Local reaction to president's drug program is varied

By Ronald J. Bernas

Staff Writer
Last Tuesday, President George Bush unveiled a $7.9 billion program to combat America's war on the drugs he said were "murdering our children."

The program is designed to attack both the supply and the demand through local, federal and international agencies, and to also attack it through the legal system by expanding prisons and working through the judicial system.

To wage war on the supply, the proposal would increase foreign, military and economic aid by 80 percent to $449 million, of which $261 million would go to Colombia, Peru and Bolivia.

Money for corrections would more than double under the proposal to $1.6 billion, money for local and state law enforcement would increase 133 percent to $350 million plus an additional $3.1 billion for other law enforcement. Money for the judicial system would increase 20 percent to $250 million, while spending for prevention and education would go up 25 percent to $1.2 billion and treatment program funding would increase 53 percent to $925 million.

Reaction across the country has been varied, and ranges from strong support to those who say it doesn't go nearly far enough. Locally, the reaction spans the full range,

Bruce Kennedy, director of public safety in Grosse Pointe City and also president of the Wayne County Association of Chiefs of Police, says the proposal shows a lot of thought, but he is holding judgment for a while.

"I have kind of a-wait-and-see attitude," he said. "I like the unified strategy. It is a war which needs to be fought on all fronts, internationally, nationally, locally and with

He supports the increase in funding for law enforcement and for more corrections facilities.

"It's great to arrest every drug user and dealer, but when you put them in a revolving-door situation, it simply creates more contempt for the system," he said.

Kennedy said he also supports the amount of money going outside the country.

"It is critical to cut off the flow at its source. "I think we all have to wait and see," he said. "Who knows if it will work until we try it? We should give it a chance instead of criticizing it.'

Sara Snyder, however, is one of those who is critical. The Grosse Pointe Park resident is the executive director of Grateful Home, a long-term care center in Detroit for recovering women alcoholics and/or drug addicts. The women there learn job skills, and they also learn how to face life sober.

"The first thing I wanted the man (Bush) to do was to get the smirk off his face," she

"There are many problems with the proposal. The first thing is why are we sending money to other countries," she asked,

By Nancy Parmenter Staff Writer

The first artwork she ever did involved powder and lipstick on her parents' living room rug. Since then, artist Bette Prudden has never looked back. She learned to channel her talents into more conventional modes: drawing, designing clothes for paper dolls. She poured her whole concentration into her projects. "My parents were always saying 'stop that and help me!" Prudden recalls. Art studies in high school and at the Kansas City Art Institute only encouraged her, however and even having babies only slowed her down a little.

"I had to learn to take time for myself," she said. "That's hard to do when your kids are little.'

In those days, she and nine other women banded together to rent space and hire the occasional art teacher. Once a week they would paint all day, lunching together and offering each other moral support.

"We hired a sitter together. I'd go in with one hand full of baby bottles and diapers, and the other full of paints and brushes. I'd feel sorry for myself, but there would be a friend with eight kids. 'It's a pretty nice way to work for young mothers.' Prudden's three children are grown now. For some years, she has been able to schedule painting hours to suit herself.

She works in a women's cooperative with artists Nancy Prophit and Beverly Richards. Their studio is a storefront on Morang, formerly an art gallery. They

Cost of solving Milk River problem up to $72 million

Assistant Editor

The cost of solving the Milk River sewage overflow problem to meet state mandates is estimated at $27 million to $72 million, depending on which solution is chosen.

And according to one state environmental official, it's not a matter of if the expensive solution is undertaken, but rather

Several options designed to eliminate or reduce sewage overflows into the Milk River and, ultimately, Lake St. Clair were presented last week by the engineering firm of McNamee, Porter and Seeley, which has been contracted by the Milk River Inter-County Drainage Board to study the problem and present solutions and costs.

The meeting of city, county and state officials at the Grosse Pointe Woods City Hall Sept. 6 came amid frequent health advisories issued by the county Health Department due to sewage entering Lake St. Clair near the mouth of the Milk River.

During heavy rains, amount of combined storm water and sewage entering the Milk River Pump Station at Marter and Parkway in the Woods exceeds the station's limit of 10,000 gallons per hour that it can pump to the Detroit treatment facility via the 6-foot diameter Detroit interceptor.

Even though the pump station has a 4 million gallon retention basin to store the excess sewagestorm water effluent, the sheer volume of liquids during heavy rains overflows the retention basin and enters the remaining Milk River channel.

Once in the channel, the sewage-rain water, known as combined sewage overflow, is pumped into Lake St. Clair through a 6-foot pipe that extends about 520 feet into the bay created by the tip of the Shore Club peninsula and the Grosse Pointe Woods Lakefront Park. Some of the Milk River fluids flow over a dam at Jefferson and enter the harbor at Lakefront Park.

The health advisories warn residents not to enter the water in the lake between 9-1/2 Mile and Vernier Road. The bacteria from the sewage overflow can cause infections if the water comes in contact with the eyes, ears or cuts in the skin, and can be especially dangerous if swallowed.

The combined sewage overflows have been entering the lake since the pump station went into operation in October 1960.

At the meeting, Vyto Kaunelis, the project engineer handling the Milk River study, presented the various options available to solve or reduce the combined sewage overflows. He presented major options that would solve the problem to meet DNR standards and offered several secondary options that could be combined with other options.

Option 1: Sewer separation Cost: $72 million

Sewer separation is the most complete - and costly - of all the possible solutions. It calls for completely separating the sanitary sewer and storm drain systems throughout the Grosse

Farms parking plan approved amid mixed reactions on Hill

By Dan Jarvis

Staff Writer
Hill merchants and real estate professionals put on the gloves and duked it out the other night. The battle was fought over whether the city should offer leased spaces in the municipal parking lot behind shops on the Hill currently under renovation.

The Grosse Pointe Farms City Council unanimously approved several recommendations Monday night by an ad hoc committee studying long-term parking in the Hill area. But reactions by Hill merchants and real estate professionals were mixed as the council gave its thumbs up to all items recommended by the com-Richard Solak, who received praise from all parties, gave a short history of the Hill's parking situation, with an emphasis on leased parking spaces, one of the items of disagreement.

After explaining that the city in the past set aside 46 parking spaces for lease, Solak said that the parking committee recommends no leased spaces for at least six months.

After six months the council may consider leasing a number of parking spaces. Based on the parking committee's recommendation, the council will take time time to study traffic patterns before spaces may be granted.

Solak emphasized that after six months, there is no guarantee that the city will offer leased spaces. He said since the 46 spaces were offered in the past, the waiting list has grown to nearly 90 people. He gave several reasons for not setting aside leased spaces; one is that there is no fair way to distribute spaces.

"Because of the rate structure in the municipal lot, the needs of people going in and out will be met," Solak said.

But real estate professionals disagreed.

Bill Johnstone, of Johnstone and Johnstone Inc., said the ad hoc committee is composed mostly of retailers and does not represent the nearly 200 real estate people in the area.

Johnstone so'd the new parking plan does - c offer convenience to people who are in and out of their office several times per day. He also said the parking prices are too high and will force shoppers from the Hill to other areas such as the Village or along Mack Avenue.

"We had better make it more competitive with other areas. We've seen two (police) officers at once ticketing both sides of Kercheval.

"We're scaring people away. It's not supposed to be a money maker for the city and I think the city has a responsibility to make it easy and cheap. But several retailers disagreed and said the city is acting in the best possible manner. Ed Kiska, owner of Kiska Jewelers, said he favors no leased spaces for anyone.

"It's not fair that the Realtors get leased spaces. There is no fair way to give them out." Kiska agreed with Solak that the recommended rate structure in the municipal lot will meet the needs of people using short term parking. Rates for the municipal lot, as approved at the meeting, are as follows: 25 cents per hour for the first three hours; 75 additional cents for the fourth hour; an additional 75 cents for the fifth hour (total of $2.25); and $5 for all-day parking. Solak said that Cottage Hospital has been helpful in offering leased spaces in the lot between the parking deck and Ridge Road (the B lot) and the Cottage parking deck, which has an average of 140 unoccupied spaces.

John Danaher, vice president of development for Cottage, said the hospital has proposed a rate structure for monthly leasing in both parking areas.

If approved by the city, monthly leasing in the deck will be lowered from $85 per month to $45. In the B lot the proposed rate, if approved, will be raised from $20 per month to $30.

Danaher said the proposed rate structure will be offered on a trial basis only.

British M.P. sees greater use of alternative energy sources

By Nancy Parmenter Staff Writer

He's on the phone doing a radio interview when I arrive. News that a famous Englishman's in town travels fast.

Not as famous as the prince, but, in the real world, maybe of more lasting influence.

Tony Speller is interested in Full of his own form of energy, he is a British Member of Parliament now in his third term, sits on commissions on energy and alternative energy, franchises American Speedy Printing in Europe, and is a pal and business partner of Grosse Pointe's Marshall Noecker. He's ready to pack a lot of conversation into a short period before he leaves for Cape Cod on ribbon-cutting business for the queen.

He bubbles over with opinions. Elections, tidal power, off-shore drilling, racism, old and new money, caravan - er, trailer parks, agriculture, language, Sherwood Forest.

Speller has been in the States any number of times. He basks in Florida, chums in Michigan, mingles with oil-drilling types in Tulsa. "I never grow accustomed to 'through," Speller grumbled.

Once he was making a call to London when the New York operator came on the line. "Are you through?" she asked.

"Yes, thank you very much," said Speller. So she cut the connection.

"I say," he complained. "You cut me off."

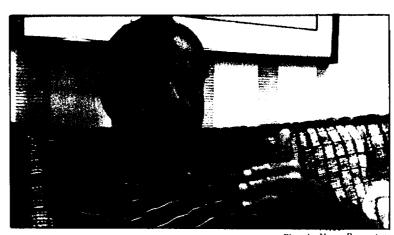

"Well, you said you were through.'

"No, well yes, but..." Speller laughs at himself. It's a mistake he'll probably make again.

A British M.P. spends his life differently from you and me and from a U.S. congressman. First of all, he has an outside Speller's main government interest is the environment. Long dependent on oil and soft coal, England and Mrs. Thatcher have turned "Green."

It was a sudden conversion. Until three years ago, the British didn't even sell unleaded petrol, but now they're pushing it at a 15-cent advantage over reg-

The government is looking for clean ways to use coal, oil and gas. Wind and tide power are the coming things, and nuclear is on the way out.

"We've at long last accepted that we can't go on messing up the environment," Speller said. "When Mrs. Thatcher is converted, everybody else better be converted.'

Because England is a small country, Speller said, the results are quick in coming.

"I haven't seen a London fog since I was a kid."

This M.P. is nothing if not a practical environmentalist. He touts off-shore drilling for oil because the Crown owns all mineral rights under property on land, so people hate having their property disrupted when they don't stand to gain anything.

Bon Secours picks up tab for Park's second defibrillator

Assistant Editor

In the spirit of community involvement, Bon Secours Hospital has provided the Grosse Pointe Park Public Safety Department with its second defibrillator.

Earlier this year, the Park City Council had approved the purchase of two automatic defibrillators, one for each of its ambulances. The first defibrillator was obtained immediately and went into use in July.

Bon Secour's donation of the second defibrillator will save the Park about $6,000 for the computerized unit, which measures heart activity and automatically administers electric shocks to get the heart beating more regularly following a cardiac arrest.

Recently, Cottage Hospital gave a defibrillator to the Farms, and the Shores got the same unit, a Heartstart 1000, from St. John Hospital. The two hospitals and Bon Secours are all providing the necessary training to the emergency medical technicians at no charge, and the emergency room directors at the hospitals are acting as the medical directors for the emergency medical services in the respective cities.

Dr. Ronald Laskowski, emergency room director at Bon Secours, said that with the Park, Farms and Shores now all having automatic defibrillators, the next step for improved EMS is to upgrade to limited advanced life support.

Currently, the Shores, Farms and Park, which also provides ambulance service for Grosse Pointe City, have basic life sup-heart attack patients are concerned, can perform cardiopulmonary resuscitation and clear blocked airways. The basic services are enhanced with the automatic defibrillators, which improve a heart attack victim's chances of survival some five

Basic is the lowest level of life support. The highest level is advanced cardiac life support, which is performed by paramedics. Grosse Pointe Woods has advanced life support. The middle range of ambulance service is limited advanced life support, which is performed by EMT specialists.

Currently, there is quite a bit of debate by concerned residents in the Pointes as to what type of EMS is needed. Some feel the basic service with the automatic defibrillators is enough; some believe paramedics are the only way to go; and others think limited advanced should be the next step taken.

Laskowski pointed out last week that it would only take four months for the Park to upgrade to limited advanced life support and would cost practically nothing.

The EMT specialists in a limited advanced system can use the automatic defibrillator, practice advanced airway management and intubation and start IVs. Unlike paramedics, however, the EMT specialist cannot manually defibrillate or give medications.

Laskowski said that it would cial millage vote to get advanced life support in all the Pointes and that it would be unpractical

'This (limited advanced life support) is a step we can get done efficiently, quickly and without a millage increase.

> Dr. Ronald Laskowski Emergency Room Director Bon Secours Hospital and cost prohibitive for a small community like the Park to go to paramedics on its own.

In the meantime, while the advanced life support debate rages, Laskowski said there is no reason why residents can't be getting better service. The EMT specialist can defibrillate and provide life-saving oxygen through intubation, Laskowski said. Defibrillation and oxygen are the two most effective means of dramatically increasing the heart attack victim's chances or survival.

And since the EMT specialist doesn't require much in the way of additional equipment, the cost of limited advanced life support is mostly in training.

