said. "It took about 17 hours from Detroit to Hong Kong, which is an absolutely exotic island."

Hunt, who said she is usually unimpressed by major metropolitan cities, was excited by Hong Kong's vibrancy.

"It's the most exciting city I've ever been in," she said.

Compared to the neon and glitz of Hong Kong, Beijing is colorless, Hunt noted.

"It is amazing how much advertising has inculturated our society," she said. "And how much advertising has polluted our environment. When you get to Beijing you see no advertising, not even a sign telling you what a store or restaurant is. It is a colorless atmosphere."

If considering a trip to China in its spring, be aware that the Gobi Desert makes its presence known.

"The winds blow the fine sand and dust from the gray Gobi Desert," she said. "It covers the northern portion of the province like a pall. Everything is covered with a fine gray powder."

Hunt anticipated more of the Oriental gardens she had seen in Japan, but there was a lack of any flower gardens or lawns.

"The national institutions are extraordinary though," she said. "They are just awesome. It's humbling to see the preservation taking place at the Imperial Palace and the Summer Palace."

Hunt said directors of special education for U.S. Department of Defense educational programs were on hand for the conference.

"You really get a feeling of what is happening in education in other parts of the world from these people," Hunt said. "They have a great deal of insight into their programs and how they relate to the programs in their host countries."

Hunt noted that in Germany alone, there are 80,000 school age children who belong to families employed by the Department of Defense.

"Though these people work for the federal government their children do not come under federal special education guidelines," Hunt said. "The programs try to follow the guidelines, but they are not bound by them."

Hunt said she discovered that world-wide there is a big movement against the labeling of special education students. She said that in many countries there are stigma attached to students with any of the variety of labels.

"In China, where they are allowing couples to have only one child," Hunt said, "a family can give away a child that is mentally impaired so they can have another."

Though things aren't that drastic in Europe or other parts of the world, the labels are still there and people must be labeled before being eligible to receive state benefits, she added.

Russian people and by the consequences brought about by the country's lack of competition and free enterprise.

"Every restaurant is just called 'Restaurant,'" Greiling said. Nobody cared if you were served, or happy, because they didn't get any benefits from happy customers.

Travel reservations and hotel accommodations were also inadequate and inefficient, according to Wolter.

"In the grocery stores all the packages were panned," LoCicero said. "Shelves and shelves of gray. Not like American packaging."

Air conditioning and refrigeration were not common, the teenagers said. LoCicero described a grocery store where meat was displayed, unrefrigerated, on a fly-infested counter. "It was 90 degrees," she said. "Flypaper was hanging everywhere. So were flies."

She described the government department store they visited — supposedly the best store around.

"It was awful. There was nothing to buy. It was a humungous store, but it didn't have anything for sale that anybody wanted. Two styles of ugly shoes. Three choices of flowered house dresses. Underwear from the 1950s. People would wait in line just to buy something. Sometimes they just got in line and didn't know what they had lined up for."

Buildings were generally in poor repair, the students said. Most hotels, public buildings and stores had peeling paint, warped floors, rust, exposed pipes and bad elevators, even though they had been built in the last 20 years. Older buildings — those built before the revolution — were in better shape, and featured some aesthetic details.

They all said that in the Arabic regions and the Black Sea resort areas, conditions were generally better, cleaner, and the architecture more beautiful.

People were generally friendly, they said. "I was surprised by the lack of anti-American sentiment," LoCicero said. "You find rude people and nice people and people who ignore you here. It was the same there."

She said many of the American students carried photographs and high school yearbooks with them, which they showed to Russian students. "The kids reacted to us with envy," she said.

Lenin's presence is everywhere, they said.

"There is no figure in American culture that comes close to what Lenin is to Russians," LoCicero said. "Every moldable substance seems to have been made into the shape of Lenin. Every room has a picture of Lenin looking at you. He's almost like a religion."

Lenin's tomb was spooky, they agreed, like a haunted mansion. "It's dark. They keep you moving. His body is very well-preserved, and bathed in a reddish light. You don't dare giggle."

Wolter described a visit to a medical clinic that was included in the students' tour. He said the officials seemed to want to impress Americans with the computer room associated with the clinic.

"They wanted us to take pictures of the computer," he said. But the rest of the clinic was not impressive.

"This was an emergency clinic," Wolter said, "but it was only open on Thursdays — by appointment. It was unsanitary. A pair of bloody gloves was drying on the radiator." When an American pointed out the gloves, he said, the tour guide got mad and said they were the cleaning lady's gloves.

"In that Moscow clinic," said Greiling, "some of the people said they hadn't even heard about AIDS. There's no public information."

All five teenagers said their visit to the Soviet Union helped them to appreciate their own country, but they'd definitely like to go back.

"I would like to learn the language before my next visit," Whitehead said. "It was so aggravating to hear people talking — and know they were talking about us — and not know what they were saying."

Glasnost is evident. Definitely. They all agreed that Russia is in the midst of change. "It will be a different place in 10 years," LoCicero said.

Three Grosse Pointe teenagers, Keith Wolter and Christiana Greiling, seniors at Grosse Pointe South, and Lissa LoCicero, a 1988 South graduate, visited the USSR recently.

Dog days of summer bring disease

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

A local veterinarian is warning dog owners to be on the lookout for symptoms of an intestinal virus that can prove devastating to dogs.

It's called corona and is being compared to the outbreak of parvovirus which killed hundreds of dogs in the state in 1980, according to Richard Nurse, D.V.M., of the Moore Veterinary Hospital in St. Clair Shores.

"We're seeing a new viral diarrhea and intestinal infection which is very contagious," Nurse said. "It's affecting dogs of all ages, although puppies are going to be more prone, because their immune systems aren't as fully developed yet."

The history of the corona virus is that it is associated with parvo and often infects a dog along with other viruses, according to Larry Herzog, D.V.M., of the Grosse Pointe Animal Clinic.

"In most cases it's high morbidity, but low mortality," Herzog said.

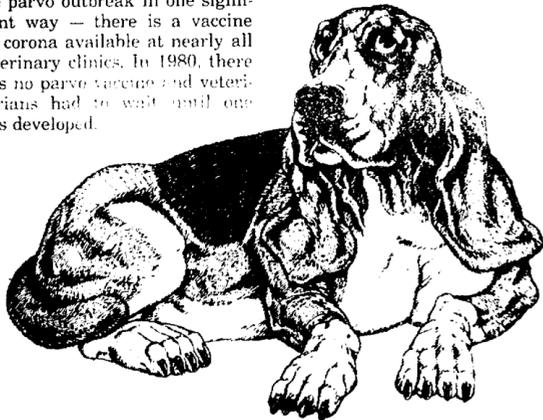

Symptoms of the corona virus include vomiting, watery or bloody diarrhea, slight fever, lethargy and loss of appetite. Because the virus progresses rapidly, dogs showing these symptoms should be examined immediately, Nurse said.

Many dogs become dehydrated due to the diarrhea and vomiting, but when they drink, they vomit that up, so they need to be pumped full with fluids and nutrition, and therefore sometimes need to be hospitalized for a few days, Moore said. The symptoms are also treated to make the dogs comfortable.

He said it is transferred in stool a dog might encounter while on a walk, although he said many owners said their dogs have not been outside their yard and have still come down with it.

Moore said that this is unlike the parvo outbreak in one significant way — there is a vaccine for corona available at nearly all veterinary clinics. In 1980, there was no parvo vaccine and veterinarians had to wait until one was developed.

At one time there was a vaccine for corona, however, that vaccine caused more cases than it cured, Herzog said. A new vaccine has been available for a short time.

Herzog said although he isn't seeing too many corona cases, he is seeing an increase in parvo, and a noticeable increase in distemper.

"Now that we're starting to get some damp weather, the mosquitoes are coming out," Herzog said. The heartworm is transferred to dogs through the blood, often by mosquitoes.

Parvo is now included in the annual vaccination given to dogs, Moore said.

"It is wise to vaccinate," Moore said.

Herzog said dog owners should be on the lookout for the normal things, too, like fleas and heartworm. He said in the summer people should watch their dog's exposure to wild or stray animals, and have stool samples checked regularly, have a spring blood test for heartworm and use a flea collar or powder.

Herzog said that just like people, dogs will catch various diseases, but keeping an eye out for any symptoms of sickness, and prompt treatment, will keep anything too bad from developing.

Student Spotlight

Lisa Wiegand

Each week in this column, we will focus on the work of a student. It can be a poem, a drawing, a short story, a picture of a scientific experiment or a wood working project, a book review.

The following was written by Lisa Wiegand who completed the third grade at Mason School. Her parents are Dan and Kathleen Wiegand of Grosse Pointe Woods.

I Never Thought I'd Miss My Sister

I never thought I'd miss my sister, because she would spend the night at her friends and babysit a lot. But it's different now.

It all started four years ago when she got a pen pal at school. This pen pal asked her to come to Australia for two months.

My sister decided to give it a try. She had to raise a lot of money. Australia is halfway around the world and that is far for a 14-year-old to go.

We took her to the airport and when she went to get on her plane, I gave her a big hug and said goodbye. We watched her take off. We ran from window to window to get a better view of the plane leaving. Finally we couldn't see her anymore.

She'll live on a ranch and go to school there. She just finished the ninth grade here, but in Australia, she will be halfway through the tenth grade. It is winter over there and they are half a year ahead of us in school now.

I never thought I'd miss my sister because I looked at it as I would get my own room to myself, but I would rather have my sister back. I miss my sister, but I never thought I would.

And eat ice cream and cake.

Jennifer Lynn Pasquinelli is 7-years-old today, Aug. 18. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Jeffrey Pasquinelli of Grosse Pointe Farms, Jennifer will be in the second grade at Richard Elementary School this fall.

My New Cat Got Lost

One Christmas Eve I got a cat. I was so happy I cried. I cried so much that the house was filled with tears!

But there was no sign of my cat. The window was opened — my cat must have jumped out the window! I said to myself, "He's lost." I was so sad.

My family looked everywhere, even in the desert. We had to go a long, long way and my cat wasn't in the desert. Or anywhere. He had been missing for two weeks so I was really worried.

My Dad put an ad in the Grosse Pointe News but nobody had found my cat. Now he had been missing for a month! So me and my family went to outer space. There was a cat. To see if the cat was a space cat or my cat, I said, "What's your name?" The cat said, "My name is Spaceroones." I said to my family, "No, that is not my cat."

So we went home. To my surprise, there was my cat. Right on the front step! We had a big celebration because my cat had been found after a year.

South to begin registration August 29

Six Grosse Pointe South counselors will be available during the registration period Aug. 29-Sept. 1 to accommodate student schedule changes.

The special four-day schedule change period coincides with the registration schedule for all students: Monday, Aug. 29, seniors; Tuesday, Aug. 30, juniors; Wednesday, Aug. 31, sophomores; and Thursday, Sept. 1, freshmen.

Students whose last name begins with "A" through "G" will register from 8:15 to 10 a.m.; and "O" through "Z" from 10 to 11:

30 a.m., and "H" through "N" from 1 to 2:30 p.m. on each of the dates above.

Registration will be closed from 11:30 to 1 p.m. for lunch.

"If schedule changes are necessary due to failures, summer school work or errors not previously detected, students are urged to make the revisions immediately following registration as it may be difficult to meet requests after the beginning of school," said Russell P. Luttinen, South assistant principal — student services.

Kirby, a blue and gold mackaw visited with Air and Space Day Campers and was one of the week's highlights.

It was a week-long adventure that took them to the far reaches of the solar system, to the jungles of South America and back home again.

Fourteen Grosse Pointe students studied the many intricacies of flight, both in the air and outer space, in a week-long Air and Space Day Camp offered by the Living Science Foundation in cooperation with the Grosse Pointe Department of Community Education.

Students got to meet Snuggles, a six-foot long boa constrictor; Dubin, a salmon crested cockatoo; and Kirby, a blue and gold mackaw. Through encounters with these animals students learned about their methods of locomotion and how they live.

Science Interpreter Steve Brewer made sure each student had a chance to personally meet these and other animals with the help of Susan McQuade, a second grade teacher from Warren.

Campers learned how astronauts survive in space, made mock satellites and viewed the stars in the Living Science Starlab Planetarium.

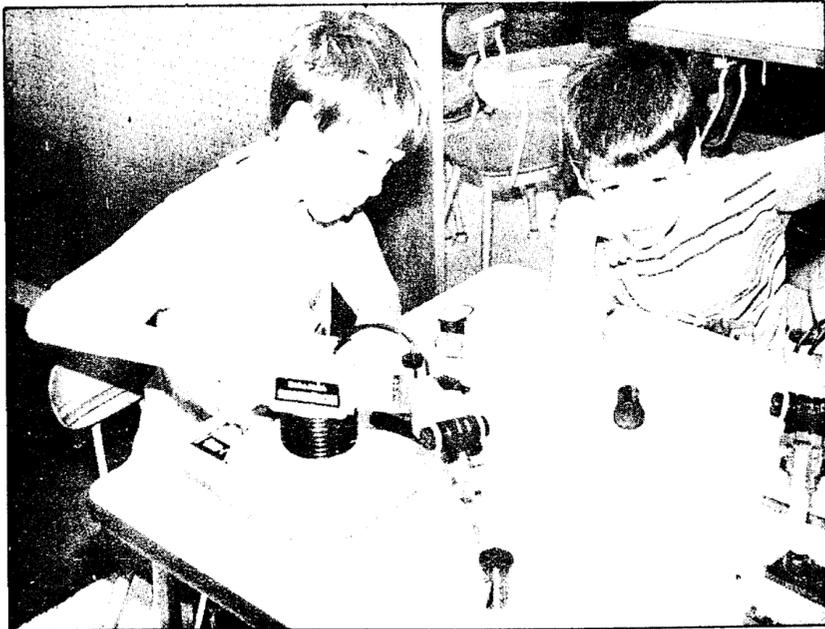

Culminating the week's activities each student launched his own model rocket which they had helped build.

The foundation is a non-profit, non-governmental science education organization.

Campers ended their week-long studies with a rocket launch in the play field at North High School. Each student got to send a rocket aloft.

Emily Rainey, 9, gets a close look at Sheldon, a red-footed tortoise. Emily said she had a great time at the air and space day camp, because it was interesting and she got to play with animals.

All the students helped create a space drawing of Jupiter and its moons. From left are Mike Grigg, 7, Andrew Krag, 7, and Greg Charvat, 8.

Local students represent Michigan in pageant

If you're looking for the quintessential Young Miss of America ... look no further than right here in Grosse Pointe.

Young Miss of America, a national competition in scholarship, poise, personality and grooming for girls between the ages of 8 and 20, has two Grosse Pointe students representing Michigan at the national level in Hawaii, Aug. 22-29.

Alexis Collins, of Grosse Pointe, a senior at University Liggett School, is Michigan's Young Miss in the 17-20 age category, and Angela D'Aleo, of St. Clair Shores, a junior at Our Lady Star of the Sea, will represent the state in the teen category, ages 13 to 16.

Their state-level prizes included scholarship money and cash awarded to their school libraries. Both will receive free accommodations and expenses in Hawaii, although they're responsible for their own travel expenses. D'Aleo's mother, grandmother and 17-year-old brother will accompany her. Collins' mother will go with her.

