Judge asked to rule Woods' pit bull ban unconstitutional

Staff Writer
A Wayne County Circuit judge will decide next week whether to summarily throw out Grosse Pointe Woods' pit bull ban as unconstitutional or have the matter hashed out through a "mini-trial."

Judge Kaye Tertzag is expected to make the decision on the morning of April 21, according to Ross B. Meretski, who is representing a Woods pit bull owner who is challenging the pit bull ordinance adopted Oct. 3. Originally the constitutional challenge to the ordinance, which actually banned all pit bulls from the city of Grosse Pointe Woods, was filed Oct. 10 by a Woods resident under the assumed name Friends of the Downtrodden. Since the suit was filed, the pit bull owner, Rosemary Mulleavy, has decided to drop the assumed name, Meretski said.

A second suit challenging the ordinance had been filed by Terry and Molly Shook, owners would be based on briefs filed by of the pit bull on Lancaster that led to neighbors convincing the council to ban the breed from the city. The Shooks' dog, Buster, died Jan. 2 and the Shooks have since discontinued their lawsuit.

Meretski said that based on previous court cases concerning pit bull bans, he is asking that the judge rule the Woods ban unconstitutional. Tertzag's ruling, if he agrees with Meretski, Meretski and Woods city attorney George Catlin.

If Tertzag decides that the briefs filed by both sides are not satisfactory to decide the issue, then a mini-trial will be held with witnesses and experts testifying before the judge, Catlin

Tertzag is taking the case over from Circuit Judge Claudia House Morcom, who disqualified herself April 7 for "conscientious scruples," Catlin said. Since the adoption of the emergency pit bull ban last October, the council adopted a permanent ordinance change Nov. 21.

The ordinance has been enforced by the Grosse Pointe Woods Public Safety Department. Two residents have been ticketed for harboring pit bulls. One of the tickets was issued to Terry Shook, but the ticket was died. The second ticket was mistakenly given to a man in reac-Mulleavy, Meretski said.

On Oct. 17 Circuit Judge Phillip Jourdan denied a request that the city be restrained by enforcing its pit bull ban.

Under the Woods' animal control ordinances, it is illegal to own or keep a pit bull or any mix of pit bull in the city. Woods officers also have the power to impound suspected pit bulls unvoided by the city after the dog til a court has determined whether the animals are a member of the banned breeds.

Fourth try for War Memorial

Farms gives go-ahead to Class C liquor license

By Nancy Parmenter

It took more than 10 years, plus two hours Monday night, but the Grosse Pointe War Memorial finally won approval to seek a Class C liquor license.

The hard-won approval squeaked by, 4-3, with Farms councilmen Harry Echlin, Emil Berg and John Crowley dissent-

Opponents of the request have the things these said in the past that they would appeal any approval of a license by the city. "It would be expected that this is not the end of the contest," said opponent Paul Marco Tuesday.

Emotions on the issue ran high, with opponents and supporters writing letters to the editor and taking out advertisements. An ad in last week's Grosse Pointe News invited the public to Monday's meeting, which it erroneously labeled a public hearing.

The public came.

Half an hour before the meeting started, all the parking spaces at Grosse Pointe Farms city hall were taken. The partisan crowd eventually filled most of the extra chairs set up for the occasion in the council chamber, and a few latecomers stood in the doorway.

Mayor Joseph Fromm allowed testimony from interested parties and from supporters and opponents for about an hour and a half before the council began its

An unemotional Mark Weber, president of the center, said he was amazed at the fervor aroused by what he feels is a simple request.

Second election June 12

Schools to ask voters for renewal, increase separately

By Margie Reins Smith Staff Writer

The Grosse Pointe Board of Education voted unanimously to hold a second millage election on June 12, and to split its request into two proposals — a renewal of 25.35 mills and an increase of 2.2 mills. Both proposals are for three years.

Voters turned down a request for a three-year 27.55-mill package (combined renewal and 2.2mill increase) April 10 by about 1,000 votes.

"The board fully realizes what voters said," said Fred Adams, school board trustee. "It's painful, but it's there.

Superintendent John Whritner said many educators felt the negative votes weren't against the school system, but against increased taxes.

"There's no way we'll be opening schools in September," he Projected revenue for the 1989-90 school year is $13,982,000 without the millage renewal. The revenue comes from local sources, state aid, interest, federal and county special education.

Projected expenditures, which include fixed costs for items like supplies, workers compensation, unemployment compensation, insurance, interest expenses and such, come to $8,439,000.

After adding federal grants, the total amount available for salaries and benefits for the 1989-90 school year is $6,507,000, Whritner said.

The 1988-89 budget was $43 million.

Doris Cook, president of the Grosse Pointe Education Association, said that of the 521 union members, about 300 will be notified of their pending layoff before the end of April.

"They must be pink-slipped at least 60 days prior to the end of the fiscal year, which is June 30," she said.

Layoffs are determined by seniority, Cook said. "It's my guess that anyone with less than 20 years seniority will be pink-

War Memorial officials came prepared to compromise. They erected a large poster with six conditions - roughly similar to the seven proposed by Berendt

John Lewis, president of the center's board, argued that the War Memorial would have greater control over drinking if it had a liquor license. Currently, groups are allowed to serve alcohol with a temporary license or by bringing their own.

The War Memorial has made numerous attempts to obtain a liquor license. In recent years, it ably framed as a War Memorial has applied four times.

Bad timing

The issue was supposed to be which of two applicants should be allowed to pursue one of Grosse Pointe Farms' two unused liquor licenses.

On Jan. 23, when the city council decided to release one license, both the War Memorial and Amigos Restaurant on Mack expressed interest. Monday, Amigos dropped out of the running.

Amigos current building isn't suitable for serving liquor, according to restaurant owner Ed Bourke. He is negotiating for another location, but couldn't put together a deal in time.

"I'd still like to have it," he said after the meeting. "Maybe this time next week, I'll have a building, but that'll be too late."

He did not use the word 'withdrawal," but the council took it that way. Councilman Gregg Berendt thanked him for being forthright about his problem.

"The withdrawal of Amigos clarifies things," he said. Actually, what Bourke told the council was:

"Amigos is not ready to proceed. We've had some complications.

"If this is an honest attempt to open this to the public and not just grant it to the War Memorial, we would hope the council would leave the license open so a small business would have the opportunity to apply."

THE PARTY OF THE P In June 1985, the center tried free to apply to the state for the to encourage the city to loosen its hold on one of three liquor licenses available according to population. Several restaurants also wanted one of the licenses, but the debate became irretrievrequest. The council decided then not to grant any additional

In October 1985, the center tried and failed to buy the assets including a liquor license — of the bankrupt Bronze Door restaurant. The War Memorial was outbid by a group of investors called Standby No. 5, which eventually sold the Bronze Door license and building to Stanley Day, who now operates it as the new ONE23 restaurant.

In February 1986, the War Memorial tried again, this time attempting to buy a resort liquor license from a bar in Hillman. Mich. The LCC declined to grant a resort license waiver in view of objections from residents and the

The fourth time was the charm, as the Farms in January released one of its two unused liquor licenses. The War Memorial was the only remaining bidder after Amigos Restaurant dropped its application.

Cancer survivors to meet

There are more than five million Americans today who have a history of cancer, and more than half of them have lived over five years after their first cancer diagnosis.

A special workshop will be held during Cancer Survivor's Week on April 27 from 1 to 5:30 p.m. at Harper Hospital. The workshop is aimed at addressing the needs of the cancer survivor.

Barbara Hoffman, J.D., will be the keynote speaker for the workshop. She will address the important issues of how to fight against job discrimination.

Other topics to be addressed during the workshop include returning back to the job market, living with uncertainty, and your rights as a cancer survivor. A panel of adults who are living with a cancer health history will also address their challenges with survival.

The fee for the program is $25. It is sponsored by Harper-Grace Hospitals, American Cancer Society, Children's Leukemia Foundation of Michigan, Cancer Information Service, and the Meyer L. Prentis Comprehensive Cancer Center of Metropolitan Detroit. For registration and further information, call Harper Hospital at 745 8902.

Sour Milk River

Cities seek Proposal C funds to sweeten drainage system conditions

By John Minnis Staff Writer

At the urging of a citizens committee, the cities of Grosse Pointe Woods and St. Clair Shores are seeking state funds to improve conditions at the sewage-laden Milk River.

The Woods City Council passed a resolution April 3 asking the Michigan Department of Resources to earmark some of the $660 million environmentalcleanup bonds for improving the Milk River drainage system. The Woods resolution is patterned after a resolution passed by the St. Clair Shores council March 13.

The resolutions were brought before the councils by the Milk River Clean Water Committee, a group of residents from both cities who live near the open channel at the Wayne-Macomb border. The committee wants the effluents going into the river cleaned to eliminate odor and pollution.

To understand the Milk River problem, according to St. Clair Shores City Engineer Marlin Sumner, is to realize that it is no longer a river. What many think is the river is merely a ditch beginning at the Milk River pump station at the county border near Marter Road and ending at the flood gates on Jefferson. Above the pump station, combined storm-sewer drains have replaced what was the Milk River and its watershed.

Being blocked at both ends, the existing Milk River channel does not flow. Its purpose is to act as an overflow pond for the sewer systems of parts of Harper Woods and Grosse Pointe Woods.

During normal conditions, all fluids in the sewer system flow to the treatment plant in Detroit. But because Harper Woods and Grosse Pointe Woods have a combined system for storm drains and sewage, the system is frequently overwhelmed by storm drains. Heavy rains create more fluids than the sewer system was designed to handle. The excess fluids are held in a catch basin at the Milk River pump

After a heavy rain, the water in the catch basin is pumped into the open channel. The water contains raw sewage, which is diluted by the storm runoff.

While in the channels, oxygenburning bacteria are supposed to decompose much of the sewage, but when the oxygen in the water is depleted, non-oxygen burning bacteria take over, resulting in the stench many residents have complained about coming from the Milk River.

