

Young are breeding ground for seeds of environmental action

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

Roger McCaig, director of Research and Development for Grosse Pointe schools, is proud of the schools' students and teachers for the way they are taking the Earth's environment under their wing.

During the annual achievement testing at the end of last year some 30 percent of all seventh and eighth grade students chose the topic "Ways in which ordinary people destroy the environment." What made the choice unusual was that the students were in an English class, writing eloquently and knowledgeably about the environment.

"It's one thing if you're in a science or social studies class and you told the kids this is your test," McCaig said. "But when you do it in an English class, it shows the students have internalized the extent of the problem."

He said that the test format was impromptu, not allowing the students much time to think about the subject, which shows him students are thinking about the environment at great length.

In studying the students' responses, McCaig found them to be "nothing short of amazing." He outlined his findings in a letter of praise to the middle school science, social studies and English teachers:

- There was not a single instance of a confused or misunderstood concept;
- The use of vocabulary and terminology was correct and impressive;
- The repetition of common themes, concepts, and facts in the writing clearly tells a story of quality teaching, not the random knowledge acquired out of school;
- Most students expressed themselves with a sense of commitment, involvement, intensity concern and determination.

Terms like greenhouse effect, chlorofluorocarbons, deforestation and ozone layer were used with knowledge and insight, while problems like soil erosion, poisoning of ground water and fumes from incinerators were discussed.

"That's impressive for 13- and 14-year old kids," he said.

Recycling, boycotting fast food companies which use foam packaging and electing leaders who support the environment are high on the students' list of do's.

"It won't matter how beautiful your new dining room table straight from the Brazilian rain forest is," one student wrote.

"You won't be around to enjoy it."

Another asked: "Would you knowingly endanger the lives of your children and grandchildren? Will you just say 'Sorry, I was too lazy to save you?'"

Another said if we don't care about the environment we will live in "a world where the average global temperature will climb toward 100 degrees, which is covered with garbage and which is bombarded by ultraviolet rays seeping through what's left of the ozone layer."

One hopeful youngster said "we can save ourselves by saving Earth."

"I'm tremendously impressed," said Fran Schonenberg, president of Citizens for Recycling. "I'm tremendously encouraged, too, because our organization has worked hard to get this message out."

She said the group discovered that the level of understanding of the problem is very high in the Pointes and Harper Woods and that people are committed to helping the environment.

"Spreading education, reflecting the educational level and taking it another step forward is

After delivering a numbing blow to Detroit's plans to expand City Airport, a Grosse Pointe-Harper Woods committee is recommending hiring more consultants to line up ammunition for killing the project.

On Sept. 27, the Grosse Pointes-Harper Woods Airport Study Committee released a report by former Transportation Secretary James Burnley IV that revealed serious flaws in Detroit's proposed $501 million expansion of the airport at Gratiot and Conner.

Armed with the knowledge that the Detroit proposal is vulnerable, the ad-hoc study committee is recommending that the involved cities further retain Burnley at a cost not to exceed $300,000 to gather evidence that will further weaken Detroit's position.

As the first to meet since the committee decided Oct. 2 to continue the fight, the Grosse Pointe Park City Council unanimously approved the committee's recommendations Monday night.

At Burnley's recommendation, the committee is recommending that Burnley be retained to prepare a rebuttal to Detroit's master plan for the airport and that environmental and aeronautics experts be hired to find "areas where facts are incorrectly stated or stated in such a way as to be misinterpreted with whom they are filed."

The experts are also to "develop additional facts that will persuade (the various) agencies

While the initial report was superb, the affected cities cannot sit back. Time is short and quick action is necessary.

Park councilman to conclude that City Airport should not be expanded as proposed . . ."

The committee resolution also recommends that a local law firm be retained to coordinate efforts with those of Burnley's Washington, D.C., firm of Shaw, Pittman, Potts & Trowbridge.

While the Park council quickly approved the committee's recommendations and the expectation of added expenditures, some council members pointed out that there may be one city in the Grosse Pointes and Harper Woods that may be unwilling to continue contributing financially to the fight against the airport expansion. The council members, however, were careful not to indicate which city may balk at the committee's recommendations.

For the initial hiring of Burnley for preparing his preliminary report, the five Grosse Pointes and Harper Woods split the approximate $25,000 cost.

The Park council indicated concern that if a city or cities refused to go along with the committee's $300,000 recommendation, then the Park would be required to foot a larger share of the battle against City Airport expansion.

Mayor Palmer Heenan, however, indicated unwillingness to mandate the battle be restricted to an all-or-nothing basis as far as the cities participating. The council then adopted the committee's recommendations subject to the city manager negotiating an equitable formula for paying the additional costs.

The city manager must come again before the council with a recommendation before the Park is committed to the additional costs.

Representatives of the Airport Study Committee will be appearing before the councils of the other Grosse Pointes, Harper Woods, Warren and the Macomb County Board of Commissioners

Pointer of Interest

Ewa Bielski

By Pat Paholsky
Editor

Ewa Bielski is a classic example of the resilience of the human spirit.

A war child touched by horror and tragedy, the Farms resident says, "I want to live as much as I can. That's why I'm always so enthusiastic."

Her life is the stuff of books and movies and she runs through it in five minutes, more eager to talk about today and a little about her dreams for tomorrow.

She was born in Buenos Aires, Argentina, where her father, Mieczyslaw Budek, a Polish diplomat, was stationed. When the war began in 1939, the family moved back to Krakow where her father joined the Polish army.

Her mother was taken to Auschwitz where she died in the crematorium. Her mother's only crime, Bielski said, was that she was the wife of a Polish diplomat.

Bielski was taken to a forced labor camp in Czechoslovakia. When the war ended, she returned to Poland and was reunited with her two older brothers. They learned that their father, who had been taken prisoner, survived and was living in Germany.

The three made plans to join their father, but since the borders were closed, they decided to leave one at a time, increasing the chance of at least one of them succeeding. She escaped, one brother followed, but the other brother was caught.

Her father was working for a government agency in West Germany where she said she spent five wonderful years, meeting world figures like Gen. George Patton and Chancellor Konrad Adenauer. She went to school in Rehden and earned a liberal arts degree.