It will take about four months

EMT specialist, Laskowski said. The training includes hands-on experience in the emergency room as well. Every quarter the EMT specialist must take a refresher course, which the automatic defibrillator technicians now have to take every three months.

"This is a step we can get done efficiently, quickly and without a millage increase and all that," Laskowski said of limited advanced life support. He said he fears that in all the debate about advanced life support, people are losing sight of the fact that limited advanced can be had now, while paramedics are a possibility in the future.

Because of the cost of advanced life support, which runs Grosse Pointe Woods more than $216,000 a year, community leaders and residents will have for a basic EMT to become an to decide if they want to pay for the premier ambulance service. Laskowski and others believe that the only way an advanced system can justify itself is if all the Pointes are in one ambulance service.

Meanwhile, Laskowski is pushing limited advanced. This month, Public Safety Officer Chris Powell, the Park's EMS coordinator, and Public Safety Officer David Younk from the Shores are beginning training at Bon Secours to become EMT specialists and instructors. And while the two officers are taking the training on their own, Laskowski pointed out that with Powell and Younk trained as EMT specialist instructors, it will really help their departments if it is decided that limited advanced is the way to go. As a member of the Detroit-East Medical Control Board, the agency that regulates ambulance service in eastern Wayne County, Laskowski chaired the committee that wrote the protocols for the automatic defibrillator technicians and EMT special-

Protocols are standing orders that EMTs and paramedics work under. Protocols limit what the EMT or paramedic can do at certain times. Protocols differ with the level of training of the EMT.

Laskowski is urging that city officials get together with emergency room directors for all three hospitals to discuss the future of ambulance service in the Pointes. Laskowski will be sure to be pushing for limited advanced life support, something the 10-year veteran at Bon Secours has put a lot of time into.

'This is something we can do right now, really cheaply," he

State reviews Farms election results

By Nancy Parmenter

Last week's court decision turning the results of the Grosse Pointe Farms judicial primary over to the state puts the city into a holding pattern.

Farms Clerk Richard Solak can't order ballots printed for the November election until he knows which names to put on.

"We're pretty much in limbo," said Farms attorney Mark Riashi. "That's the unfortunate aspect as far as the city is concerned."

The county canvassing board had gone to court for an extension of the time period for certification. An investigation by the state police of alleged irregularities in the balloting is still pending; information from that could aid the canvassing board in reaching a decision.

However, the state statute calls for certification to be moved along from the local board to the county to the state, as designated time periods elapse, said Brad Whitman of the state

Honorary doctorate provides the opportunity of a lifetime

Staff Writer

"It was just absolutely delightful," said Grosse Pointe Park resident William Leith, whose name could now be written as William Leith, Ph.D., Ph.D. He was recently awarded an honorary degree from Oulu University m Ouln, Finland.

"There is no topping this," he added

Leith, who is a professor of communication disorders, received the honorary degree for his contributions to the clinical aspects of speech pathology and for his work with the University of Oulu.

The story started about five years ago when Leith published his third textbook, "Clinical Methods in Communication Disorders.

It sold all over the world and fell into the hands of Dr. Eila Alahuhta, who is head of the department of logopedics -- speech disorders - at the University of Oulu. She wanted to translate his book, and spent some time studying with him here.

While she was in this country, she talked Leith into coming to Finland and giving three formal lectures on his specialty, and to look over the new logopedics clinic the university was build-

He accepted for two reasons: first, because it was something of an adventure, and secondly, because the university staff, under the direction of Alahuhta, was going to help Leith test theories on which he was basing a new textbook.

While he was there, he and Alahuhta put together the groundwork for a student exchange program for students from Wayne and Oulu.

Last year in May, he received a letter from the university offering him an honorary doctorate should be choose to accept it.

"Hell, I was on the phone in three minutes," he said.

But the ceremony, which is held only once every six years, was scheduled for 1989.

In the meantime, Leith said he and his wife, Wanda, were getting invitations to the fourday event. On the invitations were exact instructions on what was to be worn at each event. Most events were white tie and tails, women weren't allowed to have purses, there were to be black gloves at this event and white gloves at that one, he said.

Leith was one of only two people from the United States to receive a degree. Others came from Russia, Hungary, East Germany, Sweden, Namibia and Finland. The language barrier was felt only slightly during the entire weekend, due to the hospitality of the Finnish people.

"I was out of my element," he said. "I wondered what I was doing here."

Other honored doctors in the ceremony were the United Nations Advisor to Namibia, a winner of the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Human Rights award. a winner of the Indira Gandhi Prize for Peace, and other internationally known authors.

The first event, preceded by a formal dinner, was the symbolic sharpening of a sword which was given to each honorary doctor. and all the students who had earned their doctorates since the last Promotion Ceremony.

The swords, which Leith believes symbolize the sharpness of the intellect, were touched to a sharpening stone which was wetted with champagne. They were then returned for formal presentation the next day.

Then there was dancing. But not just any dancing. Leith said. It was the formal European court dances of the late 1800s. waltzes and polonaises - which were taught to them the previous evening.

The night ended at 2 a.m. by which time the sun has not set. In fact it was getting ready to rise at 3:15 a.m.

"When we started walking, I said to this guy behind me, 'Who would watch a parade of a bunch of doctors? And the man, who was from Hungary, said 'Sir, you forget. In Europe the order is first the king, then the queen, and then the honored doctor."

Indeed, the man was right, for thousands of people lined the streets, armed with cameras to see the new doctors.

Additionally, the event was front page news across the country. All of the television stations covered the ceremony.

Another formal dinner took place that night. At midnight, the formal dancing stopped, and the new doctors stood in two lines and made an arch with their swords. The heads of the colleges in the country passed through. Then the college officials were carried around the room on a platform as the doctors cheered.

The evening ended at 3:11 a.m. with a speech welcoming

The last event was a cruise which began a few hours after Leith and his wife went to bed. They docked at a small fishing village where they were treated to traditional songs and dances.

"When it ended, I was very sad," Leith said. "The people were all so very, very nice. The only thing I have to compare it to is like something out of Hollywood. Nothing will ever top

But the rest of his summer came close. He and his wife Wanda celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary on Aug. 13. That ceremony was made extra special by the birth of their first grandchild the day before.

"I tell you, it's been one hell of a summer," he said.

Wording OK for 2 school ballot plans

Tow that the state Board of Canvassers has approved the wording for the two Nov. 7 ballot proposals, the battle can be expected to heat up over the alternative ways of financing Michigan's public schools.

With the official wording in hand, perhaps more of us will be able to keep in mind the distinctions between the two plans that will boost the sales tax and raise more money for public education.

For example, a spokesman for Gov. James Blanchard called our attention to an Aug. 24 editorial that misidentified the proposal being supported by the governor. He supports Proposal A and, his spokesman said, he expects a hard fight but is optimistic about the outcome.

Proposal A calls for boosting the sales tax from 4 cents to 4.5 cents and raising an estimated additional $400 million for school financing the first year.

Proposal B would increase the sales tax from 4 cents to 6 cents, raise about $325 million in new money for the schools the first year and also cut school property taxes an average of 38 percent for homeowners and 23 percent for businesses.

The two plans have other provisions. Both would penalize schools not adopting core curriculum and improvement plans by denying up to 100 percent of non-guaranteed state aid. Both would also require adoption of school improvement plans, accreditation and an annual report to the local community.

Proposal A supporters claim that their plan also would mandate additional quality requirements, such as the use of new funds for pre-school training, computers in the classroom, a program aimed at drugfree schools, a drop-out prevention program and an improved curriculum in math, science and technology.

Proposal B, on the other hand, would also impose a 14-mill statewide property tax on businesses and a 9-mill statewide property tax on residential property as well as a foundation millage of at least 17 mills that does not need to be approved by the voters.

Another factor was added to the school financing reform campaign last week when a group of 117 needy school districts took the first step to challenge what they term the "inequitable per-pupil funding disparity" that exists in Michigan.

The group, informally known as the In-Formula Caucus School Districts, does not feel that either of the two proposed ballot plans will solve the disparity problem. Its first suit seeks permission to spend public money to sue the state and make its case. If that is successful, another lawsuit would challenge the state's present funding sys-

What this group seeks is to close the wide gap that now separates per-pupil spending among the richer and poor districts. On a statewide basis, the range is from about $2,500 per pupil in poorer areas to about $8,000 in wealthier districts, according to Richard Wilson, superintendent of the Brandon Public Schools in Oakland County and spokesman for the informula districts.

Grosse Pointe is one of the 180 out-offormula districts, meaning it does not qualify for most state aid because its property taxes provide sufficient funds to finance the local public schools.

The Pointes have been advised by Rep. William R. Bryant Jr. to vote against both proposals on the grounds they would limit the ability of Pointe residents to operate their schools how and with the funding they desire. In fact, Proposal B would put a cap on local spending for schools in communities like Grosse Pointe.

The Grosse Pointe Board of Education Monday night decided to remain neutral on Proposal A on the grounds that it would not have much impact on Grosse Pointe one way or another but opposed Proposal B because B would limit the district's ability to finance its own schools and thus make it more dependent on state funding.

This newspaper is sympathetic to moves to reduce the per-pupil spending disparity among Michigan's districts, but tends to agree with the Grosse Pointe school board and Rep. Bryant that it is unfair to limit the ability of districts like Grosse Pointe to finance excellent quality schools them-

For the Pointes, a state limitation on local spending for the schools as required under Proposal E would be a move toward egalitarianism, not toward maintaining excellence.

Not a conflict of interest?

reporter for the Grosse Pointe News last week finally got the attention of Wayne County Clerk of Court James Killeen but, unfortunately, didn't get answers to all the questions he asked about the recent judicial primary in Grosse Pointe Farms.

The News has been seeking information from the clerk ever since he called a press conference to alert the daily newspapers and the radio and TV stations, but not the Grosse Pointe News, about the complaint he had received about improper handling of some absentee ballots the day before the primary Aug. 8.

In the course of a telephone interview, Killeen said he didn't see any conflict of interest over the fact that he supported one of the four candidates who also happened to be his next door neighbor in the Farms and who, in fact, might benefit from Killeen's intervention in the election. Then Killeen added:

"The fact that I support one of the candidates has nothing to do with it. I did not know that people were committing illegal acts in the Farms."

He went on to say that he has vigorously pursued integrity of elections in other metro Detroit communities and that the "actions taken in the Farms have caused a question in the election." And then he added: "They have attempted to abuse the system. I'm appalled by it."

We, too, disapprove of what happened in the handling of the ballots in the primary, whether by the wife of one of the candidates or by the office staff in the Farms clerk's office or both. But we are also concerned about the county clerk's attitude.

As the supervisor of local elections in Wayne County, the clerk ought to keep himself "as clean as a hound's tooth" with respect to any actions that might disclose a lack of impartiality.

Yet he admits he endorsed one of the four candidates in the judicial primary and he, in fact, permitted his own name to be used in an advertisement supporting the

In addition, he has steadily and insistently refused to say who filed the complaint about the handling of the ballots and he just as consistently had refused to discuss the case with Grosse Pointe News reporters until last week.

In an unexpected development last week, Wayne County Circuit Judge Richard Kaufman left the primary results in limbo by ordering the results sent to the state Board of Canvassers. Earlier it had been expected that Kaufman would take jurisdiction of the matter and call for a new absentee vote.

Regardless of the action of the state board, however, we remain concerned about the conduct of the county clerk who sees nothing wrong with having endorsed a candidate in a local election that he supervises.

In fact, we are appalled by Killeen's cavalier attitude about his endorsement and about his apparent lack of interest in coverage of news from his office by the only newspaper of record in the Pointes.

A loss to WTVS viewers

The death of "Detroit Review of the Week" on WTVS/Channel 56 is a loss to Detroit metropolitan area viewers although it will be replaced by another show in its Friday night time slot that is expected to attract wide community

For almost eight years, the show brought to the Detroit area an excellent weekly review of news events with both fact and opinion offered by members of the Detroit news media.

Appearing on weekly panels on a rotating basis were staff members of both Detroit dailies, the Michigan Chronicle, radio stations and television stations as well as Detroit representatives of national publications such as the New York Times and Time and Newsweek magazines.

At its best, it was a broad-gauged look at what happened in Detroit the previous week and because of the informed participants, it delivered a perspective on metropolitan area events that viewers could not get from any other single source.

Channel 56 heavily promotes "Washington Week in Review" and "Wall Street Week in Review," also shown on Friday nights, but it seldom spent much time promoting either the Detroit review or "Off the Record" which provides a similar review of state government and politics by a panel of Lansing reporters.

In fact, "Off the Record" has bounced around the WTVS schedule from Friday to Sunday but now appears to be back on Friday night at 9 p.m. most of the time through October. It deserves a regular time slot because it also provides a special perspective in an area of news that is not always covered well by the commercial news media.

Neal Shine, retired senior managing editor of the Free Press who now is a columnist, presided over the Detroit review with charm and wit and is expected to provide the same qualities for "Neal Shine's Detroit" starting Oct. 13 at 7:30 p.m.

However, the new program will be an informal discussion, we are told, with leaders of the political, educational, youth services. religion and public and volunteer sectors. Shine will offer his own commentary on current issues while other segments will include video essays and a postcript reflecting the mail from viewers.

It could be interesting but it unlikely to achieve the depth of perspective and breadth of information guaranteed by the presence of the wide range of Detroit area news media representatives seen and heard on "Detroit Week in Review."

Squirrels

To the Editor:

With amazement and growing disgust, I read the Aug. 31 article on the squirrel killing that took place on Moran. My sympathies are entirely with the enraged man who smashed in the windows of his squirrel-killing neighbor.