The water in the Milk River channel is then pumped directly into Lake St. Clair at Jefferson, including the partially decomposed sewage.

In December a DNR official inspected the Milk River pumping station and channel. He recommended that the sanitary pumps be replaced and that the channel be aerated to stimulate non-odorous decomposition. He also suggested the sediment in the Milk River channel be examined and possibly dredged.

John Veale, co-chairman of the Milk River Clean Water Committee, said, "We certainly support the recommendations of the DNR, and we hope we can get some of the Proposal C funds to implement the recommendaheavy rain water entering the lions of dollars. The right way would be to install a new sewer system with separate storm and sewage drains, which is not economically feasible in older communities.

To properly solve the Milk River problem would cost mil-

Another solution is to build large holding tanks for the storm overflow, which would allow time for the solids to settle and chlorine could be added. Sumner said this is what St. Clair Shores has done, at a cost of $20 mil-

Currently, a $38,900 study of the Milk River is being conducted by the engineering firm of McNamee Porter Seeley. The study, which is expected to be completed by July 7, will include public hearings and will seek to provide affordable solutions to the Milk River problem. The Inter-County Drain Commission, which is the governmental agency that runs the Milk River pump station, is paying for the study. The Wayne County representative on the Inter-County Drain Commission, Jack Durbin, deputy director of the county's Department of Public Works, could not be reached for comment.

The Milk River has been a problem for years, but Veale hopes the Proposal C bonds will provide the funds necessary to finally alleviate the stench, not to mention the pollution pouring into Lake St. Clair.

"We want to keep the pressure on," he said. "It's a problem, and until somebody gets off dead center on this thing, it's not going

Board President Jon Gandelot said he interpreted the defeat as a grassroots taxpayer rebellion. Grosse Pointers have always supported education, he said, but they are against increased property taxes.

Karen McLeod, co-chairwoman of the millage campaign, agreed. "I think it was a crack at the SEVs. People didn't have another voice. But they don't understand the full impact of this.

According to Grosse Pointe Woods police reports, a 14-yearold student said the boy had approached him with a switchblade knife making slashing motions at his chest. Later the alleged knife-wielder approached the 14year-old again and told another student nearby, "Let's kill him," a school official reported to po-

The 13-year-old was detained by the school officials until police arrived.

The schools have no money now. No voted millage. People don't understand this.

Raymond Ingham, in his Bon Secours office in the former St. Philomena convent on Marseilles, Cook said there is a little less than 8 mills left as a source of school revenue. "It's a county allocation - about one-fourth of our current budget," she said.

Cook said if taxpayers vote down the renewal for the second time June 12, all layoffs will be effective June 30.

"On July 1, all those teachers would be eligible for unemployment compensation which would, within a few months, be about as much as the 2.2 mill increase we asked for in April.' McLeod said the renewal and increase were combined for last week's election because the school board was trying to be honest and tell people they needed the money.

"We campaigned the best we could and tried to reach all groups. But there was anger there and the timing was bad,"

"This was how people could express their anger about taxes."

Cook speculated on reasons for he failure of April 10 proposal. "The assessment question was important," she said. "But it's broader. People don't understand the relationship of assessments The student feared for his and SEVs to school millages. They don't understand Headlee. information given to them.'

Howard and Nancy Trowern, residents for 15 years, said they had two children go through the Grosse Pointe schools.

"We've voted for the millage for 15 years," Nancy Trowern said. "I was shocked at the amount (of the combined package) on the heels of our recent assessment increase.

She noted that one of the reasons given by educators for the millage increase was because of increased health care costs.

"Most companies require employees to contribute to health benefits these days," she said. "In the teachers contract, it says they get total health, dental and eyeglass care. If companies can make concessions, why can't unions?'

Howard Trowern said he took issue with the attitude taken by many educators that, if they can justify the cost, it must be met.

"This just isn't the way it works in industry. If I was on the board I'd say, 'Let's talk to the union about some concessions.' This isn't unusual.

"If costs are high because of contractual obligations, they should go back to the union and work it out," he said.

"The spectre of losing teachers to competition is in the imagination of the school board. Where else can a teacher go that pays as well as Grosse Pointe?'

Cook said if the 2.2-mill inthe schools will have to eliminate the extra-pay-for-extra-duty policy; specialists and consultant programs such as substance abuse counselors and science coordinators; class sizes would go up from the low 20s to the high 20s; and most maintenance programs would have to be postponed.

"We'd have gigantic classes up in the 40s and 50s. We'd have to have a five-period day at the high school, with no lunch, no extracurricular activities such as music, newspapers, athletics and clubs; no art, music and gym at the elementary level; an elimination of high school classes in declining areas like business education and life skills; not as many counselors, psychologists and social workers.

Lee Bryce, of Grosse Pointe Woods, said she believes people think the schools are getting greedy.

"People would have supported a renewal. (The combination of renewal and increase) drew attention to it and brought people out of the woodwork with axes to grind."

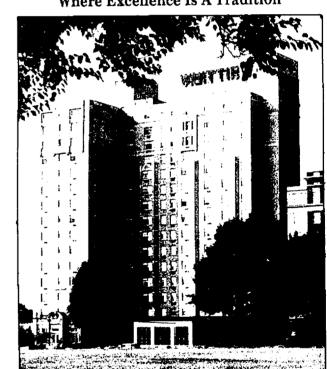

M.J. Messerschmidt has been a resident of Grosse Pointe Woods for 24 years and is retired.

"I doubt if I've been singled out for the heaviest tax increase," he said, "but mine have increased 55 percent in the last 10 years. That's a terrific jump. And that's not including the 14.3 percent increased assessment."

Messerschmidt said he would have voted for a renewal. He also noted that health care costs could be shared by employees. "Teachers in Grosse Pointe have a handsome income," he said.

The wild, wild West

Last month we took The Grand Tour of that strange country by the sea - California. Rich and I and our mothers flew to Phoenix where we picked up a car and began a 3,100 mile odyssey through steaming deserts, snow-covered mountains, Los Angeles traffic at high noon and the gambling meccas of Nevada. It was one heck of a trip.

We stayed in 11 cities in 17 days, visiting family and friends, and the only downside of the trip was loading and unloading the tures for any money. car. We had four large suitcases, two garment bags, three carryons and assorted plastic bags.

The first day out, my motherin-law had a close encounter with a jumping cholla. We were driving through the Joshua Tree National Monument, admiring the great variety of desert plant life, when we came upon a large area of chollas, which is a cactus with a pillowy look.

Stop the car and everyone out, I said. I wanted to get a photo of the group against that incredible backdrop. My mother-in-law carefully positioned herself near some of the plants, but not too

The next thing we knew she had the lethal blooms in her heel, thigh and purse. The blooms had spines that were as long and unyielding as sewing needles and they embedded themselves deep in her flesh. We all got stabbed pulling them out and we learned real fast why they're called jumping chollas.

She told me she wasn't getting out of the car anymore for pic-

Since we had a lot of places to go, things to see and people to visit, we were up early every morning. On the third day of the trip, we were walking the few blocks from our motel to a restaurant for breakfast, when my mother in law suddenly stopped. She was holding her chest and trying to catch her breath.

She told us that her body never gets moving until 11:30. I told her that with the three-hour difference, it was close to that time back home, so she should keep her body on Michigan time.

The next morning, as we were walking to a taping of "The Price is Right," one of her favorite shows, Rich swears she was moving briskly. In fact, he says, she was so anxious to get to the studio, she was a block ahead of us. I don't remember that. He likes to kid his mother.

On Palm Sunday, we set off from my brother-in-law's house in Fresno to spend the day in Carmel. We stopped for breakfast on the road and I didn't realize that my wallet had fallen out of my purse at the restaurant until we were in Carmel. It held a sum of money plus a number of credit cards.

I called the restaurant and they had found it, so on our way back that evening, we stopped to pick it up. Everything was intact and the manager refused to take a reward. He made up for the fact that I had spent a day in Carmel, trekking through some great little shops, without any folding money or plastic money. Talk about depressing. And on top of that, I didn't get to see Clint Eastwood.

Up to this point, we had been visiting people, renewing acquaintances with long-lost cousins, dear friends and beloved brothers and sons. After a week, however, it was on to the fleshpots of Nevada.

We contributed to the local economies of Reno, Lake Tahoe, Tonapah... Tonapah? It's a hardscrabble little desert town that's wind-whipped and surrounded by brown as far as the eye can see and beyond. It's also where Jack Dempsey was born. We ate in the Jack Dempsey Room at the town's historic hotel, a magnificent structure from yesterday. A jewel in the desert.

While we were in Tahoe, we saw a show headlined by Tempest Storm, a name familiar to the more mature among us. While some of her body parts have yielded a bit to gravity, it's heartening to see a senior citizen bump and grind with such class. Well, maybe it was considered low class back then, but today with the everything-goes philosophy, her style of dance has become classy and classic.

On Easter Sunday, we went to Our Lady of Las Vegas Church and that is the real name. At the door was a 5-foot white bunny, greeting everyone. A young woman dressed like a pixie obligingly took photos of the younger folk with the big bunny. There is no reality in Las Vegas, I thought.

I was wrong. The Mass, sung superbly in Latin by a beautifully robed choir and accompanied by the Las Vegas Brass Quartet, was moving and uplift-

The whole trip was a trip. I got on the plane for the flight home 5 pounds heavier and 2 ounces wiser. To wit: Our mothers, who are both in their 70s, are travelin' ladies. They got up before us everyday and stayed up later. There were a number of nights when we barely made it to our room, exhausted, and they were still going strong at the slots. I haven't finished writing thank you notes yet, and they're both ready to go again.

forward in support of the home's ongoing efforts to develop a chemical dependency assessment and aftercare program on the home's Cook Road campus.

The proposed program, which would serve students and families of the Grosse Pointe Public School System, was conceived to meet an urgent community need for independent assessment and for aftercare counseling following inpatient treatment for chemical dependency. These services, which now require travel to inpatient treatment centers (West Bloomfield, Troy, Toledo, Ann Arbor), could be effectively delivered locally, close to a student's home and school.