When Patton liberated her father's prison camp, he asked who, among the prisoners, could speak French, German and En-

Northeast Detroit group wants to secede, become sixth Pointe

By John Minnis
Assistant Editor

A sixth Pointe? That's what a group of six northeast Detroit neighborhoods would like to become.

But before they can secede from Detroit, they have to get the legislature to allow the separation or at least allow them to vote on it.

The area they are talking about borders Grosse Pointe Park, City and Farms on Mack from Balfour to Kingsville, where it shares a border with Harper Woods.

"I'm personally against breaking up the city of Detroit," said Douglas R. Allor, chairman of the Committee to Incorporate the City of East Pointe. "The point is we want to do something to protect our homes and our families. We no longer have a choice."

"Loyalty to the city ends where our loyalty to family and neighborhood starts."

Along with fellow Harvard resident David Richie, Allor cruises the five square miles that they hope will become the city of East Pointe. While there are some boarded-up houses and rundown or vacant businesses, the area still contains a majority of maintained homes and some commercial investment.

"This is the last bastion of decent community in Detroit." Allor said, "but crime and blight are chipping away."

Within blocks, Allor and Richie point out a more familiar Detroit that's creeping toward their neighborhoods: burnt and abandoned homes and buildings, brick and aluminum scavenged from houses and the few remaining businesses barred-up like small fortresses with employees hiding behind inch-thick Plexiglas.

"This is how close the blight is to us," said Richie, a Detroit firefighter for some 30 years. "If we don't stop it . . ." his voice trails off.

"This is being caused by the high crime rate," said Allor, who is running as the Republican 12th District state representative candidate against Democratic incumbent Curtis Hertel, though he said his candidacy and the secession are two different issues. "Very few haven't been robbed. They (residents and business owners) are moving out as fast as they can."

He added: "We must do something quickly to protect our homes and families. Crime statistics in our area are skyrocketing. We, on the eastern border of Detroit, live a life of contrasts.

"Our local residents and merchants are robbed on a regular basis, shootings have become common occurrences, drug dealers sell openly on the streets, urban blight has encroached on our doorsteps, our public schools are a disaster, and we live in the stolen-car capital of the world.

"Yet, just a few short blocks away, in the Grosse Pointes and Harper Woods, none of these problems exists.

"Our contention is 'Why aren't we as safe as the Pointes?'" "Basically, it's a sense of lawlessness over here."

Grosse Pointe News honored

The Grosse Pointe News was awarded third place in local news reporting in the 1990 Michigan Press Association Better Newspaper Contest.

John Minnis, assistant editor, was honored for his March 29 story on raw sewage flowing into Lake St. Clair from 13 locations along the Grosse Pointe shoreline. The front page story was accompanied by a map pinpointing the locations.

The contest was judged by members of the Wisconsin Newspaper Association. "It's amazing the story that turned up by reading the fine print," judges wrote. "Good reporting."

Participation in the contest — 137 newspapers or 48 percent of the membership — topped previous years and a record number of entries — 1,832 — were submitted.

Announcement of the winners is made in conjunction with National Newspaper Week, Oct. 7-13. The theme this year is "Free Press — Free People, More News — More Views."

Kelly, others seek limited constitutional convention

Sen. John Kelly, along with 16 other state senators, frustrated with what they feel are partisan bickering and special interest group efforts to influence school finance reform and property tax relief, has introduced a constitutional amendment to allow for a limited constitutional convention to deal with those thorny subjects.

"We've been working on property tax reform in the Legislature for a decade," Kelly said. "What I've found is that there is no lack of good ideas, but there is a lack of political will to act on those ideas."

Those ideas range from exempting seniors from paying the school portion of their taxes and for the state to make up that money, and to improve the system to be more equitable.

"The assessment process in Michigan has caused property taxes in Grosse Pointe to go through the roof and something has to be done," he said.

Series to highlight environment

Detroit Edison is underwriting "Race to Save the Planet," a Channel 56 documentary which discusses a number of environmental concerns and possible solutions.

The 10-part series began Oct. 7 and is produced by the Public Broadcasting System (PBS).

Each of the 10 hour-long episodes shows the relationships among seemingly different environmental problems.

The episodes are, in chronological order:

- The Environmental Revolution. A historical look at the relationship between humanity and environment.

- Only One Atmosphere. The impact of greenhouse warming.

- Do You Really Want to Live This Way? How contemporary lifestyles affect the environment.

- In the Name of Progress. Conflict between progress and environmental protection.

- Remnants of Eden. Balancing life's diversities with the needs of growing human populations.

- More for Less. Energy efficiency.

- Save the Earth, Feed the World. Rediscovering traditional farming practices.

- Waste Not, Want Not. Waste reduction and waste disposal.

- It Needs Political Decisions. Politics and the environment.

- Now or Never. Alternatives for saving the environment.

Senate Joint Resolution Y would amend Article XII of the Michigan Constitution to allow the voters to determine whether they wanted to reform only Article VIII which deals with education and Article IX which deals with finance and taxation.

By amending Article XII, which deals with amending and revising the constitution, a limited convention would be allowed for the first time ever, Kelly said.

If enacted, the proposal will be placed before the voters for approval in 1992, and if voters approve it, there will be a partisan election for delegates to the convention.

"If it doesn't pass, then the voters are saying that the current system is working," he said.

G.P. Woods residents pioneer recycling at curbside

By Dan Jarvis
Staff Writer

Environmentally conscious Woods residents no longer have to pack up glass, newspapers, cans and plastics and haul them off to the local recycling center.

As of Oct. 1, some 7,000 Woods households and commercial establishments were given the option of simply leaving their recyclables at the curb.

From there, the city's contracted garbage hauler, Efficient Sanitation Inc. of Fraser, takes them away to be recycled into new consumer products.

The initiation of Grosse Pointe's first full-blown curbside recycling program was announced Tuesday morning during a press conference at the Woods City Hall.

It marked the culmination of nearly two years of work by the citizen-based Grosse Pointe Citizens for Recycling, Woods city officials and scores of local residents from all five Pointes who pitched in to support local recycling efforts.

The Woods curbside recycling program, approved by the City Council at its May 7 meeting, requires all Woods residents to separate recyclables from their regular trash and place them in a recycling bin for curbside collection.