Wild life is becoming more precarious each year, thanks largely to the mindless slaughters of this man and others of his ilk. Therefore, I am pleased that there are still some of us animal lovers willing to take a stand and voice our objections and, when necessary, take appropriate actions. To that man on Moran who stood up against squirrel killing, I say "Bravo!" Elizabeth P. Walker

Outstanding

To the Editor:

The management staff at Kean's Marina would like to congratulate the Grosse Pointe Schools' Job Placement Service and its coordinators, Marilyn Goldstein and Sally Chown, on an outstanding job. They provided us with summer help for both our gas docks and positions in our ship's store.

The following students worked the summer: John Bellamy, Michael Mac-Mechan, Christopher Markus, Susan Craft, Carrie Smith, Robert Crane, Megan Nelson, James Alderton, Chris Greiling and Lesley McNeil.

Our management staff was impressed with the fact that all of the above were off to college except for the two who are beginning their senior year of high school. Credit should be given to the Grosse Pointe school system.

Hill parking To the Editor:

We are concerned that the Grosse Pointe News editorial

("That Hill parking fee boost," Aug. 31) may have misled some readers, such as the letter writer of Sept. 7, who signed his/her letter "Past Hill Shopper."

For example, the letter to the editor erroneously states that the merchants of the Hill "expect their patrons to pay such exorbitant fees...' As Hill merchants, we want to assure the letter writer that once the municipal lot is renovated, which it will be soon, parking on the Hill will provide more spaces, less meter worries and less expensive parking.

Parking for shoppers will, in most cases, be free since more than 80 percent of the businesses on the Hill will validate parking stubs. The new attended lot will enable shoppers to find a place to park, unlike previously when the lot was occupied by a substantial number of

EMS talk is healthy for Pointes

The ongoing debate over the level of ambulance services in the Grosse Pointes is exactly the kind of dialogue that leads to a more informed, stronger community.

While the discussion of emergency medical service tends to get emotional, that doesn't mean the discussion is fruitless. In fact, if people didn't have strong feelings about the issue, it would hardly be pushed to the forefront of public concern.

As a reporter it is hard to take the middle road when covering an emotional issue that will have an impact on all residents, cours - all deserve credit for particularly in a small community involvement in ity like Grosse Pointe. But I do think it's OK for me to be in favor of one thing, and that's improved services for all residents.

basic life support services in the Farms, Shores and Park have been greatly improved with the addition of automatic defibrillators, which increase a heart attack victim's chances of survival some five times.

Grosse Pointe Park, which provides ambulance service for Grosse Pointe City, is quick to point out that it has been looking to add the automatic defibrillator for at least two years and before letters to the editor in the Grosse Pointe News launched the EMS debate.

Whoever had the defibrillator idea first, however, doesn't really matter. The important thing is that the three basic ambulance services now have the automatic defibrillators, which is a bonus for residents.

The three local hospitals -Cottage, St. John and Bon Sedonating the defibrillators. While many believe the hospitals have other than altruistic motives for the donations, such Already the EMS debate has as steering patients to their own seen the improvement of services emergency rooms, I don't believe landa Turner deserve credit for bringing the EMS subject out in the open and beginning the debate. Huth and Turner wrote the letter to the editor in March that began the discussion. The two local women accurately pointed out that many people in the Grosse Pointes did not know what type of ambulance service they had and what other types of service were available.

Whether the basic level of EMS is adequate or if limited or advanced life support is best for the Pointes are questions that have to be answered by city officials and residents. I won't even attempt to answer the EMS question myself.

I guess that's one of the easy

Also, Cathy Huth and Yo- parts of being a reporter. I don't have to come up with the answers or make the decisions. I merely put the questions before the community. Of course, the most difficult part of reporting is getting the information down correctly and relaying it to the public clearly.

Whether I personally agree with the source of information is not necessarily important. Certainly, we try not to pass on outand out lies, but if statements made by officials are not disputed, then we have no choice to pass on the comments as part of the public discussion.

I don't think our news coverage would be very objective or balanced if each reporter only included information that coin-not dispute Brady's comments. In fact, he pretty much confirmed that Brady's version of what was discussed was accurate. The comment was made by Laskowski that people may have been led to believe that par-

I mention all this because of comments made by Shores President Edmund M. Brady Jr. and

Dr. Ronald Laskowski in a recent story I wrote, of which those fueling the EMS debate took is-tions are never administered in the home, he just indicated that most of the time they're administered after the patient is in the ambulance truck. And once the patient is in the ambulance, he's only a mile or so from a hospital, in most cases in the Pointes.

Whether Laskowski's assertions are true or false, I don't know. He's the expert, not me. And although comments were obviously an over-simplification of EMS procedures, they are, nevertheless, another point of view that has to be considered. Are the advantages of paramedics worth the additional cost? Again, that's up to local officials and taxpayers to decide.

Despite the emotional aspects of the EMS debate and the inevitable misinformation and oversimplifications that abound, I think the debate has been healthy for the communities involved. And I think helping disseminate the various opinions of experts and laymen concerning this issue is a key responsibility of a community newspaper.

Promoting and assisting community debate, printing every opinion regardless of personal beliefs, are the functions of a good newspaper, and as one member of the Grosse Pointe News, I am glad to be a part of this very important issue.

EMS

To the Editor:

I am writing with reference to the article in the Sept. 7 edition of the Grosse Pointe News about Grosse Pointe Shores' acquisition of a Heartstart defibrillator for use in its emergency medical service EMS

I was astonished to read an incorrect statement in that article that IV and medication cannot be administration until the patient is in the ambulance.

It is our understanding that the governing policy of EMS is to work on the patient in the home, office, outdoors (if appropriate), or in the ambulance. The patient should have rapid medical attention at the maximum level available regardless of location.

My husband suffered a ventricular tachycardia (a racing heartbeat) in his office. Paramedics (advanced life support personnel) responded in four minutes. They put him on the floor in the copy room, affixed monitoring devices, started an IV, put the indicated medication in the line, and prevented a cardiac arrest. Forty minutes later, the paramedics transported him to the hospital in stable condition and without the additional trauma of speeding and the use of the siren.

A few weeks ago I witnessed at first hand a second paramedic rescue of a close neighbor by our excellent Grosse Pointe Woods ALS. The same procedures were followed; i.e. monitoring, IV and medication, in the home with transportation to the hospital.

An extreme, but pertinent, example occurs in auto accidents. The governing regulation requires that the highest level of EMS available be administered prior to the extrication from the wreck.

"Scoop and run" is an outdated EMS policy as we near the end of the 20th century. Well-informed residents of the Pointes will want to save lives. Three out of 10 runs made in 1988 by the Woods ambulance required ALS.

My personal experiences, as well as research, account for my continuing committment to the EMS Committee of the Grosse Pointe Branch of AAUW, and to the Committee of Grosse Pointe Citizens for Improved Life Sup-

Anne Y. Zimmer, Ph.D. Grosse Pointe Woods

EMS in Grosse Pointe

To the Editor:

Last week's article regarding Grosse Pointe Shores' EMS quotes Dr. Laskowski as saying, "Because of protocols, paramedics may not be able to do as many of the wonderful things in the Pointes that people may have been led to believe. The IV and drugs cannot be administered until the patient is in the ambulance, and once in the ambulance the patient is in the hospital in no time at all."

While it appears Dr. Laskowski supports upgrading Grosse Pointe's EMS from its present basic system to the intermediate level - limited advanced life support, he sould not negate the value of advanced life support (paramedics) based on an inaccurate understanding of its protocol. These misleading and incorrect statements only add to the confusion regarding the level of EMS Grosse Pointers desire in their community. According to Dr. McMillin, emergency room director for Cottage Hospital, the protocol from the Detroit East Medical Control Board (which governs Grosse Pointe's EMS) allows for a wide range of medications to be administered through IV's at the scene, prior to any transport, and these medications can be lifesaving. In the event of a cardiac arrest, the entire protocol, which is now done initially in the emergency room, can be duplicated by a paramedic in the field.'

According to Grosse Pointe Woods, their paramedics "are not restricted as to which lifesaving measures they can perform at the scene under medical direction, whether it be in the home, on the lawn, or in an automobile." They will, "as a matter of course, start lifesaving techniques immediately at the scene including IV medications prior to any transport of the patient."

This is done following established protocol from the medical control board. The paramedic enters the patient's home with a twoway radio, drug box, IV and intubation equipment, and a defibrillator. To highlight the importance of immediate definitive therapy in some types of severe medical emergencies, the medical control board in its advanced life support protocol manual mandates, "IV insertion, first line drugs, and defibrillation pre-radio contact." The paramedic is not to waste a minute even establishing radio contact, let alone transporting the victim to the ambulance. Our local private ambulance companies licensed to provide advanced life support also follow this practice. One exception to stabilization immediately at the scene is in a severe trauma where under the emergency room physician's direction, the patient may be rapidly transported to the hospital for possible surgical intervention. In a medical emergency, minutes can mean the difference between life and death, or temporary convalescense and permanent disability.

One only has to contact their local medical control board or the State Department of Health · EMS division in Lansing to verify existing protocols.

The statement that people have been misled is true only in the fact that Grosse Pointers have been led to believe their EMS is "state of the art." We still have the least sophisticated level of ambulance service available. It is only necessary to look a few miles east to Grosse Pointe Woods to see what true "state of the art" is. And this state of the art emergency care is delivered rapidly, at the scene, where sticky sugar...

Chow down

Jelly filling, donut crumbs,

It was all part of the job for the 50 youngsters who competed in the Michigan State Fair's donut eating contest Aug. 31. Steven Moskaluk, 9, of Grosse Pointe Woods was the first place winner in the 8- and 9-year old category.

A variety of strategies can be used for the tricky business of eating the most donuts in the least amount of time. Some kids nibble around the edges; some eat the tops of the donuts first; some lick out the fillings before tackling the rest of the donuts.

The prevailing strategy for this contest, according to Michigan State Fair publicist Michael Stassus, was the kamikaze attack, a tactic which left most of the contestants with sticky red faces as proofs of their courage.

Recycling News

Here's another item for coscientious citizens to add to their recycling stashes.

According to Recycling Pointes, a newsletter put out by the Grosse Pointe Citizens for Recycling, those little Styrofoam packing peanuts that are used to cushion fragile items from heavy-handed post office employees - are environmentally indestructable.

If you'd like to help stall their trip to the landfill, you can save them up and turn them in to Mail Boxes Etc. on Mack Ave-

They'll reuse them.

Joe and Ruth Henke, former Grosse Pointe Farms residents, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on Sept. 9, with their family, on Mackinac Island.

Ruth Henke was employed by the Grosse Pointe Public Library for 20 years before she retired. Joe Henke is retired from Finance-America.

They have three children and seven grandchildren.

Historic uniforms needed

Uniforms worn by bellmen, trolley car operators and chauffers are being sought by the Detroit Historical Department for an upcoming exhibition at the Detroit Historical Museum.

The exhibition, tenatively titled "Working in Detroit: Dressing for the Part," will examine the important role clothing plays in most occupations.

The exhibition will focus on three types of occupational clothing: clothing that identifies work roles; protective clothing; and unofficial uniforms.

It's scheduled to open in May 1990 and will display such diverse clothing and uniforms as the protective gear worn by nu-Walkathon clear plant workers to the dress for success corporate look.

"Visually, we expect the exhibition to be very exciting," said Vicky Kruckeberg, costume curator for the Detroit Historical Department and the curator responsible for the exhibition.

"There will be a nostalgic aspect for the members of the older generation as the exhibition will feature uniforms worn by personnel at some of Detroit's historic hotels and theaters. The younger generation will be interested in the uniforms and professional costumes worn by celebrities like Alan Trammell.

'But we need the public's help in locating some of the uniforms and clothing we need to complete the exhibition," Kruckeberg said.

Specifically, she is seeking: A bellman's uniform from the old Book-Cadillac, Statler or other early hotel. · Trolley car operator's uni-

• Usher's uniform from the Shubert, Fisher or other early theater. · Chauffer's, butler's or domestic's uniform from a prominent Detroit family. A "white wings" street cleaner's uniform. • Early Sanders waitress uniform with the Sanders' logo.

· Playboy bunny waitress uni-

If you have an entire uniform in good condition and would like to donate it to the exhibition, contact Kruckeberg at 833-1493, Monday through Friday, between 8:30 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Wayne County Executive Edward H. McNamara announced that the county will join communities throughout the nation to sponsor a local "Walk America," a walkathon to raise funds for the local Meals-On-Wheels program and to increase public awareness of the nutritional needs of the elderly and homebound.

The walk will be held on Saturday, Nov. 11 from 9 a.m. until noon at the University of Michigan Dearborn Fieldhouse.

The whole thing is in conjunction with the National Meals-On-Wheels Foundation, which is sponsoring a walkathon to help raise funds for Meals-On-Wheels programs across the country.

All proceeds from the local walkathon will be used to provide meals to seniors in 34 communities of western Wayne County and Downriver. Walkers can even designate the exact city they want their contributions to be used. And the Detroit Area Agency on Aging will be participating in the event to raise funds for the city of Detroit and east side communities.

Meals-On-Wheels provide hot, well-balanced meals to eligible seniors who need assistance.

Volunteer walkers whould be able to walk the 3.1 miles inside or outside the U of M Dearborn

News The library: Its future to be decided in November

By Ronald J. Bernas Staff Writer

The Grosse Pointes are now one step closer to a new library. After years of discussion and studies, the board is expected to vote in November.