Vivian LaCour, national director of the Young Miss pageant, said the contest is in its third year.

"The first year was just in California," she said. "The second year included Arizona and Nevada as well as California. This year we went national."

LaCour said 98 contestants will travel to Hawaii. "They'll represent every state except Alaska," she said.

Collins is still looking for sponsor assistance to help her get to Hawaii for the nationals. She's also relishing her win at Ann Arbor.

"It was fun. A well-run pageant," Collins said. "Personality was important; it wasn't based on beauty."

Collins won a $1,000 savings bond; D'Aleo won a $500 savings bond. Both received $200 for their school libraries, expense money during their stay in Hawaii, a crown, banner, scepter and trophy.

Collins was a semifinalist last May in the Miss Beautiful Posture competition. The two girls met when they competed in April at the Miss Michigan Teen USA in Novi. Both were semifinalists.

Collins said she went to Ann Arbor to watch D'Aleo compete in the Young Miss of America pageant and found out there were very few entries in her age category. She decided to enter the contest at the last minute.

"I went across the street and bought a dress and stockings and high heels."

D'Aleo said her mother signed her up for the competition about two months ago. "There were about 20 girls in my category," she said. "I think it was a great experience. Every girl should be in at least one pageant. It gives you confidence. I learned a lot. Everybody was really nice. And I made a lot of new friends."

D'Aleo said she competed in three required categories: evening gown, a personal interview and a production number. She also entered four optional categories — won three of those and received an honorable mention in the fourth.

Alexis Collins

She earned an honorable mention for her essay on why she is proud to be from Michigan. In addition, D'Aleo won the Miss Photogenic award and two more awards for selling the most ads for the program and for selling the most tickets to the pageant.

Collins said she competed in the evening gown portion of the pageant, the personal interviews, the production number, and the optional bathing suit competition that is only for the older contestants.

The judges were two mothers of Young Miss of America contestants from other states and the owner of a modeling agency. The evening gown competition, D'Aleo said, was for choice of a gown — and poise while walking on stage.

The interview, she said, was a one-on-one conversation with the three judges. "They asked about my family, my volunteer work, my favorite club. One of the questions was advice I'd give to my little sister if she was in the preteen (portion of the) contest."

Collins said in her interview, she was asked why she would want to be Young Miss of America.

"I said I wanted to be a role model for younger teens," she said. "I don't drink or smoke. I think younger teens should know how to be themselves, and feel good, and get respect."

D'Aleo said they all had to participate in the production number, choreographed to "Victory" by Kool and the Gang. "We wore jeans skirts and they gave us matching shirts."

D'Aleo will be 16 this week. She'll be a junior at Our Lady Star of the Sea in September and plans to attend Northwestern University, major in communications and become a newscaster.

English is her favorite subject. She said she's not particularly athletic, but plans to join the school's swim team next season. She was president of Star's Pep Club, treasurer of the dramatics and forensics group, and an officer of her 49-member class. She also participated in the Spanish Club and the choral group.

"I was a hugger in the Special Olympics too," D'Aleo said.

Collins has a 3.17 average and is a member of ULS Spanish Club and choir. She's in accelerated math and biology. She has done volunteer work at Casa Maria, has been treasurer of her church youth group.

Angie Marie D'Aleo

She's also the number-one high jumper for the last three years and holds a school record in the sport. She has done some modeling and has appeared in Seventeen Magazine, Glamour and Detroit Monthly.

She hopes to attend the University of Michigan and become a doctor.

Collins and D'Aleo are making personal appearances around Michigan to promote the Young Miss of America competition. They appeared last Friday at two fundraisers in the Detroit area.

"We did registrations and passed out flyers and programs for the Bed Race in Greektown for the Muscular Dystrophy Association," Collins said. "One of the riders couldn't make it, so we rode on a bed too," she said.

They also attended a fundraiser for the Capuchin Soup Kitchen the same evening.

The best thing about the contest?

"Winning," D'Aleo said. "The excitement and the anxiety was tremendous. I broke down crying when they announced the first runner up and I realized I had won."

How to stop objectionable mail from being delivered to your home

By Margie Reins Smith
Staff Writer

Suppose you got an advertisement in the mail that began, "Hello. My name is Monique and I love sex ... Call me at this number ..."

Suppose you don't want to receive any more ads from Monique.

Residents who want to stop sexually oriented advertisements have several options, according to Farms resident Fred Van de Putte, postal inspector for the U.S. Postal Inspection Service.

"There are two types of sex material," he said. "One is called pandering. The material is not obscene itself. The Monique ad is an example of this. It gives a number for phone sex."

The other type of sexually oriented advertisements, he said, deals with specific descriptions and/or pictures. Explicit and descriptive.

"Both types can be stopped," he said.

He pointed out that advertising — using the U.S. mail — is legal. The responsibility for unsolicited sexually oriented ads rests with the mailers of the ads.

"If a person doesn't want to receive this type of ad," he said, "he should go to his local post office and fill out Form 2201, the application for listing pursuant to 39USC3010."

The customer files the application of the two-part form and keeps the instruction portion with an identifying serial number.

"Anyone can file on his own behalf or for children under age 19 who reside with him."

After filing the application, the person's name is placed on a list of those who do not want to receive sexually oriented ads. The company sending the ads is responsible for stopping the mailings. Thirty days later, if the resident is still receiving the ads, the company is in violation of the law.

In Michigan, as of July 5, 12,936 parents and 5,276 children have been placed on the industry-wide list.

Van de Putte said that the U.S. attorney deals with flagrant violations of the law.

Another form, 2150, is for pandering advertisements. It is directed at a particular company, he said. Since Oct. 1, 1987, 2,938 Michigan residents have filed these forms.

If, after 30 days, the resident still gets the offensive material, Van de Putte said he must submit the entire piece of mail — after opening it — to his local post office. The resident must sign the offensive envelope, indicate when he received it and present his identification number from the original application.

"The postmaster sends the complaint to the regional chief inspector in Chicago," said Van de Putte, "and if enough complaints come in, the inspector will investigate and present evidence to the U.S. attorney. Penalties for willful violation are a fine up to $5,000 and/or five years for a first offense. For the second and subsequent offenses, it's $10,000 and up to 10 years," he said.

An administrative remedy, he said, is the refusal of the postal service to deliver mail to a company that is violating the law.

"We could cut off his business. As businessmen, these people don't want to advertise to those who aren't interested in their product.

"This list is a way for him to cull his mailing list. It's good business not to advertise to those who don't want the product."

Van de Putte pointed out that manufacturers of sexually oriented products have the right to use the mails, but must follow regulations.

He said that legislation is pending in the House for a law declaring it illegal to send any unsolicited sexually oriented ads to anyone.

Woods ambulance service OK as is

The city of Grosse Pointe Woods received some good news recently which means it won't have to go to the taxpayers for a half-mill increase to support its ambulance service.

In January, the city was told by the Detroit East Medical Central Board that it could not operate its advanced life support ambulance service at its current staffing levels. To operate an advanced life support service the board said the city needed at least two advanced emergency medical technicians.

While the Woods has four personnel on the scene at each run, only one is designated as an advanced emergency medical technician.

The Woods is the only city in the area with the advanced service and it is nearly five years old.

The city had decided to put a half-mill increase on the ballot this November which would have raised $140,000 — the estimated cost of the additional staff.

But a recent ruling by the Division of Emergency Medical Services of the State Department of Health said the local board was overstepping its authority, according to Woods City Attorney George Catlin.

"(The board) was informed by the state that (it) did not have the authority to do that," Catlin said.

George Freeman, Woods mayor, said "It's certainly good news for the city. That way we don't have to put the question to the taxpayers."

The $140,000 — which had already been worked into next year's budget — will most likely be put in the contingency fund to be used for any over-runs and emergencies, Freeman said.

Ups and downs

The Cottage Hospital parking deck was topped out last week and, as is tradition in the United States, an American flag and a Christmas tree were put on top. That means the erection phase of the building is completed.

Personnel director David Mitchell (left) and Greg Vasse, executive vice president of Cottage were on hand to watch the festivities. Below, the house next door to the parking deck, the last one on the block, was torn down after it was acquired by the hospital. Vasse said the construction is right on schedule and expects the garage to be opened in November, as was predicted before the project began.

Detroit man beaten by three men

A 32-year-old Detroit man suffered a crushed jaw and broken ribs at the hands of three men who apparently came to the rescue of the man's wife.

The man and his 26-year-old wife were having an argument on Kercheval Avenue near Wayburn at around 1:44 a.m. Aug. 10, when, according to Park police, he grabbed her by the throat and pushed her against a wall.

Three men saw what was happening and intervened on the woman's behalf. When the victim told them to leave, they punched and kicked him.

The man was taken to Bon Secours Hospital where he was treated for his injuries.

Park police said no charges are pending against the victim for the attack on his wife. The three assailants, all described as being in their mid-20s, are being sought on a charge of aggravated assault.

Board gives non-contract wage hike

Non-contract hourly and salary employees of the Grosse Pointe School System received a 6 percent wage hike Monday night from the board of education.

Employees, such as lunchroom personnel, writing aides, community education instructors and supervisors and substitute office workers, nurses and teachers, received an across-the-board wage hike.

The employees had not received any salary adjustment for the 1988-89 school year.

The board approved the measure unanimously.

Support group will meet

The Alliance for the Mentally Ill-Eastside, a support group for families with a mentally ill member, will hold a general meeting Monday, Aug. 22, at 7:30 p.m. at the Cottage-Belmont Nursing Center, 19840 Harper in Harper Woods.

Barbara Simons, Detroit-Wayne County Community Mental Health Board, will show a video and talk about the Fair-weather Lodge program.

Relatives and friends of the mentally ill are invited to attend. For more information, call 839-9826 or 884-9005.

MADD plans awareness programs

By Gretchen Schumer
Special Writer

The Wayne County Chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving, has planned several events for the end of summer and beginning of fall to create public awareness of the facts and issues associated with drinking and driving.

Barbro Lynton, a Farms resident and president of the Wayne County Chapter of MADD, said a majority of the programs are aimed at volunteer recruitment.

Kicking off the activities will be a booth at the State Fair from Aug. 26 through Sept. 5. The booth will be in the Michigan Mart building next to the State Police booth. Volunteers will be on hand to answer questions and distribute literature.

Lynton said besides pamphlets and posters there will be an opportunity for people to sign up for a special program called "Drive For Life."

Sponsored by Volkswagen, "Drive For Life," scheduled for Sept. 3, will be a day of awareness on which people will be asked to abstain from alcohol and have a day free from drunk driving fatalities.

Lynton said Sept. 3 has a significance. "We chose this day due to the fact that it is the Saturday before Labor Day and a lot of people will be partying. We would like to make it a safe holiday and hope people will sign a pledge promising not to drink that day."

Lynton said she feels the public has many misconceptions about the effects of alcohol consumption.

"Some people," Lynton said, "treat drinking a couple of beers in a light hearted way, but it's just as harmful as mixing hard liquor with getting behind the wheel. Combining any kind of alcohol with driving is dangerous."

There will be a Volunteer Opportunity meeting from 7 to 9 p.m. Sept. 27, at the Memorial Church of Christ, 35475 Five Mile in Livonia. The meeting is for persons interested in volunteering for the organization.

Lynton and Painters Joe and Irene Walker are active locally with MADD and serve on the organization's speaker's bureau.

According to Lynton, the speaker's bureau offers an array of services.

"We get a lot of requests to go out to many schools, civic and religious groups to educate them about alcohol abuse, and we'd like to go out more if asked."

MADD is offering speaker's bureau training on Tuesdays from Oct. 4 to 25 at the Memorial Church of Christ.

The program's main objective is to have volunteers learn about the effects of alcohol on the body and the ability to drive, as well as the laws related to drunk driving.

A judge will be on hand along with a probation officer to discuss how the legal system works. Wrapping up the workshops will be technique strategies on speech presentation.

Two other areas in which MADD involves itself are through support groups and a victim's service.

Support groups are staffed by volunteers who aid victims of alcohol-related accidents. Lynton said many who have lost a loved one due to drunk driving need to verbalize their feelings and air their anger.

Victim's service allows volunteers to act as a support system to those who have had an accident as a result of their drinking.

Lynton said the volunteers are trained in court monitoring so they can become more aware of how to deal with the legal issues of drinking and driving.

Volunteers are needed in a variety of areas. For more information, call 422-MADD.

WINNERS CIRCLE

BY LAURIE KIPP

MPL

Tickets for the Michigan Lottery's "Lotto" game went on sale August 14, 1984, with the first drawing conducted on August 25. The following talks about the evolution of the game during its first four years.

Q: How does the current Super Lotto game differ from the original Lotto game?

A: Players in the current game are challenged to match six, five or four numbers from a field of 44. In the original game, the field was comprised of 40 numbers.

Q: Why was the change made?

Q: How is the Super Lotto Jackpot determined?

A: Like other parimutuel games, Super Lotto prize pools are based on the amount played for each drawing. The 25 cents of every sales dollar assigned to the jackpot prize pool forms an investment in which all the principal and interest combine to pay winners a much larger total over a 20-year period. Players who match five of the winning numbers share the second prize pools comprised of 8 cents of each dollar spent on tickets. The third prize pool, shared by all who match four numbers, is paid from 12 cents of each dollar.

Q: Is there a minimum jackpot prize in the game?

A: Super Lotto has a minimum jackpot of $1.5 million compared to $1 million in the original game. A "rollover" when no one matches all six winning numbers keeps the jackpot growing until it is won.

Q: What have been the average Super Lotto Jackpot shares?

A: Through late July, 1988, the average Super Lotto jackpot share was over $3.9 million.

Q: What was the largest Super Lotto jackpot?

A: On January 29, 1988, a jackpot of nearly $29 million was hit by five players, with each receiving nearly $5.8 million.

Q: What have been the average second and third prize shares in the Super Lotto game?

A: As of late July, 1988, the average Second Prize share was $2,515, while the average Third Prize share was about $90.

Didn't get away

Grosse Pointe resident Jon Hartz caught this 54-inch, 37-pound sturgeon from the Detroit River in Canadian waters at a place called Sturgeon Hole. Hartz was fishing with Canadian guide Andy Soulierre when he hooked into this monster. He said he was fishing for walleye with worms on lead-headed jigs when he "just got lucky." He fought it for 50 minutes on eight-pound test line. While this looks like a big fish, it is nowhere near a state record. The largest sturgeon caught in Michigan weighed 193 pounds. To receive a Master Angler award through the state of Michigan, a sturgeon must weigh 70 pounds. Hartz said his wife Susan was on hand to witness the event. He plans to have it mounted.

Shores voters to decide village charter changes

By Margie Reins Smith
Staff Writer

Voters in Grosse Pointe Shores will find five Village charter amendments on their November ballots.

According to Mark McInerney, assistant corporation council for the Village, the amendments are necessary to update the 57-year old charter. "The 1931 charter was a good one, but it has gotten out of date," he said.

An overall review of the charter will continue, McInerney said. "The five proposals represent the most important changes that are necessary."