When the bins are filled and placed at the curb, Efficient Sanitation will then sort, store and market the recyclables.

During the week of Oct. 1, residents and businesses were given recycling bins along with a chart which illustrates how to prepare the materials for recycling.

"We decided to privatize our rubbish collection and offer curbside recycling because we want to reduce the amount of waste we send to our incinerator and comply with the mandatory state requirements for future reduction of solid waste disposal in landfills and incinerators," said Chester Petersen, Woods city administrator-clerk.

"We believe our residents understand that solid waste disposal is a serious problem and they are willing to participate in a recycling program.

"Recycling is an environmentally sound movement relevant to the times in which we live."

Sheila Osann, a government liaison with the Citizens for Recycling, said last summer the group sponsored a pilot curbside recycling program in the five Pointes and Harper Woods, giving approximately 600 residents in the six cities the opportunity to participate.

Of those municipalities, the Woods had the highest participation rate, 97 percent.

"The pilot program showed that the residents are willing to participate," Osann said.

"People know this is what we are going to have to do. You are always going to have landfills and incinerators. Now we are always going to have curbside recycling as part of an integrated solid waste management plan.

"As an officer with the Citizens for Recycling, I am urging that the other cities fall in line with the Woods and establish similar curbside recycling programs."

Jean Rice, Woods councilwoman, said education is the key to making the curbside recycling program work to its potential.

"Educating the residents is the key element in the success of this program. We have developed an aggressive educational program that will help the residents understand the environmental and economic needs of the program," Rice said.

In addition to an initial letter sent to residents early in September and educational material included in the recycling bins, a slide presentation on the recycling program will be available for various groups.

Also, the city's quarterly newsletter, Update, will feature information regarding the curbside recycling program.

Weekend at Pierce planned for parents, children

All Grosse Pointe parents and their seventh- and eighth-grade children will have an opportunity to spend a weekend together learning to communicate and understand one another better during a new program called Lifeline, being offered at Pierce Middle School on Friday and Saturday, Nov. 2-3.

The goal of the weekend is to bring parents and their middle school-aged children together in a different setting. They will meet together for large group presentations on subjects of mutual concern, such as peer pressure, self-esteem and communication skills.

These large groups will be followed by small group discussions, in which adolescents and parents meet separately with their peers to discuss feelings and concerns. All of these groups will be facilitated by trained professionals with many years of experience in working with adolescents and parents.

The program, which will begin at 6 p.m. Friday and end about 5:30 p.m. Saturday, is sponsored by the Grosse Pointe public schools, with assistance from a grant provided by the Wayne County Regional Education Services Agency.

Student participants will spend the night at the school, and parents will have the option of joining the "sleepover" portion of the program or going home and returning in time to begin the Saturday program with breakfast at 7:30 a.m.

Cost for the entire program, including three meals, is $40 per family (which would include one child and one or both parents).

The nature of the program will limit participation to approximately 50 parents and 50 children, therefore interested parents are encouraged not to wait until the Oct. 19 deadline, but to contact the principal's office at Pierce (343-2094), Brownell (343-2115), or Parcels (343-2104) middle schools as soon as possible to obtain registration forms and further details.

Park councilman promotes expansion of Metro Airport

By John Minnis
Assistant Editor

While much of Grosse Pointe's attention has been focused on blocking expansion of Detroit City Airport, one Park councilman is helping promote the proposed modernization of Metropolitan Airport.

Councilman James Robson warned last week that if the $100 million bond referendum for the airport is defeated in November, then aviation officials may look more favorably at Detroit City Airport expansion as a means to lessen the traffic load at Metro.

"My concern is that eastsiders in Grosse Pointe and Harper Woods don't know much about it," Robson said of the proposal for Metro Airport. "If expansion is blocked, then they will look more at Detroit City Airport."

The ballot language seeks permission for Wayne County to issue and sell up to $100 million in revenue bonds for the purpose of paying part of the cost of acquiring land, constructing runways and making other improvements at southeast Michigan's largest airport, at Interstate 94 and Middlebelt Road.

The bonds will be paid with Metropolitan Airport revenues, not county tax dollars.

Robson, as a member of the Committee for a Better Metro Airport and an elected official in the Park, believes the proposed expansion of the airport will be good for the Detroit area and the Grosse Pointes.

The bond revenues, if approved, will pay for completion of a new 3,500-space parking structure, flood control, preliminary design for a second cross-wind (east-west) runway and south vehicle access road, berms to block noise and the creation of a noise-control office.

A new cross-wind runway is needed because during certain weather conditions, all plane landings and takeoffs must be handled on the one existing east-west runway, causing long delays.

Parking is already overburdened at the airport, and the bond funds would be used to provide more spaces. An existing parking structure has been partially torn down and a new one is being built, but if the referendum is turned down, the county may not be able to complete the parking structure, according to Irma Clark, a spokeswoman for County Executive Edward H. McNamara.

Also, flood control, which is needed to prevent flooding of basements in Romulus and Taylor, is being tied in with the bond referendum funds.

The $100 million project, however, is just the beginning of what the county has in mind for the airport. Its $1-billion plan in the 1990s includes:

- A fourth north/south runway.
- A second cross-wind (east-west) runway.
- Additional ramps and taxi strips.
- A new, mile-long, mid-field terminal.
- Automatic train service between terminals.
- 75 new gates, in addition to the 85 existing gates, and

■ A south entrance off Eureka Road and Interstate 275.

In September, the Federal Aviation Administration awarded a $185 million grant to Wayne County for improvements at the airport. The grant will pay for the fourth north-south runway; construction of the second east-west (cross-wind) runway and necessary ramps, lighting and taxi-ways; and a tunnel for the south access road for vehicular traffic.

The federal grant along with the bond funds, if approved by voters, will pay for three out of four of the major projects in the $1-billion modernization plan. With the new cross-wind and parallel runways and south entrance completed, then the new, modern south terminal may be built.

Because the bonds for the improvements at Metro Airport are not paid off with tax dollars, the county normally does not have to seek voter approval before issuing them, as it has done many times in the past.

Approval is required this time, however, because a Dearborn group — Citizens Against Airport Noise — gathered some 20,000 petition signatures to force a bond referendum on the Nov. 6 ballot.