The Children's Home has been denied the opportunity to establish this program on the Cook Road Campus by the Grosse Pointe Woods City Council. However, it must be emphasized that the need for such a program has not abated, and that somehow a way must be found to help young people and their families find the counseling support which they must have for successful recovery right here in our community.

The Children's Home of Detroit will continue to work with the schools and community experts to explore appropriate options to address this urgent need.

Tactical error

To the Editor: Your editorial describing the recent millage defeat as a "mini-tax revolt" may have totally missed one major reason this millage proposal was turned down.

The school board made a tactical error when it combined the renewal and the increase. Telling us it was all or nothing is offensive and unnecessarily so. Grosse Pointe has an excellent history of saying yes when it was required. To take away our choice by lumping two millages together will cost this community. Hopefully, it will only cost the expense of a second election.

Whoever on the school board decided to take our choice away should be held accountable for his or her er-

A second expensive election must now be held. Let us hope we are now smart enough to realize the importance of freedom - freedom to choose and not be told "all or nothing.'

Time to be blunt

To the Editor:

I am a resident of Grosse Pointe Woods and a parent of an elementary teacher in the Grosse Pointe School System.

I am appalled at the millage results. What I am even more disturbed about is the complacent way the superintendent seems to be taking the defeat. In a letter to his staff he stated "In no way do I feel our defeat was a vote against the schools or education. It was a concern of citizens over rising assessments." Where is Dr. Whritner's leadership at this critical time? His letter seems to be more of an attempt to make the Grosse Pointe community feel better about turning their backs on the children of our community than a call to action.

He also states that "There was no way the campaign ... might have been improved or done differently." Again I question this strenuously. I have a daughter who teaches in the Clintondale School System which passed their millage on March 18. They had Save our School rallies, letters written by students to local residents asking for their teachers' jobs to be saved; candy kisses that stated "a kiss from a Clintondale kid" handed out by children at all polling places; along with phone banks and the custom-

I feel that Dr. Whritner and the board should be brutally blunt with the residents ... name every teacher or staff member laid off, name every program cut (art, music, gym, science, etc.), list the new class sizes, name every sports program lost, and outline all the services cut (counseling, special ed., etc).

Bring in the real estate people. What will houses be worth with a skeleton of school services, no special programs and class sizes in

As I stood in line at Parcells to vote the other day, I overheard many young adults state that they were planning to vote no because their children were not school age yet. How shortsighted! Also many older people were of the opinion that they need not concern themselves with the schools' problems. Again, how shortsighted. My nine children are already educated, yet I know that my house would not be worth as much with a deprived, second-rate school system.

I hope that Dr. Whritner and the board realize that they need to be presenting the millage failure as the crisis it is to the residents. Sugarcoating this terrible lack of support for our children will only make it easier for residents to vote no again in June. It's time to be honest. Grosse Pointe has turned its back on the children. Let's not do that again in June.

2 new plans show support for tax revolt

we new proposals to limit property taxes in Michigan indicate that the tax revolt, far from being a dead issue, is prompting new efforts by politicians to satisfy public demands for capping or even trimming property taxes.

One of these plans is a petition campaign being discussed by L. Brooks Patterson, former Oakland County prosecutor, and members of the Oakland County Taxpayers Association to seek to roll back property tax assessments to 1988, 1987 or 1986 levels and put a cap of about 2 percent on annual increases. A committee is reviewing various proposals and will draft language for the petitions.

The other is Gov. James J. Blanchard's proposal to enable homeowners to delay payment of some property tax increases resulting from hikes in property tax assessments. In effect, the plan would delay until the eventual sale of the property the taxes resulting from assessment increases in excess of the inflation rate as measured by the annual consumers price index.

Both of these proposals represent further support for the state tax revolt that appears to be brewing in large part because of recent increases in property assessments. Assessments rose an estimated 10 percent in Wayne and Oakland counties and about 11 percent in Macomb.

In the Grosse Pointe School District, the average assessment was estimated at 12.9 percent, subject to the Headlee amendment. That increase and the Headlee effect on it were blamed in large part for the defeat of the proposed 2.2-mill increase in last week's special school election.

As Grosse Pointers learned during the unsuccessful millage campaign, the Headlee amendment does not actually limit tax increases to the rise in the cost of living, especially in the first year of a voted tax boost. While the school board had promised to limit the tax hike to 8 1/2 to 9 percent, the board would have been authorized to impose an increase of as much as 17 percent, far above the 4.1 percent cost of living increase.

If either of these new plans were added to the tax picture, public officials and homeowners would find it almost impossible to gauge accurately the amount of any voted tax increase. The Headlee amendment already makes it difficult to make accurate estimates. Adding another limitation would make things even worse, despite both proposals' laudable aim of holding down local property taxes.

As for the governor's tax deferral plan, the Detroit Free Press last week recommended that the Legislature approach it "with a high degree of skepticism." Most Republicans also came out against it. Senate Majority Leader John Engler of Mount Pleasant, who is expected to be the GOP challenger to the governor next year, said the new plan "would not cut one nickel of taxes.'

Realtors didn't like it either, saying it would not do anything for the low-income, first-time home buyers who need help. And some educators said it would hurt the effort to reform school financing because it appears to separate the issues of property tax relief and additional funding for the schools.

But Patterson's petition campaign is even worse. If approved in a referendum, it would put the state in a fiscal straitjacket. While Patterson and his cohorts might approve such a result, it would be a serious blow to the state institutions and state services that require substantial state support.

As these new proposals were discussed, two House Republicans, Reps. Glenn Oxander, Sturgis, and Michael Nye, Litchfield, said they were trying to revive their earlier proposal, voted down by the state Senate, to boost the sales tax by two cents, cut property taxes by about one-third and raise about $400 million more for schools.

But Gov. Blanchard once more said the voters wouldn't approve a two-cent increase in the sales tax and opted instead for a one-half cent hike in any new school funding legislation. Senate Republicans and the Michigan Chamber of Commerce agreed with him.

The political maneuvering means that there is little likelihood of agreement in the Legislature on a way to cut property taxes and find new money for the schools. Politics is supposed to be the art of compromise, but both sides in this controversy seem to have forgotten how to achieve it.

A second chance for millage owing to their critics, Grosse Pointe school board members Monday night unanimously agreed to ask voters to approve separate proposals for a 2.2-mill school levy increase and a 25.35-mill renewal when the issues come before the voters for a second time on June 12.

After the defeat of the combined increase and renewal on April 10, several letter writers and callers told the Grosse Pointe News that they believed the voters had rejected the board's requests because the two issues had been combined into one proposition. The same message was conveyed to the board so that by separating the two issues, the board obviously responded to the message of the unsuccessful first election.

Before making its decision Monday night, the board briefly discussed several possible alternatives, including one to ask for a slightly smaller increase of 1.8 mills along with the 25.35-mill renewal. No votes were taken on the alternatives and the board then voted to ask for the same total of 27.55 mills as it did on April 10, but with the increase and the renewal as separate issues.

In fact, the board's position with respect to its need for financing remains the same as it was prior to April 10. It is that the board needs the authority to levy 2.2 mills in addition to the 25.35-mill renewal to maintain the educational quality of the public school system in the face of rising

However, the 2.2-mill increase would actually permit the board to levy as much as a 17 percent increase in the first year of the three-year proposal. Yet the board and the administration have committed themselves to seek no more than an 8 1/2 to 9 percent increase when the levy is set next fall. They have emphasized that the Headlee amendment would sharply reduce the permitted increases in the second and third years of the voted levy.

Nobody knows, of course, whether combining the questions became even more important to the defeat than the 12.9 percent increase in district assessments just weeks before the special election. We felt the hike in property assessments contributed substantially to the April 10 loss. But the comments by critics surely proved that the lack of a choice on the increase was also an important factor, and perhaps the controlling factor, in the millage defeat.

The question is whether the public car be convinced, in a second vote, that the board and school administration need the authority to levy as much as 2.2 mills in addition to the 25.35-mill renewal at the annual school meeting on June 12. As we have said before, maintaining excellence is costly, but Grosse Pointers over the years have felt that quality education requires community-wide support.

DOMN!

Farms now needs new goals

fter Joe Fromm was named mayor of Grosse Pointe Farms in September 1986 to succeed the late James H. Dingeman, the new mayor told the Grosse Pointe News that he saw four matters of immediate concern that would re-he audit committee of the Wayne *County Board of Commissioners is planning to establish guidelines covering reimbursements for board members who take trips at government expense.

A bit late

That is a good idea, and we compliment David Cavanagh, Grosse Pointe's commissioner who is chairman of the audit committee, for proposing rules similar to those that govern other county officials.

Cavanagh correctly pointed out that if the commissioners want to set an example, they have to draft rules and follow them if they are to avoid criticism for their failure to protect the taxpayers.

Unfortunately, however, the call for action came only after The Detroit News had published a story showing that more than half of the $90,000 expenditures billed to the taxpayers for 1988 trips by commissioners and their staff members had not been supported by receipts.

Well, better late than never, but better never late with reforms of this kind.

Those four matters, he said, were the completion of the Hill development, merging of the fire and police departments into a new public safety unit, efforts to halt the deterioration of the Mack-Moross area and new attempts to get Wayne County to resurface and improve Lakeshore Road.

In the intervening years, Fromm has sent brief progress reports to the News. The first, dated April 22, 1987, said simply "One down, three to go," after the county finally began work on Lakeshore. The second, dated Dec. 2, 1987, said, "Two down, two to go," when the Farms fire and police departments were merged into a new public safety unit. And the third, which arrived this week and was dated April 12, 1989, said, "With the opening of ONE23 Kercheval and the parking deck, I guess we can say three down, one to go."

That's quite a record of accomplishment for the mayor and council in just two and a half years. Better than that, it is also unusual in that they have fulfilled public political promises which so often are ignored by other politicians.