Here's a look at the amendments on this fall's ballot in the Shores: Proposal I:

Nominating and filing petitions for elective office.

Currently, petitions for candidates must be filed at least 10 days before the election; written acceptances must be in at least eight days before the election. The proposed change is for filing 28 days before; acceptance 25 days before.

Proposal II:

Enactment of ordinances.

The 1931 charter requires publishing or posting of entire ordinances within 72 hours of passage. The effective date of new ordinances is ambiguous, McInerney said. The new proposal requires ordinances to be published 15 days after they're passed; effective upon publication. Publication may be the entire ordinance — or a synopsis.

Proposal III:

Punishment of ordinance violations.

This proposal, McInerney said, would bring the Village charter in line with state law. Punishment for ordinance violations currently may include fines up to $100; 90 days in jail; or both. The proposal raises the fine to $500.

Proposal IV:

Technical corrections of outdated portions of the 1931 charter.

"These are a number of technical matters, in the ordinance area," McInerney said, "that must be changed, to catch up with state laws in the last 50 years. They may not even be necessary, because they're overridden by state law. We're waiting for recommendations about these from the state attorney general's office."

"But I think we should update the charter anyway," he added.

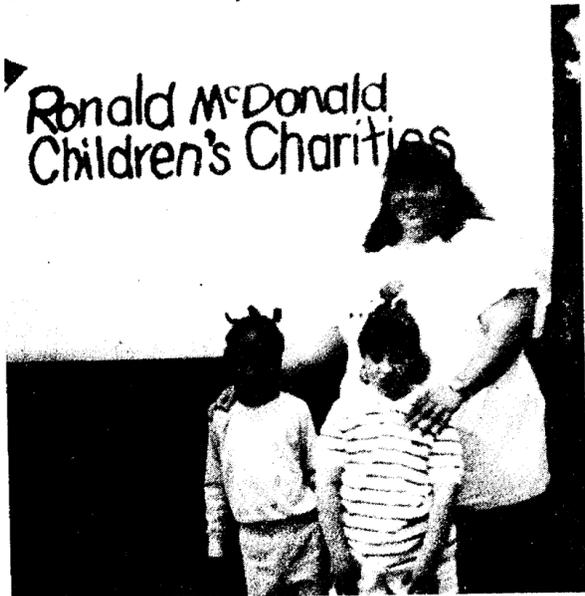

Proposal V:

Entering contracts.

The current charter requires bids and specifications for all contracts over $1,000. The proposal raises this requirement to $10,000.

It also includes a provision for the Village superintendent and president to enter into contracts without bids and specifications, in cases of emergency.

Foundation for Exceptional Children gets new van

When the Foundation for Exceptional Children in Grosse Pointe needed to replace its rundown station wagon, Ronald McDonald Children's Charities (RMCC) came to the rescue with a new van.

The van will be used to transport 25 to 30 physically and mentally impaired adolescents, ages 15 to 19, as well as 25 preschool aged children from Wayne, Oakland and Macomb counties. It was presented to foundation Director Mary Kennedy.

RMCC was founded in 1984 in memory of McDonald's founder Ray A. Kroc and awards grants to not-for-profit organizations helping children. In addition to awarding grants to individual organizations, RMCC also helps support Ronald McDonald Houses throughout the United States. These houses provide a "home away from home" for parents of seriously ill children near hospitals where the children are being treated.

The Foundation for Exceptional Children was founded in 1954 to provide year-round recreational and educational programs for the physically and mentally impaired children. The foundation specializes in early intervention for the young handicapped.

Christ the King Lutheran offers bible school, preschool

By Margie Reins Smith
Staff Writer

This is the thirteenth in an occasional series about Grosse Pointe churches.

The Rev. Joseph Fabry, senior pastor of Christ the King Lutheran Church, 20338 Mack Ave., Grosse Pointe Woods, said that people use Farmer Jack's as a landmark when locating the church.

"Most people say, 'The church next to Farmer Jack's,'" he said, with a smile. "We'd like it better if they'd say, 'I go to a grocery store next to Christ the King Lutheran Church.'"

Fabry said that Farmer Jack is a good neighbor. The parking lot behind the store belongs to the church, but Farmer Jack rents the space. And the store's ready nearby supply of ice cream and toppings occasionally comes in handy.

In 1976, for instance, as part of the city-wide celebration of the nation's bicentennial birthday, the church held a huge, two-day ice cream social. The event attracted more than its organizers anticipated: 900 people the first day and nearly 600 the second day. Quick trips to Farmer Jack saved the days.

The Mission Board of the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, English District, saw that Grosse Pointe was a growing community in the late '30s, Fabry said. Since there was no Lutheran church among the scattered homes in the area, he said, "Three churches were planned for the area. This one — St. James in the Farms — and St. Paul's on Mack in St. Clair Shores."

Christ the King was first located on the corner of Lancaster and Mack Avenue. The building is still standing, with a few modifications, and is now owned by the Denton Construction Co.

"The premise was, if the church failed, the building would be sold," Fabry said.

The congregation increased, however, and by 1947, the site of the present building, a choice piece of land at Lochmoor and Mack, had been purchased. By October 1953, a 300-seat gothic chapel with a bell tower was dedicated. In March 1964, an addition was dedicated, including a new nave with seating for 475.

The peak years for church membership were the late '50s. Fabry said that adult church membership has been pretty steady over the years — about 550-560, "but during the peak years we had more children. We had 280 kids in Sunday School at one time," he said.

The low-point of church membership was about five years ago, he said. "We bottomed out at 35 children. I see healthy growth in the Sunday School now. We have 70-72 children."

Church membership today, he said, is 537 communicant members and 105 pre-confirmed children up to age 12.

"We've had a community-minded vacation Bible school for most of the history of this church," he said. The church uses ads, flyers, telephone campaigns, even neighborhood walk-throughs, to publicize the two-week long vacation Bible school. This year 138 children were enrolled.

Another contributor to church growth, he said, is the preschool. The Christian preschool began in 1986 with just four children, he said.

"We had eight children by the end of the year. This September, we have 39 3- and 4-year-olds enrolled. There's been interest and resurgence and revitalization of children."

Another community-minded activity at Christ the King, Fabry said, is the Living Nativity. For the last three years on the Sunday before Christmas, the Living Nativity, set up on the southwest corner of the church property, has attracted nearly 1,000 people.

"This is a very important outreach for us," he said. "It also gives us an opportunity to publicize our Christmas Eve services. Kids get to pet the animals. We depict the Christmas story with children playing the roles of Joseph and Mary and shepherds and angels. The characters constantly change."

"When the kids get cold, they come inside and have some cocoa and we send out a new crew. About 70 kids were involved last year," he said.

One year a pig got away, Fabry said. "Ladies in fur coats chased him down Mack Avenue."

In 1975, to celebrate the 35th anniversary of the church, the congregation's project was the installation of three swinging bells in the tower. Fabry said the bells came from Holland and the tower had to be reinforced with a steel frame to bear the weight of the bells. One weighs 1,000 pounds. The other two are 500 pounds and 250 pounds.

The bells ring daily at noon and 6 p.m. and on Sunday morning according to the worship schedule.

"Several ladies said they cried when they heard the bells ring for the first time," he said. "It reminded them of their childhood churches in Europe."

Fabry said he foresees a healthy and steady growth in the congregation because of "outreach into the community through evangelizing and through our Sunday School, our youth program, and our preschool. And this is not unique to any Lutheran church."

"The church wishes to grow not as a result of sauerkraut suppers — but as a result of preaching the gospel."

Christ the King's 45-foot bell tower was outfitted with three swinging bells for the church's 35th anniversary celebration in 1975. The bells ring every day at noon and 6 p.m., and according to the morning worship schedule on Sundays.

The cornerstone laying for the newest section of the church took place in 1963. The original chapel, built in 1953, was renovated and is now used as the church library.

Over-the-counter encounters

We asked some hard-working local salespeople:
'Is the customer always right?' Here's what they said

By Margie Reins Smith
Staff Writer

Sales clerk-customer relationships might be called brief encounters of the business kind.

The exchange of information and money between a retail salesperson and the purchaser should be a pleasant, helpful one. But, in fact, the one-on-one encounter can range from congenial to perfunctory to stressful to downright hostile.

Maryanne Przybycki, Tobacco Department Head at Perry Drug Store on the Hill for the last eight years, said she deals with 100 to 150 people every day.

What is a good customer?

"A good customer is the one that enters that door," she said. "Company policy says 'the customer is always right.' Once someone enters the door he's entitled to shop however he wishes. He's entitled to assistance. He's entitled to complain."

Complaints are handled at the customer service desk, she said, and a management team handles the problem.

Przybycki said she tries to give special attention to the senior citizens and handicapped customers who frequent Perry's. "I had a customer that was legally blind," she said. "She'd come in here and ask me to write her check for her after the other clerks took care of her. She signed her name and I filled out the rest."

Betty Gilroy, manager of the international salon at Grosse Pointe's Jacobson's, has been with the store for 9 1/2 years. She has been a nurse, a homemaker, and has worked in a doctor's office. She said her customers are interested in quality and 90 percent are repeat customers — people she knows.

Gilroy said that being honest and up-front is an important part of her service to customers. "I'm not high-pressure," she said. "I work with my customers. I get to know them; their lifestyles, their requirements."

"I won't talk people into purchases. If they don't like it — that's it. I tell them also, if I don't like something."

Gilroy said that if a customer is unhappy, or upset, "I make her happy — at all costs. I want her to walk out of this store feeling good. The cliché is 'The customer is always right' and in the long run, I gain if that's the case."

David Cooper has been working in Jacobson's men's furnishings department for six years. For three years before that, he worked in Sears' customer service credit department. "Anyone can stand behind a counter and be a sales clerk," he said. "I think of myself as a sales professional."

Cooper said he tries to determine customers' needs. "People are looking for service and an opinion. A customer will bring a pair of pants to me and I'll show him a shirt to go with the pants — or I'll find out what the pants are for."

Cooper prides himself on knowing his merchandise and making a point of telling customers how to care for the clothing they buy.

He said about 30 percent of his customers are off the street and 70 percent are repeat customers. Cooper keeps a file with notes on his customers' sizes, styles they prefer, birthdays, likes and dislikes. He sends them information about sales, new merchandise, fashion shows, and such.

If there's a complaint, he said, he gives them what they want. "The customer is always right. I listen to their story. There is no company policy that can't be broken."

One time, Cooper said, "We had a mix-up about what the customer was told. We have a small charge for putting on suspender buttons. She was told it was free. We added it to her charge. Even though it was only $3.75, she was furious. I said I was sorry and I credited her account immediately."

Vince DeLeon, assistant manager at Harmony House, 19683 Mack Avenue, in the Woods, said, "We try to speak to every customer." The sales clerks at the store provide information and service, as well as taking care of sales transactions, he added.

As far as return and refund policies, he said they bend over backwards and do anything the customer wants. "We don't let anyone leave angry."

He said a woman recently came in looking for some music for her husband — some music she was unfamiliar with. She wanted something by Ralph Monin.

"She was happy to learn from our salesperson that we had lots to choose from, and that his name was Rachmaninov," DeLeon said.

Janet Scott, head cashier for the last 12 years at Farmer Jack, on Mack Avenue in Grosse Pointe Woods, said she deals with 150 to 200 customers a day. "We're trained that the customer is always right," she said. "But we all know that everybody is human. We try our best to bite our tongues occasionally. We often bend the rules; give refunds; replace merchandise."

"We try to go to any extreme to have the customer smiling when he leaves."

Scott said the supermarket goes to great lengths to get special merchandise for customers.

"One lady has 13 cats. She was buying a special brand of cat food from another chain. The price went up. She wanted to buy the catfood here. I made a call to the buyer and not only got a lower price, but got the other varieties of the cat food that we hadn't carried before. Just for her. Her shipment comes in every two months."

"She's happy and so are her 13 cats."

Vacation homes under tax reform

For many Michigan residents, vacation homes are one of the few tax shelters left since the Tax Reform of 1986. Vacation homes have retained the same tax benefits as principal residences, so people who own summer homes, condos or cottages will still be able to claim deductions for mortgage interest and property taxes.

There are some limitations, however, when the owner decides to rent out the vacation home. Under the Tax Reform, the deduction for rental losses is limited, with the loss decreasing as the renter's adjusted gross income (AGI) increases over $100,000.

Individuals with AGI less than $100,000 may deduct up to $25,000 in rental losses each year if they are an active participant in the rental operations. For those earning between $100,000 and $150,000, the maximum $25,000 write-off is reduced by 50 percent of the amount that the AGI is over $100,000. And those with AGIs over $150,000 will not be allowed to claim any tax losses.

For those people who use their vacation home partly for personal pleasure and partly for rental, the tax law may make them re-evaluate their home status as a residence or as rental property. Under the old law, the mortgage interest could be written off regardless of whether the second home was considered a residence or a rental property.

However, the new tax law requires that personal use of the second home must be more than 14 days, or 10 percent of the number of days it is rented out, whichever is greater. If this guideline is met, the home is considered a second home and the owner can claim deductions for mortgage interest and property.

If the personal use of the home is less than 14 days or 10 percent of the time it is rented, the home is then considered rental property and the owner can claim rental expense deductions in excess of rental income, but only up to a $25,000 loss. However, with rental property, the mortgage interest is considered non-deductible.

Given these new restrictions, this could make a big difference for some vacation home owners. They may reconsider their wants and needs when it comes to having that second home, especially with upper-income owners. These owners may choose to spend more time in their vacation homes to ensure it qualifies as a second home so they can retain the mortgage interest deductions.

The Michigan Tax Information Council is a non-partisan, non-profit organization formed to provide up-to-date, understandable information on how our state and local governments raise and spend tax dollars. This column is produced in part by a grant from the Joyce Foundation in Chicago.

Fran Velardo

She has seen many changes in 10 years at the Grosse Pointe News

By Pat Paholsky
Editor

One day around Christmas-time last year, Grosse Pointe News employees who walked in the coffee room were greeted by plates of homemade cannolis heaped high on plates. They were there courtesy of Fran Velardo who made them, then came in early to fill them, so they would be just right for eating when everyone got in.

That's the type of person she is — someone who will go the extra step for others.

Velardo is in her 10th year of working in the Classified Department and says she can remember her interview for the job as though it happened yesterday.

"(Classified Manager) JoAnne (Burcar) said, 'Can you spell?' and I said, 'Yes, I can spell.' It was a big deal to work in an office.

"I feel like I'm doing what I do best — talking on the phone. I do better under pressure and I enjoy the fast pace of deadlines."

Velardo feels she's lucky to be working for the paper which has accommodated her and her family over the years. She began in September 1978, worked a few years, then took time off to have her daughter, Jaclyn, who is now 6.

She returned to work and then left to have Michael, who is now

2. She's on permanent part time now, working three days a week, and hopes to work full time when the children are older.

She and her husband Danny are a hard-working couple who are managing to raise their children without outside help. He works nights at the GM Tech Center, while she works days. He also helps his brother, cutting lawns, one day a week, and on Saturday nights, he tends bar.

"My goal is to raise healthy, happy children," she says.