On Sept. 5 the board of education voted to:

• Build a new library at Brownell at a cost not to exceed $7 million. Included in that figure is only the construction of a new 40,000 to 45,000 square foot building, which would have future growth potential, and minimum impact on the playing fields there. The figure does not include renovations on the Park and Woods branches.

• Retain a private fundraising company to raise as much of the cost of the new library as can be obtained. The rest would be bonded and voted on by the public at an election tentatively set for February 1991.

• Consult with an architect other than Osler Milling, with whom the board has been working throughout the project. Getting another price will help ensure the best cost.

sory Committee with thanks for their hard work.

• Form a new committee to and location. study what to do with Central Library.

It's been a long trip and it isn't over yet.

But the trip didn't begin in 1987 when the board asked the public for approval of expansion of Central Library. The public denied the request.

It doesn't even begin 20 years earlier, in 1967 when the board got a design for expansion at Central Library - a design which was never implemented.

Perhaps it began in 1951 when Dexter M. Ferry Jr. announced he wanted to donate a building for a central library. Nationally known architect Marcel Breuer was commissioned to design the building. The property was - and still is - owned by the school district.

In 1953 a few thousand people watched as the building was dedicated. It cost $672,000. According to one story, a few weeks after the library opened, Ferry walked into the library and told the head librarian that they had made a mistake: They had built the new library too small.

The trip, as it neared its end. was more difficult and arduous. Committees were formed to sell an expansion to the public. The public denied the bond issue by a narrow margin for a number of reasons, not the least of which was that the plans called for taking some playing fields from Grosse Pointe South High

"We had a good design, we still had some parking problems, but overall it was a good plan, Superintendent John Whritner

The plan included major additions to both Central Library and the Woods branch and a renovation of the Park branch at a cost of $8.6 million.

Another committee and subcommittees were formed to study new options for the library, in-

were in direct conflict with each

"There was some frustration as to how to bring all the different ideas together," Bruce said.

There were the people who wanted to tailor the program to a dollar figure they felt the public would accept, and those who opted to design a program and hope for public support.

There were those who said Central Library must be used as a library, and those who felt there should be some other use

Some committee members suggested closing the branches,

Reasons why a library is needed

By Ronald J. Bernas Staff Writer

Perhaps the following fact is telling as to why a new library is needed. Tucked away in the attic of Richard School are about 1.000 books, said Dr. Charles Hanson, library director.

The books are important enough to keep, he said, so they cannot be thrown out, but they have to be weeded out because there isn't enough shelf space.

"There are about 50,000 titles published a year," he said. "We buy about 8,000 each year.'

But in order to get those books on the shelves, Hanson and his staff have to "weed out" certain books. "This is not a great pol-

The staff is trying to accommodate the growth, but there isn't enough space and there hasn't been enough space for a long time, he said.

Superintendent John Whritner said, "The reality is that Central a new heating system and air conditioning, electric wiring, and carpeting and painting.

Even if we maintain the building, it's going to cost between $1.2 and $1.5 to bring it up to shape and we'll still end up with a building that is too small for a community of 55,000 people.

Hanson said, "We started with space for 60,000 titles which was adequate, but as time went along we discovered that other non-print items are necessary.'

Not only is the building crowded for patrons, it is more so for employees, he said.

Additionally more and more ings in the meeting rooms, all of which are on the second floor.

"But I suspect there are people who say we can live with it," Hanson said.

Perhaps they can, but as Vinmember and member of the committee to decide what to do with doesn't realize what they could be getting. They really don't see the running of that building. Because people get such good service, they don't see the need. And that speaks to the great

Hanson said the ideal situaenough to house a program the public deserves, with extensive collections of cassette tapes and compact discs and magazines and videocassettes the public wants these days.

while others thought tradition necessitated keeping them open.

"All of these options have real merit, and I'm not sure how you bring them all together," Bruce said. "I still have some hope that it can happen."

But whatever is decided, Bruce said the public must have the perception that all members of the school board are in agreement that a new library is needed.

"The board is in a very difficult position," Bruce said, "They need to go forward agressively on this and show the people strong leadership. Whatever decision was made, the committee felt there were a lot of politics involved.

The board has been criticized for leaving too much of the decision-making process to committees, but Bruce said the board had to take that course because of the criticism leveled at it for not getting enough public input prior to the November 1987 vote.

Another question the board must also face is what to do with the branches. One central library is the most cost-effective, but studies have shown that a community the size of Grosse Pointe needs 60,000 square feet of library space.

The potential new building at Brownell would have at most 45,000 square feet, the Woods branch has 5,500 square feet and the Park branch has 5,400. Central Library has 18,000 square

One building would eliminate duplication of staff and programming, and would also mean lower fuel bills for heating and air conditioning of the facilities.

Central Library: What is its fate?

By Ronald J. Bernas Staff Writer

Vincent LoCicero is the chairman of a new committee which will present to the board options for possible uses of Central Library. It is not a decision the committee or the board will rush into.

"This building has become a symbol of what a library is to this community," library Director Charles Hanson said. "And what do you do with something that is symbolic?"

The as-yet-unnamed committee discussed just that question at a meeting Wednesday night.

LoCicero spoke prior to the meeting.

"We're going to discuss all the options. We're going to provide them with a lot of information and see what develops," he said.

There are only two main options, however, both of which will be discussed: Should the school system keep the building that was given to them as a library, or should

A major issue still facing the board is the public perception of the libraries: There are still too many people who don't realize Grosse Pointe needs a new li-

"Libraries are one of the requisites for a good community and I know our libraries aren't ready for the '90s," he said. "I think they're probably still in the '60s. I don't think we recognize how far off we are.

"I don't think we want to wait until the system dies under its own weight," he said. "I believe that our libraries are right at that edge of crumbling under their own weight and we need to do something now. It's every bit as important as building another high school was in 1968.

And even though the building was given for use as a library, could the school keep it and not use it as a library, but perhaps for other community purposes? And does anyone really care what happens to it?

"Oh, I'm sure there are people who have a great feeling for that building and wouldn't want it to be sold," LoCicero said. "There are people who feel it's a classic example of Breuer architecture and should be maintained for that reason alone.

"Currently, that location is too tight to provide the community with the facilities they deserve," he said. "Even if we keep it as a library, there will have to be some major renovations and that would cost at least $1 million. We're busting at the seams there."

The option of keeping it as a library, while politically correct, may not be the best option and other options discussed were to use it for continuing education, or for an expansion of the Instructional Materials Center which is currently at Barnes school, or as a reading room, or as a community meeting place much like the War Memorial.

The option of moving the school offices there and selling the current offices at 389 St. Clair and using the money from the sale to make the renovations was also discussed.

But all of the options have one thing in common: There is inadequate parking.

"That place is landlocked," he said. Negative public reaction to the 1987 proposal which would have included taking some of the practice field at South High School for parking spaces showed the board there isn't much support for an increase in parking spots.

LoCicero said all issues and options will be discussed. A proposal will be given to the board for a decision in Novemsewage and has to be treated. Furthermore, the benefit of Harper Woods' separate systems is lost when Harper Woods' storm system mixes with Grosse Pointe Woods' combined system near Vernier and Mack, resulting in the relatively clean rain water now having to be treated. Because the five Grosse Pointes have a combined system, Kaunelis said virtually every street in the Pointes will have to be torn up in order to provide a separate sanitary sewer line.

Milk River

With completely separate sanitary and storm systems, the rain water would flow directly into the Milk River and all the sewage could be pumped to Detroit for treatment without disruption during storms.

Of course, the most obvious drawback to the sewer separation option is its $72 million cost. Another disadvantage is that it is very difficult to convert an old combined system into two separate systems. Kaunelis said it is almost impossible to find every point at which the storm and sanitary systems intersect.

Another problem with separate systems is that it is likely that in the future storm water will also have to be treated to remove pollutants, and the obvious response is "If we have treat storm water too, we might as well keep the systems combined," Kaunelis said.

He said the effectiveness of the sewer separation is only 48 percent, meaning that the pollution impact currently experienced at the pump station will only be reduced by about half. The ratio of pollution reduction to cost is only .7, which is not much effectiveness per dollar spent, Kaunelis said. Of course, the tighter the systems, the less sewage will find its way into the storm water and the greater the reduction in pollution.

Option 2: Additional retention Cost: $27 million

Building additional retention basins is a two-part option. The first part is digging a 25 million gallon retention basin in the Grosse Pointe Woods Department of Public Works yard adjacent to the existing retention area. The second part of the option would be a 20 million gallon retention pool north of the pump station on property owned by the Assumption Greek Cultural Center. The two retention basins combined with the existing 4 million gallon retention pool would meet the DNR's current combined system overflow standards.

Roy Schrameck, of the DNR's surface water quality division. said combined systems have to have a retention basin capable of capturing a once-a-year, one-hour storm. The one-year, one-hour storm equals about 1.2 inches of rainfall, which would be about 45 million gallons across the Milk River drainage basin.

The DNR also mandates that the combined system must be able to capture the one-hour, once-in-10-years storm for a minimum of 30 minutes to allow for chlorination before the sewageladen overflow enters the Milk River and Lake St. Clair.

Wayne County DPW Director James Murray said he doesn't agree with the DNR's combined sewage overflow standards and is trying to get them relaxed.

While building the first 25million-gallon tank falls short of meeting the DNR's one-hour, one-year standard, it does, nevertheless, reduce the pollution impact some 68 percent. The cost of the 25 million gallon tank is $7.1 million, which earns pollution removal to cost ratio of 9.6. Kaunelis said the high ratio means the first tank will do a lot of good per dollar spent.

The second tank allows the system to meet DNR standards, but only increases the amount of pollution reduction to 76 percent. Building both tanks costs $27 million and reduces the waste removal to cost ratio to 2.8.

The benefit of building just the first tank is that most of the time, all the rain water could be trapped and afterward sent to Detroit for treatment. Only in the largest storms would raw sewage overflow the retention basins and enter the Milk River.

The drawbacks of just the one tank are that it doesn't meet DNR standards and some sewage will still be getting into the lake.

Two tanks meet state standards but are very expensive. Also, land for the tanks is a problem. The first tank could be built on city property used by the Woods DPW, but there would be inconveniences for the city during construction. The second proposed retention basin would sit on Assumption Greek Orthodox Church property, which poses land negotiation problems.

Kaunelis said both retention basins, which would be 30 feet deep, could be built below ground level so that the Woods DPW could have its yard space back and the church would still

A big snag with having two retention basins with a total 45 million gallon capacity is that there would not be enough time between heavy rains to pump the fluids from the retention basins to Detroit.

Under normal conditions, the pump station receives about 6,000 gallons per minute from the Milk River drainage basin. That leaves 4,000 gallons per minute that can be drained from the retention basins. At 4,000 gallons per minute it would take more than a week to empty the tanks in preparation for more heavy rains.

Option 2A: Enclose the river Cost: $12 million

Putting a concrete lid over the existing Milk River channel would create a retention basin for about 15 million gallons.

Covering the channel would eliminate the stagnant, stinking creek that now borders residents' backyards. Many residents, however, actually like the Milk River and think they're living on a real river instead of a sewer. Some have said they'd sell their homes if the river was covered.

Milk River.

Actually, the Milk River no longer exists. Most of its former channel and drainage area is now taken over by concrete and sewer systems. The remaining channel doesn't flow. It is blocked by the pump station and the dam at Jefferson. Even if nothing but relatively clean storm water is dumped into the Milk River, the water will still remain stagnant, be unsightly and will smell. The pristine, flowing river is gone forever.

Covering the river is expensive for the benefits derived, Kaunelis said. At a cost of $12 million, the pollution reduction is about 67 percent, and the ratio to cost is 5.6.

Option 3: Route Harper Woods sanitary flow directly to Detroit interceptor Cost: $1 million

Taking advantage of Harper Woods' already separated sanitary and storm sewers, is one easy way of reducing 40 percent of the sanitary sewage entering the Milk River Pump Station. This option is a simple matter of connecting the Harper Woods sanitary line directly into the 6foot diameter interceptor going to Detroit.

Harper Woods' 3-foot diameter sanitary sewer enters Grosse Pointe Woods running parallel to Allard Road. At or near the Torrey Road pump station, the Harper Woods sanitary line connects to the Pointes' combined system. Because the interceptor runs north and south near the Torrey Road connection, it would be a relatively easy job to connect the Harper Woods line directly to the interceptor.

Since all the Harper Woods sanitary sewage would be going directly to Detroit, then none of sewage could overflow into the Milk River. The $1 million investment would reduce pollution impact at the Milk River by 22 percent and would result in a high pollution reduction to cost ratio of 22, making the interceptor connection the most cost-efficient option.

The amount of sewage allowed to enter the interceptor from the Milk River drainage basin, however, remains at 10,000 gallons per minute, so whatever flows directly into the interceptor from Harper Woods has to be deducted from what the Milk River Pump Station can send. Kaunelis said it would be a simple matter for the Harper Woods-interceptor connection to be monitored from the pump station.

Option 4: Route Harper Woods storm flow directly into Milk River Cost: $5.4 million Along the same lines as Option 3, this option takes advantage of the fact that Harper Woods already has separate sanitary and storm sewers. Because the Harper Woods storm is separate only as far as Vernier and Mack, a storm line will have to be buried from that point and up Marter to the pump station.

The cost for running the extra segment of storm sewer is estimated at $5.4 million. Having Harper Woods' storm water go directly into the Milk River will reduce the pollution impact at the pump station by 25 percent, with a pollution reduction to dollar ratio of 4.6.

Kaunelis said the efficiency isn't much better because it's impossible to have a 100 percent separated system. A Harper Woods official at the meeting, however, insisted his city's storm and sewer systems were 100 percent separate, so the pollution reduction with this option may be greater than Kaunelis calculated.