But while they are still working on the fourth goal, to halt the deterioration of the Mack-Moross area, perhaps it is time for the Farms officials to seek new worlds to conquer. Any suggestions from Farms residents about additional problems that their elected officials should aim at next?

Electorate in for rude shock

To the Editor:

With the defeat of the millage increase and renewal, the electorate of this district have expressed their displeasure with the financial base of their schools. What is not clear, is the extent of that displeasure. Although a recent arrival in this district, this writer has seen nothing of the board warfare such as the Detroit board faces, nor the abuses that system has tolerated for so long.

If the electorate has the idea that they will be able to maintain the fine level of education the Pointes have offered in the past, if they think the district will be able to maintain and expand the physical plants, they are in for a rude shock.

Any governmental unit should be thought of as a business. Its product is the services it provides. A company cannot operate and produce without funding. If the electorate is not willing to pay the millage the district is requesting, the district should offer a lesser alternative. Along with that, the electorate had better be ready to accept the lesser level of education, presented in deteriorating buildings, that their children will receive.

Result of 'putting one over'

To the Editor:

While I am sure the new property assessment had a lot to do with the school millage defeat, may I remind the school board that past history shows that Grosse Pointers do not like it when you propose a renewal and an increase in one proposal. It smacks of "putting one over" on the taxpayers.

Huff, puff!

To the Editor:

I would like to (huff, puff) applaud Grosse Pointe Cable - Channel 32 (huff, puff) for its low impact aerobics program (huff, puff). I have just completed the work-out (huff, puff) and appreciate that this program is available for my use. With two small children at home (huff, puff) I find the convenience of this type of programming invaluable.

Voters are shortsighted

To the Editor: As a Grosse Pointe resident of over 20 years, it was with utter disbelief that I heard the announcement that the school millage request was defeated. Although my children no longer attend the public schools, I could not in good conscience deny the modest $100-150 increase that the schools were seeking, so I voted "yes" the way I have over the past 20 years. I also saw to it that my two sons who are away at school received absentee ballots so they could also vote "yes."

I had always considered the Grosse Pointe electorate to be of above-average intelligence. As it turns out, however, a majority of them are very shortsighted and niggardly.

As usual, voters in the generally less affluent Park and City voted for the increase. Also, as usual, the naysayers in the Woods cast their traditional "no" votes (by a decisive margin). A sizeable majority even voted against the renewal (no increase) of the library millage. Surprisingly, the Shores, with its high per capita income, voted against everything.

Almost 75 percent of the absentee voters, most of whom are sunning themselves at their summer homes in the south, also cast negative votes. I cannot sympathize with the retirees who voted "no" either. They are the beneficiaries of an unfair Social Security system which taxes working people unmercifully so that cost of living benefits may be paid to SS recipients. These same people, however, would deny the schools their cost of living increases. Fortunately for the retirees, these people are not given the same opportunity to vote down social security increases.

Grosse Pointers, wake up! One of the main reasons your homes are worth so much is because of your excellent school system. If you want to continue to stay a notch above the rest, you are going to have to pay for it. Is that worth $150? I think it

Property taxes not unreasonable

I was disappointed that the school millage was not passed. Grosse Pointe property taxes, for the quality of house, community and schools we enjoy, are not at all unreasonable. Photographing children: Catch the spirit of youth

Did you know that children are the most photographed of all subjects? After all, what other than a photograph can provide an enduring record of the growth and activities of a child?

And because these pictures will grow more meaningful as time goes by, you, the photographer, must utilize the utmost care and attention in capturing the precious times of childhood.

Most important is obtaining a child's spirit on film. Some kids are natural "hams" and will respond delightfully in front of the camera. Others are shy and will not react well to posing directions. Stiff, artificial expressions will tend to replace a natural look, and it is only after the camera is put away that the child's naturalness returns.

Here are some specific pointers that will help you to get children's pictures with impact. First, it is very important to get on the child's level, even if it means lying down on the floor. Photos looking down on kids simply aren't flattering. Children live in a world of giant adults and huge surroundings. By getting low, you can obtain the child's perspective and greatly improve your pictures.

Try using a telephoto lens. A focal length of 100-200mm allows you to keep your distance and will be far less intimidating. In fact, he may not even know you're there.

Shores police build exercise facility

By John Minnis Staff Writer

Being in good physical condition is always a good idea, but when you're a public safety officer, it's a necessity and, perhaps, a lifesaver.

With this in mind, Grosse Pointe Shores public safety officers pitched in and built themselves a fitness center.

"They put a lot of work into this, a lot of off-time hours," said Public Safety Chief Dan Healy. "It's just a start. I'm sure they will get more equipment in

The idea for an exercise facility was the general idea of all the officers, but it came to fruition through the efforts of Cpl.

John Trevillian and Public beginning. Safety Officer Steve Poloni.

Already the officers are working out on a Nautilus machine, a treadmill, two exercise bikes, a rowing machine and a weight bench. The Nautilus machine and a bike were donated.

What the officers would really like, however, is a Universal multi-use exercising machine. You know, the kind of machine with several work stations that put all the body muscles through a strenuous workout. Donations are welcome, thank you.

The officers found a room for their equipment in the old Vernier school, which had been the Shores municipal offices. Getting the room, though, was just the

A lot of hard work went into fixing it up and making it a pleasant place to spend some time. The ceiling needed repair, the walls needed painting and carpeting had to be laid.

The room's color scheme was planned by Shores resident Sandra Baer, who owns her own interior design company. She suggested that silhouttes of people exercising be painted on the walls to give the place the right atmosphere, and the officers followed through on her idea.

Thick, gray wall-to-wall carpeting was added to making exercising in stocking feet possible.

ROLEX

All in all, the room looks pretty

The cost of the materials was covered by the city, but most of the elbow grease came from the officers.

Some training funds were used to purchase a rowing machine. Poloni said the funds could be used on the rowing machine because injured backs are an occupational hazard for public safety officers who are regularly required to lift stretchers.

The Shores officers have been working all winter to get their exercise room in shape. Now they can start working on them-

Private muse, not popular acclaim, motivates poet's writing

By Nancy Parmenter Staff Writer

Who among us hasn't wished to be a poet ... a philosopher ... an artist, a writer, a musician? The life of inner expression exerts a powerful call. The Lost Generation sitting around in Paris cafes drinking absinthe, talking about big ideas. Wow.

But in actuality, you're in business administration, right? Because the money just isn't there in the artistic life - and if you didn't see that on your own, your parents made sure you did. A dose of Real Life and all that.

The frustrations of the choices forced by practical decisions that deny the inner man is one of the themes of "A Soul Daily Disowned," a small volume of verse by James Bonamy.

"The title refers to people turning away from inner goals toward worldly success," said Bonamy, a former Grosse Pointer who now lives in Michigan's Thumb. "I question that mindset.'

Bonamy has lived some of the frustrations and has made the financial compromises that finally enable him to call himself a poet. He studied electrical engineering and industrial management at Michigan Tech, worked for eight years in the accounting field and finally found his way to Croswell, where he is city clerk.

But all the while, he wrote poetry, publishing it in the school paper and even in a little book he put out "on a dare." And, he says, all the while, he was figuring out that life for him had more contentment if he followed his natural bent.

The new book is personal, he says, "in that I have chosen to live where I can go to the beach and pick up stones instead of living in Detroit where I can make more money.'

For that matter, popular views toward poetry being what they are, "I could go out and write a stock poem that would appeal to the mass market and make more

"But I probably wouldn't be satisfied.

Popular views toward poetry being what they are, Bonamy found himself publishing his own book. Mainstream publishers just aren't interested in poetry if your name isn't Shakespeare, or at least Dylan or McKuen or

"The problem you get into with mainstream publishers is recognition of name," Bonamy said. "They're concerned with their next blockbuster.

Storyteller:

Breathing life into the words

By Ronald J. Bernas

Staff Writer
Her name is Michale Gabriel and until you've heard her tell a story, you haven't been told a story.

During National Library Week, April 10-14, Gabriel mesmerized hundreds of students (and more than a few adults) with her breathy, excited performances of stories many children had read or heard. They just never heard it quite this way before.

Gabriel, a tall, striking woman, began telling stories as part of her work at a public library. Not knowing there was a calling for professional storytellers, she continued her work as a professional fundraiser. Five years ago she decided to pursue her love of storytelling.

She founded Storytell International and has taken her stories across the country, to Mexico and to the Soviet Union nine times. One trip to the Soviet Union was the subject of a documentary by NBC News.

Today she is in demand and must be booked one year in advance. And she loves her job.

"I am passing on the oral tradition which seems to be getting lost," Gabriel said. "The children need practice in listening, and in using their imaginations."

Gabriel, who grew up in Alaska and heard stories by Eskimo storytellers, said children love to be told, not just read, stories. So Gabriel acts the stories out, using her entire body, different voices and songs. The trick in good storytelling, she says, is to make the audience part of the story. With younger kids, she does that with songs they can sing along or phrases they can repeat with her. With the older kids, it's the story that must keep their interest.

"The audience feels very nourished, because they can use their imagination, without pictures, the characters can look like whatever the kids want them to look like," Gabriel said. "It's like co-creating with the audience, and it's wonderful."

After the stories, Gabriel urges the students to go home and tell their families and friends the stories, and become storytellers in their own right.

She must have touched the kids, because a number invited her to their next birthday parties. And many more hugged her.

Michale Gabriel uses her body, face and voice to bring the words of the stories to life. At bottom right, she shows off a tapestry depicting a scene of the childhood favorite "Where the Wild Things Are." The fabric scene, made by students from America, will hang in a school in the Soviet Union.

These all-American-looking kids are members of the French delegation from Vaux le Penil who spent three weeks in the Pointes last month.

After discovering the girl she was to host played piano. Kate Callas, left, sent Amandine Cochet one part of a piano duet arrangement of Scott Joplin's "The Entertainer." They played it once they got together.

The French students toured the area, with field trips to Greenfield Village, American schools, roller skating and Lansing. This group photo was taken at the Motown museum. Although the Supremes and Smokey Robinson didn't excite them, at least they knew who Michael Jackson is.