The people behind the Grosse Pointe News

The Grosse Pointe News employs more than 35 full-time and part-time people in five departments, all working to put out the best weekly newspaper possible. The talent involved in this endeavor is impressive.

Every other week, we will feature an employee from a department — Classified, Circulation, Advertising and Production — that is not as visible to the public in order that you, the reader, can better understand, and appreciate, the parts that make up the whole paper.

This is the fifth profile.

Velardo, who grew up in East Detroit and graduated from East Detroit High School in 1975, said the Grosse Pointe News has changed considerably over the years.

"It's very, very different. We've grown. It was more like one little group and now it's like a company. You have to change with the times," she said.

About computers, she says, "I love them and hate them at the same time."

The department took a quantum leap last year, from writing out classified ads by hand to in putting the information into the computer, and there are some things Velardo misses.

"We used to be able to sit and talk with the customer. Now we don't have time."

She says she enjoys doing exactly what she does on her job.

She also enjoys reading non-fiction, biking and camping. And she loves to cook and especially bake.

In recognition of her Sicilian heritage, Velardo says she hopes to study the Italian language along with her daughter someday.

She also enjoys decorating and says if she ever won the lottery, she'd send her husband on vacation, so that she could decorate the house in Sterling Heights they just moved to without having to convince him something will look good.

The family spends a lot of time at their parents' cottage in Waterford where they have a boat and where she can water ski.

For now, Velardo said, "I have the best of both worlds and I love that. I like the people I work with and I get out of the house."

Tax reform: Deductible travel expense

If you travel for business purposes or participate in trips arranged by a nonprofit environmental organization, you may be swimming in opportunities for tax deductions — and not even know it. The Michigan Association of CPAs suggest that you make the most of the tax deductions available for legitimate business travel and charitable deductions.

'Tis better to give Charity may begin at home, but if you participate in scientific research expeditions sponsored by nonprofit organizations, it can also take you around the world. If you meet all of the IRS requirements, you may be able to deduct travel expenses to exciting and unusual locales: from excavating an ancient Indian village in New Mexico to studying ecological damage in the Transylvanian Alps of Rumania. These costs — including air fare, meals and lodging — can generally be deducted as contributions to the expedition's tax-exempt sponsor as long as the expenses are reasonable.

Before you sign up for an exploratory expedition of Hawaiian volcanoes, however, take a long look at the IRS eligibility requirement: to be deductible, the trip cannot include any "significant element of personal pleasure, recreation or vacation." In other words, you have to work for the deduction by actively participating in the research project.

Adventure and certain tax advantages are also found in organized tours in the rugged outdoors, such as rafting through the Grand Canyon, mountaineering in Alaska or paddling through the swamps of Georgia. If the tour's operator is a nonprofit environmental organization, you may be able to factor its membership fees into your deductions as well as participate in its special travel offerings.

Business can be pleasure
If paddling through swamps is not your idea of a good time, try taking advantage of those tax deductions available to people traveling for business purposes. For example, for each day of business travel conducted on some cruise ships, you may be able to deduct up to twice the highest per diem sum paid by the federal government to its employees traveling in the United States. As of Aug. 1, 1987, that figure was $136 — meaning that you could possibly deduct as much as $272 a day. If your cruise company itemizes food and beverage expenses separately, these costs will be only 80 percent deductible.

If the cruise offers a convention directly related to your trade or business, you may be able to deduct up to $2,000 of the cost of attending. To win the IRS's nod of approval, the cruise ship must be registered in the United States and sail to ports of call in the United States or its possessions. You may also have to document the length of the trip, the hours of actual attendance and any related business activities.

Likewise, unreimbursed expenses for traveling to foreign conventions directly related to your trade or business may be deductible to the extent that they exceed two percent of your adjusted gross income. In addition, you must meet the general eligibility rules for business trips. Don't plan to write off the cost of attending your local association's convention in Tahiti, however. Under tax law, you can deduct travel expenses to a foreign convention only if it is as reasonable to stage the meeting outside of North America as it is to hold it within.

In addition, if you mix foreign business travel with pleasure, you will have to divide expenses between business and personal activities to calculate the amount of your deduction. Determining the number of non-business days is not as easy as you may expect. There are different rules governing weekends, transportation days, side trips and business trips under one week.

In most cases, if you travel to another part of the United States for legitimate business purposes, your travel costs will be deductible. Remain in the area after your work is finished, and stretch your vacation dollars by enjoying nearby parks, resorts, the hotel's facilities or other local landmarks — your air fare and the business portion of your other expenses will still be deductible. However, if your spouse or children join you, their expenses may not be deductible.

CPR instructor courses offered

CPR instructor courses will be held at Saratoga Community Hospital on Aug. 23 and Aug. 25, 6 p.m. to 10 p.m., in the Karl Schmidt Center. A second session will be held Sept. 27 and Sept. 29, at the same time. The mandatory prerequisite for this class is BLS/CPR certification.

Course fees are $35 for new instructor certification and $15 for instructor recertification.

Enrollment is limited. For registration, call Dennis Farrell at 245-1335. Saratoga Community Hospital is located at 15000 Gratiot between 7 Mile and 8 Mile roads.

GROSSE POINTE, 16523 HARPER, DETROIT, MI. 48228

'Tucker' revives an ever-popular Detroit legend

Preston Tucker was like Robin Hood from Ypsilanti Forest when I was a teenager coming of automotive age. He would challenge Detroit royalty and bring the commoners a great car.

We heard rumors about it: It had a "cyclops" headlight in the middle that turned with the car to light the way; it would do 130 mph, maybe faster; it had its engine (gasp!) in the rear.

My hot rod buddies and I couldn't wait to see it. But we did wait. I saw my first one 40 years later at Tom Monaghan's Domino's Automotive Collection in Ann Arbor. By the time I got my driver's license on my 16th birthday in 1949, the dream of the Tucker Torpedo was over.

The movie "Tucker" revives an ever-popular Detroit legend. Like the story of the 200-mpg carburetor suppressed by the oil industry, the belief that a better car could be built but the automotive establishment won't allow it seems to be irresistible.

Like all legends, the Preston Tucker story reflects deep and important truths. And like all legends, the specific details of the story may or may not be true, it doesn't really matter.

Executive Producer George Lucas (Star Wars) and award-winning film director Francis Ford Coppola (The Godfather), who owns two of the 50 Tucker automobiles known to exist today, have made a film about that legend that has been played over and over, almost always with the same result.

John Z. DeLorean, Malcolm Bricklin, Henry J. Kaiser and Joseph Frazer and many lesser-known visionaries saw their dreams of glory dashed on the rocks of a harsh truth: Building cars is a very difficult business, extremely competitive and costs more than anyone can imagine. The last time an automotive entrepreneur went into full production and survived for more than a few years was 1925, when Walter P. Chrysler started Chrysler Corp.

Is the movie true? Yes, say family and friends of Preston Tucker. Probably not, says just about everyone else. Most historians and observers say there were too many manufacturing problems and Tucker was undercapitalized. He just ran out of money.

"It's amazingly accurate," said John Tucker Jr., of Ann Arbor, grandson of Preston Tucker. "The research was incredible, going back about 15 years. Coppola had been thinking of doing the movie that long. At that time, Marlon Brando was going to play my grandfather. Jeff Bridges does a good job, although I think they made my grandfather more of a hayseed than he really was. My mother said grandfather was pretty smooth."

Did the automotive establishment really conspire to keep the Tucker car off the market?

"Grandfather felt that way. He blamed Senator Ferguson for the whole thing and that's pretty much what the movie does. Grandfather felt the industry wanted to keep his car off the market because it was so advanced," Tucker said.

Preston Tucker charged that Michigan Republican Senator Homer Ferguson had arranged for government inquiries into his financial dealings which led to indictments of Tucker and some associates for mail fraud, violation of Securities and Exchange Commission regulation and conspiracy to defraud the public. They were all acquitted.

Was the Tucker a good car? Ed Cole, father of the fabled '55

Chevy with its high-compression V-8, thought so. The engineer who later became president of General Motors said the Tucker was a "sound concept."

The sleek, radically styled Tucker Torpedo (it started out as the Torpedo, but was introduced as the Tucker 48) was to have a rear-mounted six-cylinder engine, no clutch, no transmission, that headlight in the middle of the front tied into the steering system so that it turned in the direction of the car.

The car was to be powered by a 589-cubic-inch aluminum engine with valves actuated by hydraulic lines in order to eliminate the valve train, a source of noise and complexity. Because of the hydraulic-line valve design the engine was difficult to start. All the valves stayed shut until actuated by the hydraulic pump. It took a 24-volt electrical system to start it. Six-volt systems were standard then. Only five Tuckers were equipped with this giant engine.

Tucker opted for a different powerplant, a 335-cubic-inch six-cylinder horizontally-opposed helicopter engine built by Aircooled Motors of Syracuse, a surviving unit of the Franklin auto company. Tucker did not want an air-cooled engine because of problems the Franklin had, so it was redesigned to a water-cooled unit by Tucker's chief engineer, Ben Parsons. It put out a surprising amount of power and would do 130 mph, just like the original 589-cubic-inch "monster," at a time when few production cars could hit 100. And it got about 20 miles per gallon.

In place of a transmission, the Tucker would have two torque converters, one to drive each rear wheel. That didn't work very well and a conventional manual transmission was used in the end.

Preston Tucker was born in Capac in 1903. He entered the auto business at 13 as an office boy to D. McCall White, vice president in charge of engineering at Cadillac. After graduation from Cass Tech, Tucker joined Ford Motor Company, working in sales and getting into racing. He later sold Studebakers, Packards and Pierce-Arrows. Living in Ypsilanti, he helped launch the Ypsilanti Machine and Tool Company to make automotive parts and developed a gun turret that was adopted by the U.S. Army Air Corps.

When Tucker launched his company in 1946, the time definitely seemed right. After the end of World War II, millions of men were returning and they wanted new cars. Anything that ran could be sold. It would take the auto industry five years to catch up with the demand. A modern, revolutionary car, sleek, beautiful and loaded with advanced features could not fail. Or so it seemed.

Tucker leased a plant in Chicago that had been used to build aircraft engines during the war and in 1947, he unveiled the first Tucker Torpedo there. He had hired former Auburn-Cord-Duesenberg stylist Alex Tremulis to design the car and raised more than $25 million in a short time through a public stock offering and by selling dealership franchises.

"There is no question that the Tucker was 10 years ahead of its time," said Tremulis, who recently had a letter presented at a Society of Automotive Engineers meeting in Dearborn.

No other maker would dare produce a car as streamlined as ours for fear it might be identified with the Chrysler Airflow of the mid-30's. The Tucker's exhaust pipes — there were six of them — were integrated into the rear bumper. Each wheel was independently suspended and braking was accomplished by hydraulic disk brakes. Doors extended into the roof for easy entry and the frame was of 'step-down' design.

The car was to have torsion-bar suspension and a collapsible steering column to absorb shock and protect the driver in case of a collision. On the right side would be padded area below the dash into which the passenger could drop to avoid injury in case of a crash.

When the car went into production, it had the rear engine, but most of the proposed revolutionary features had been dropped. Tucker was indicted. Some top aides were indicted, others abandoned the company. The money was gone. Tucker's dream was over.

In an interview after the trial, Tucker raised his hand and opened a tiny gap between his thumb and forefinger. "The difference between success and failure is so extremely small you can hardly measure it," he said. "And I came that near to success."

Tucker was down, but not out yet. In 1955, the charismatic automaker announced he was going to develop a new car, the Carioca, which would render all others obsolete. But Tucker was unable to obtain financing. He died of lung cancer in 1956.

Why did the Tucker, which seemed to have so much going for it, fail? And what happened to all the money? Most observers agree there just wasn't enough.

"No Detroit manufacturer could have done any better, said Tremulis. "To fully launch the car, we would have needed $50 million.

But that might not have been enough, either. Steel magnate Henry J. Kaiser, started with $53 million after World War II, enlisted the expertise of Joseph Frazer, formerly president of Graham-Paige, and went into the automotive business.

Kaiser-Frazer was an instant success, because it was able to assemble cars. They were not particularly pretty, but they ran and they had a few imaginative features, including the first "hatchback" sedan design. Soon, Kaiser-Frazer surpassed Studebaker, Nash, Hudson and Packard to become the largest independent car builder. A few years later it was gone.

"We expected to drop $50 million into the automotive pond," Kaiser said later. "We didn't expect it to disappear without a ripple."

But that's what happened to Kaiser. And DeLorean. And Bricklin.

And Tucker.

Polo: Veddy, veddy British — or is it?

By Nancy Parmenter
 Staff Writer

Cries of "well done!" may echo around the field, as horses and riders careen against each other and mallet connects with ball. We could be in some former British colony — but we could just as easily be in Texas or Argentina or Milford, Mich.

Polo's popularity is on the rise. Although the old polo grounds in Grosse Pointe are just smooth green lawn these days, the Detroit Polo Club scrimmages twice a week out in Milford. And last week, the club hosted the regional tournament of the President's Cup, the big competition of the United States Polo Association.

On a nice sunny afternoon, a couple of hundred people might show up for a local match, bringing their blankets and picnic lunches. A line of cars might park along the shoulder of the road for comfortable viewing.

What they see can be pretty rough-and-tumble, contrary to popular opinion.

"People always think polo is very British and somewhat effete," said Grosse Pointe polo aficionado Wallace Glendening. "But it's not tea and crumpets, and it long ago drifted from England to the New World. Now the hallmark of polo is more likely to be cowboys in pickup trucks and South Americans who don't speak English."

Actually, polo is more likely to be bone-crunching — or bruising, at the very least. "It's not croquet on horseback," Glendening said. "Considering the opportunities there are for getting hurt, it's surprising it doesn't happen more often."

Played on a field the size of nine football fields, polo has six seven-and-a-half minute periods — called chukkers — that demand tremendous athleticism on the part of both horse and rider. "It's easier to fall off than to stay on," Glendening said. "There's a lot of leaning out, maneuvering, a lot of contact."

For a horse (they're called ponies, but they aren't), a chukker means a series of wind sprints, sudden stops and turns, a lot of contact and no times out. Most horses only have stamina for one chukker, or at most, one at the beginning and one at the end of the game.

That means a string of six ponies. "It's a sport of rich people in the sense that you have to spend a lot of money on it," Glendening said. "After you've been involved in polo for a while, sometimes you don't have much money left."

The game started in the area of India and Burma and discovered by the British when they colonized the area. They put standard rules to the game. But even now, the sport often mixes together professionals and amateurs, or amateurs at varying levels of skill. So there's a complex system of handicapping.

"The name of the team and the color of the jersey are the most consistent things," Glendening said.

This summer's heat has been tough on everybody, and Glendening said some of the scrimmages had been postponed because of it. But the game apparently gets under your skin.

"Winston Churchill approached the game with the same fervor as winning a war," said Glendening. "He wrote long impassioned letters to his parents back home about the significance of the All-India tournament."

After a century as an upper-crust sport and a detour to gauchos and cowboys, it may not be a surprise to learn that polo is used in snob-appeal advertising.

Glendening thinks that attitude could be cured by a trip to the polo grounds.