The Dearborn residents are opposed to the expansion because they believe it will make what they contend is the already-bad airplane noise even worse.

The county points out that the noise complaints began in November 1989 soon after the FAA changed flight patterns, forcing steeper take-offs and more resulting noise. The FAA agreed last month to re-evaluate last year's changes in flight patterns.

Also, McNamara told a congressional subcommittee Sept. 25 that the county is nearing completion of a plan to limit airplane noise, and he called on the Subcommittee on Aviation to come up with federal airport noise guidelines so that residents nationwide will be protected.

"I wouldn't wish our experience of the last five months on anyone," he said. "It could have been avoided."

School population up

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

The traditional count of students in school on the fourth Friday of the school year shows an increase in the number of students enrolled in Grosse Pointe schools.

The school population is 7,386, up 117 from last year. All the increase came at the elementary and middle school levels, making up for a drop at the high school level.

The total elementary school population is 3,466, up 109 students. Middle school enrollment is up 74 students to 1,586. High school enrollment is down 66 students to 2,334.

The annual count is generally used to determine state aid for each district. Because Grosse Pointe is an out-of-formula district, it receives no state aid, but the count is still important, Superintendent Ed Shine said.

"It's a benchmark to compare our population year to year," Shine said.

This marks the second straight year enrollment has increased.

"Our enrollment has turned around and our projections are that it will continue to rise," he said.

It is too early to tell whether that rise will cause the district to reopen Barnes School, which was closed several years ago. But Shine said before any school is reopened it would take a much larger increase in enrollment and a lot of study by the district and parents.

The district census which was recently finished will have to be watched to plan on how many new kindergarten students can be expected in the near future, Shine said.

The increase comes as no surprise, he said, and would not affect most of the site allocations made as part of the site budgeting process last year.

In fact, although one elementary school had 28 more students than projected last spring, the total elementary estimate was only 12 students off, or less than one half of one percent, Shine said.

Farms scholar hopes to kindle creative spirit in classes

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

Creativity and the creative process consume the mind of Grosse Pointe Farms resident Suzanne Scarfone.

Three classes she will teach this year through the Grosse Pointe Community Education Department deal with the themes, but in Scarfone's own creative way.

Scarfone has a Ph.D. in English literature from Wayne State University specializing in 19th and 20th century British authors. Always looking beyond the mundane, her dissertation compared the works of English romantic author William Wordsworth with English modern author Virginia Woolf.

"They were both overwhelmed with the way things are and it's fascinating to see how they formed a structure for their lives through writing," Scarfone said. "That's the basic idea, but it takes 700 pages to draw the comparison."

The 36-year-old Scarfone has taught at Wayne State University and at the Detroit College of Business ("I was their token arts professor," she says).

An award-winning poet, she is getting ready to put out a book of her poems, all on the themes of motherhood. It's a subject she should know something about. She and her husband Joe Longo have two children, Elizabeth, 6, and Adam, 2.

Her poetry was described by one poetry contest judge as having a "surreal domestic quality."

That's what one can expect when taking one of the classes Scarfone will offer this year, her first with Community Education.

Dr. George Eddington, head of Community Education, said he is constantly looking for new ways to appeal to new people and he hopes these classes will fit that bill.

Frankenstein: Get ready for Halloween

Suzanne Scarfone

fone takes a long look at Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley's classic horror novel "Frankenstein."

The story of the writing of the novel and the novelist are as interesting as the novel itself, she said.

The book was written as her part of a parlor game being played with her husband, poet Percy Bysshe Shelley and Lord Byron among others, to see who could come up with the most frightening ghost story.

Mary Shelley, who was born to early feminist Mary Wollstonecraft and political philosopher William Godwin, became consumed with the idea of a man creating a life only to abandon it. Whether that was how she felt because her own mother died giving birth to her is the subject of much discussion.

"Frankenstein" is an incredibly interesting novel," she said. "I look at it through the theories of child development, because the monster — although I don't like to call him that — is really a child.

"The themes of creation are abundant in the novel. The question is what moral responsibility must you take for something you created. Also, the theory of imagination and the creative process and how consuming they can be is a major part of the book."

While it's considered a horror story, there is much more to it than any Hollywood movie has shown.

"If you ask anyone, Frankenstein is the monster, but ultimately the real monster is Dr. Frankenstein," she said.

She uses films, many bad ones, to show how popular culture has changed the themes in the novel.

"What makes it so interesting is that it endures to this day," she said of the novel that was first published in 1816.

"Frankenstein: Get ready for Halloween" is offered for $7 on Tuesday, Oct. 23, from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. in Room 102 at Barnes School.

Virginia Woolf: Social Commentator for the '90s

Scarfone is not afraid of Virginia Woolf, and says there's no reason for others to fear this prominent author, a member of the legendary Bloomsbury Group of the 1920s and '30s.

With the use of Woolf's diaries, Scarfone will dissect Woolf's "To the Lighthouse," a central work in her writing.

Again, the theme is creativity. It tells the story of Mrs. Ramsey, the ideal creator, who makes sense of the chaotic moments in the lives of those around her. And it is the story of Lily Briscoe, a painter staying with Mrs. Ramsey, who cannot bring a painting she is working on to an end. Those who are enrolled are encouraged to read the book prior to the class.

"Woolf is still pertinent today, maybe even more so than when she first wrote," Scarfone said. "There is perhaps more of an interest in what a woman thinks now, and what makes a woman's visions unique, and what their sensibilities about life are."

"Virginia Woolf: Social Commentator for the '90s" is offered for $7 on Tuesday, Nov. 13, from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.

It's almost not enough time for Scarfone: "I could talk about her forever."

Fine Arts for Children: A Creative Approach

"My theory of teaching is taken from Rudolph Steiner, founder of the Waldorf School," she says. "He said 'Color is the soul of nature and the soul of the cosmos and we share in that soul when we experience color.'"

This art class for 4-6 year olds will use sound, color, music and movement to encourage students' creativity.

Scarfone says many schools tell the kids exactly what to draw and how it should look, ("Today, we will draw pictures of Bert and Ernie") which stifles creativity.

"It's a very different approach to art," she says. "I give them the power to show them that they have these amazing possibilities."

She knows her ideas work because they work on her daughter.

The three-week class is offered in three different sessions for $10.