Parent Louise Snyder helps Sandrine Partarrieu, Anne-Charlotte Schlenius and Mureija Ford-Lepthien with their projects at Pewabic Pottery.

Lauren Rentenbach and her French guest Audrey LeTeo stop by the Village for some frozen yogurt.

It's sort of like a tit-for-tat exchange student program. First, Grosse Pointers housed 30 French fifth-graders for three weeks, accepting them as part of their families. And on April 25, the same families will bid adieu to their children who will spend three weeks in Vaux le Penil France, about 30 miles southeast of Paris.

The program is called Grosse Pointe Back-to-Back French-American Program and although it has been in existence for a number of years, this is the first year Grosse Pointe public schools has participated.

Before the exchange, students attend special classes to study the culture, language, geography and customs of the other country. The students involved were paired off and letters were exchanged for a few months before the actual meeting. So when the students finally met on Feb. 28, they were already friends — or at the very least, friendly.

Kate Callas' daughter Kate participated in the program, and Callas said the experience was a learning one for the parents, too.

"We discovered that the phrases we learned are the same ones they learned," Callas said, which led to a lot of discussions like, 'How are you?' 'Fine, how are you?' 'Fine." Pause. Pause. Pause.

But after a while, the students were communicating in the way kids the world over communicate. They taught each other how to say, 'He's cute,' and how to swear. And like all children, they traded clothes. Callas said by the end of the three weeks, you could tell the French children from the American children because the French children were all wearing clothes advertising American products, and the American children were wearing their French counterparts' clothes.

Callas said all the preparation — the letters, the French lessons, the classes — didn't prepare her for one thing: "We, as parents, weren't prepared for how attached we would get," she said. "It was very hard saying goodbye."

For the kids, saying goodbye wasn't too bad, because they knew they would see them again soon.

Arthur Scott, a fifth-grader from Kerby school, said his French friend, Jean-Marc Weill, was almost like a brother. They slept in bunk beds and Weill taught Scott karate. "I liked it a lot," he said, adding that he expected to love France, too.

Although most of the boys were paired with boys, and the girls with girls, James McGovern, an 11-year-old Defer student, was paired with a young girl, Sandra Santiago. "I taught her how to play video games," he said.

Callas said the idea of the program — which cost each student $1,200 — is to allow them to open their minds to other cultures and customs.

"They found that you can't label people positively or negatively on a perception. They learned that there's more to the world than just Grosse Pointe, and the kids in their school. They learned to be more tolerant of people who are different."

French students Catherine Hartmann and Sophie Barbier prepare to leave for home, laden with mementos of their trip.

'Mother Superior's Habits' is a fun look at Catholic teachings

By Ronald J. Bernas Staff Writer

Catholics seem more willing to laugh at themselves than other religious groups. As evidenced in the plays, "Do Black Patent Leather Shoes Really Reflect Up?" "Nunsense," and "Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All To-You," nuns are funny people.

Or is it just what they were saying in the '50s and '60s that made them so funny?

It's hard today not to laugh at nuns telling parochial school students that girls can get pregnant from sitting on a boy's lap or from kissing them.

It's also not hard to laugh at a new play that follows in the footsteps of the shows mentioned new musical written by St. Clair girls dons hers, they all are Shores resident Dennis Wickline transported back in time to for his dinner theater at the 1964. Golden Lion restaurant, tackles the issues of the genre, but with a new angle.

Full of humor and good music, "Mother Superior's Habits" is perfect dinner theater fare - entertaining, fast-paced and a whole lot of fun.

Instead of setting the show in the '50s, with all the characters in the mindset of that era, the show begins at the 25th class reunion of the 1964 Class of St. Minervanooks School for Girls

Six girls, now women, as a lark, try on some nun's habits they find hanging near a display "Mother Superior's Habits," a cabinet. When the last of the Theater

Some of the reunion-goers become the teachers in the time change, some stay students, but in their 1964 form, and one stays as she was when she showed up at the reunion.

We meet Sister Mary Kneepad, the basketball coach, Sister Mary Christina Columbus, the exploring nun/bus driver. Sister Mary Marla Tabernacklechoir, the nun who teaches religion, and of course, Mother Superior, Sister Mary Mary.

The play unfolds in scenes, each one not necessarily dependent on the one before it, but a thread of a plot binds it together. That thread deals with the reclassification of sainthood of some religious person which took place at the Vatican in the '60s. St. Minervanooks has not only been stripped of sainthood, but the Vatican can find no evidence of a Minervanooks ever having existed.

Faced with the possibility of having a church without a name, one nun sets out to find proof of Minervanooks' existence.

Along the way there are several hilarious songs (including a St. Minervanooks alma mater) which help the nuns get the Catholic doctrine across. "Don't Touch Your Privates" and "Only Good Catholics Stay Virgins'

There are also songs about the effects of the doctrines. "I'm Confused," sung by one of the students tells how some of the teachings of the Catholic faith had lost meaning by weighing believers down with rules and confusing rhetoric.

The songs are written by Wickline with music by David Clayton, and are quite enjoyable. It's hard not to find yourself humming them later.

The all-female cast is quite accomplished and consists of local women. Denyse Clayton (Wickline's sister, and Clayton's wife), Molly Johnson-Dodge, Olivia Wickline (the author's wife), Kim Marlinga, Margaret Ahee and Judy Gieseking all bring energy (but sometimes too much) and understanding (but sometimes not enough) to the roles. These small criticisms should be chalked up to opening night jitters, though.

While the play is very funny and provides some hilarious insights to pre-Vatican II Catholic teachings, there are still some problems. Some of the segues between scenes are strained, and the ending, which is supposed to be a twist, is instead confusing.

The making of the play

Wickline laughed when his wife, Olivia, would tell him about some of the things she was taught in her Catholic high school in the '60s.

He thought they were so funny that he turned them into a musical comedy, "Mother Superior's Habits." Actually, the play came about after he couldn't get the rights to do another Catholic musical comedy, "Nunsense," at the Golden Lion restaurant's dinner theater.

"It's a fun look at how we used to be," he said.

Calling it a combination of the movie, "Peggy Sue Got Married," and the play, "Do Black Patent Leather Shoes Really Reflect Up?" the play pokes good-natured fun at the misinformation given to parochial school students prior to Vatican II.

He kept the play a family affair by asking his brotherin-law, David Clayton, to write the music to his lyrics. And he extended the family affair by casting his sister, Denyse Clayton, and his wife, Olivia, in two of the parts.

The cast, some who are Catholics and some who Lutheran-raised Dennis aren't, augmented the script by bringing a little of each of themselves to the parts he created, Wickline said.

The play is Wickline's third musical comedy. "A Musical Salute to Vaudeville and Burlesque" and "The Dinner Theatre Murders" both played in the area and were received well.

"I think whether or not people have gone to Catholic schools, they will enjoy the show because it's cute and fun to watch," Wickline said. "And I don't think it's offensive either. It's just poking fun at some of the theological doctrines taught then. It's funny because things have changed so radically since then. They're not teaching some of those things any more.'

Wickline, who is an audiovisual supervisor at Blue Cross/Blue Shield, considers his work in theater (he is also the newly-elected president of Grosse Pointe Theatre) as a second business, but more as a labor of love.

The show runs through May 27 on Friday and Saturday evenings.

Humor, pathos plentiful in Neil Simon's 'Broadway Bound'

Special Writer

In "Broadway Bound," Neil Simon brings to an end his semiautobiographical trilogy. Once again, we, the audience, move in with a family we have come to know so well through two previous plays, "Brighton Beach Memoirs" and "Biloxi Blues."

"Broadway Bound," like the earlier plays, features both humor and pathos. It is a far more personal memoir in that we visit them in a time of crisis.

Eugene and his brother Stanley are struggling to break into radio and television as comedy writers. Eugene has become quite adept at writing comedy. He has a natural flair for humor as we discover from his asides when he comments on family happenings.

Stanley is the brash one. He wheedles his way into NBC and an assignment to write a trial

The ability to present the human comedy in a light and entertaining manner is Neil Simon's trademark and is fully realized in "Broadway Bound."

Seeing the play is like returning to a well-known neighborhood to visit with old friends.

The cast assembled at the Birmingham is exceptional. Peter Birkenhead gives a breezy laidback performance as Eugene. Carol Harris is outstanding as a mother who has seen her family through a depression and is now left alone in a house that is a little more shabby and run down than when she first came to it as a bride. Among her credits are appearances in the Barbara Streisand movie "A Star Is Born," the television pop special "Solid Gold," numerous radio and TV commercials and as backup vocalist for many recording artists.

She opened last season with the Dave Brubeck Quartet and recently signed to tour with the Count Basie Orchestra. She also sang background in the recent hit album "The Fit."

Republic Bank S.E.: A return to personal banking

By Ronald J. Bernas Staff Writer

Republic Bank S.E. in Grosse Pointe is barely a month old, but the community response, according to the bank's board president, has been phenomenal.

"In the six weeks (since the ribbon-cutting), our bank deposit totals have reached nearly $6 million," board President Jeffrey S. Jones said. "The deposit growth has exceeded all of our expectations.'

Why is the response so great? Jones believes it is because of the type of bank it is. If one wanted to attach a buzzword to the business, one attached to banks like Republic Bank S.E. that are springing up across the country, the word would be "boutique bank.

"It could be called a boutique bank because we only offer banking services," Jones said. 'We're not in the trust business, we're not in the brokerage business like larger banks. We just do loans, deposits and other banking services."

The main feature of Republic is the bank's attention to service. Studies show that of all the customers who leave a bank, 68 percent do so because they were unhappy with a teller. Republic bank has no tellers. It has no charges." teller windows.

"It's banking going back to the basics," Jones said. "We customize the services to our clients, where at larger banks, tellers don't tell their customers how to maximize their money. They are working for the bank's interest, but our personal bankers will custom-tailor services to meet (the customers') needs.