"It's chic lately, but the people who have contact with it in that fashion far exceed the number who have actually seen a game," he said. "It's always like that."

MSU campus celebrates state's variety of ethnic folkways

Michigan "tradition bearers" have been selected to take part in the 1988 Festival of Michigan Folklife on the campus of Michigan State University.

"Tradition bearers" are those who keep alive and pass on the crafts, music, dances, games, foodways, folkways and lore of Michigan.

The Folklife Festival is a major component of the Michigan Festival, a major performing arts celebration featuring regional and nationally known performers on 10 stages Aug. 19-28 on the MSU campus and downtown East Lansing.

The Folklife Festival itself will run from 11 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 19-21 and 26-28 on Landon Field on West Circle Drive.

Music, dances, food preparation, games and crafts showing the ethnic diversity of Michigan will be featured in the folklife presentations.

The Festival of Michigan Folklife is produced by the Michigan Traditional Arts Program of the MSU Museum with financial support of the Kellogg Foundation, the Folk Arts Program of the National Endowment for the Arts, the Michigan Council for the Arts and a number of other businesses and organizations.

Grosse Pointers participating in the Folklife Festival are Remi and Liliane Vandebroek of the Park, he as a bowler, she as a cook.

Liliane Vandebroek came from Belgium to the Detroit area in 1953. She cooks Belgian foods for her family daily, including weekly rabbit dinners in winter. "If you're Belgian, you must know how to cook rabbit." She also prepares a number of other traditional Belgian dishes such as steak and fries, endive, and potato croquets.

Remi Vandebroek is a member of Detroit area floor and feather bowling teams.

The Cadieux Cafe in Detroit is a gathering spot for members of a large Flemish community on the city's east side. It is also the meeting-place of the Cadieux Bowling Club, a group which engages in feather bowling, one of two distinctive types of traditional Belgian bowling. For 55 years, club members, family and friends have gathered at the club to play the game and socialize every Friday night from September through April.

In the game itself the men roll weighted balls down an alley, with two teams attempting to position the greatest number of balls closest to pigeon feathers set in either end of the lane. Moves are offensive and defensive, the game ends when one team scores 10 points.

In floor bowling, perhaps a more family-oriented game, teams try to get the balls close to the inner circle of a bull's-eye-like court. This goal means the game resembles marble shooting more than pin bowling, with a bowler kneeling down and throwing the ball lightly so that it hits a side wall and circles in toward the center of the court, 12 points is a game. The Guilford Bar in Detroit is the gathering-spot for some 20 members of the Belgian-American Floor Bowlers.

The Pastor's Corner

To listen and hear

By The Rev. Susan K. Bock

St. Michael Episcopal Church

I heard the bleating of sheep resound between the barn walls. I heard the heavy grunting of the shepherdess struggling to help birth a lamb and her low, quiet drawl explaining the event to her interviewer. I even heard the wet gush of birth water from the ewe that preceded and speeded her offspring's arrival.

Breezing through Friday evening rush hour traffic, I was entranced. When I remembered to breathe again, I needed to inhale deeply to catch my breath. Public radio transmitted the "Soundprints" that captivated my imagination and all my senses.

We are losing the art and skill of listening. When elders tell of gathering around the family radio to hear "Flash Gordon," I'm disturbed by the realization that many children today would be unable to attend to such a story without visual aids.

We are not taught to listen and we are deprived of the silence in which we could learn for ourselves. As I sit writing in the doctor's office waiting room, the "background music" (to my mind a contradiction in terms) competes with my thoughts for attention.

The shepherdess told of long, quiet nights on the hillside wherein she learned that "only in complete silence can we discover what we really think." But most of us live with a continual bombardment of noise that teaches us to "tune out" rather than listen attentively.

How shall we become ready to hear that quiet voice of the Holy One who speaks from within our deepest selves? In "Cry Pain, Cry Hope," Elizabeth O'Connor says that God's is a "summoning voice which comes from above one and at the same time sounds deep within one's being. And to hear it, one has to be in a state of attention with one's ear turned inward."

Learning to listen will be an act of faithful resistance in a society polluted with noise. God will teach us and will help us make that journey from the boisterous world around us to the "kingdom" within, the one from head to heart which, O'Connor believes, is the longest any of us will ever make.

It is there that we will learn of God's extravagant love for us. It is there that we will hear the same sounds which press upon God's heart, the cries of the poor and needy. And it is there that we will find guidance into meaningful human living.

Descending to our inner being where God dwells, the ears of our hearts will hear and we'll be led back into the world to love and heal it.

Developing such contemplative skill is difficult. But perhaps it begins with simply turning down the TV volume and creating occasions of silence for ourselves and our children. Reading a book aloud as a family or with others is another good start. And listening to birds, crickets, waves and rain.

Opa!

The weekend of Aug. 19 marks the return of the Assumption Greek Orthodox Church summer Greek festival. A combination of authentic Greek culture and good American fun, the weekend offers good times for the family.

Greek food and pastries, a taverna and Mediterranean-style coffee house will highlight the festival. There will also be a gift shop and crafts demonstrations, a Las Vegas-style casino and a raffle for a 1988 Dodge Shadow or a full-length mink coat.

Onstage will be the Evzones of the presidential guard of Greece. These soldiers, famous for their military drills, will present the dances of Greece in traditional dress.

Assumption is located at 21800 Marter Rd. Free parking will be provided near the festival grounds. For more information, call 779-6111.

Michigan gospel festival set

An all-day celebration of Michigan's gospel music tradition will be the final event in the 1988 Michigan Festival, Michigan's largest performing arts festival set for Aug. 19-28 on the Michigan State University campus and in East Lansing.

Daytime events of "Michigan Gospel," Sunday, Aug. 28, will include a workshop on comparative gospel with demonstrations by Detroit's National Independent Singers; a traditional Afro-American men's gospel quartet and the Gospel Warriors, a Detroit group featuring female vocals. The evening schedule includes the National Independent Singers, the Scott Singers, Esther Smith and the Thomas Whitfield Company.

One Michigan Festival button provides entrance to all components of the 10-day festival. But-Josephine Brummel, a former Grosse Pointer, is returning to present a piano recital at Grosse Pointe Memorial Church in the music room on Friday, Aug. 26, at 8 p.m. The music room is air-conditioned and admission is free.

Brummel was the performer for the second John Lake Scholarship Concert at the War Memorial, pianist for the Grosse Pointe Theater's musical productions, accompanist for choral groups at South High, an active member of The Tuesday Musicale of Detroit. She has appeared in recitals at the University of California at Santa Barbara; in Norwalk and Westport, Conn.

More recently, Brummel was pianist and keyboardist for the West coast premier of "Shakespeare and the Indians" working with Dale Wasserman, author of "Man of LaMancha" and Allan J. Friedman, composer of "Winnie the Pooh" and "The Hobbit."

Brummel's program will include works by Bach, Mozart, Debussy, Scriabin, Rachmaninoff and Chopin.

Brummel has her Bachelor of Music from Michigan State University and a Master of Arts in piano performance from the University of California at Santa Barbara.

Choir members head for the Big Apple

Three boy singers from the Choir of Men & Boys at Christ Church Grosse Pointe will spend three days in New York this week. Liam Ryan, Brent Jahnke and Benjamin Day, and choirman James Gray will sing with a selected group of choristers from the United States at St. Thomas Church.

The Royal School of Church Music in England is sponsoring this week-long course, which will be directed by Stephen Cleobury, Master of the Choristers, Kings College Cambridge University. Christ Church Grosse Pointe will have the largest number of participants in this choir.

The choir will sing daily evening Monday through Thursday, a noonday communion service at Trinity Church, Wall Street, and the morning and afternoon services at St. Thomas. They'll also see a Mets game.

Floating fundraiser on Boblo boat

The S.S. Boblo will set sail Tuesday, Aug. 30, 8:30-11:30 p.m. with musical entertainment and local talent to benefit the homeless and hungry. The cruise is limited to 800 couples; tickets are available for $30 a couple or $15 a piece.

The Southeastern Michigan Food Coalition has been educating the community on the hunger issue for 10 years. It is a non-profit hunger action/education organization which exists to mobilize all segments of the community to focus on food and nutrition. It's a coalition of people committed to acting cooperatively to eliminate hunger and poverty.

The United Community Housing Coalition provides housing placement for the homeless, landlord/tenant counseling, and tenant organizing; all of these issues are vital to those affected by "houselessness" in our community. This evening will help raise badly needed funds for the needy in our community.

Tickets are available through the SEMFCO offices, 962-0348, or the UCHC office at 963-3310.

The poppy: Medicine, drug and garden beauty

By Ellen Probert
Special Writer

In the European flower calendar, which had its origin in medieval days, the Poppy is the flower representing August. Poppies ornament our gardens with showy flowers in marvelous colors ranging from white to purple, but most of us think of Poppies as cup-shaped blooms in glowing shades of red or pink.

It is an ancient flower long beloved by herbalists for its various medicinal qualities, but is most famous because it is the source of opium, from which is extracted morphine and codeine. In ancient Greece the Poppy was the symbol of eternal sleep and oblivion and was dedicated to all the deities of the night, and for those herbalists who are also astrologists (and in the Middle Ages these two areas of endeavor were often combined) the Poppy is the herb of the moon.

Poppies are grown extensively in the Far East for the opium they produce, and these are the white or pale pink ones, but in Europe the familiar red blossom grow wild as they do in America, and these do not yield opium.

In China the Poppy is the symbol of imagination and dreaminess and poppies are often shown in portraits of astrologers, poets, and mystics.

In the spring our rage against the Dandelion knows no bounds, especially if we are intent upon achieving a perfect lawn, but usually we go on to other things as the summer progresses, except for the lawn fanciers who continue to be emotional about this hardy plant. But a closer look at the Dandelion provides some amazing facts.

The 17th century herbalist and astrologer, Nicholas Culpeper, wrote, "This herb helps one to see further without a pair of spectacles. This is known by many foreign physicians. It is under the dominion of Jupiter."

Dandelions are used in the manufacture of many diuretics and remedies for hypertension. They are useful in the treatment of jaundice and very high in potassium. In the spring the new, tender leaves, as well as the cheerful golden blossoms, may be used in salads, or cooked in the same way as spinach, and Dandelion coffee may be made at any time from the dried roots of the plant. If you don't want to try making it yourself you can find it in health food stores.

Dandelion tea has an aromatic flavor and you can make it by drying the leaves until they are crumbly and using a teaspoonful for each cup of boiling water in the teapot. Dandelions contain, beside potassium, as much iron as spinach, more vitamin A than carrots, and vitamin C, thiamin, riboflavin, calcium and protein.

Dandelion wine has long been a specialty of the country housewife's still-room and recipes for it appear in many early American manuscript cookbooks.

Dandelions are of Persian origin, but grow wild in many parts of the world. They have many names beside Dandelion, which comes from the French name which translates to Tooth of the Lion and refers to the toothed edges of the leaves. Blow Ball, Lion's Tooth, Peasant's Cloak, Yellow Gowan, Priest's Crown, Irish Daisy, and Monk's Head are some of the names given to this common lawn weed.

Focusing on one particular vegetable and trying to find out all you can about it can be fun. Take cauliflower, for instance. Did you know that world-wide, about 4 million tons of cauliflower are produced each year. The leading grower is Italy with about 20 percent of the total production, followed by India, Spain, the United Kingdom, and the United States. Consumer statistics show that cauliflower is one of the top five most popular vegetables.

A member of the Mustard family, it has been popular since the days of the Roman Empire and many medieval cookbooks abound with recipes for its preparation for the table. It was one of the most popular vegetables in 14th century Europe, sharing honors with its cousin, cabbage, and with onions and turnips. It was never eaten raw until quite modern times, but now appears in salads and on relish trays very frequently.

Pliny, born in Rome in the year 23 A.D. wrote many accounts of what the Romans of his time knew and did and valued. One account says, "The kings of Rome cultivated their gardens with their own hands . . . the garden constituted of itself also the poor man's field, and it was from the garden that the lower classes procured their daily food — an alimment how guiltlessly obtained."

With a little help from Calvin O'Neal, general manager, DBD Inc., March of Dimes Goodwill Ambassador Dana Green of Detroit becomes the center of attention during recent ceremonies marking the March of Dimes 50th anniversary. Accepting a proclamation from Mayor Coleman A. Young is Southeast Michigan chapter chairman Linda Simon. The proclamation applauds the March of Dimes for its diligence in fighting polio and birth defects over the past 50 years. DBD and Miller Brewing sponsored a cruise aboard the Boblo boat earlier this month to celebrate the anniversary. Proceeds from ticket sales help the March of Dimes continue its fight against birth defects.

Hmong artists in Michigan exhibit work

The season's opening exhibit presented by The Art Center in Mount Clemens will be the Michigan Hmong Arts: A Traveling Exhibition," Sept. 15-Oct. 7. The opening reception will be held on Thursday, Sept. 15, 6-8 p.m. Light refreshments will be served by members of the Organization for Rehabilitation through Training (ORT).

This exhibit briefly examines the arts of one of Michigan's newest immigrant groups: The Lao-Hmong of Southeast Asia. America's richest resource is her multi-ethnic composition. In the context of protracted war and concurrent instability, the Hmong, always a minority and often looked down upon, have utilized their textile art as a confirmation of who they are and what their past has been.

Now in the United States, the Hmong are acculturating at an accelerated rate. Their story is imbedded in the stitches, patterns and colors of the paj ntaub ("flower cloth"), the intricate and beautiful embroidered and appliqued textiles that are the focus of this exhibit. By themselves the individual pieces are remarkable for their beauty of design and execution. They are also strong visual reminders of a way of life that is in flux and documentary evidence of the changes that are occurring in the lives of the Hmong as they become Michigan-Hmong citizens.

As the season's opening exhibit at The Art Center, the Hmong art will act as a vehicle of introduction to the Hmong through objects, text and photographs and allow viewers to begin to understand a bit of their history which has now, through war and a resettlement period, become entwined with our own. Funding for the original exhibition was provided through grants from the National Endowment for the Arts, the Michigan Council for the Arts, the Folk Arts Division of the Michigan State University Museum and the All-University Grant Program, Michigan State University. For further information re-

Celery Seed Dressing

This delicious salad dressing was a favorite at the Detroit Women's City Club, which for several generations was famous for its marvelous foods. Usually served on fruit salad, the dressing refrigerates very well, but it's best when served at room temperature.

1 1/4 cups sugar
1 1/2 tsp. salt
4 tsp. dry mustard
1 medium onion, grated
1 1/2 cups vinegar, divided
2 cups vegetable oil
1/4 cup celery seed

Stir together sugar, salt, mustard, onion and about half the vinegar. Gradually beat in the oil. Gradually stir in the remaining vinegar and the celery seed. Makes about 1 quart.

Calories, about 47 per tablespoon. Cholesterol, 0.

Lemon Sherbet

1 Tblsp. gelatine
1 1/2 cups cold water
1/2 cup boiling water
1 cup sugar
Juice of 6 lemons, strained

Soak the gelatine in 1/2 cup of the cold water. Add the boiling water and stir until gelatine is thoroughly dissolved. Then add the sugar, remainder of the cold water and the strained fruit juice. Chill and freeze. Makes 6 servings.