Option 5: Vortex concentrators Cost: $3.2 million

This option, which is the last of the major options, calls for a bank of seven 50-foot diameter vortex concentrators that separate solids using centrifugal force. Seven of the huge separators are needed because of the volume of fluids to be handled.

The advantage of the vortex concentrators is that they are less costly than retentions baAt Draper's you never pay extra for delivery, quality or service.

sins. They can also be used in conjunction with retention basins to increase efficiency.

The vortex concentrator system would cost $3.2 million and would result in a pollution removal of 15 percent. The pollution reduction to dollars spent ratio is 4.7.

The disadvantages of the vortex concentrators are their unproven technology and they're not in line with DNR requirements. Kaunelis said the best use of the vortex concentrators would be in addition to other system improvements.

IN ADDITION TO the major options, Kaunelis outlined many minor options that are less costly but can add favorably to the overall results.

• River storage: This $200,000 option uses the existing Milk River channel as a retention basin. After heavy rains, the liquid in the channel is pumped to Detroit for treatment. This reduces the amount of pollution entering Lake St. Clair by 25 percent. The disadvantages are that the Milk River is still not be drawn down before the next rain and the operating and maintenance costs would be high.

• Additional outlet capacity: Build a second combined sewage line from the Milk River Pump Station to another main line going to the Detroit treatment plant. The extra outlet would not be restricted by the maximum 10,000 gallons per minute that can be pumped into the interceptor. It is not known, though, whether another connection can

THE STATE OF THE STATE OF THE sewage-laden, the channel might be made and what the flow rate into the system. would be limited to. The cost of the additional outlet line is estimated at $8.8 million. This additional line could also be used draw down the 45 million gallon retention basins in Option 2. • Eliminate seepage: Kaunelis said the average amount of waste in a combined system is 100 gallons per person per day. The Milk River drainage basin, however, averages 150 to 160 gallons per person a day. The higher per person rate is attributed to ground water seeping

• Disconnect down spouts: Many communities demand that gutter down spouts drain directly into storm sewers. Directing the down spouts onto the lawn means that much less water is sent to the pump station. Drawbacks are possible flooding and excessive ice on sidewalks and driveways.

Several stream treatment options were proposed.

Told she had a good touch with children's faces, she began doing portraits at Jacobson's between fairs.

"I'm now doing the second generation," she said. "I'm doing the children of those children.'

One of the things that makes kids fun to paint is the cute things they say. "They're always asking if I'm through yet — as soon as I pick up my pastels."

Or: "Is it going to take you a long time to draw Grandma's wrinkles?'

If you have a good sense of humor, as Prudden seems to, this just makes it all the more enjoyable.

"Long ago, I painted a partial nude of a woman for her husband," she recalled with a laugh. "Later they divorced and the painting was a hotly contested

The disdainful creature sat aloof on an air conditioner with its tail crooked just so. Prudden painted it that way - and the owners were thrilled.

This has been a summer of relaxation for Prudden. Normally, she would have done about eight art shows, but this year she opted for bicycling and time spent with her husband.

"I had a serious health problem a few years ago, so my husband and I value our time together," she said.

But a lazy summer means she's really pulling up her socks

Last weekend was the fall festival sponsored by the Grosse Pointe Artists' Association. In three weeks, her one-woman show at the Scarab Club opens. She just won an award at the state fair and another for a landscape sold in a five-state pastel show mounted at the Krasl Gal-

"I am on a roll right now," she said.

Putting together a show forces an artist to reassess his work, Prudden says.

"Every couple of years an artist should get her work out and re-examine it. I like to see what direction I'm going in - of course, I'm usually going six or seven directions.

"You float off into different directions unconsciously. If I took a year off from portraits, I'd really grow in other directions. I like the portraits, though.

"I made a decision long ago to paint, rather than teach," she said. "If you teach, you have to work eight hours a day and there's no time to do your own things, in your own voice."

Prudden is the president of the Detroit Society of Women Painters and a member of the Michigan Watercolor Society, as well as the Grosse Pointe Artists and the Scarab Club. But, as much as she enjoys those professional associations and finds meaning in their artistic support, she can

Woods day care laws appealed at city level

A hearing of the Grosse Pointe Woods Board of Appeals has been scheduled to determine whether day care operations can be conducted within the city lim-

The hearing, set for Monday, Sept. 18, at 7:30 p.m. at City Hall, was requested by attorneys representing Mary Roose, a day care operator residing in Grosse Pointe Woods.

Roose filed a law suit in June 1988, charging that the city's ordinance against day care operations is unconstitutional and is selectively enforced.

Her suit seeks in excess of $10,000 in damages, court costs and attorney's fees.

Roose's was one of three day care operations that received a cease-and-desist order from the

The suit was patterned after an earlier suit filed by another day care operator, Sheila Temkow, who has since moved out of the Woods.

In December 1987, Wayne County Circuit Court Judge Lucille Watts said Temkow's day care operation was a business and was therefore not exempt from the city's ordinance prohibiting businesses in residential dwellings.

George Catlin, city attorney, said a recent hearing in Wayne County Circuit Court resulted in Roose being sent back to the city to exaust administrative remedies before Circuit Court will rule on the matter.

Chester Petersen, city administrator/clerk, said the hearing before the zoning board was granted after attorneys for Roose requested a zoning variance by the local zoning body.

In a letter dated July 10, cocounsel Mary C. O'Donnell requested the hearing to "appeal the administrative decision classifying Mrs. Roose's use of her home to babysit children as a the Grosse Pointe Woods zoning ordinance.'

Roose's attorneys said that the city issued cease-and-desist orders after the receiving a list of licensed day care operations from the state.

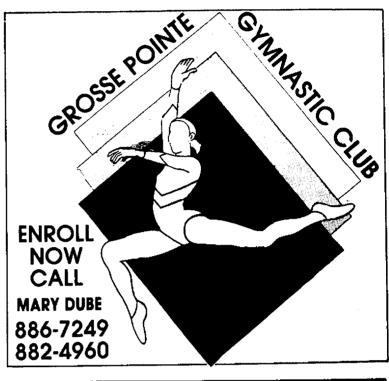

Attorneys claim that shutting down licensed operations is detrimental to families who will seek unlicensed operations. The state now has 60 percent unlicensed day care operations and Roose is in the minority of operators who seek state licensure, they claim.

Petersen said the hearing was

At a recent meeting of the Woods City Council, it was revealed that the day care remains in operation and that neighbors frequently complain of traffic problems created by the busi-

"when there is so much need in the country?

Most of the money spent for treatment is going for short-term treatment, which Snyder says is simply not good enough.

"There should be more money spent on long-term care," she "Short-term treatment is good, but it does not teach you how to manage your lives afterward.

Funding should be going to longer-term treatments of six to nine months, she said.

"You have to teach people to manage a daily routine that is productive," she added.

Additionally, with the amount of red tape involved in getting that money to local agencies, it could be anywhere from six to 18 months before a place like Grateful Home would see those funds.

"The education and prevention aspect is a good one," she said. "You have to show people not only what drugs can do to you, but what they can take away.'

The program does not cut deep enough into the roots of the problem, she said, the quality of life in the inner cities.

"It's not just a legal issue, it's a moral and ethical issue. We have to help these people. One of the biggest problems the poor in America have is that they feel invisible. But society has turned its back on these people. We want to help them, but then we say no to subsidized housing and Headstart programs.

While she says Bush's drug program doesn't go nearly far enough, Snyder says it is, at least, a step.

"If it's a step in a long journey to a solution, then it's good.'

Susan Pearce, student assistance coordinator for Grosse Pointe South High School, generally supports the program, but said it was notable for what it didn't address.

"The biggest disappointment for me was that he didn't mention alcohol as a drug," she said. "Alcohol and nicotine are the

"It is definitely a step in the right direction," she said. "It attacks it on all fronts, law enforcement, treatment, education and supply. If all the efforts are to put the addicts in jail, it's not going to work. If we go after the users, it will perhaps eliminate the initial use because people are afraid of going to jail.'

But the best thing about the program is what it says to America and the world.

"What we're trying to do is to say that this is not acceptable," she said. "It is up to the country to spread that word.'

the board," he said, "But I have to say, coming from someone in the war, 'hey, we just got 27 minutes on TV. We didn't get a whole lot of money, but we got more than we had before. Now we've got to take that money and be pro-active and positive and show them what we can do with it.'

He applauds the coordinated approach, attacking both the supply and the demand, but believes it is too weighted on one

"We're looking at the supply end of it and we really should be looking at the demand," he said. adding that the drug problem is bigger than Bush realizes.

We have to decrease the demand by educating the masses. That has to start young and you have to get it in the home.

"We, as the American people, have got to work together now, the families, the schools and the and for the legal system, and a law enforcement agencies, instead of complaining," he said.

"It's a lot of glamor and glitz ago. added to things that are already in place and not much money to back it up," he said. "The money has been authorized, but it hasn't been spent yet."

While he is not opposed to a program to combat drugs, he says Bush's program is not acknowledging all the issues.

He would have liked to have seen a program which would have encompassed the social is education and treatment and sues behind drug use, a program "Reaction has been all over more like Lyndon Baines Johnson's Great Society.

"Bush is on the right track on stopping the demand, and at least it's acknowledging that you can't do it with only law enforcement. There's been a myth that education alone will stop drug use, but that's not true. There are too many other factors that lead the user to use. We don't have that broad and comprehensive a program here.'

Richard Caretti, Grosse Pointe Park director of public safety, said he is pleased to see Bush address the issues forcefully, but is waiting to see how the program works.

"Clearly it's a step in the right direction," he said, "But to solve the problems, you need money and I'm just wondering whether it's there.

"There has got to be a massive influx of federal funding for prisons, and for law enforcement lot of people are skeptical about the program because there has got to be money.'

He said the quality of the program will be shown in time.

"It's not a simple issue that we can talk about and come up with a quick panacea," he said. "If it was, we would have moved in this direction a long time

The real issues, she said, are dealing with the underlying causes that lead to drug usage.

"But at least the public is now discussing the problem," she added.

Children's Home of Detroit in Grosse Pointe Woods issued a statement applauding Bush's leadership in addressing the problem which has grown to enormous proportions.

"This national initiative will take a long time to be accomplished," it said. "Its thrust leaves open some very basic areas which continue to challenge the private sector, local communities and concerned citizens. Working to provide effective drug education and prevention; making available affordable treatment and support right here in our own community will still be the most effective way to participate in the broader national effort.

"As a social service agency, the Children's Home of Detroit believes that the war on drugs cannot be won on any level without working simultaneously to improve the emotional health and stability of families and children. The family and its values are besieged by disruptions, social and economic pressures, confusion and unclear guiding principles.'

Now that Bush has a program, the board feels it is up to the people to make it work.

'Kickboxer' copies 'Rocky,' Karate Kid'

Special Writer

Here's the scenario: A young. Italian-looking fighter wants revenge on a bigger, stronger, more talented opponent. The youngster had nothing going for him except sheer determination and a willingness to subject himself to some of the toughest training imaginable. It's a long, hard road.

But he wouldn't have it any other way

This is not, as one might expect, the next sequel to "Rocky" or "The Karate Kid." But "Kickboxer," a laughingly derivative film, owes an awful lot to Sylvestor Stalone's and Ralph Macchio's pictures.

There isn't much new to see here. Anyone who has seen any blood.

of the "Rocky" or "Kid" movies knows the setup by heart. Still, there is a certain attraction to films like these, in spite of their predictability. Maybe it's got something to do with the under dog mentality. Or our satisfac tion in watching bad guys get their comeuppance.

Or maybe viewers just like

The setting this time is Thia- ence and honor as well. land, where the champion kickboxer - a big, ugly, nasty guy named Tong Po -- wins fights and is a front man for an organized crime ring. In the film's early moments, Tong Po knocks an American kickboxer out of the ring and into the hospital with a broken spinal cord.

That means it's up to the American's brother (Jean Claude Van Damme) to get revenge. Before he can do so though, he's got to train under a wise old master. This man isn't "Kid's" Pat Morita, to be sure, but he's similiar in look and temperament. He must teach the young American more than just how to Indeed, he's much like "Star Wars'" Yoda in that respect, a point which only adds to the redundancy of this picture. There's not much suspense here, and even less character development.

That's one of the biggest differences between this film and the others in its genre. We care about Rocky Balboa. We don't really care much at all about the people in this movie.

But there is, nonetheless, a healthy serving of action and adventure. Viewers who demand nothing more than rapid-fire punches and rock music will be more than satisfied with "Kick-

John Candy is appealing in 'Uncle Buck'

Special Writer

Take two precocious kids, one rebellious teenager and an overstuffed, good-natured, likable uncle and you have "Uncle Buck," a film that was less than enthusiastically received by critics, but rose to the top of the charts because of its skillfully combined pathos and comedy to capture the hearts of audiences.

Playing the part of Uncle Buck is John Candy, one of the most effortlessly hilarious men in the movies. Directed by the immensely talented writer-director John Hughes ("Sixteen Candles," "Ferris Bueller's Day Off," "Planes, Trains and Automobiles"), it falls short of the magic of those earlier efforts. But even measured against the success of those films, it is immensely funny and appealing, largely because Candy plays feelings instead of just buffoonry.

The combination of the serious leavened by comedy has worked well in previous films based on the problems and intricacies about the world but nevertheless lack the maturity to deal with what has been thrust upon them at an early age.