Because there are no teller windows, there is no waiting in line. All banking is done in private offices with your personal banker. If you find yourself too busy to come to the bank, Jones said the bank will come to you, at your home or at your office, before or after hours, even on weekends.

Jones said the trend is moving toward boutique banking, and that even the larger banks are getting in on the action.

"This is not a fad, it's here to stay," Jones said. "The need is there, it was created by the impersonal service offered by the hig banks. Individuals want and desire personal attention. They don't want to be treated like a number. They want a relationship with their bankers and don't want to be nickled and dimed to death by the bank's

Another important aspect of

It has, instead, personal bank. Republic Bank is that it is operated locally, Jones said. On the 16-member board of directors, eight are from Grosse Pointe and eight are from the west side. The same board will oversee operations at the new Republic Bank S.E. in Bloomfield Hills which opens next week.

"By keeping the bank locally run, we are helping our customers," Jones said. The bank doesn't have to answer to an unattached board in a different state, he added.

"We have a decision-maker right here on the premises." Those who work at the bank are all local residents, too.

As one might guess, Republic is not for depositors of limited means with a low balance in their accounts who only need a bank to cash a check every now and then.

"But it's not just for the very wealthy, either," Jones said. It's for people with substantial means who have money to in-

Robert G. Edgar, president of R.G. Edgar and Associates, is one of the eight local directors. He said Republic Bank S.E. is an option for those of more than average means who don't want to "stand in line to be tolerated.

"I think this is a niche bank," he said. "There's no other bank which services the Grosse Pointe area which offers this type of service. The bank fills a niche because the larger banks have not yet demonstrated they can provide true, professional attention on a personal basis.

Peter A. Dow, president of Lintas: Campbell-Ewald, Inc., another member of the board, said he is associated with the bank because he wants to do business without waiting in a

"I don't know why anybody who lives in Grosse Pointe wouldn't stop by and check out the services," Dow said. "It could be a happy experience for them.

"I remember the good old Grosse Pointe Bank on Jefferson

"I like the convenience of being able to deal with people in the community on a first-name basis," Howenstein said. "We still have some marketing to do, but those who've tried it, have said they liked it.'

In addition to Edgar, Dow and Howenstein, the other Grosse Pointers on the board are William C. Finkenstaedt, vice president of Inland Tool & Manufacturing; Harvey C. Workers at Poletown plant exude pride in their product

"The Riviera is the best we make here," said the worker at the Detroit-Hamtramck Assembly Center, which builds the Buick Riviera, Cadillac Eldorado, Seville and Allante and the Oldsmobile Toronado. "I love it." "You're with Buick?"

"No, I'm with Cadillac," said Donald Vaughan, a welding quality specialist in the body shop. "But we're proud of everything we build here and I like the new Riviera's looks the best of all of them."

This plant, better known as the Poletown plant, is surprising in many ways. We admire a pearlescent off-white Riviera going down the line. It is still without wheels, but body and drivetrain have been "married" and the vinyl "skullcap" has been put on. It looks like a Riviera, the best yet in a classic line of distinctive cars to bear that marque.

The early Rivieras are now classics, collector cars, and the '89 is clearly in that tradition. The difference is in the driving. The new Riv does everything better - going, stopping and, yes, even looking better.

Vaughan is not the only one in the plant proud of these Rivieras - and the Cadillacs and Oldsmobiles coming off the line too. This plant, perhaps more than any other, represents the new Detroit. The workers are proud of their product, responsivolved in its building, in improving efficiency.

It is impressive, this pride in workmanship, this stress on quality. It is difficult to tell the workers from management and the visitor has to ask: "Are you management or UAW?" The answer is often "Yes."

The factory itself is impressive too. Officially known as the Detroit-Hamtramck Assembly Center, the "Poletown plant" is situated on a 362-acre site in the heart of Detroit, spilling over into Hamtramck. The Hamtramck part of the location had once been the site of the old Dodge Main plant, where John and Horace Dodge first began building their cars.

The plant (which had been a Buick-Olds-Cadillac operation but is now operated by Cadillac Division) has 77 acres under its roof. Inside are 21 miles of conveyor, 150 electric welders. 40,000 feet of in-floor wires for directing automatic guided vehible for its quality, deeply in cles (AGVs) and 70 robots in the paint department, including 12 with vision interface which apply sealer.

In full production, the plant can have 1,700 cars in the system and turn out 60 an hour. Currently the plant is working only one shift a day, employing aobut 3,400 workers and building 464 to 468 automobiles a day.

But numbers alone do not tell the most unusual and impressive story of this factory. The way the humans interact is much more impressive than all the robots, the AGVs and the robogates.

In earlier days, auto factories were dirty, loud, often dangerous places. More often than not the foreman was chosen because of his ability to enforce discipline, with his fists, if necessary. Cooperation between management and hourly workers was grudging and open confrontation was not unusual.

The Poletown plant is not like that at all. The plant environment is orderly, well-lit and they can see if things are workpleasant. Workers are friendly, highly motivated, interested in and they can continually imtheir work and eager to talk to a visitor about it. They are an important part of the production process, looking for ways to improve efficiency and, most of all, quality. The stress on quality permeates the entire operation.

Workers are organized into teams, explained Tom Stanislawski, a body shop representative and also member of a corporate-level world quality team. In addition to production teams, there are "PDITs" (Product Development and Improvement Teams), through which workers have contact with management, engineering and even dealers.

We started with teams of 20 or 30 members," he said. "Now we have smaller teams, with five to 10 members. There are 370 teams in the plant.'

Stanislawski worked in the body operation at Cadillac's Fleetwood plant before the plant opened, so the body shop is where he likes to be, but he is also work quality representative for his operation, a function which takes a good deal of his

"We have regular quality reviews and closed-circuit TV allows everyone to see what's going on," he said. "Once a month, engineers come in and work on the line in the operations they designed. That way, ing the way they had intended prove the manufacturing operation.'

"Once a week, we'll visit a dealership service department to keep in touch with what's going on in the field. We send our people to dealerships and the dealerships send their people here. Warranty data can pinpoint problems, but with the close communication and feedback we have, often we can fix any recurring problems here at the plant. When we can avoid a problem instead of fixing it, some customer is happier.'

Stanislawski said he and many of his co-workers were apprehensive when they came to the new plant, which began production in 1985. "We went through constant training," he said. "Salaried and hourly people worked together, served on the same teams. It was much different, a lot more cooperation between management and the union. But once we were here, it was clear that this is much better. Much better.'

source adviser, was talking with a line worker. Training? "Well, yes, but not in the traditional sense," she said. "We work with personnel to help them in problem solving. Each team handles its own training. The team decides what skills it needs and we arrange for the proper training."

O'Doherty was enthusiastic about her work. "Up-front training doesn't work," she said. You need training on the floor, training in problem-solving. Each team has a coordinator who gets training, then shows others how to do it. Training, application, training, application - that's the only approach that works

O'Doherty said this approach to training was worked out by the GM Quality Network, a corporate-level effort with the UAW to work out a problem-solving

Are you management? "What? No, I was an assembly worker at the Clark Street plant," she said. "I was a member of the UAW bargaining committee. The UAW is management for the union workers.'

The white Riviera nears the end of the line. Exterior trim is affixed and, finally, the wheels are installed, all the correct components reaching the assembly station at the right time in the right order as a result of the EDS scheduling program.

The car rolls off the line, neat, Carol O'Doherty, a human re-clean, every component checked and rechecked for quality. Not much like the old days.

"My father worked on an auto line," said Stanislawski. "I have it 100 times better than my father had it. My kids are in college: They won't be working on the line. But my grandchildren might."

St. Ambrose community helps St. Martin 'faith family' enter a new era

By Peggy O'Connor Andrzejczyk Assistant Editor/Feature Editor

As an elderly parishioner from St. Martin of Tours church made his way slowly up the walk in front of St. Ambrose church in Grosse Pointe Park last Sunday, he was greeted by a St. Ambrose parishioner who took him by the arm and made his trip up the set of stone steps a little smoother.

The gesture was symbolic of the way the entire St. Ambrose community helped members of St. Martin of Tours Church in Detroit — one of 30 Detroit churches ordered to close or merge by the Archdiocese of Detroit — make the transition to worship at St. Ambrose.

Last Sunday's "Festival Liturgy of Transfer and Welcome" for the people of St. Martin's by the people of St. Ambrose had an air of informality, joy and hope — traits which have marked the entire merging process at the two churches. "We met as a group long ago and came to a consensus on how to handle the closing of the church," said St. Martin parishioner Colette Gilewicz. "We decided to stay together as a faith family.

"We recognized that the building wasn't the issue. We felt it was more important to put our energies toward positive actions, such as remaining together and doing so with dignity."

The St. Martin's community ended 46 years of worship at a lovely old church on Averhill and Lenox in Detroit with an emotional closing ceremony on April 9. But parishioners officially ended their stay at St. Martin's last Sunday. Approximately 50 members of St. Martin's 85-family parish met early on the morning of April 16 on the steps of their church. Led by parish priest the Rev. Alex Steinmiller, a music minister and parish council president John Brennan, the group sang and prayed for guidance on their "journey" to a new church.

"The church is not just a building," Steinmiller told the assembly. "The church is in the hearts of each of us," he said, placing his hand on the head of Khristian Turner, a 7-year-old who had made her first communion in the church April 9.

"What we do we do for the children like Khristian," Steinmiller continued. "The children of Detroit look for models, not models of anger and rage that never subsides, but anger that turns into new commitments and creativity."

Brennan told the parishioners that they could rest assured that they had done their duty as a parish and could look forward to new experiences together in a new setting.

"We want to remain close, we want to be together," he said. "We want to be the kernel of St. Martin's when it opens again. And it will, because of our faith."

THE BELIEF THAT St. Martin's will one day reopen in its old building exists because the church is the only one of the 30 designated to close that has been given the status of "mothballed." The church building is located in an area of Detroit that is currently undergoing a revitalization, with the building of the Chrysler plant three blocks west and the construction of new homes and a townhouse development one block west of the church.