About 145 calories per serving. Cholesterol, 0.

For Orange Sherbet, use the juice of 6 oranges, strained and the juice of 2 lemons, strained. Serves 6.

Elegant Eating

Watermelon Sherbet

1 cup sugar
Juice of 1/2 lemon

Puree watermelon with sugar, a portion at a time, in blender or food processor, or through food mill. Add lemon juice; stir until sugar is completely dissolved. Spoon into 6-cup shallow metal pan and set in freezer until firm around edges, about 1 1/2 hours. Beat mixture smooth and set in freezer for 1 hour more. Remove and beat smooth; return to freezer until firm. Serve in ice cream glasses, garnished with fresh watermelon balls or sprigs of fresh mint. Makes about 6 cups.

Calories, about 172 per cup. Cholesterol, 0.

Pineapple Chunks with Pineapple Ice

2 cans pineapple packed in pineapple (20 oz. each)
1 cup skim milk
1/2 tsp. vanilla extract

Drain pineapple juice in medium-sized bowl; cover chunks and refrigerate until serving time. Mix milk and vanilla with pineapple juice; freeze 1 hour, until ice crystals form around edge. Beat smooth with an electric mixer. Freeze 1 hour and beat again. Return to freezer and freeze 5 to 6 hours longer, until solid.

Remove from freezer 10 minutes before serving time to soften. Scoop ice into a stemmed glass and top with reserved pineapple chunks. Makes 3 cups ice. For diet serving, allow one eighth of recipe.

Calories per serving, about 98. Cholesterol, a trace.

Lemon Bavarian with Raspberry Sauce

2 pkgs. (3 oz. each) lemon gelatin
2 cups boiling water
4 cups ice cubes
1 pkg. whipped topping prepared according to package directions

2 pkgs. (10 oz. each) frozen raspberries or strawberries in syrup, thawed, or 1 pint fresh raspberries or strawberries, sweetened to taste

In large bowl, stir gelatin and boiling water until gelatin is dissolved. Add ice and stir until gelatin thickens; discard any remaining ice. Gently fold in whipped topping. Turn into 8-cup mold; chill several hours or overnight until firm. Mash berries or puree in blender or food mill. Put through strainer to remove seeds if desired. Drizzle some sauce over mold; pass remainder. Makes 12 to 16 servings.

Calories, about 100 for each of 14 servings. Cholesterol, 0.

Summer Fruit Compote

2 Tblsp. lime juice
2 Tblsp. honey
3 large plums, sliced
2 large nectarines, peeled and sliced
2 peaches, peeled and sliced
3/4 cup blueberries

Mix lime juice and honey in a bowl until well blended; add fruits and toss to mix. Cover and chill. Serves 6. Delicious as a dessert or served over puddings.

Program extends au pair deadline

Families who need in-home childcare for the coming school year have good news — the Au Pair in America program, sponsored by the American Institute For Foreign Study, has been granted an extension by the U.S. government.

Grosse Pointe families will be able to use the extension to welcome au pair into their home for a full year of childcare. The application deadline for the 1988-89 school year is Sept. 1.

According to local au pair counselor, Susan Measelle, au pairs will be arriving on Sept. 12, 13, 26, and 27.

Au pairs contribute 45 hours of childcare weekly for one year in exchange for room, board and pocket money and the opportunity to learn about America. All au pairs are carefully screened and have childcare experience.

Families pay fees averaging $160 per week which cover the au pair's transatlantic airfare, orientation, supervision, insurance and pocket money.

Grosse Pointe families interested in hosting au pair this September through this unique childcare/cultural exchange program can contact Measelle at 885-5229 or write for an application to Au Pair in America, Dept. P-34, 102 Greenwich Ave., Greenwich, Conn. 06830.

Yes, Virginia, there are bushels of fruit in Michigan

August means blueberries, peaches and summer apples — in that order — to many Midwestern shoppers, and drought or not, 1988 is no exception. Michigan will have all three of these fruits this year.

The differences this year from other years are that production for all three fruit crops will be lower, and individual fruit sizes will be smaller.

As of mid-July, Michigan apple production is forecast at 750 million pounds — 29 percent lower than last year's near-record crop. The overall U.S. apple production is slated at 23 percent less than last year.

Peach production for the state is forecast at 45 million pounds.

That's one-fourth below last year's crop and 10 percent less than was expected as of June 1. The national peach crop is said to be 5 percent above last year's crop. This year's Michigan blueberry crop is judged to be as much as 50 percent smaller than last year's. Growers using irrigation will have the lion's share of the crop.

Sweet corn is the vegetable many of us will miss out on this year. Many producers plowed their crops under because they were not going to make corn. Since home-grown sweet corn is in such short supply this year, look for the best and freshest at farm-site markets and farmers' markets. The ears are smaller, some of the kernels are arranged chaotically, but fresh roasting ears still taste mighty good; prices are up 15 to 50 percent. Potatoes, too, have been affected by the dry growing conditions. In some areas, yields are only one-third of a normal crop.

Michigan celery may have fared the best of all major Michigan vegetable crops. Most celery is irrigated and the celery industry has an excellent quality control program. Plants are near-normal size and selling quality is very good.

Livestock producers are also affected by the drought as well. Many of them are hard pressed to feed their herds so they are not replacing animals and some are even selling off breeding stock. Shoppers can expect to share the burden by paying more for all meat products by late 1988 and for some years to come.

The current increases in poultry and egg prices are largely unrelated to the drought. The main reasons behind the growing broiler prices are increased export demands, production moderations, and increased usage by fast-food chains.

Plan retirement carefully — but have fun

By Marian Trainor
Special Writer

If you are retired or about to retire, books which give advice on how to enjoy your hard-earned freedom are probably on your reading list.

Most people have definite ideas about how to spend that time. They know they want to live and how. They have hobbies and interests which will keep them occupied, alert and happy. The value of books on retirement as in all 'how to' books, is the insights and tips that can make this period in life the best years of our lives. This is particularly so when the book is the work of an author who has lived in a retirement community and has spent considerable time and effort studying and compiling information on the pros and cons of various options available to retirees.

One such book is, "How to Enjoy Your Retirement" (American Management Association, $7.95). The title is not particularly intriguing but the author's name should catch your eye. It is John Sunshine.

With a name like that, you've got to figure that this book will present an optimistic view of retirement living — and it does — but at the same time it provides the readers with the facts needed to make balanced judgments on such important things as money management, making friends, the importance of being active, the advisability of changing locations and work opportunities.

The author, in addition to the ability to put into perspective the opportunities for a full life after retirement has a good background for evaluating the possibilities for the enjoyment and serious decisions that retirement can bring.

For those whose plans include travel, he is an expert. He was a traveling salesman for 40 years. In this capacity he drove across the country and became familiar with what individual states and cities have to offer in the way of climate, accommodations and attractions.

Wisely, he begins the book with a discussion of attitude. Retirement, he admits, is a crisis and he tells us that the Chinese have two symbols for that word 'crisis' — one means danger and the other means opportunity.

He likens retirement to driving on a long, smooth highway relaxed at the wheel most of the time. But as you reach retirement and that highway suddenly ends, a sign says: "detour ahead — proceed at your own risk."

"Retirement," he says, "can mean danger or opportunity. It's up to which it shall be. Remember the sign says, "detour." It's not the end of the road. The sign also warns, "proceed at your own risk."

People who detour usually do proceed with caution because it is unfamiliar territory. One of the cautions the author advises is taking time to make decisions since you may have to live with them the rest of your life. He stresses the importance of making those decisions yourself. "Do not allow the advice of friends or relatives to be too important a factor when decisions have to be made," he warns. "A small problem can become a big problem if you get too much advice."

His view on lending money to relatives is not a generous one. In fact, he is so adamant on the subject one wonders if he has had a bad experience in this department.

"Be careful in the use of your funds," he writes, "for the chances of replacing money you give away are practically nonexistent. No matter how much money you give or lend, it is never enough."

With that out of the way, his next concern is how to live long enough to enjoy the financial security we have earned.

Besides following the rules of good health and seeing a doctor regularly so that disease can be checked before it advances, this author believes that those who live long lives have three things in common — the will to live, a cheerful attitude and an active mind, and that the first two qualities are by-products of the third. Activity will not only make you live longer but will open the door to an interesting, enjoyable life. It gives you a reason for living and it gives purpose and direction.

A major factor in making retirement enjoyable is contact with others. During the years of activity and involvement with jobs and families, loneliness was not a problem. In retirement it can be.

It is important to keep in contact with others. Both mental and physical stimulation can come through conversation with other people.

Grandchildren are important people in the lives of retirees. We want our ties with them to be close. Frequent visits can accomplish this if they live close by. If they live a distance, make your vacation a trip to where they live. Better still, if you are able to take them on an outing or trip, it will be an experience you will all cherish.

The greatest danger of retirement is that it offers the opportunity to do nothing and that gives a person too much time to look back, to ponder on opportunities missed rather on what was accomplished. Doing nothing leads to boredom and boredom brings a fatigue that rest will not relieve.

"How to Enjoy Your Retirement" could well be subtitled, "A Guide to Retirement" because each topic explored contains addresses where readers can write for more explicit information.

Pets and seniors matched

The Michigan Humane Society is kicking off the second year of a national campaign to match area senior citizens with homeless shelter pets as part of the Purina Pets for People Program.

The nationwide program has helped bring more than 15,000 senior citizens and pets together during the first year with 120 in the Detroit area. In addition to making area seniors happy, the program has helped reduce the number of homeless pets in the shelter.

The Pets for People Program, sponsored by the Ralston Purina Co., enables qualifying seniors to adopt a dog or cat from their local shelter completely free or charge. The program covers adoption fees, initial veterinary care, including inoculations and spaying or neutering, and provides the senior with a starter kit that includes a leash, collar, food and water bowls and a starter supply of Purina Dog Chow or Cat Chow.

The Michigan Humane Society provides these services to qualifying senior citizens in the Detroit area. More than 100 shelters or humane societies in 90 cities nationwide participate in the program. An additional 100 shelters will join the program on a part-time basis this year during August and September, a time when pet overpopulation at shelters traditionally is at its highest.

Studies show that pets can provide health benefits to senior citizens. In addition to companionship, a dog or cat provides a sense of security and protection as well as a source of entertainment and unqualified affection.

Area pet owners can also help senior citizens benefit from the program through grocery store purchases. For every pound of Purina pet food sold in August and September, Purina will donate 100 cents to the Pets for People Program — a donation totaling up to one-half million dollars nationally.

For more information, contact The Michigan Humane Society, 7401 Chrysler Dr., Detroit 48211 or write Purina Pets for People Program, Checkerboard Square, 67, St. Louis, Mo. 63164.

Social Security services are free

People in the area have been receiving direct mail solicitations asking that they pay $7 to join an organization that says it will provide many services related to Social Security. There is no need to pay any firm money to obtain any of the services provided by Social Security, says Verlyn J. Rebelein, district manager of the Social Security office at 17420 Mack Avenue.

Any person can obtain a statement of Social Security-covered earnings without paying anything. All one has to do is call any Social Security office and ask for a request for statement of earnings form.

Free publications and information about Social Security may be obtained at any Social Security office, or by calling 963-1500.

Rehab patient paints inspiration

Dolores Ortiz was recently discharged from the Cottage Hospital Rehabilitation Unit. But she left something behind to remind others like her that you can come into the hospital on a stretcher, weakened or paralyzed by a stroke, and, with hard work and patience, eventually walk out.

Ortiz, an artist, donated a floral watercolor painting which now hangs in the Cottage Rehabilitation Unit. The soft rose and blue-green hues of the painting harmonize with the color scheme used throughout the unit. More importantly, it is a visual reminder to patients trying to relearn everyday tasks that it can be done and they must keep working at it.

Ortiz was brought to Cottage Hospital early in June. A sudden stroke had left an arm and leg nearly useless. After two weeks, as her medical condition stabilized, she was able to begin therapy and later was transferred to Cottage's Rehabilitation Unit where she was put on a full rehab therapy schedule.

Learning of her desire to continue her painting, the Rehab staff set up a "studio" area for her in the dining room. Her husband brought in her supplies and the brushes began to fly. She began by painting small pictures — still lifes and landscapes mostly from memory — to give to the various people helping in her rehabilitation.

"We encourage rehabilitation patients to try to do the things they did before they were hospitalized. But we've never had someone with quite the talent and creativity as Dolores," said Kathleen Jakubiak Kovacek, director of the Cottage Rehabilitation Unit.

Once around two pleasant peninsulas

It was a dark and stormy night — well, it was night more than it was daylight when competitors from 11 states made a tour of our state in the "One Lap of Michigan" road rally. They left River Place at noon on July 29, drove nonstop for 1,200 miles and got back to Eastern Market two days later.

Pattie Klimchuk of St. Clair Shores and Noelle George of Grosse Pointe Woods drove in the rally in a Honda sponsored by Edmund T. Ahee Jewelers. The rally was put on by Uniroyal Goodrich and the Michigan Association of Children's Alliance and was officially named MACA Grand Tour for Children.

Roughing it. . . Laura Grego of Grosse Pointe Park spent three weeks living in the wilderness of West Virginia's Monongahela National Forest as part of the National Science Youth Camp last month. A future engineering major at the University of Michigan, Grego is also a National Merit Scholar.

The camp was founded to encourage the country's outstanding high school science students through an exchange of ideas with leading scientists and other professionals. Participants also sampled the West Virginia mountains in afternoon and weekend backpacking, caving, rock climbing and kayaking trips.

Funny Grosse Pointers are featured in Comedy Castle benefit gong show

On Monday, Aug. 22, amateur and professional entertainers will gather at the Northwood Inn's Comedy Castle to give it their all — all for the fight against birth defects.

Teaching Tom Cruise to flip bottles and mix drinks is just the most famous thing Harper Woods' John Bandy has done lately. That has gotten him in the papers and on Detroit television shows, which is almost as much fun as traveling to New York, Toronto and Jamaica with Cruise and the cast of "Cocktail."

Bandy won the gold medal in the Bartenders' Olympics in 1987 by throwing limes from behind his back and catching them on the tip of a knife, doing a macho-man bottle opener (if you have to ask, have another slice of quiche), and the whistle retrieve-full bottle catch. If that doesn't impress, he has 41 other fancy tricks up his bartender's sleeve.

Dayton and Elizabeth Dailey

Happy, happy. . .

Dayton Z. and Elizabeth C. Dailey of Grosse Pointe Woods celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary Aug. 18. They were married in Georgetown, Calif., in 1938 — and five children later, here they are. Diana, James, William, Dayton and Mary Ann and assorted spouses will be on hand to help celebrate, as will 13 grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

Dailey retired from Champion Spark Plug and is an active volunteer at the Detroit Historical Museum, the Lions' Club, the Coast Guard Auxiliary and the Boy Scouts. Both Daileys are active members of the Harper Woods AARP chapter and church.

Congratulations.

BUYING A HOME CAN BE EXHILARATING, JOYFUL AND AWFUL.

Hope the roof doesn't leak. Can't wait to hear rain on the roof.