Voters share blame for our deficit mess

At long last, the U.S. government now has a revised deficit-reduction plan in place, even though its details still must be worked out.

After approval by Congress and President Bush, the new plan ended the partial shutdown of the government over the Columbus Day weekend and promised to ease some of the pain of taxes and spending cut-backs that were responsible for the House defeat of the first deficit-reduction plan last week.

But the proposal leaves it up to the regular budget and tax-writing committees of Congress to produce the final version of a plan that still would require a $40 billion cut in the deficit this year and a $500 billion reduction over five years. The committees had complained bitterly over the bypassing of the regular budget process.

Yet the 179-254 vote by which a majority of the U.S. House of Representatives last week rejected the original deficit-reducing agreement devised by President Bush and congressional leaders will be long remembered as evidence of Congress' impotence in a time of crisis.

What the public saw was a group of legislators who appeared to be more interested in their own re-election than in the country's future. They appeared to be united against any and all budget revisions that would have had an impact on their own constituents.

Yet President Bush and congressional leaders had made it clear that everyone would have to share the burden of reducing the deficit. True, the agreement was not completely fair to all taxpayers alike but everyone also had agreed that no compromise could be regarded as perfect.

To date, much of the criticism for the debacle is being leveled at Congress and the president. And yet, in our view, an equal amount of criticism must be directed at all of us.

True, it was President Reagan who with his upbeat style first indicated that the country could grow its way out of the deficit simply by cutting taxes and offering other inducements for business and industrial expansion.

But we, the public, bought that idea even though George Bush, as a candidate in 1980, had aptly described it as the practice of "voodoo economics." During the Reagan presidency, we paid little attention to the government's ever-increasing red ink figures because, the White House told us, they weren't important.

Now George Bush and his advisers finally have decided that the nation must call a halt to its profligate ways. But when the president went on national TV to explain the need for action now, the nation apparently responded with a resounding avalanche of "no" votes.

We said "apparently" because we are not certain that the 8-to-1 or 10-to-1 margin of opposition expressed in letters and phone calls to Washington really reflected the views of the U.S. public about the proposed debt-reduction plan.

Instead, we suspect that much of the outpouring of opposition was promoted by special interests, such as the American Association of Retired Persons and business and other commercial organizations with their own political axes to grind.

However, the defeat suffered by the president and congressional leaders again raises a serious question about whether representative government is breaking down as a result of the tremendous influence of special interests that invest so heavily in all national campaigns in the expectation of reward at the legislative hopper.

But another question is raised by the continuation of divided government, with the Republicans occupying the White House and a Democratic majority controlling both houses of Congress, a circumstance that makes it so difficult to break legislative logjams.

In this case, the summit involving the president and congressional leaders was proposed to solve the impasse between the two parties. But the opposition arose not only for partisan reasons but also because House committee members had been denied their usual role in the budget and tax-writing process.

Even though the committees are under new deadlines to produce an acceptable agreement, we have no assurance that the differences between the two parties and between Congress and the president can be easily or quickly satisfied.

But we as voters cannot simply blame Washington for the recent debacle. Most of us must share the responsibility because we want the benefits and services of government without paying the costs. In this case, Congress reacted to public pressure until it realized the consequences and mended its ways.

Have enrollments stabilized?

While the fourth-Friday-in-September count in the Grosse Pointe public schools showed another overall increase this year, it still did not give a clear indication of the future school population trends.

That's because the increases of 117, bringing the population to 7,386, once again came at the elementary and middle school levels and yet were more than enough to offset the high school losses.

Superintendent Ed Shine reported that the enrollment clearly has turned around and projections are that it will continue to rise. But the earlier projection of 1,000 more students for 1994 now seems to be slightly high and will have to be modified, perhaps to no more than 7,900 in five years.

That's because the increases in elementary enrollment in recent years will take that long to work their way through both the middle schools and the high schools, according to Chris Fenton, assistant superintendent for business.

After the current "blip" caused by that elementary school surge passes, however, the schools will need to look carefully at what will happen to future enrollments.

At present, that outlook is for a slight drop in enrollment at the elementary school level. That prediction is based on the school census of last May showing a decline of 48 in the number of district children of less than 1 year of age through 4 compared with the numbers from the 1988 census.

But the 1990 figures require checking because in comparison with district census reports for 1988 they show a 12.8 percent decline in numbers of those 1 year of age, smaller declines for those less than 1 year old and those 3 and 4 years of age and yet a 13.3 increase for 2-year-olds.

Currently about 80 percent of the school age residents of the district attend the public schools but past recessions have prompted additional parents to shift their children from private schools to the non-tuition public institutions. And that could happen again.

All of which indicates that forecasting future school population figures is a risky business that must also be constantly under review as the school system seeks to match enrollment with school capacities and with the number of teachers and supervisors required.

In the past, school officials were burned by short-term school population explosions that were met by what some residents saw as excessive building programs. Nobody currently expects drastic enrollment shifts of that nature in the near future but past experience shows the board and administration have good reason to keep a wary eye on the census figures and the population projections.

Letters

To the Editor:
As a result of the recent controversy concerning the Auburn Hills megamall, I feel very frustrated and deeply concerned.

I am extremely disappointed in the ruling which went against granting a preliminary injunction on the megamall. In developing the land for the megamall, 16 acres of government protected wetlands will be destroyed.

Why is it that this megamall cannot be built in the vacant former Hudson's building downtown which would benefit Detroit? As a member of the future generation, we need to protect our environment, because if we don't, who will? The megamall may have won its first battle, but the war is most definitely not over.

Dress for success

To the Editor:
Recently various elementary schools have taken the initiative of advising parents regarding their upcoming selection of Halloween costumes. The recommendations offered encourage parents to use positive role models and urges parents to avoid perpetrators of victims of violence.

The initiative is commendable and will strengthen the resolve of many parents to instill healthy values in their children. Needless to say, each parent has to decide where to draw the line. Will pirates do? Will Superman do? The answers are not easy.

The initiative by the schools highlights the need for parents to re-think the costumes their children wear. The important point is that the decision not be released entirely to the children and their peer group.

Compost!

To the Editor:
Congratulations on your Oct. 4 article on how to compost. More and more Grosse Pointe residents are realizing that home composting is an economical and rewarding way to help the environment right in our own yards.