Because of the new home construction, a population surge in the area over the next decade is possible and since St. Martin of Tours is the only Catholic church in the area, it is also possible that the increase would result in the reopening of the church.

"I'm sure that's one reason why the transfer was done with so much hope and so little rancor," explained St. Ambrose pastor the Rev. Timothy Pelc. Pelc has served as administrator for St. Martin's for two years, in addition to his duties at St. Ambrose.

"I think that the notion that the parish community might someday be resurrected has helped make this a smoother transition," Pelc said.

"But I also think that there is a certain amount of relief within that community. Their situation is similar to that of a person facing retirement. You don't want to go, but

Photos by Peggy O'Connor Andrzejczyk

Parishioners from St. Martin of Tours church in Detroit bid a tearful goodbye to their building, scheduled for mothballing by the Archdiocese of Detroit.

since you must, you want to do it with dignity."

The manner in which the merger order was accepted and handled was carefully planned and calculated by St. Martin parish leaders, council president Brennan explained.

"To continue to appeal and to protest would destroy our opportunity to help our own people," he added. "And it's the people we have to care for. The loss of the building is sad, but the loss of the people because of bitterness and hate would have been devastating."

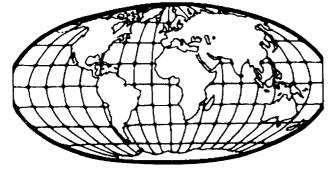

BRENNAN CALLED THE reopening of St. Martin's inevitable.

"Just as the closing of the structures in the city which are no longer useful is inevitable, so is the reopening of St. Martin's. It is absolutely inevitable that the riverfront from Detroit to Grosse Pointe be revitalized - it's happening right now - and I believe that St. Martin is ideally situated to serve

"It may not be for five or 10 years, but that's a relatively short period of time," Brennan said. "And just as you can believe him when Cardinal Szoka says that you're going to close your church, you can take his word for it when he says a church will be mothballed for future use."

At St. Ambrose, preparations to accept St. Martin's parishioners were led by Kate Chiodo. The two groups met for breakfasts and other meetings and a greeting card sent by St. Ambrose faithful accompanied St. Martin's parishioners as they walked to their new church last Sunday.

The group brought the carved statue of their founder to be placed in a niche at St. Ambrose. Church members also carried a cast bronze figure of the Holy Spirit and the carved processional cross used at St. Mar-

After the service at their old church, St. Martin's parishioners gathered at St. Ambrose School, then walked in processional form across Alter Road. The group carried dozens of maroon, white and blue balloons, signifying the old school colors of each church. It was met by an enthusiastic, applauding St. Ambrose congregation in the middle of Wayburn in front of St. Ambrose church.

"I think at that point, St. Martin's and St. Ambrose ceased to exist in their previous forms," Brennan said. "A new, better entity has been born. There are some very good feelings on our side. St. Ambrose people have been very good to us. And I think St. Martin's will be good for them."

Jack LaJoy, president of the St. Ambrose parish council, agreed.

"I THINK THE entire process has gone well, considering how St. Martin's people were suffering what must be like the loss of a family member," LaJoy said.

'But our reception committee has worked hard at making St. Martin's people feel welcome. And we know that we are getting some very fine, talented, zealous and friendly people from St. Martin.'

Rev. Pelc echoed that sentiment. "There are some wonderful, vital people at St. Martin's. We're both benefitting from this process," Pelc said. "We need quality people. And we feel that this will be a most joyous union.'

Sunday's Festival of Transfer was just that: filled with joy and hope. The tears shed by St. Martin's parishioners as they said their final goodbyes on the steps of the newly closed church were replaced with smiles and greetings as the multi-colored balloons were released on the St. Ambrose

Members of the two parishes mingled in front of the church, then walked into Mass together to the strains of the church organ and trumpets. The statue of St. Martin was placed in the niche and a new era of worship had begun.

It was a symbolic melding of two faith communities which carried an important message for other churches, said St. Ambrose's pastor Pelc.

St. Philip Neri, the other church which is scheduled to merge with St. Ambrose by June 30, is still suffering from the anger and hurt at the directive to close, he said.

'St. Philip is a very independent church. They still have a lot of anger. It's still difficult for them to see that St. Ambrose is not the enemy, but the friend. We hope to meet with them soon and get to know one another and send the message that this can turn out as a positive experience.'

Or, as St. Martin parishioner Colette Gilewicz called it, a "healing" experience.

"These other churches just need to try to find ways to go through a healing process,' she said. "We had our grieving period . . . this transfer has helped us heal.'

St. Ambrose parishioners welcome new church members.

Helping plan the benefactor's party and the ball are Grosse Pointe advisory committee members Dale Austin, Stephanie Germack, Sybil Jaques, Lorraine Schultz and Diane Schoenith.

The first Garden Club on record was the Athens Gardening Club, formed by a group of women in Athens, Ga., in 1890. It was a small local group for exchange of gardening knowledge and experience. Soon various other localities, hearing of this group, began to form their own garden clubs and in 1913, the Garden Club of America was formed in Philadelphia.

The clubs began to multiply and in 1914, many of them were amalgamated into the Federated Garden Clubs, with New York state first, then others following in the practice.

In the beginning, garden clubs concentrated on home gardening. but it was not long before they began to take on civic responsibilities as well, including wildflower conservation, preservation

There has even been a special ization in garden clubs as a result with the formation of count. less special plant societies the plant family exists which does not have its own group of lovalsupporters.

There is a flower conscious custom which is unique to this country. A city or town chooses a flower or shrub that flourishes in that locality and uses it as a regional logo or symbol.

Another outcome of the partic ular flower societies is specialization in gardening the rose fan cier has a rose garden, the Alpinist a rock garden and the herbalist an herb garden.

The Harper Woods Club has been for some time very involved in the roadside plantings of wildflowers throughout the state and con aiways be counted upon for heantiful flower arrangements to enhance civic events in the area. In the Detroit area, adjacent to Harper Woods and Grosse Pointe, the spring plantings at Balduck Park are under way and the newly formed Garden Club at the recently built St. John-Bon Secours Senior Community which faces the park has approved of what is being accomplished.

There is a new group in the gardening world which goes by the name of BIBS (Belle Isle Botanical Society). Comprised of volunteers with a great love of the island gardens, the group is developing a docent program for the Conservatory and other special places, which may include some of the 20 greenhouses and the lily pond.

The nature trail, renamed the Native Michigan Woodland Garden, has been re-landscaped and amplified, the three lakes have been dredged and bordered and much of the planting around the exhibits has been expanded and improved. Most of this has been done through the generous contributions and efforts of nine garden clubs, all of which are members of the Michigan Division of the Women's National Farm and Garden Association.

The 10.000 daffodils planted last fall along the flower lane of the Jens Jensen-designed gardens at the Edsel & Eleanor Ford House in Grosse Pointe Shores are rapidly approaching lovely bloom and the arching trees are already symphonic with bird songs.

That group's extensive library of tree information is part of the reference library of garden books at the Grosse Pointe Garden Center.

It's chocolate candy.

Don't feel guilty if you quietly nibbled on those chocolate bunnies after Easter. You are not alone: somebody ate all those chocolate confections and they were not all kids. Besides, there are worse vices.

Chocolate is not as sinful as it's made out to be. Many of those bad things you've heard about it are not true. No less than the highly regarded University of California "Wellness Letter" states that research does not show that chocolate either causes or aggravates acne. If this information doesn't apply to you, pass it on to your grandchild.

More pertinent is the news that chocolate has a small amount of protein and no cholesterol. If you like to drink your chocolate don't worry about caffeine. It has less than 1/15th the amount contained in coffee.

Devotees claim that eating

Chocolate is a favorite of fitness fans who concern themselves not only with exercise but good diet. They often reward their strenous efforts with a chocolate treat. Some athletes warm up before a race by consuming a dozen chocolate bars.

If you are a chocophile, a term preferable to chocoholic, you have lots of company. Last year, the Commerce Department tells us, chocolate consumption rose to 2.4 billion pounds.

Chocolate lovers have two publications to turn to keep up with what's cooking in the world of chocolate. There is "Chocolate News," a bi-monthly whose publisher claims to have enough interviews, recipes and information to go on for 100 years.

When people are down, they often turn to chocolate. During the depression, chocolate sales were high. Some luxuries were beyond reach but the luxurious comfort of chocolate was within everyone's reach.

When it comes to lifting the spirit, there are those who argue that liquor is quicker. But liquor has its drawbacks. At a certain point, alcohol is a depressive. Also if you turn to alcohol to soothe an aching ego, you are apt to drink too much on the theory that if one drink makes you feel good, two will make you

A cup of coffee or tea could be relaxing but neither has the richness, the lovely soft consistency of an absolutely unbeatable chocolate concoction.

But why get into any of these -- liquor, coffee, tranquilizers -when a comparatively harmless bit of chocolate that tastes so good can achieve the same relief from a temporary let down?

Statistically, in bad times people turn to candy. It happened in the Depression, contends Karen Kohn Wilson, an Ohio State University psychologist, who so believed in her assertion that she started a "chocolate of the month" mail order business.

However, there is something that satisfies in buying a very special treat in times of dearth, even if that something special is only a box of candy. It is worth the moral lift it gives. If you can't buy designer clothes, you can splurge on $16-a-pound candy.

'Quilts: Object & Inspiration' on display

The Paint Creek Center for squares, circles and lines the Arts (PPCA), 407 Pine, Rochester, presents "Quilts: Object & Inspiration" through April 28 in the main gallery.

This exhibition features the work of four fiber artists: Rosemary Bathurst of Ann Arbor; Carole Beach of Grosse Pointe; Jo Ann Giordano of Royal Oak; and Marianne McCann of Oak Park.

All four of these contemporary artists have been inspired by some aspect of traditional quiltmaking.

Bathurst's works are contemporary interpretations of the traditional Flying Geese pattern. She focuses on color and geometric patterns - triangles, forms she describes as "logical, orderly and universal."