In "Parenthood," parents valiantly struggled to deal with problems with their children that the question was raised, "Are children worth the trouble?" In the end — because there were so many humorous situations intermixed with precious moments - the answer was

More hilarious than serious, but nevertheless effectively delivering the message how small children feel confronting a world filled with hazards, was "Honey I Shrunk the Kids.'

"Uncle Buck" takes up this same theme of how to get through to kids and maintain a peaceful household without losing control.

In this instance, Uncle Buck, a 40-year-old disaster, a slob, an unemployed gambler who hangs out with trashy people, provides an answer.

A rich couple from an upscale Chicage suburb get a call in the middle of the night. The wife's father, who lives in Indianapolis, has had a heart attack and they are advised to come immedi-

They call around for someone to care for their three kids. No luck. As a last resort, the father timidly suggests Uncle Buck. At first the mother refuses, but in the end she has no other choice.

Ever-agreeable Uncle Buck is happy to oblige. Packing his belongings in an old suitcase, he sets off in his rusted-out, backfiring, old car to what he anticipates will be an opportunity to become acquainted with his two nieces and nephew.

A child at heart, he is looking forward to some happy times with them. He gets off to a bad start when he wakes up the neighborhood in the middle of the night trying to pick out his brother's house from the other duplicates of it on the street.

Once inside he can't resist picking out the theme from 'Twilight Zone' on the piano, which causes his teenage niece who is rebelling against her parents for moving her away from her friends in Indianapolis, to surface. She registers disdain and contempt for rumpled Uncle Buck and that's just for starters.

The next morning Uncle Buck meets the rest of the family, a wide-eyed 10-year-old niece who engages in a running battle with her obnoxious older sister and a 7-year-old nephew who looks at the breakfast and remarks, "He's cooked up our garbage!"

It doesn't take Uncle Buck long to win over the younger kids, but his determination to keep the teenager in line occasions some hilarious encounters for the audience, but not for the willful girl.

In between such encounters there are some light touches, such as one showing Candy relaxing on a couch eating Frosted Flakes and carefully vacuuming the crumbs off his sweater; his struggle with the washer and his capitulation when he gives up and handwashes the clothes and microwaves them dry; his efforts to fend off a persistent widow.

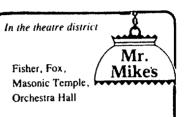

In the end everything is resolved and everyone is happier for knowing Uncle Buck, who is a fun guy - it's no surprise that he's so popular.

Those cents-ible money- saving coupons: Are they worth it?

By Pat Paholsky

Coupons are big business. In 1987, shoppers deducted $2.84 billion from their food budget by clipping out and presenting those small, slippery bits of paper at the checkout line.

And those figures are for single coupons. Imagine the savings with double and triple coupons currently offered by local supermarkets.

Consumers who up to now couldn't be bothered with the extra effort it takes to clip out and later sort through a stack of cents off coupons are now taking another look at the practice. There's money in them there inserts that come with the Sunday

Or is there?

While double and triple coupon offers permit tremendous savings to shoppers, Edward Deeb, president of the Michigan Food and Beverage Association, cautions that the practice may cause smaller stores to go out of business and, in the end, reduce the healthy competition consumers in this area enjoy.

"Many of our members are privately concerned that the larger supermarket operators with bigger advertising budgets may force them to close their doors," he said. "There is only so an incentive to get people to try use, and the double and triple would buy the product, cut out coupons simply cause customers the coupon, fill it out, mail it to to stop buying at one store and the manufacturer, and in return, choose another.

Since the manufacturer redeems the face value of the coupon only, for instance, 25 cents, the store owner absorbs the other 25 cents or 50 cents, depending if the shopper is given double or triple the amount shown.

With food stores averaging a net profit of 1 percent of sales, Deeb said, "Retailers can't afford to carry on with this practice very long.

The Michigan Food and Beverage Association, which is involved in monitoring legislation that affects the food industry and in lobbying, has made a preliminary study of the double and triple coupon practice, Deeb said.

"Our board will be meeting soon and if it feels this is ridiculous, we may ask the Federal Trade Commission to call an end to it," he said.

The membership is not eager for government involvement, he added, but they may feel it's time to act.

The business of coupons began when manufacturers incorporated them in their packaging as much food people can buy and a new product. The consumer get some money back.

Later manufacturers began using coupons to get the shopper reacquainted with an established product.

The competition is particularly intense today, with 38,000 new brands competing to get on grocery store shelves, Deeb said.

"In order for one of those products to get on the shelf, another product has to be taken off," he

Add to that the inroads that restaurants, particularly fast food businesses, have made in the eating habits of Americans and the competition becomes more intense.

'For years and years, the restaurants and fast food establishments have been pecking away to get people to forget about making three meals a day and come to the restaurants," Deeb said, "and they've been very successful. Today one of three meals is eaten away from the home."

Much of it is due to women working outside of the home, he said, and as a result, food stores have countered with delicatessens in-store offering cooked meals and even movie video rentals. The markets are telling customers that they can stop in after work, pick up a meal and a movie for less than it costs to go out to eat.

The double and triple coupon deal is a way for food stores to lure customers who shop elsewhere, along with other incentives in-store, such as two-for-one offers and end-of-aisle displays. Deeb said that there isn't much customer loyalty anymore, however, according to studies.

"Price is the major consideration and quality. Other factors are store atmosphere, convenience, parking, location and the variety of brands offered.

There are also a couple of paradoxes at play, Deeb said.

"One is that a lot of people think that bigger is better regarding large supermarkets, but they still like the personal service at meat markets. The other paradox is that frozen foods, with the popular supply and demand, may be getting cheaper."

Deeb, a Grosse Pointe Shores

resident, has been in the food business for most of his life. His father owned three grocery stores in the Detroit area.

After Deeb graduated from Michigan State University with a major in journalism in 1960, he went to work for Grocer Spotlight, a trade publication. He began as a production assistant and worked up to editor before getting involved with a food asssociation. He has been with the industry for 27 years.

The Michigan Food and Beverage Association represents 620 food stores and restaurants. About 85 percent of the membership are independent stores, convenience stores and supermarkets. The rest are restaurants and fast food businesses, he said.

Besides keeping abreast of legislation that will affect the membership. Deeb said the group offers insurance and seminars and workshops.

The Detroit area is fortunate, he said, to have several food chains in business. "The more competition we have, the better off we'll all be.

Walter Reuther: A life worth considering in these times

Labor Day has come to mean when times are hard." the end of summer, back to school, a day off from work, picnserious side to Labor Day, a meaning lost on many but still very real for some.

These are not happy days for organized labor. The UAW lost an important vote on representation at the Nissan plant in Smyrna, Tenn. - important as much for its symbolic as for its actual meaning. The machinists and pilots appear to be losing the strike against Eastern Airlines, which seems to have the government on its side. Many unions are tempering their militancy out of fear of losing their jobs to companies in foreign countries which exploit cheap labor with the help of their government and, indirectly ours.

"My father always said that good times worried him," said Elisabeth Reuther Dickmeyer, youngest daughter of the legendary UAW leader Walter Reuther. "Workers stick together

Mrs. Dickmeyer, author of the book, Reuther: A Daughter ics, parades, fun. But there is a Strikes (Spelman Publishing, $14.95), appeared with Denny Mclain on WHYT-radio on Labor Day and a week later with Doug Fraser on Dennis Wholey's Show on Public Television to talk about her father, who built the UAW against daunting odds, purged the gangsters and Communists who plagued many other unions and built the UAW into a major force for liberal political and social action.

"Today's high-flying prosperity and high employment are the culprits causing a reversal in union membership growth," said Mrs. Dickmeyer. "Workers tend to believe they do not need a union when things are going smoothly," she said. "They for-get that the union created those good times.

This Labor Day, many pundits addressed the question of whether the labor movement is dead.

pointing to events in Poland, where the labor movement is challenging Communism and pushing toward democracy.

And it is not dead in America. Many of the things we take for granted - humane working conditions, and end to child labor and sweatshops, free public education, Social Security, pensions, the eight-hour day and the 40hour week, minimum wage, overtime pay, paid holidays and vacations and medical insurance came about as the result of pressure from organized loabor.

It is pleasant to think we made it on our own, that we have a job and get promotions and make a living wage because of our own special talents and hard work. But nobody makes it alone. For those who do not have family ties, education at the right school, proper social connections or inherited wealth, it was labor unions which made their good life possible.

A spokesman at Wayne State It is not, says Mrs. Dickmeyer, Press, which is distributing Mrs.

By Richard Wright

Dickmeyer's book, said a problem getting book stores to handle the book is that outside of Detroit, most people don't know who Reuther was or what he was or why he was important. Even in Detroit, many young people know only that Walter P. Ruether is the name of a freeway. They do not know that he was a selfless man totally committed to the labor movement and the betterment of the human condition, an altruistic man. This concept seems quaint now in this cynical, bottom-line time, but it was embodied in Reuther.

When Ruether, his wife, May, and four others died in a plane crash near the UAW's Black Lake camp - which Mrs. Dickmeyer suggests in her book was murder - the liberal leadership of America was destroyed. The assasination of John and Bobby Kennedy, Martin Luther King Jr. and Malcolm X, plus the death of Ruether, ended the liberal leadership of that generation.

Mrs. Dickmeyer wrote her story to provide insight into the character of her father, that we might not forget what he did and why he did it. And why he did it is important.

In this era in which "liberal" has become a dirty word and greed and self-interest rule in Washington and Wall Street and in the boardrooms of our major corporations where the bottom line outweighs invention and creativity, it is important that we understand Walter Ruether, what he did and why he did it.

When we buy products from third-world countries which were made with cheap labor, we support the explitation of the weak to feed the avarice of the strong. We also put Americans out of work. Some might complain about putting Americans out of work, but few worry about exploitation of foreign workers. Ruether did.

Now Labor Day is past, summer pleasures are slowing, the kids are back in school, but we should consider the life of Walter Reuther. It is said that those who ignore history are doomed to repeat it. The conditions that led to the organizing of the auto industry and Ruether's emergence as a great labor leader seem to be returning. Arrogance and greed are back in style. Honest work is not. And the labor unions are not blameless.

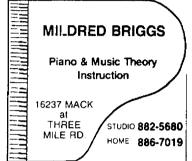

But there is another reason for considering the life of Walter Ruether. The heroes of our age, judging by the compensation awarded them, are entertainers, athletes and drug dealers, people without important purpose and often without learning, compassion, or high ethical values. Ruether was a hero no matter how you define it.

His was a life worth consider-

Two bits: What can you buy for a

By Margie Reins Smith Feature Editor

Is there anything that can be purchased for 25 cents within the borders of Grosse Pointe?

What if you gave a kid a quarter and turned him loose on Mack Avenue - or in the Village - on Kercheval in the Park or on the Hill? What could he buy?

Our research turned up . . . not much. He could buy two photo copies of anything; a postage stamp; some gum machine gum. He could make a local phone call or park a car for about an hour (a little more, a little less, depending on which lot, which street, which Grosse Pointe, and whether he used a quarter or two dimes and a nickel).

Some Grosse Pointers remember when a shave and a haircut cost two bits. At Ron's Barber and Styling Shop on Mack, today, haircuts are $10; a shave is $7.

We found some items that are probably worth more than a quarter . . . that can't be bought.

For instance, at TCBY's in the Village and on Mack Avenue, you can only get an empty cone for 25 cents — but they'll give you a sample of any flavor yogurt in a tiny paper cup for free.

At Waldenbooks in the Village, an Archie comic book (remember when they were 10 cents?) are 95 cents. Superman will set you back 75 cents. But Waldenbooks gives away a 64-page slick magazine that's chock-full of book reviews, interviews with authors, fullcolor photos, illustrations and lists of current best-selling titles.

Our research found that most store owners were baffled when asked for items that cost 25 cents or less. After a few moments, however, most could come up with a few surprising cheapies.

On a rotating rack in Waldenbooks, a dozen choices of postcard views of Detroit dressed up in its best were available for a quarter each: photographs of the People Mover, the skyline viewed from Windsor, Greektown scenes, the Fisher Building, and

At Kroger's in the Village, we found we could create a fairly substantial snack with a collection of two-bit items: a plum, a small potato, 35 green grapes, an 8-ounce can of tomato paste, a banana, 750 toothpicks.

The cheapest pet food -6 ounces, for cats - sold for 33 cents.

At Village Lock and Home Repair on Mack Avenue, stretchy plastic rings in a dozen colors to color-code your keys were 25 cents apiece.

At Two's Company in the Village, you could buy 10 gummy bears for a dime, an eraser for 20 cents, gift enclosure cards for 13 cents each, and a variety of individual stickers that start at 5 cents apiece: hearts, rainbows, dinosaurs, proclamations of "It's a boy" or "It's a girl" maize and blue block Ms and individual letters of the alphabet. You could also buy plain, polka dot or plaid ribbon for 25 cents a yard.

At Charvat the Florist on Mack Avenue, you could buy a yard and a quarter of corsage ribbon in your choice of more than 20

At Merit Woods Pharmacy on Mack in Grosse Pointe Woods, owner Sheldon Weisberg looked puzzled for a few seconds, then came up with a dozen cheap items: three brands of gum, individually-wrapped pieces of candy and mints, postcards, one-half ounce of two kinds of men's cologne, the weekday editions of The Detroit News and the Detroit Free Press, some sturdy plain round key rings, purse-sized packages of Kleenex and a reusable plastic toothpick with its own carrying case.

At the Wooden Nickel on Mack Avenue, there's apparently nothing for a nickel, wooden or otherwise, but you could get your regular-priced sandwich ingredients put on an onion roll or grilled — but not both — for an extra 25 cents. Or they'll add one of the following to your regular-priced hamburger: lettuce and tomatoes, grilled onions, a slice of Swiss or American cheese.