Many of us need a little personal help to get us started turning our leaves and yard waste into humus that will enrich our plants and trees. Grosse Pointe Community Education will offer a course designed just for beginning composters, from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Oct. 16, at Barnes School. Teaching it will be two lifelong gardeners and composters, John Woodhouse and Mary Lou Boresch, demonstrating how user-friendly composting is.

When we consider that 20 to 30 percent of Michigan's residential waste stream is yard waste, we realize that composting at home saves taxpayers even more money than having their cities collect and compost the material.

Our 'new' political cynicism

A recent Washington Post-ABC News survey showed that seven out of 10 respondents believed it was more important to "elect new people with fresh ideas" than to "keep experienced people in the House and Senate."

Results of the survey tend to support the theory that there is a growing public disillusionment with politics as usual and especially with career politicians. Additional evidence to support that theory was offered in Oklahoma's recent primary which approved an initiative that will limit state legislators to 12 years of service.

Oklahoma thus became the first state to impose such a requirement although two other states, California and Colorado, will seek to approve similar initiatives in the general election this fall. Both proposals are leading in public opinion polls.

Other political critics in two dozen states are also proposing to limit the terms of members of Congress, although that plan would require a constitutional amendment.

We really don't approve of such proposals because of the need for well-informed and experienced legislators in both Washington and Lansing to stand up against lobbyists and special interest groups and to counter the influence of professional staff people and agency bureaucrats, none of whom is elected.

However, we concede that in an era marked by distrust of government and politics such limitations are possible. And we don't forget the precedent of the 22nd Amendment, ratified in 1951, that prohibits any candidate from being elected president for more than two terms.

Not everyone buys the theory that the public is getting more cynical about politics and government, however. Richard Morin, director of polling for the Washington Post, recently urged that the public take a skeptical view about the supposed increase in cynicism.

To support his contention, he cites two pieces of evidence: the fact that 404 of the 405 House members running this year won their primary elections and major trend surveys which "strongly suggest" that Americans are far less cynical and alienated about politics than they were 10 years ago.

He contends, in fact, that the public has been suspicious of politics and government for decades, and probably for centuries, and so it is a mistake to find today's cynicism a new phenomenon.

In our view, however, it would be a mistake for politicians to underestimate the cynicism, distrust and suspicious voters feel about politicians, especially those who spend more time feathering their own nests than serving the public.

To Russia, with love

Russia. The land of Anna Karenina and Dr. Zhivago, of bearded, brooding poets and infinite stretches of frozen tundra. The land of czars and revolution. And today a land of uncertainty.

One of my dream trips is to cross the 11 time zones and experience the culture of the 100 nationalities that make up the U.S.S.R. Maybe someday. For now, we settled for three days in Moscow and three days in Leningrad.

Some of the pleasure of the trip was the eight months of planning and anticipation — taking "Russian for Travelers" at Grosse Pointe South and reading everything about the history and culture and current situation of the region that I could get my hands on. We were traveling on our own and we needed all the information we could get.

It paid off. At the ballet, I walked to the head of the line to retrieve my coat after the performance — one of the perks accorded those who rent opera glasses.

I could read signs and I impressed at least one frustrated American traveler at a candy display by showing her the Cyrillic spelling of chocolate.

Then there were the things we didn't know: Do not carry large denomination travelers' checks, because it's difficult to exchange them for American dollars. And nobody needs $100 worth of rubles, especially since most places take hard currency only.

Another thing we learned too late is that if you're going to take the midnight train to Leningrad — private sleepers, very romantic — brush your teeth and do whatever else that requires water before you board. Our car, at least, had no running water and the bathroom looked like it had never seen a drop either.

But all of these are the things that make a trip memorable. And it was that. The week felt like several weeks because we packed all the sightseeing and evening events that we could into our schedule. We had a guide years ago who said that foreign travel is for seeing and doing; sleeping is for when you get back home.

We knew what we were going to see and when, because our travel agent had booked all of our tours in advance.

What we didn't know was that we would have a private guide and driver for the tours. We accomplished in three hours what it would take a busload of people five hours to do. The best part was having our own guide and being able to ask questions, not only about the sights but about living conditions and politics.

We spent a day at the Kremlin which was a brilliant gemstone in the heart of a crumbling city. We saw two ballets that were so enchanting that my husband — who groaned when I reserved tickets — stayed awake and enjoyed both performances to boot. Sure surprised him.

We spent time on Arbat Street in Moscow, a pedestrian-only stretch filled with artists and their work and street vendors.

Residents call it the black market and I made a couple of good buys there and passed up some even better buys through my ignorance. I'm still kicking myself.

We saw a troupe of highly energetic folk dancers from the Caucasus mountains of Georgia, a Russian band that played British and American rock 'n' roll and a jazz band in a smoky basement nightclub, just like the States.

But it was Leningrad that captivated us. A city of 42 islands connected by bridges, it is incredibly beautiful. Our hotel was on the banks of the Baltic Sea from which we could see Finland.

The Hermitage Museum was one of the highlights of the trip, but I had no idea that it consisted of four palaces connected together nor did I realize the scope of its collection.

Our guide in Moscow was with us throughout our stay as was our guide in Leningrad, and by the second day, we were comfortable with each other.

One was a young married woman and the other a graduate student. They were both unsure of the future. One was buying whatever material goods she could and the other talked about her fears of a civil war.

There is a movement to rename Leningrad to Petersburg, which began as St. Petersburg, then became Petrograd before it was named after Lenin. We saw a statue of Lenin splashed with red paint.

The lines in Moscow were longer and there were more of them than in Leningrad. One guide told us that people in line generally don't know what is being sold.

She told us of standing in line only to discover when she finally got in the store that the item for sale was yarn. She doesn't knit, but she bought it, she explained, because it's psychological: There might be a shortage of yarn next week and there is a certain comfort in having something no longer available.

In this country, we read that the Soviet people are tired of the lines and the shortages and they want conditions to improve now. Our answer is that they should be patient, that change cannot occur overnight. Years of communism cannot be reversed quickly.

But consider this: A husband and wife must work. That's a fact. Then they have to stand in lines, sometimes for hours. There's little time after that for visiting friends and even if there is time, the guide said, there's no energy left for socializing. Think about doing this day after day after day. Easy for us to tell someone to be patient, isn't it?