We're getting a lot of house for the money. I don't know if we can afford this.

I'm worried. I'm happy.

Guess I'll have to buy a lawn mower. We'll plant vegetables where the lawn is now.

I wonder what it'll be worth when we sell it. We'll never move again.

Whether you are looking for the second time, or the third or first, you should never have to deal with an insensitive bank. The process is difficult enough, as it is. It can be scary. It can be intimidating. It can be overwhelming. These are natural feelings that come with the highs.

So while you're looking, whether you've found something or not, if a question comes up, or you just need someone to listen, call us. We can help.

And if you'd like to get together, but the pressure of your schedule makes it hard, don't worry. When you or your real estate agent call, let us know, and we'll figure out a convenient place and time to come and meet with you.

Grosse Pointe A Unique Community

A Cultural Cornucopia Appreciation of the arts begins at an early age for Grosse Pointe children. The public library, a division of the Grosse Pointe Public School System, offers, at no cost, a variety of children's reading programs at its three locations.

For adults, the library programs range from travel films to informative presentations on subjects of current interest. These, too, are free to residents of all the Grosse Pointes.

Another great source of local culture is the beautiful War Memorial Center, the former mansion of the Russell A. Alger family. With its subsequently added ballroom and theater overlooking Lake St. Clair, the center is a community attraction that rivals the many private clubs in the area. Here — open to all residents — are offered art classes and exhibits, lectures, concerts, plays, ballet and social dancing instruction, and children's theater, as well as membership in a long list of special-interest clubs whose focus is either cultural, informative or just plain fun.

A more recent addition to public property is the Edsel and Eleanor Ford House. Designed by architect Albert Kahn and supported by a $15 million endowment, this gracious replica of an English manor house is now open for tours and is used for meetings, fund-raising events and several series of "house" concerts.

Summer, go away

Summer, summer has gone away,

Now it's time for a different style of play.

That's right folks, it's time to let the pigskin fly. Football, football, football.

That's all your ears will hear for just shy of half a year.

High school football started Aug. 10 with the first official practice. On Aug. 15 the pads were issued, and the hitting, bone-crushing tackling and sore legs accompanied the aerial tosses and handoffs.

Also on the 15th, basketball for girls began, cross country and soccer, golf tryouts were set.

And with the heat, many athletes surely did sweat. But, don't fret. For with every ounce of sweat Comes a fall season you won't forget.

The girls' basketball team at North won its first district title, won an opening round game in the regionals and took second in that tourney.

South beat North in the annual football game for city pride. The 14-3 win lifted South into the playoffs for the first time since 1984.

The girls' tennis team at ULS won its eighth straight Class C-D tennis title. And, South lost in the Class A tourney, snapping a record of 11 straight.

With last year's fondest memories tucked away,

It's time to look forward to a brand new day.

That's why three weeks of conditioning, 66 dives, option plays and punts will fill the space.

And why learning a one-inch deep playbook is essential in keeping the opponent out of your face.

While ULS' football team boarded a bus for Buffalo, N.Y. to start the season, North hit the field and timed people in the 40-yard dash. South, on the other hand, grabbed some blocking dummies and footballs and worked on a couple of plays.

It looks like North will have plenty of team speed, but I didn't see any big guys suited up. They've got a quarterback situation where the job is open to anyone. Three young generals are vying for front line duty on a team which is hoping to omit a 6-3 record from its memory.

South is looking for a repeat of last year's 9-2 record. Chris Stebbins, who gained some experience at quarterback in last year's playoff game against Brother Rice seems to have an inside track on the starting spot, but Bill Leonard is a tough lefty who can mentor the wish bone.

At ULS, with only eight games on the schedule, I'd be surprised if they didn't win six games. They have a complete offensive line back from a year ago, and quarterback Lex Smith will have to prove himself if the Knights are to better last season's clip of 2-7.

Verbal echoes of hut, hut, hut-hut

Were a treat to ears that have been stuck in a non-football rut.

I haven't heard of a 42-veer

For, oh, it seems like a year.

Football helmets were filled with faces.

And faces were being put in proper places.

It's time to fill a spot vacated by a senior

With a quality kid who looks forward to a keen year. (Cheap, I know)

Football season is fun, and cold.

But when all is said and done, it's hold.

So, hold on to your hat, get ready to cheer.

For this football season should be quite a year.

May your veers work to perfection.

Man in blue polices major league fields

By Rob Fulton
Sports Editor

"He's rounding third heading for home... here's the throw... he's..."

You make the call. Better yet, allow someone dressed in a blue shirt, gray slacks and a finely polished pair of shoes make the choice for you.

Hearing "you need glasses ump" and "boo" at frequent times, Rick Reed, a true Eastsider all his life, wouldn't trade umpiring in the major leagues for, well, a managerial spot.

It's a life he started forming in 1973 when he attended the Al Somers School of Umpiring. It's now known as the Harry Wendelstedt School of Umpiring.

In his senior year at college in January of 1973, Reed, a 1968 graduate of Osborne High, decided that the job market was not as tempting as the sunshine in Florida, or the intrigue of umpiring school.

"I decided that the job market wasn't great, so I decided to pursue a possible career in umpiring," said Reed, 38. "At that time I also wanted to go to Florida because I had never been there before. It was a combination of things why I wanted to go."

Upon his arrival, Reed reassessed his feelings and convinced himself that calling balls and strikes in the Big Ten would be as far as he would take this thing. However, after more careful consideration, the major leagues didn't seem too far away.

"I went down there with the goal of coming out and working Big Ten baseball," he said. "But, after a couple of days at the camp, I discovered that if I increased my motivation a bit, I could get a job in the major leagues if I worked hard at it."

Despite learning that chances of making the big leagues were 1 percent or less, Reed didn't let that impede the progress he was making. He was determined to do his time in the minors and then respond graciously when the call came to make the trip to the majors. However, as any success story, it didn't come easy.

"I was one of 240 guys in the class of 1973," said Reed. "And at that time there were only 15-20 openings in major league baseball. I guess you could say that I beat the odds makers."

Reed has done exactly that as he remains the only 1973 graduate of the school in the big leagues.

After finishing the six-week course, Reed was awarded the opportunity to work the minor leagues. The fun and intrigue of major league umpiring wore off quickly. After a one-year stint in the rookie leagues, Reed almost tossed in his gear.

"I had a rough first year," he said. "It was tough to adjust to the life of being an umpire. I was tired of always going and living out of a suitcase."

Besides adjusting to the life-style of umpiring, when "all your games are away games," Reed had to polish his skills.

"I was working with an outside chest protector and it was difficult to call the pitches around the knees," he admitted. "Before I went back for my second year, I decided to go to an inside protector. That made a big difference."

Reed gained confidence between his first and second year by doing more than 40 high school games. He worked hard to condition himself and continually corrected flaws in his game.

"You constantly work at being a consistent umpire," he said. "At that time I was working very hard because I knew I had the potential to be a major league umpire."

After a "much better season" in his second year, and strong outings in the next several, Reed was assigned to the instructional league in 1978. With each year, he edged closer and closer to being called up, but one more year would separate Reed and the major leagues.

"There were probably a lot of umpires with more ability than me," said Reed, "but they just couldn't put up with the life-style."

Reed umpired throughout the instructional league and in 1979, the long awaited phone call finally pierced his ears. Reed was ready to go to the majors. He knew his abilities were top, and his tolerance was high. But he still faced a major decision in his life. Something he fought and worked hard for was in his lap, but a question of morals arose as the phone rang.

"In 1979 I finally got the call I was waiting for," Reed said. "There was talk that I may be going up, but until you get the call, you can't do anything but wait."

The umpires' strike in 1979 caused Reed to hesitate in saying yes, and it almost cost him a suspension from the umpire's association. Non-union umpires were being used in the games, and Reed didn't want to cross the line without some support.

"I wanted the union's backing if I ever made the big leagues," he said. "I was being assigned to a higher league, but the umpires were on strike and I didn't want to cross the union. I was also facing the possibility of a suspension if I didn't report in 48 hours."

"It was one of the toughest decisions I've ever had to make," Reed added.

After notifying his wife, Reed made contact with the umpire's association several times. He explained his feelings and they were considered.

"I told the association that unless I get approval from them,

Pointe hockey players attend camp

The Amateur Hockey Association of the United States (AHAUS) recently sponsored a Regional Midget Camp for national caliber athletes, which included Grosse Pointers Douglas Olds, Dan Paolucci and Emmet Tracy.

The objective of the camp was to identify, train and evaluate national caliber players as a part of the development program. As a result of the program, AHAUS can widen the skills at the lower level as they accumulate talent towards elite level programs and national teams. The program includes on and off the ice training activities.

Tracy, 14, was one of 12 goalies awarded to extend his stay at the camp. Olds, 16, has been competing in hockey for nine years and will be a senior this fall at North. Paolucci, 16, has been a member of several hockey teams that have won international and national tournaments over the last four years. Paolucci will be a junior this fall at DeLaSalle High School.

The Cornhuskers were the U-12 season champs in the Grosse Pointe Soccer Association. Front row, Dane Strable, Alex Byron, Joe Hammer. From page 1C

then I'm not going," Reed said. "Fifteen minutes after I discussed it with them, I was given approval and no repercussions were held against me."

Reed's life would never be the same as he reported Milwaukee County Stadium for the Brewers/Cleveland Indians game. His first duty was the plate as he took the field with three non-union ump. He couldn't let the opportunity pass, but that night he got a quick baptismal.

"The game was nice and quiet until the bottom of the ninth," he recalled. "Cleveland was up 8-2 with two outs. I called a balk to allow one run to score and Milwaukee then went on to score four more runs to make the score 8-7."

"The Cleveland manager was very upset with the call. We had a quick discussion and then I tossed him out of the game. Robin Yount (Brewers) then lined out as Milwaukee lost, but could you imagine how it would have been if Cleveland lost?"

Welcome to the big leagues. Reed continued to be transferred between the minors and majors until 1983 when the American League picked up his contract.

"That changed it all," he said happily. "Once you are signed, you no longer have the long bus rides to games, you take planes. You also never umpire in the minors again."

"I learned a great deal in my 10 years in the minor leagues," he said. "It seemed like a long ride, but once I was under contract, that was all behind me."

What was in front, though, was better cities, better travel and a few more perks.

"Oh it probably does," Reed said in response to whether or not being an umpire has perks. "Someone is always seeing you on TV or something. The notoriety is there. We're given a lot more exposure than umpires were 30-40 years ago. We are put under more of a microscope."

Not only are people watching from the stands or televisions, there are players setting up that scrutinizing scope as well.

"You have to learn the style of the players and pitchers," he said. "You have to have a tough skin even though you're among many super players like George

Competing lifeguards

Grosse Pointe Farms lifeguards Kevin English, Steve Goodrich, Scott Frame and Wayne Peters, display their certificates of participation in the Michigan Lifeguard Competition.

The grueling contest held at Spencer Park in Rochester, consisted of a 350-meter lake swim, a deep-dive rescue recovery, a 700-meter rescue board race, a CPR event, and ended with a 1.1 mile run. The first team of Frame and English, qualified for the finals by placing in the top 10 of the field.

Boome Rang wins IOR in Sundown Series

Boome Rang, skippered by Ed Jacoby, won the IOR division in the Grosse Pointe Sail Club's weekly Sundown Series. The course was a shortened course, which ran from marks to port.

The following results are others who fared well. They are listed by place, boat name and skipper.

IOR: 1, Boome Rang, Ed Jacoby. 2, Plexus, Roger Higgins. 3, Abba, Larry Goldsby.

PHRF A: 1, Diversion,

Charles G. Miller. 2, Powerglide, Daniel Martin. 3, Eagle One, Timothy P. Lariviere.

PHRF B: 1, Jabberwock, Wayne Koch. 2, Macho Duck, David L. Klaasen. 3, Weather- sedge, Wade Edwards.

PHRF C: 1, Liebestraum, Dale Steiger. 2, Fair Lead, Mark W. Osborn. 3, Triple Play, William H. Francis.

Crescent: 1, Scimitar, John F. Brennan.

PHRF D: 1, Fiddler's Green, Don Ragan. 2, Sunrise, Joan Blair. 3, Solutions, Mark Craig.

JAM: 1, Impulse, Larry Haggart. 2, Yankee, Paul J. Krietsch. 3, Apraxia, Daniel Daudlin.

Brett, Wade Boggs or Alan Trammell."

"I love being around those players and being friendly, but when that 3-2 pitch catches the corner, you've got to pump that third strike."

Reed has been able to gain a higher tolerance. He studies the hitters and pitchers, and develops his own scouting report on each team. He also has organized his own game plan.

"Each game I prepare myself through the course of the day," he said. "I go over what the guys like to swing at, take, their moves, habits and other things about the players. It's all a part of my preparation."

So is sleep. "I always need a nap," he said.

The reason he requires those 40 winks a day, is because he doesn't want to be caught napping when he crosses the white lines.

"It's very seldom that I look in the stands," he said. "Sure, I might see what a wave looks like in different cities, but I try to concentrate for the three hours I'm on the field. My nap helps me keep vibrant and aware on the field."

It's inevitable that an umpire will run into a hostile meeting, but for the most part, Reed doesn't mind. It's all in a day's work. Confrontations are fine, but a blow below the belt will give a player or angry manager an early shower.

"Anytime they get personal, you toss them," Reed said. "My job is to keep players in the game. Umpires try to be as consistent as possible, but every so often you're wrong in someone's eyes."

"We don't get every call right, nor do I know what percentage of calls we get right," he added. "Fans expect 100 percent from players, and players should expect 100 percent from umpires."

Reed umpires with Dale Scott,

Rich Garcia and John Hirschback. A three-game series here, and a three-game series there is the way the ball bounces. From Oakland on Monday to Boston on Thursday.

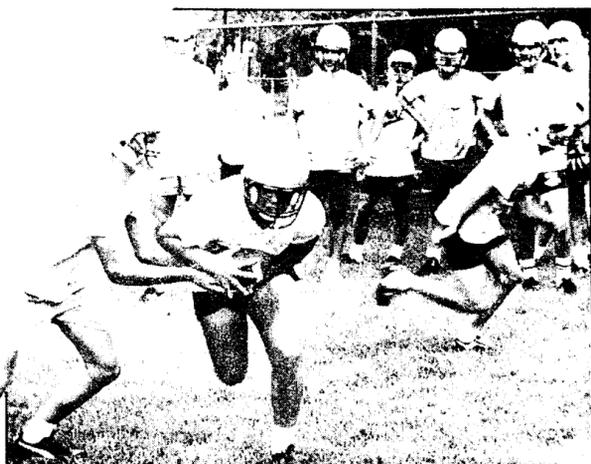

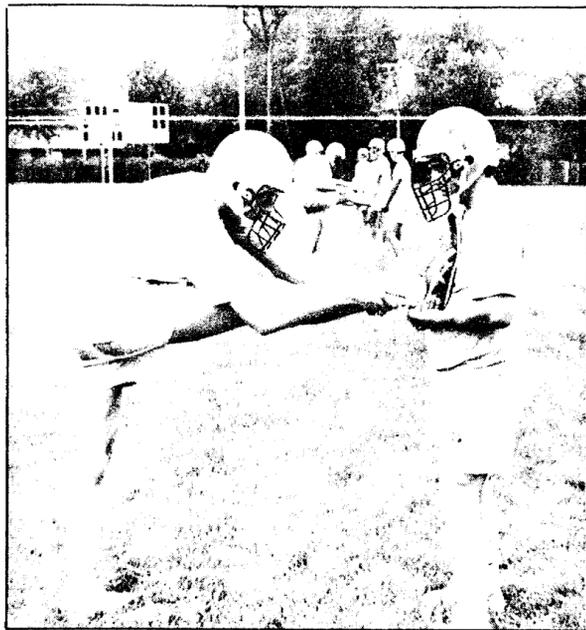

"It's a great way to see the country," Reed chuckled. "Each park or city has its own charm, but I really like Kansas City. It's probably the cleanest and fans are very knowledgeable. I also like Detroit. The fans are so close to the field and you can always sense the momentum they generate. Detroit has a tremendous following."