Lochmoor Hardware's owner Mike Neme pointed out dozens of items for less than 25 cents. Some were less than 10 cents.

"We're an old fashioned hardware store," Neme said. "We sell one-of-a-kind items instead of packages."

He pointed out wall anchors, sheet metal screws, machine screws, wood screws, key rings, nails, corks, disposable latex gloves, cup hooks, lamp parts, finish nuts, a foot of string, rope or twine, 18- or 20-gauge lamp cord and needles for inflating basketballs and footballs.

This 'n' That for Pets on Mack Avenue had rawhide doggie treats shaped like french fries and suckers for 19 cents each and two sizes of dog cookies for less than 10 cents. For 5 cents, you could buy a sticker that says "I love my dog" or "I love my horse.'

Cavanaugh's Office Supply in the Village had an assortment of drawing pencils, a variety of clips, different sizes of manila envelopes, a tiny golf pencil and plastic pocket protectors in a choice of two colors - all for 25 cents or less.

Jim Monnig of James A. Monnig Bookseller on Kercheval in the Park could only find some Thomas Nast Christmas postcards - hundreds of them - for 10 cents apiece. Even the cheapest paperbacks were 50 cents, but he said he had a thousand or so of those.

At Corky's Surf Snob and Bop Shop, manager Lisa deSpelder and clerk Heidi Jumisco found some skateboarding stickers for 25 cents apiece and some plastic kazoos. "I'll sell these squeeky pickles for 25 cents though," deSpelder said. They were marked 39 cents

At the Sprout House in the Park, three flavors of carob mints with no added sugar were 8 cents each, one piece of sesame crunch candy was a nickel, and a licoriceflavored candy shaped like a baseball bat or a very small organic apple could be purchased for a quarter. Also available were bulk items that could be measured out in fractions of a pound: rolled oats, organic rye berries, beans, rice, bulgar wheat, and the

If you're going on vacation, you could board one plant for one day at Grosse Pointe Botanical Gardens for 25 cents, according to clerk Maureen Patton.

Some Grosse Pointers remember when road maps and deliveries were free, phone calls were a dime, five-and-ten-cent stores sold stuff for five cents and ten cents, burned-out light bulbs could be exchanged for new ones, postcards were a penny and a year's subscription to the Grosse Pointe News cost $1.

Some even remember when a parent could give a kid a quarter to spend and the kid would be thrilled.

Junior League of Detroit sponsors LifeStyle Expo for Seniors

The first-ever Retirement LifeStyle Expo for older adults will take place at the Cobo Conference Exhibition center in Detroit Sept. 15-17. The Junior League of Detroit, along with Comerica, Henry Ford Health Care Corp., WDIV-TV, WJR-AM, CKLW-AM and The Detroit News are sponsors of this event, which will highlight services and programs that are available to senior citizens.

"We wanted to help ensure that Southeastern Michigan's non-profit community service organizations were well-represented at the Expo, so seniors in our community would have a chance to find out about the many services available to them," said Lorna Utley. of Grosse Pointe Woods, co-chairperson for the JLD Retirement LifeStyle Expo committee.

The Expo is a unique opportunity, she said, for the over-50 population to learn about services, community programs and lifestyle options that can enhance the quality of their retirement years.

"Most people should think about their retirement a lot sooner than they do," Utley said. "Statistics show that people who actively plan for their retirement tend to be much happier and healthier because they are more successful at adapting to their new lifestyle.

Some highlights of the Expo will include: special guest appearances by Willard Scott of NBC's "Today Show" and Alex Haley, author of "Roots;" more than 40 seminars and 200 exhibitors covering areas such as retirement and financial planning, health, fitness, nutrition and travel; dancing to big bands; health screenings such as checks of blood pressure, body fat, cholesterol, vision, hearing and lung function.

Complimentary tickets are available at Henry Ford Health Care Centers, Comerica branches, Great Scott supermarkets and Little Caesars Pizza.

The Pastor's Corner

On Neptune's chariot

By the Rev. Gregory P. Sammons Christ Church Grosse Pointe

God desires to share His love and life with us each day. Often, the haste, noise and fears in our lives choke out this awareness. Fortunately, God does not give up seeking and knocking, and will use even unusual means to reach us.

For example, like many people, I am somewhat nervous about flying in airplanes. This past summer, my wife and I had the opportunity to go to England — but this, naturally, involved a transatlantic flight. Thus, my anxiety level was already up a notch or two, when, just before boarding, I saw the name of the airplane printed in bold letters right under the pilot's window: Neptune's Chariot.

This sounded ominous to me. In Roman mythology, Neptune lived at the bottom of the sea. If this is Neptune's chariot, I thought, where is this plane planning to come

I was stewing about this when the pilot greeted us over the airplane loudspeaker system. He told us how long the flight would last, what our cruising altitude would be, and what weather we could expect along the way. All very rou-

But then he closed his announcement by saying something remarkable! "I just want to remind you of these words found in the Psalms: 'This is the day which the Lord has made, let us rejoice and be glad in it.'

It is hard to describe the force of these words upon me, coming so unexpectedly from a commercial pilot over an airplane loudspeaker. The cloud of apprehension which had hung over me all day lifted. I relaxed. Like a gift, a quiet sense of serenity and joy arose within me. I felt as if, wherever Neptune's chariot landed, we'd be ultimately fine, because we'd be in God's keeping.

At the time, this seemed like an unusual experience. But perhaps it wasn't. Maybe things like this are happening all the time, but without our notice. Is God seeking to challenge and guide us, console us and strengthen us more often that we realize?

The fall schedule is about to begin and many of us are already moving into frenetic overdrive again. In the midst of it all, may there be quiet moments of awareness in which we realize that God is here with us and He is giving us what we need today.

If I climb up to heaven, you are there;

If I make the grave my bed, you are there, also.

If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, Even there, your hand will lead me, and your right hand hold me fast.

The student is expected to present something more than information. Whether it be set out as the solution to a problem or an essay, it is essential to develop critical attitudes to facts, to learn to sift evidence, and to establish priorities. In other words, it is important to distinguish essentials from incidentals. Therefore, a tutorial is a meeting point of two kinds of critical activity - the student attempts visits to historic buildings and manor houses, suggesting various books on the subject and the artists. However, the burden fell on me to discover the books dealing with the various topics discussed in class. It did not involve just one or two books. My architectural class had eight students and my British art history class had five students. None of us could hide from the penetrating questions of the tutors. We had to scour the libraries and bookstores, do research and read. Is it any wonder that Oxford graduates are in such high demands?

HAVE A PLEASANT TRY AT PERFECTION BRIDGE BY WOODY BOYD THE PASTEBOARD PASTIME

For the better part of a year now I've played duplicate (usually club games) all over the Metro Detroit area with some wonderful Bridge enthusiasts. This has given me a wonderful opportunity, as an author and a lay player, to evaluate performance among partners and opponents. Player competence divides into roughly three groupings. I. The Expert, II. The Experienced, III. The Enthusiasts.

I sincerely hope today's column will be of value to the players below the Expert level. Each time I sit to play I see the joy, the enthusiasm and the determination you radiate for this game. That is stimulating and says much for Bridge and your own pleasurable welfare. I've also seen among many of you unusual card sense and considerable Bridge potential. For your own integrity, self confidence and desire to perform better, don't let these gift this skill power lay dor-

To the "Experienced" I appeal, don't let your rank stand in the way of advancement. The "Life Master Title" is richly rewarding hard-won honor, but don't let it bind you in the belief that you've reached the summit. There is no limit unless you've made one. Improvement can be experienced for years to come if there's dedication, desire and discipline.

To "The Enthusiast" I commend your study and play even though checkered with frustration.

To both groups I say, add a little know how to your study and play. An open mind, education and greater effort will help termendents.

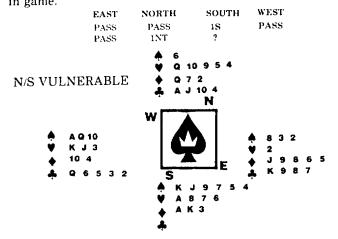

help tremendously. One of my most rewarding moments in Bridge is to sit with the experts and listen. Last time was a couple of years back in New York as I had been invited to join a few of the world's finest for dinner. One of the Bridge issues aired was competent performance versus mediocrity. The opinions these world masters expressed regarding these extremes of play were singular, significant and simple. 1. Most players aren't versed in the basic fundamentals.

- 2. Most players feel safe with systems that they don't understand or properly use.
 - 3. Most players don't count.
 - 4. Most players have little understanding of defense.

This is what the experts say about us. Jose Le Dentu, one of Europe's greatest added, "If a player wanted to take the trouble he could become an above average bidder in fifteen days, but to become a good player might take fifteen years. It all starts with counting."

Today's hand is a classic trap poorly trained players fall into — when to bid the second major! This is ticklish because South on today's hand wants to re-bid his six card major, which unfortunately will end the bidding, but you should suppress that desire in favor of two hearts which lands you

I kibitized four Souths at Don Curtice's Grosse Pointe game four weeks ago who bid two Spades. When the results were in, I learned that only three of the ten N/S pairs played a Heart game scoring 140.

If the South hand were five/four in the majors you wouldn't hesitate to bid two Hearts, and so you must over North's limit bid. You're strong enough and you must complete your hand's description.

for honor because of their achievements and contributions to society and/or their extraordinary power to sway opinion. The worlds of sport, entertainment, teaching, science and the professions - all have people who are esteemed as examples of what it is possible to achieve.

At this point in history, when people are living longer, more vigorous lives, many of them are anxious not to waste those precious added years. Later in their lives, they pursue interests or causes that they hope will make a difference in the world. They have previously been busy earning a living. Now they are ready to pursue goals they had long dreamed of.

Some people hold back because they think they are too old or haven't the energy or the talent.

What these people need for inspiration are examples of "elderheroes" who have either achieved success in a new field after retirement or have reached their stride in their own field in their later years, after attempt-

One that comes to mind is Anna Mary Robertson -Grandma Moses - a farm wife, untrained in art. She began painting in her 70s. With no formal training, she produced colorful, simple and carefree scenes of farm life and won recognition for her primitive American art.

Another is Mother Teresa. Even as a teenager, she had an early passion for missionary work. She entered a convent and was sent to Calcutta, where she taught for more than 20 years at St. Mary's High School, a bastion of privilege.

One night, she said she heard "a call within a call"—to leave the convent and help the people while living among them. She exchanged her habit for a white sari and took to the streets of Calcutta, barefoot. At 49, she I.

Henri Matisse, the great postimpressionist painter, had been a cultural revolutionary for 40 years. He reached a time in life when he could have rested on his laurels.

At the age of 66, he began painting again, continually refining and evolving his craft.

At the age of 71 he underwent an intestinal operation that left him bedridden. But he still kept going. He invented ingenious ways to create art. He had special easels made so that he could sit up in bed and work. When he could barely move, he used crayons and brushes tied to the ends of long bamboo poles to draw huge murals. Between the ages of 76 and 80, he produced six major illustrated books that included hundreds of paintings and he designed the now-famous Chapelle du Rosaire.

He worked until he died in 1964 at the age of 85.

Such stories of famous people can be matched by stories about people we have never heard of. For instance, Jacob Landers went to law school at age 67 after spending several years in education as a teacher, administra-interest lawyer in New York who gives voice and legal force to the elderly.

Bob Phelps worked as a journalist for 40 years at the Boston Globe. After retiring, he decided to become an actor. Not just a night-and-weekends-communitytheater actor, but a pro. He went to acting school, took his resume around to agents, got some small parts, did some commercials, dinner theater, summer stock. He made a new career.

Intellectual pursuits are not the only way to go. Many older people are into physical achievements. John Gurner, 72, has been pumping iron for 25 years and looks it.

consultant. He is now a public hang gliding at 72 and still stays up in the air for an hour at a time.

E.T. Smith, known as "Smitty the Jumper," was one of the seven members of the worldchampion sky-diving team. He was 87 when he made his 276th Ada Thomas took up running at 65 and is still competing in marathons at 72.

Stories of people like these are remarkable, but not unusual. There are millions of people in their seventh, eighth and even ninth decades who carry on with great vigor, agility, intensity and physical courage.

Elderheroes and elderheroines all are worthy role models.

Teen with cancer finds support

Why do I have cancer? Lasked God again today I don't believe he heard me, yet I asked him anyway.

The lines are from a poem written by 19-year-old Colleen Legumina of Sterling Heights. At age 11, Colleen was diagnosed as having a malignant tumor at the base of her brain. Doctors said she probably had r more than six months to live.

I have cancer, it's kind of sad to say But I'll fight, fight, fight. my battle all the way.

Colleen outlived the doctors predictions, using a tremendous arsenal of physical and spiritual strength to battle the cancer. "I went through it all - surgery, radiation treatments and chemotherapy," she said.

My struggle has been long now, seven years to the max. I've been sad, and I do cry. How very often I've wanted To give up and say goodbye.

Then, several years ago, Colleen's cancer went into remission. Today, Colleen is a happy, active teen. She juggles school, family and volunteer work at a nursing home. She is also busy planning her future-Colleen became engaged on Valentine's Day this year.

But for today I'll be happy and grin And I hope for the best in times still to come

"I have no idea why I'm still here," Colleen said, "but I'll probably be around until I'm 95 years old! I feel very certain that when I die, it will be of old age, not cancer.

Cancer is bad. I know this for a fact. But I'll win this battle. And keep on fighting back. Fortunately, Colleen did not fight her battle alone.

"I come from a family of fight ers; my sister has cystic fibrosis, and she's always been an inspiration to me.