Capitalistic ideas are catching on quickly. There are entrepreneurs who will stand in the long, long line of McDonald's in Moscow, buy a dozen hamburgers, then walk to the end of the line and sell them for a few rubles more.

And there were slot machines in both of our hotels. What was truly upsetting, however, was seeing MTV blaring in the bars. I believe this video network, so popular with our youth, is giving the youth of Moscow a skewed message of our country.

Some things we have to offer aren't worth a kopeck.

Electronic cottage industry growing

By Nancy Parmenter
Special Writer

Twelve million people live in America's electronic cottages.

In the time it took to type that sentence and send it over the phone wires, 3.8 more individuals joined them. By actual count.

Plus one. After a summer hiatus devoted to enhancing the creative outlook through judicious sunbathing on the balcony, I, too, have joined the ranks of home-based workers.

Starting today, I will write a weekly column of observations, conversations and opinions — my own and yours, for I hope for input from you, the readers.

There are a lot of reasons to hole up in an electronic cottage.

Some people are just plain square pegs. Some are the entrepreneurial type, some like to sleep late or they don't like the commute.

Whatever the rationale, working at home is a major trend. In fact, the 12 million computer jockeys represent only half of the entire group of home workers. It's estimated by people who count this sort of thing that there will be 31 million stay-at-home workers by the end of next year.

Liking to give trends a reasonable period to mature, I've been thinking about the electronic cottage for a couple of years.

Marc Green of the Park saw it coming even before I did. He read between the lines of a piece on the daily hustle and rush that I wrote a year ago in July. In sympathetic response, he wrote that his son had had similar feelings some time ago — and actually acted on them by giving up his job to tend a trap line in northern British Columbia.

"You mentioned Yellowknife as a possible solution to your longing for peace and quiet," Green wrote. "Some 17 years ago . . . my son was overwhelmed by feelings not unlike yours and . . . acquired a huge trap line and spent the winter months totally alone 150 miles north of the nearest town and totally dependent upon himself for his very survival against hunger and cold."

Over time, the trapper became an ecologist whose views were solicited by government and media, and he now spends more time writing and interviewing than he spends outdoors. And he misses it, his father says.

"Gone is the aching silence of the wilderness nights. Now he speaks of too much travel and too little time," Green wrote.

So Marc Green's son has gone around in a complete circle, finding that both lives offer their own satisfactions — and maybe that each life is even more fulfilling because of the contrast with the other. And that each life is missing an essential component that only the other life can provide.

The Greens, father and son, are right in heeding the siren song. When you hear the voices, you have to respond.

In my own small way, I obeyed the voice too. And now, I'm on my own, though not quite that far North.

The decision made, preparations began. But the actual building of this darn cottage is a pain in the neck.

I've got a monitor and keyboard (else all these words wouldn't be here). They're sitting on a card table with a long piece of plywood for a top, to provide room for the printer I haven't even shopped for yet.

Bob's been watching this electronic thing take shape and he's in awe. He thinks I possess the secrets of the universe.

He's a handyman. He builds dollhouses and furniture for lifesize people and racks to hang his hat collection on — and he has offered to build me a desk, with shelves and drawers and pullout things for my typewriter and a nice smooth top for my mouse. He also offered to install a phone line for my modem.

Now, installing a phone line is basically a piece of cake. You drill a hole in the wall, drop a chain down, find the end in the basement and attach the phone wires. Then you pull the whole thing up and hook up the jack. Voila!

There are only a few minor exceptions, all falling into the category of:

When your house is old and eccentric.

One thing that can be said about The Day Bob Installed The Phone Line is that we learned things about our house that we had never known before. In spite of it all, he chuckled when the day was over. But he didn't sleep a wink that night.

Recycling help

Jamie Loffredo of Grosse Pointe South High School and Debby Hartson of Our Lady Star of the Sea have formed a coalition of students who are committed to improving the environment and are doing something practical about it.

The students will pick up household recyclables and transport them to recycling centers.

Free. Loffredo is a member of South's Students Against Violations of the Environment (SAVE) and Hartson is a member of Star's Teens United For the Future (TUFF).

Loffredo said that many older people have collected a lot of stuff, but are either unable to transport it to a recycling center, or are unsure where to take it.

The students are looking for volunteers from Grosse Pointe North High School and University Liggett School too.

Homeless

Dottie and Ed Langs of Grosse Pointe Park have found Scooter.

The medium-sized black male dog has been living under their forsythia bushes for two years. He hadn't been home since Monday, Oct. 1.

"He's obviously been abused," Dottie Langs said, "because he's terrified of people. The neighbors take turns feeding him."

Langs said he's about 60 or 70 pounds, looks like a cross between a black lab and a border collie, has a long heavy black coat with a white chest and a gray muzzle.

"He had a routine that he followed every day. On Monday, the mailperson saw him at Bedford and Essex in the afternoon but he didn't come for food that night."

"We checked the pound, the Humane Society, the Anti-Cruelty Society and the dog catcher. Nobody had seen him."

Most of the neighbors know him, she said. He even has a girlfriend in the neighborhood.

She's worried too.

For a while Scooter had a bachelor friend who lived under the bushes with him, a beagle named Snoopy. Langs said Snoopy was much older and he disappeared last April. After the beagle was gone, Scooter became more friendly. The Langs even enticed him into their home about four weeks ago. But he wouldn't stay.

"He's a dog that belongs to a lot of people but is not owned by anybody."

Scooter was found just before press time on Tuesday, Oct. 9. He had rounded up a small pack of "new-found friends" and they were all settling in for the winter on some vacant property on Windmill Pointe Drive.

Scooter was limping. He was rounded up with the help of Dr. Lawrence Herzog of Grosse Pointe Park and a tranquilizer gun. He's recuperating at Herzog's office.

Three Pointe students named outstanding black achievers

Tabora T. Constantennia, Kristen A. Feemster and Melanie C. Robinson, all students at University Liggett School in Grosse Pointe Woods, were named semifinalists in the 27th annual National Achievement Scholarship Program for Outstanding Negro Students.

Approximately 90,000 black students from all parts of the country entered the 1991 competition by taking the 1989 Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test and requesting consideration in the achievement program.