Reed's goal of umpiring Big Ten baseball was fortunate enough to go one more step. He defied the odds and made it, but he also threw a monkey wrench into the plans of his family.

"I came from a family of law enforcement," Reed said. "Every one always told me I'd be a policeman. Instead, I'm the law on the field."

Pigskins fly as Norsemen and Blue Devils unpack footballs

On Aug. 10, the long-awaited season of football was welcomed by North, South and University Liggett School. The first day of practice was finished in record heat and high humidity, but nevertheless, the job went on.

Above right, a few pushes here and there can't hurt, as South players gear up for opening day on Sept. 3 against Edsel Ford.

Right, South's Chris Stebbins gives the ball away as running backs vie to earn a starting spot for the Blue Devils.

Below, it was only 8:30 a.m. on the first day, but it's never too soon for the Norsemen to get in a few laps.

The birds of summer

You've heard the expression "Like a duck out of water?" Lately, everyone has been without water.

Although the drought in southeastern Michigan has subsided a bit, the heat wave rages on. While we humans flock to the malls, movie houses and our air conditioned homes, the birds of summer will be where the water is.

The goldfinches will be showing their young where the yard feeders and bird baths are, and the robins will be looking for worms coming up through a freshly watered lawn.

Ernie Kafkas, wildlife habitat biologist with the Michigan Department of Natural Resources office in Mt. Clemens, says there are some serious problems for waterfowl because of the high temperatures and humidity.

Water levels in the lakes and canals are very low. The botulism bacteria, present in nature all the time, thrives in warm stagnant water.

"What happens is that the bacteria gets going in the hot weather because of the warming of the water," Kafkas said.

The bacteria lives in vegetation and on rocks, which are pecked at by various waterfowl. Once the water birds consume this toxin-laden material, they can become fatally ill.

Kafkas said there have been reports of botulism outbreaks in the Shores, at the local harbors and in St. Clair Shores along the shoreline.

Though the ducks and geese can become mighty sick, they can be nursed back to health.

A water bird infected with the bacteria will appear listless and can be approached easily.

"The disease is often called limberneck," Kafkas said, "because their necks seem to flop around."

Though the DNR usually never encourages people to take in animals, Kafkas said this is one time where the public can help. By giving the sickened birds a small pool to swim in, plenty of fresh water and food, they can be made well. Food means some cracked corn and a little bread, says Kafkas. With a little bit of care and attention the birds will once again be swimming and flying freely.

"Sick birds will be hardly able to walk," Kafkas said. "If they do walk, they will look like they are intoxicated."

Kafkas said that anyone finding sick waterfowl should call the DNR.

"It is not a crisis right now," he said. "It could get really bad if this hot weather continues."

Kafkas noted that the botulism bacteria cannot easily be transmitted to humans. Ingestion of a sick bird would be the only way a human could contract the disease, and that is not very likely. Dead birds can spread the disease to other birds, and should be disposed of promptly and properly.

"Where we see the problem occur is in areas where the water is stagnant and gets very warm," Kafkas said. "You don't see this problem along the river where the water flows freely."

On a more positive note, wild turkey hunters have good news. Sylvia Taylor, Mio district wildlife supervisor, says that the game birds are sunning themselves, romping in the dust and gorging themselves on grasshoppers. They should be healthy, happy and able to survive even a difficult winter.

Taylor said that the ducks and other waterfowl are congregating in areas such as Houghton Lake Flats because small creeks and beaver ponds dried up this spring and early summer. While the birds may not be at your favorite water hole, you'll be able to see them in good numbers in large swamps and near lakes and rivers.

'A Fish Called Wanda' is Python-ish comedy at its best

By Marian Trainor
Special Writer

Comedy reaches new heights in "A Fish Called Wanda," a fun film by John Cleese, an alumnus of the fabled British comedy crew known as "Monty Python." A surrealistic comedy, "Wanda" blithely places live actors in situations usually considered the preserve of animated figures and the result is hilarious.

In this story of the love-hate relationship between Brits and Americans and their very different ways of doing things, two Englishmen are paired off against two Yanks.

On the British team is straight-laced barrister named Archie Leach (Cleese) and Ken played by another Python regular, Michael Palin, a mild-mannered eccentric. Representing the Americans are Otto (Kevin Kline), a power-crazed psycho, and Wanda (Jamie Lee Curtis), an uninhibited tomboy, femme fatale and the most duplicitous, double-dealing, double-crosser ever imagined.

Then there's George (Tom Georgeson), who directs the group's operations until he winds up in jail and out of the film's action; and Wanda, an angel fish who swims contentedly in the tranquil waters of her aquarium, a sharp contrast to her anything-but-angelic namesake.

The screenplay, as zany as the characters who play in it, was written by Cleese from a story he developed with Charles Crichton, a 79-year-old director famous for his post-war comedies, among them "The Laven-der Hill Mob."

In "A Fish Called Wanda," the Americans and their English counterparts pull off a riotous but successful jewel robbery in London's Hulton Gardens diamond district. After the loot is safely stashed, a battle of wits begins when the teams try to steal the rocks from one another.

Wanda (the woman, not the fish) works her wiles on Leach. Meanwhile, Ken is charged with eliminating a key witness against the jailed George... and so decides to harass her to death. It's a plan that provides the funniest episodes in the picture.

Kline's Otto is the consummate ugly American. When he's not quoting Nietzsche incorrectly at the top of his booming voice, he's making insulting remarks about the British.

Cleese scores big as the properly-repressed English barrister stuck with a vinegary wife. He can't believe his luck when Wanda makes a play for him and he responds with fervor, trying to live up to his name as a lover (Archie Leach was Cary Grant's real name).

Curtis gives the best performance of her career as the sexy, conniving Wanda who doesn't care which lover she winds up with... as long as he's the one with the diamonds.

"A Fish Called Wanda" is one film which lives up to its hype. It's original and without doubt, the season's funniest film. Two to one you'll want to see it more than once, but don't bring the kids. "Wanda" is strictly adult fun.

... is what makes the March of Dimes second annual Comedy Castle "Gong Show," the fun event it is, say Pointers Evelyn Bogan (top) and Marge Slezak, pictured at last year's event.

This year's March of Dimes Pros (People Reaching Out) benefit is set for Monday, Aug. 22 at the Comedy Castle, Catalpa at 1 1/2 Mile Road in Berkley. Pointer Sybil laques is on the committee; Slezak and Grosse Pointe dentist musician Chet Bogan will perform, among others. Tim Kiska of Grosse Pointe will be a judge.

Tickets are $35 general admission, $60 for ringside seats. For more information, call 423-3207.

Restaurants set 4th annual picnic

The restaurants of Pointes East, in association with the Grosse Pointe and Harper Woods chapters of the Rotary Clubs, will hold a charity picnic Saturday, Aug. 27, at William T. Johnstone Park in Harper Woods, behind Eastland Center. Admission to the fourth annual Taste Pointe East picnic event is free and proceeds will be donated to the Capuchin Soup Kitchen.

Member restaurants will serve a variety of foods from their menus including ribs, pasta primavera, oysters, escargot, ceasar salads, chili, Belgian pork sausage, mussels, pasta, grilled tuna and desserts. Tickets will be sold at the picnic to be redeemed for food items.

Activities include a dunk tank, pony rides and live entertainment by Bill Long. A raffle will be held providing winners with gift certificates from member restaurants as well as a grand prize to be announced.

Pointes East is a non-profit organization of 15 local restaurants which have joined together to promote eastside Detroit and Grosse Pointe neighborhood nightlife.

Chorale begins rehearsals

Macomb Community College's Macomb Chorale offers adults the opportunity to participate in a singing ensemble. The Chorale is open to anyone from Macomb or adjacent counties. Rehearsals begin Aug. 29.

The Chorale performs a wide variety of concert music and will present two concerts this year. The Festival of Carols will feature Daniel Pinkham's Christmas Cantata, Rutter's Blow, Blow thou Winter Wind, as well as other favorites. The Spring Concert will feature Robert Ray's Gospel Mass and Bernstein's Chichester Psalms.

Although the Chorale is primarily for adults, it is open to anyone, and may be taken for college credit. Rehearsals will be held Monday evenings from 7 to 9:45 p.m. in room L-120, at Macomb's Center Campus, 44575 Garfield (near Hall Road), in Clinton Township.

Macomb Community College also has three other ensembles which meet during the day. For more information concerning the Macomb Chorale or the other choral ensembles, call Dr. Stuart Scott or Barb Cole at 286-2044.

Car show, swap meet to offer family fun

More than 300 classic and exotic vehicles including Packards, Buicks, Fords, Hudsons, Chryslers and foreign cars will be featured during the Sixth Annual Spirit of Detroit Car Show and Swap Meet Sunday, Aug. 28 at Historic Fort Wayne from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The show is presented by the Detroit Chapter of the Veteran Motor Car Club of America (VMCCA), the Detroit Historical Department, and the Detroit Historical Society.

Grosse Pointe resident William R. Chapin, president of Marketing Network, Inc. and grandson of one of the founders of the Hudson Motor Car Company, is honorary chairperson. Proceeds will benefit the Detroit Historical Department's Automobile Collection Restoration Fund.

This year the show will spotlight automobiles of 1948. Unlike many of the other car shows in the region, the Spirit of Detroit show is not invitational and is unrestricted. Individuals can register entries in the show up to and including the day of the event.

Collectors attending the show will have an opportunity to buy and swap automobiles, parts and accessories. Visitors can vote for their favorite cars in a number of categories.

Among the other activities scheduled for the Sixth Annual Spirit of Detroit Car Show are a demonstration on the Detroit River by the Detroit Fire Department fireboat Curtis Randolph, and a demonstration of antique highwheel bicycles by the Wheelman, the Detroit Police Department Keystone Cops, and the Detroit Fire Department Clowns. "Moonlight Serenade" — a 1948 style high school dance, will be held from 8 p.m. through midnight, Saturday, Aug. 27, in the gymnasium of the Fort. Proceeds from the dance will also benefit the department's Automobile Collection Restoration Fund. Tickets are available through Ticketmaster outlets.

The show's setting will also provide an opportunity for family entertainment. Historic Fort Wayne, located on the Detroit River, will be open to visitors on the day of the event. Visitors can tour a number of restored buildings including the original barracks, commander's house, guardhouse and fort.

The Detroit Historical Department also recently announced plans to collect the 100 vehicles most significant to the history of the Detroit area. A "wish" list of 100 cars, trucks, military vehicles that embody engineering, design, and marketing advances was compiled by the department in association with the Detroit Society of Automotive Engineers as well as local automotive collectors and historians. The department's current automotive collection of nearly 70 automobiles will provide a base for the new direction in collecting.

General admission is $2 per person and children under 12 accompanied by an adult will be admitted free. Car registration is $5 and includes admission for drivers and passengers. Historic Fort Wayne is located at 6325 W. Jefferson at Livernois, just off the Fisher Freeway. Free parking will be available.

Boating

By Cristina Staats

Congested waterways

With more and more people entering the recreational boater ranks each year, waterways like Lake St. Clair are becoming congested with fast moving, and often careless boating traffic.

This summer, with the extremely hot weather we are battling, there has been a significant increase in boater use. It stands to reason, that some sort of regulation and licensing of the boater may be in order.

We are used to acquiring a license to operate our cars; taking the prerequisite courses and learning the rules and conditions which to play by. The path of a boat is much less defined than the road a car travels. The rules and conditions that control boating has a branch of law (Admiralty Law) all its own.

Boating is a very complex recreational activity. There is a great deal more to know than getting aboard, turning the key and stepping on the gas. Without some type of training, many people do not know the most basic rules which control boating and everything that goes with it.

States, including Michigan, have started taking a hard look at mandatory boating safety education and licensing boaters. Maryland has become the first state to launch a mandatory education program for boaters, and many become the model for other states to follow.

Under the Maryland law, anyone born after July 1, 1972, must get a certificate before operating a boat. This year the law applies to everyone 16 years old and younger. The certificate can be obtained by successfully completing a course approved by the DNR, or by taking an equivalency examination.

The law will gradually be phased in so in 10 years it will apply to people 26-years-old and younger. In 20 years, 36-year-olds and younger will be effected, and so on until the entire population will be required to have the certificate.

Maryland found that interest in boating safety mushroomed once the bill became law. Spring classes filled up and summer classes, traditionally poorly attended, were full as well. They were able to tap into existing educational programs, such as the Power Squadron and Coast Guard Auxiliary, as well as develop their own courses.

As of the implementation of the law on July 1, Maryland has 140 DNR boating classes running throughout the year and an additional 130 courses offered by other certified groups. Courses are even being offered at boat dealerships after hours, and Maryland now has boating classes in the public schools.

It should be noted, however, that the certificate is a minimum requirement.

Boat Club's second series catches wind

The Grosse Pointe Farms Boat Club began its second half of its Thursday Night sailboat series on Aug. 4 under mild winds. Thirty-seven yachts started the 4.5-mile race. The top three winners, listed by place, boat name and skipper, follows.

PHRF A: 1, Mach Snell, Don Kowitz. 2, Alfresco, Vann Fleming. Tied for third were, Jeff Hayden's Bullit, and Fair Lead, skippered by Mark Osborn.

PHRF C: 1, Sea Wise, Chuck Weiss. 2, Contagious, Rhian/Fairbanks.

JAM A: 1, PEF, Paul Franks. 2, Lorax, Ralph Deeds. 3, Gung-Ho, Neal Bauer.

JAM B: 1, Christmas, Gary Dysert. 2, Summer Stock, Terry Stocker. 3, JOI DE VIVRE, Tom Palmer.

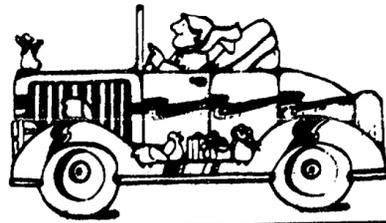

JAM C: 1, After You, Roger Fries. 2, Elixir, Shahe Momjian. 3, Winsome, Gerald Naumann.

Star tennis practice begins Aug. 22

Any girls interested in trying out for the Our Lady Star of the Sea girls' tennis team should report to the high school gym at 3:30 p.m. on Aug. 22.