Colleen also found support in another family - a group of her peers who have also been affected by cancer. She is a member of the Metro Detroit Teen Candlelighters, a support group devoted to helping teens cope with the difficulties that cancer group is led by Michael Me-Millan, Ph.D., child psychologist.

In their meetings, the Teen Candlelighters talk about normal teenage topics, but there is a difference.

"It's harder to find a boyfriend or girlfriend when you don't have any hair (from chemo treatments), Colleen said.

"Once you're back in school. the rumors fly about what was wrong with you and why you were out so long. Some of them are funny, but others aren't so amusing.

'Parents can be a hassle they get all hyped-up if you miss your medication. Sometimes they're too overprotective.'

"Being able to talk to other kids my age about our cancer has been a tremendous help. I know I'm not the only person in the world going through this," she said.

Grosse Pointe A Unique Community

A Cultural Cornucopia Appreciation of the arts begins at an early age for Grosse Pointe children. The public library, a division of the Grosse Pointe Public School System, offers, at no cost, a variety of children's reading programs at its three locations.

For adults, the library programs range from travel films to informative presentations on subjects of current interest. These, 100, are free to residents of all the Grosse Pointes.

Another great source of local culture is the beautiful War Memorial Center, the former mansion of the Russell A. Alger family. With its subsequently added ballroom and theater overlooking Lake St. Clair, the center is a community attraction that rivals the many private clubs in the area. Here—open to all residents—are offered art classes and exhibits, lectures, concerts, plays, ballet and social dancing instruction, and children's theater, as well as membership in a long list of special-interest clubs whose focus is either cultural, informative or just plain fun

A more recent addition to public property is the Edsel and Eleanor Ford House. Designed by architect Albert Kahn and supported by a $15 million endowment, this gracious replica of an English manor house is now open for tours and is used for meetings, fund-raising events and several series of "house" concerts.

Hard hat hard ball

A dream finally became a reality for Grosse Pointe's Bill Harrington, but over the course of the last six months he's been living a nightmare.

Harrington, who started Genesus Marketing Inc., a fiveperson enterprise in Southfield just 24 months ago, is being sued by Sears for copyright infringement.

Sears, feeling threatened by Harrington's ingenuity, creativ ity and business mind, doesn't seem to appreciate a man's ability to compete on a national level with a hot sports item.

Harrington formed his company with the intent of taking an industrial safety hard hat and graphically enhancing it to resemble a college football helmet. The product is marketed to college football fans, and he's also moved into the NASCAR racing scene with a line of hats.

What's wrong?

The problem: Harrington's hats are called "The ORIGI-NAL DieHard Hat" for the real die-hard fan.

Sears contends that this infringes on the name of their 12volt car battery. Harrington's hats are simply a play on words, not an attempt to ride the shirt tail of the Sears Die Hard battery.

Two years ago, I first became acquainted with Harrington when he mailed me a picture of the Big Ten hats he designed. Being a die-hard sports fan, I realized this idea would catch fire. Since then, Harrington's business has grown, but to Sears' dismay.

Die-hard is a common phrase tagged to sports people. It's synonymous with hard-core and fanatic; just the kind of people Harrington wants to target.

Oddly enough, Harrington's first job was with Sears. Now, however, he's elected to send his Sears credit card back and sever all his ties with the corporate giant.

Cash flow

In 1988 Genesus Marketing recorded revenues of $78,000. and Sears tipped the $30 billion mark. Harrington's revenue is pocket change for Sears.

I would think Sears has better things to do. I don't understand copyright laws, but I can surely think Sears could focus its efforts on the threats of J.C. Penney, Dayton Hudson and K

More money

This endeavor to sue Harrington will be costly. Genesus Marketing doesn't have the financial resources for a court battle, and I'd believe the Sears stockholders would certainly rather invest in something else than a court matter.

Harrington tried to avert a suit, but Sears wouldn't let it die easy and Harrington must now defend his honor. Genesus Marketing Inc. is quickly becoming a reputable sports paraphernalia marketing group and without interference from Sears, it should continue its inevitable growth. However, if Sears launches a more energetic campaign, Harrington is prepared to go to the front line.

In the meantime, both companies bang on. Harrington is not out to harass Sears, nor does he want to be harassed. He just wants to continue following a dream that began with an ingenious idea to add to the already hectic and crowded world of sports paraphernalia.

Something with such flair and originality could surely dress up the competitive and sometimes drab world of sportswear. The ORIGINAL DieHard Hat is just the thing, too.

"We came out and wanted to keep the tempo slow and work on the clock," said Champine. "We did that for the most part, but in the second quarter we were having problems scoring."

Problem may be an understatement. However, Cormier's bucket with 1:03 ended the near seven-minute drought, and Stephanie Gore, who finished with six points, and Loeher added two-point baskets to extend North's halftime lead to 23-9.

The real story in the second quarter was South's Wysocki, who scored all five points, including three from the free throw Devil football team gets leg up on E.M.L.

By Rob Fulton Sports Editor

It was only the second game of the young football season, but it was perhaps the most important

Grosse Pointe South, who lost the Eastern Michigan League championship a year ago to Port Huron Northern, is now in the driver's seat to recapture the trophy after its narrow 13-12 win over the Huskies Sept. 9.

Although South has a great rivalry with North, this matchup has become the E.M.L. war.

South (1-1, 1-0) and Port Huron Northern have battled for the league title the past four years and with its first win of the season, South now owns a one-game advantage.

"This was a very big game from the league standpoint," said South coach Jon Rice. "This year there are only seven teams in the league, so that means you have only six league games. By winning this one, we get a leg up and with five league games left it means that everyone's got to be chasing us. Let me assure you that they will be (shooting for us), too.'

South literally got a leg up, compliments of senior kicker Jason Weissert.

Weissert, who booted a seasonrecord five field goals last season, moved within one of South's career mark (8) with field goals of 21 and 40 yards.

His first boot gave South a slim 3.0 lead at the intermission. "We had been executing our defense pretty well," said Rice, "but our offense wasn't executcause of their quick defense.

Port Huron Northern, who had crushed Marysville the week before, was small on the front line, but what it lacked in size, it more than made up for in speed.

"We had a lot of problems with their speed," Rice said. "Their linebackers were also quick, and that made it tough for us to get going."

That's OK, because Weissert and the young defense, which gave up only 180 yards, were on

"Coming out we wanted to play good, sound defense," Rice said. "Northern runs a stretch offense and it's very explosive. We wanted to keep them in check and off the scoreboard.'

Linebacker Kelly Graves led South with 10 tackles, while Frank Voelker had six tackles, wide. including a sack, and Jason Bedsworth had eight tackles. Dane Lupo intercepted a pass on the game's final play. The Husky defense geared on South fullback Mike Montagne, holding him to 46 yards on 21 carries, but they couldn't keep receiver Jim West and quarterback Brian Letscher, who completed seven passes for 88 yards, from hooking up in the third quarter. Up 6-0 on Weissert's leg, South gambled on a fourth-andsix play in the third quarter. The gamble paid off, though, as Letscher and West, who caught three passes for 58 yards, connected for a touchdown of 38 yards. Weissert added the extra point, his seventh point on the West also had a fine day with 122 all-purpose yards.

"Coming out in the second half, we consider the game a 0-0 tie," said Rice, whose Blue Devils led 3-0. "We still had a lot of work to do to keep them off the board. Even when Jim scored on the pass, it was a long way from South led 13-0 at the end of three quarters, but had to survive a grueling fourth quarter.

"We had been stopping the pass all day, and we were having troubles with the fullback up the middle," said defensive coordinator Russ Hepner. "We couldn't all of a sudden say, 'OK, let's go and stop the run, and forget about the pass.'

"I didn't want to get beat on the boot and big passes that Port Huron Northern beat Marysville on the week before," Hepner continued. "Against Marysville, they struck very quickly with the big pass play, and I didn't want that to happen to us."

Well, it did, but on the ground.

Northern hit paydirt on a 20yard pass from Dan Larison to Greg Clark with 10:03 to play,

Marty Wayman had seven, but the extra-point attempt was

South, still leading 13-6, took over after the Northern on-side kick was unsuccessful and drove to the Husky 35. South's drive stalled and Northern took over with five minutes to play.

"I had visions of them doing it to us," admitted Hepner. "They drove about 60 yards in three plays against Marysville with that potent offense, so I just told the defense to maintain its intensity. We did that, but we continued to have trouble with the run up the middle.'

And one pass that kept the drive alive.

Northern capped its four-play 65-yard drive when Brian Hanton banged in from the 15.

Down 13-12, Northern went for the two-point conversion with a trick halfback pass. However, South linebacker Durmon Coates rushed the passer and the ball was dropped in the end zone, giving South the 13-12 win.

"What a game," said Rice. "This is the way these games with Northern always are, but that's what makes football so exciting.'

Tennis

Kathy Nault and Beth Bonanni led the way for South as the tennis team collected 13 second-place points at the University Liggett School Invitational Sept. 9.

Nault and Bonanni won the No. 3 doubles championship, as did the No. 4 doubles team of Erin Tusa and Carolyn Begg.

Earlier in the week, South manhandled Eastern Michigan League foes Port Huron (6-1) and L'Anse Creuse (7-0), to start the season with a 2.0 record.

Soccer

Coach John Case's Blue Devils are on a tear.

With three straight shutouts and 20 goals, the South soccer team is showing signs of a powerful offense.

Behind Chad Schomaker's three goals and Tony DeLuca's hat trick, South shelled Mount Clemens, 10-0, in the season opener. In that win, which was shared by goalies Jim Pappas and Don Pata, Jason Dritsan and Jamie Mertz added two goals each. Paul Wasinger dished out four assists, while Dave Birnbryer, Chris Paul and Christoff Schilling had one each.

Schomaker and Birnbryer tallied for South in a 2-0 win over Clawson, and DeLuca had two assists.

Although the Norsemen offense, which compiled 227 total yards, was on the field more than its defense in the first half, interceptions, kept the Ramblers in reach.

"The defense played very well," said Sumbera. "I expected us to play well against the run, but we still have to work on the pass coverage. Maybe the five interceptions are a sign that we are improving."

Marc Adams, who returned his second interception of the game 27 yards for North's final score, and Ed Barbieri, Stumb and Tim Meinig combined for the five pickoffs.

"There's no question the defense kept us in the game," Sumbera said. "Offensivley, we came out strong, but we proved that we were our own worst enemy with all the penalties. I was disappointed in our poise.'

"It was a fourth-and-one play," recalled Sumbera, "and we were in our goal-line defense and man-to-man coverage. The game was in control, but we got caught and they snuck one in on

The half ended with North trailing 7.0, but a rejuvenated offense and Stumb made the difference in the second half.

"We sputtered through the first half, and we weren't about to let it happen again in the second half," Sumbera said. "We came out and wanted to pound the ball with Ford, and we wanted to control the line of scrimmage.

Ford finished with 103 yards on 17 carries.

The flag, and North's Leo Salvaggio (11 tackles) were Fraser's problems on its second series of the second half. After taking the ball to North's 30, the Ramblers were hit for a loss by Salvaggio, stuck with a penalty and then forced to pass - right into Stumb's hands.

"Charlie's play was the key," Sumbera said. "In a tight game you're looking for a big play and we got it. He goes 52 yards and we're right back in the game.'

Angelo Gritsas, who was 3-for-3 in extra points, added the conversion to tie the score, 7-7.

"After that it was all North." said Sumbera. "That just seemed to crush Fraser and lift us. After that our momentum was tremendous.

On its next series, North's offensive line dominated the trenches and moved the ball 85 yards in 15 plays, culminating in Scott Bernhardt's 9-yard scoring strike to Stumb, giving North a 14-7 lead.

Bernhardt finished with 51 yards on seven completions. North had 176 yards rushing.

Bayview duo wins Scherer trophy

Bayview Yacht Club's Mike Uznis and Gretchen Uznis combined their sailing skills and savvy to become the first brother-sister team to capture the J. Otto Scherer Memorial Trophy, the culmination of the season for the top Detroit River Yachting Association sailors.

The Uznis duo dominated the eight-boat fleet of Flying Junior sloops with two first places and a second in the three-race series held Aug. 27 at the Crescent Sail Yacht Club.

Crescent's top finishers Sarah Deeds with brother Paul Deeds as crew also made the series a family affair. The Deeds locked up second place overall with two seconds and a fifth-place finish.

Stu Gooden and Brad Kimmel of Bayview rounded out the top three spots, one point behind the Deeds team, with two third places and a fourth.

Fourth place overall went to Adam Lowry and his crew Kira Christian sailing for Crescent. Mike Hendrie and Chris Jeffries of the Grosse Pointe Yacht Club took fifth overall.

The Grosse Pointe Yacht Club team of Sunny Swarthout and Matt Wenzler (crew) finished sixth, while Eric Ryan and Missy Bania, also flying the G.P.Y.C. burgee, were seventh. Eighth place went to Tom Line and Becky Mason, representing the North Star Sail Club.

Mrs. J. Otto Scherer, formerly of Grosse Pointe, journeyed from Ada, Mich. to present the trophies and congratulate all of the participants.

"Being able to enjoy the sport of sailing makes you all winners," said Scherer to the partici-

"The personal time and energy so graciously given by Commodore and Mrs. Mainwaring, and their dedicated race committees over all these years is a truly generous tribute to my husband and means a great deal to both me and my family," said Mrs. Scherer.

The annual sailing event honors the late J. Otto Scherer of the Park for his efforts and dedication in establishing the D.R.Y.A. junior sailing program now available to area young people between the ages of 12 and