Beach's work is likewise geometric in design, as she seeks to transform the simplicity of traditional quilt design into a fine art medium. Beach stitches together little geometric pieces of handmade rag paper to create both traditional and original patterns in soft colors.

Giordano illustrates the expressive aspect of quilt-making. Traditional quilts were not merely decorative but also expressive of their makers' hopes and dreams. Giordano collects images from Oriental art to modern pop culture and collages these images together to express her spiritual and social concerns.

McCann draws on the recycling aspect of traditional quilts, the saving and sewing together of scrap materials. She incorporates household trash materials (shopping bags bottle caps, candy wrappers) into her textiles and makes something beautiful from something discarded.

Gallery hours are Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. For more information, call 6514110.

In her two years at ULS, Martin touched the hearts of many, but maybe none more than Wood's.

"We will miss Dawn," Wood, who's been at ULS for 24 years, said. "Dawn and I have been very close since the first day she arrived on campus. I look at her as another daughter and I always will."

To that, Jahn Martin said, "You should, she's over at your house enough."

All kidding aside, Martin's accomplishments are many:

The sorting of feelings and the deliberations with her mom became a tedious job that Martin was ready to fire herself from.

McCarron and Schorer are out with a sore finger and wrist, respectively, but fortunately Lou-D'Angelo is healthy.

D'Angelo, starting his second game of the season, went the distance to beat the Cougars, 7-1, as he struck out 15 hitters, including retiring nine straight on strikes over three innings.

It was by far Lou's finest outing," said North coach Frank Sumbera, "although I felt he pitched very well over the five innings of the Gallagher game also." North beat Gallagher, 17-14, as D'Angelo gave up only three hits and five runs before being knocked out in the sixth.

North couldn't enjoy its big win over Brablec very long as it suffered an 11-1 mercy rule loss on the road at South Lake two days later.

"It should have never been that bad," Sumbera said. "They only had five hits, but we gave up nine walks.

Coach Guido Regelbrugge's squad is off and running after beating Romeo and Lakeview, and tying Dearborn Edsel Ford.

Beth Stevenson scored twice and Christy Mack added the third goal as North shut out Romeo, 3-0. Stevenson and Mack teamed up again and combined for four goals in a 4-1 rout of Lakeview.

Cathy Cutcher and Debbie Stevenson provided the scoring punch for North in a 2-2 tie against Ford.

Girls' track

Still no blemishes for the girls' track team at North.

After dismantling East De-Warren Cousino, North sports a 5.0 record.

North collected 117 points, Regina 37 and Cousino 11 in a tri-meet April 11. In that meet, Liz Bolden won the long jump, the 800 run and 100 dash to pace North. Nikki Van Oppens was a double winner in the 1600 and 3200 runs. Laurin Shultz won the discus and 200 dash.

At East Detroit, Bolden continued to pace the Lady Norsemen by winning the long jump, 200 and 400 runs. Van Oppens again won the 1600 and 3220 runs, and North won three of four relay events.

Boys' track

A squad still riddled by injuries, the boys' track team drilled Cousino, 111-25, but was hammered by East Detroit, 105-32.

In the lopsided victory, Scott Collins took the 1600 in 4:41. Derek Lawson won the high jump (5-6), Juan Ganum won the 100 dash (11.5) and Bob Straske took the 800 run (2:07).

Lawson and Straske were the only winners at East Detroit.

Finess Steroids: A contemporary Pandora's box

The crack of a starter's gun initiates a record-setting effort that sets in motion a series of events that shakes the world's athletic community. For a brief moment a hero is created. However, it is soon dis-is tarnished. In an instant, a nation's ecstasy turned to anguish.

Competitive athletes always strive to attain the limits of their potential. Recently, in order to obtain a competitive edge, many young athletes have begun using anabolic steroids in hopes of enhancing their size and strength. This problem is found at the professional, college and even the high school level. In a survey of prospective 1984 United States Olympic hopefuls, when given the choice of utilizing an ergogenic aid that would provide an opportunity to obtain a gold medal knowing that this would adversely affect their life span by 10 years, a vast majority of athletes opted for these aids.

Widespread use seen

Anabolic steroid use among athletes first became popular in the 1950s following reports of use by Russian weightlifters at the Helsinki Olympic games. Their use has now grown to almost epidemic proportions, with utilization by weightlifters, body builders, track athletes and football players. Recent reports suggest that approximately 50 percent of professional football players in strength positions use these steroids. These agents escape detection with various dosing programs and masking agents.

These drugs represent an effort to develop increased muscle bulk and strength. Anecdotal evidence suggests that this may, in fact, happen. During training, these athletes believe they can achieve an enhanced level of performance. There are emotional changes toward aggressive behavior that take place with the use of these agents. This feeling of invincibility often translates into more productive and intensive training sessions.

Studies to investigate the true biological effects of megadose steroid use among competitive athletes are intrinsically limited secondary to ethical considerations. Improvements in athletic performance may be secondary to actual physiologic and metabolic effects of steroids, perceived placebo effects, or motivational changes seen in athletes given these andro-

Possible side effects

The side effects of anabolic steroids are a source of much debate and uncertainty. It is a potentially frightening realization that our current understanding of the chronic side effects of a steroid use are based on relatively low dose usage, not the megadose being utilized by today's ath-

Evidence shows that these steroids may cause impaired liver function and may increase the risks of coronary heart disease which may be irreversible with potentially lethal complications. These hormones also adversely affect male potency.

In children, these agents will prematurely end bone growth. Finally, recent studies suggest potentially cancer causing effects as well as harmful effects to a developing fetus.

Regardless of the medical risks involved, and in the interest of fairness, is it ethical to sell one's soul to the devil to enhance athletic performance? The blame does not solely rest with the athletes.

The large salaries and other significant influences have overstressed the importance of winning. With the rewards for winning being so great, many athletes may feel compelled to use anabolic steroids, if only to keep up with the fellow competitors.

Education is key

Because efforts to curb steroid use through testing and disqualification have thus far met with only limited success, it is felt that to discourage their use, the education of athletes, coaches and the general public is paramount. All that glitters is not gold. Sooner or later the piper has to be paid!

When food becomes poison

holics grab the bottle while people with eating disorders grab food — in an attempt for comfort, satisfaction, celebration and punishment.

Food addiction, compulsive overeating, anorexia and bulimia whether they are connected with celebrities like Karen Carpenter or your next door neighbor, eating disorders are a widespread problem.

What are eating disorders?

"Eating disorders are psychological problems in which food is turned to for away from, as in the case of anorexia) as a means

In a word, it's addiction. Alco- of coping with emotions, stress and anxiety," says Dr. Judith Brisman, co-author of the book "Surviving an Eating Disorder. New Perspectives and Strategies for Family and Friends." "Eating disorders cause people to withdraw from the outside world to an isolating world of food," Brisman added.

Just what constitutes an eating disorder? Dr. Brisman defines the following signs:

1) Eating, dieting or purging rule your day-to-day life; decisions about where to go, what to do, and who you go with are influenced by what you will or will not eat.

2) You are obsessed with looking thinner or maintaining a low weight.

6) Food or dieting is interfering with your life.

The well-known disorders

"In the last decade, the increase in anorexia nervosa and bulimia nervosa has been dramatic," reported the January issue of International Journal of Eating Disorders. Today, anorexia is said to occur as often as 1 in 100 in vulnerable populations such as high schools and colleges. The report also found that bulimia nervosa, the act of binging/purging, is now the most common eating disorder; four to five percent of female college freshman have a history of it.

According to Dr. Phyllis Abramson, a certified eating disorder counselor and Diet Center ten signified by a weight loss past few years. However, the

> "We do know that about 10 percent of the people with anorexia will die of it," said Abram-

Unlike anorexics, bulimics employ various methods of binge eating and therefore, turn to selfinduced vomiting, and laxative and diuretic abuse to help themselves lose weight. "It is not uncommon for somebody who is bulimic to have other kinds of cross problems like compulsive gambling and spending," said Abramson.

Just recently, researchers have found that bulimia appears to be linked to low levels of the hormone cholecystokinin, which gives the feeling of fullness after eating. Dr. Thomas Geracioti, of the National Institutes of Mental Health, found levels of the hormone two times lower in patients who had bulimia than in those who did not.

The unadmitted addictions

Anorexia and bulimia have reoperator, anorexia nervosa is of- ceived a lot of attention in the majority of people are unfamiliar tive Organization." "This is bewith what doctors call a new form of bulimia - compulsive overeating-exercising.

This form of eating behavior has become prevalent today, especially among athletes.

A study of the top 93 female runners in the country found 25 percent of them had eating disorders and that uncontrolled eating was the most frequent one. The compulsive overeater exerciser binges, then tries to compensate by over-exercising. He/ she grabs a bicycle instead of laxatives to fight weight gain. Compulsive overeating-exercising can turn into addiction if the person is not treated - compulsion is the first step to addiction.

The Roman philosopher Lucretius said, "What is food to one man may be fierce poison to others." How true this is when you consider the fact that food can be a substance addiction just like alcohol, caffeine, nicotine, salt and sugar.

"We can turn anything into an addiction, whether it's a substance, process, or person," say Diane Fassel and Anne Wilson Schaef, authors of "The Addiccause the purpose of addiction is to put a buffer between ourselves and our awareness. An addict becomes so preoccupied with feeding his addiction that he has no leftover energy for other aspects of life."

Food addiction, if untreated, can be every bit as destructive to life as any other addiction. Not only can it be a contributing factor to obesity, it can lead to severe respiratory and circulatory problems as well.

Eating disorders are serious physical/psychological conditions with life-threatening potential. As such, they should not be ignored or self-treated. It is hard to distinguish between disorder, addiction or compulsion, and diagnosis should be determined and treated by a professional.

If you feel you or someone in your family may have a problem, start with a visit to your personal physician or your child's pediatrician. Your doctor can then refer you to those who specialize in eating disorders.