Approximately 1,500 of those who took the test were named semifinalists who will vie for some 725 achievement scholarships to be awarded in 1991.

Cliff named national semifinalist

Brian Cliff of Grosse Pointe was among those seniors at the University of Detroit Jesuit High School and Academy named a semifinalist in the National Merit Scholarship competition.

To be a semifinalist distinguishes a student because it represents the top half of the top one percent of high school seniors in the United States taking the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test.

Farms police and Dr. Lawrence Herzog of the Grosse Pointe Animal Clinic rescue an eight-point, 250-pound buck from Lake St. Clair last Sunday.

The buck was happy to be released safe and unhurt at Algonac State Park.

Another deer rescued from Lake St. Clair

By John Minnis
Assistant Editor
Grosse Pointe Farms public safety Sgt. Otto Glanert is getting pretty good at deer rescue.

In August 1989, Glanert, fellow police officers, sheriff's deputies and the Humane Society rescued a 4-year-old doe from the lake at Pier Park. Last Sunday, Glanert and company successfully recovered an eight-point buck from the lake off Crescent Sail Club.

At 10:05 a.m., Farms police got a call from the club reporting one of its members was in his boat following a deer that was swimming about 200 yards out. Farms officers responded, as well as Dr. Lawrence Herzog of the Grosse Pointe Animal Clinic and someone from the Michigan Humane Society.

The Crescent Sail Club lent a couple of boats and some of its members and Farms officers began herding the buck to shore. They were able to get two lines on the deer, and close to shore, a line was secured from the beach at the club.

Herzog, who responds to most animal emergencies in the Pointes, was able to get the deer tranquilized, though it was still conscious. The animal was helped onto shore, where officers "hog-tied" it and got it into the Humane Society's van. For use as a stretcher, the Crescent Sail Club provided a folding banquet table.

"It sounds easy, but it wasn't," Glanert said. "It took two hours, and at times it really bucked."

With Herzog and a Farms officer playing nurse to the buck, the Humane Society van driver went to Belle Isle. But officials there refused to take the deer because they were not equipped to handle an animal as large as a white-tailed deer weighing 250 pounds.

At this point, the man from the Humane Society said he couldn't help out anymore, according to Glanert. Ironically, all was not lost because Belle Isle happened to be hosting an Anti-Cruelty walk-a-thon that day.

One of the participants volunteered his pickup truck, and Herzog and a Farms officer followed the truck up to Algonac State Park, where the buck was let free.

Glanert said the animal was unharmed and quite lively by the end of the ordeal.

Officials didn't know where the animal came from or where it was going. The police report listed the animal's address as a resident of the wilds, self-employed and with an unlisted phone number.

Glanert said it's important that the animal be captured while it's in the water, because if it came ashore in the Pointes, it could get hit by traffic, run through fences and injure itself and others. Deer have been known to run through picture windows of homes.

The officer was thankful for the help of the Crescent Sail Club, the Humane Society, Herzog and the unnamed walk-a-thon participant who took the animal to Algonac.

War Memorial plans military support program

The War Memorial announced plans to provide moral support to military personnel directly affected by the Persian Gulf crisis.

Mark Weber, War Memorial president, said the center will send letters, videotapes and issues of the Grosse Pointe News to residents in the armed forces, active or reserves, called to duty in response to a possible takeover of Saudi Arabia by Iraq's Saddam Hussein.

Outlining the program, Weber said the idea came up while trying to think of ways to lend moral support to both the military in the Persian Gulf and reservists who have been displaced due to the crisis.

At the War Memorial's 42nd annual meeting Oct. 4, Weber said the facility will continue its mission of honoring those in the community who serve in the U.S. armed forces.

Residents are asked to contact the War Memorial with the names and addresses of friends and relatives from Grosse Pointe who are directly affected by the crisis. A coupon is provided.

Besides letters and issues of the Grosse Pointe News, military personnel will be able to receive videotaped messages made by friends and relatives, possibly at Grosse Pointe Cable's local studios, Weber said.

"As an organization that honors those who have served in the armed forces, we want to do something to support those in the community who are affected by the conflict in the Persian Gulf."

As an example, Weber cited one local family directly affected: War Memorial attorney John Rickel, whose wife Christie serves as a reservist and was recently called away from her husband and 15-month-old son.

"We think there are many others from Grosse Pointe who've been called to duty and we would like to hear about them," Weber said.

If you know of someone serving in the Persian Gulf region or who has been called to active duty and relocated to a military base, complete and mail the attached coupon or contact Teri Hearn at the War Memorial at 881-7511 between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Monday Through Friday.

House passes zebra mussel bill

The U.S. House of Representatives passed H.R. 5390, the "Aquatic Nuisance Prevention and Control Act of 1990," which would provide measures for the prevention of further introduction of nuisance species, such as the zebra mussel, into the Great Lakes ecosystem.

The bill, written and introduced by Congressman Dennis Hertel (D-Harper Woods), seeks to control further infestation of the lakes by requiring the U.S. Coast Guard to issue voluntary ballast water control regulations for vessels entering the Great Lakes, as well as requiring the secretary of transportation to draft and enforce mandatory ballast water control measures for all such vessels.

The bill would also mandate a national study to determine the extent to which exotic species are posing problems elsewhere in the nation.

The zebra mussel has infested over two-thirds of the inland waters of the continental United States, disrupting coastal environments by competing with native organisms for food and other resources. This situation has created a negative impact on commercial and recreational fisheries, municipal and industrial water supplies, and shipping interests.

Curfew violators to face penalties

In the past, Detroit's "Devil's Night" curfew violators could count on a $50 fine or a parental reprimand. Not any more.

Under an amendment offered by state Sen. John Kelly (D-Detroit), and adopted by the Michigan Senate, young curfew violators will face a one-year suspension of their driver's licenses and in addition, be required to perform 60 days of community service helping to clean up those neighborhoods that suffer most from the malicious acts of young offenders. The 60 days will take up every available weekend of a school year.

Attic reaches goal

The Attic Theatre has successfully met its emergency fundraising goal of $500,000, according to Lavinia Moyer, artistic director of the theatre.

"In addition to the $500,000, another $100,000 has been raised in pledges that were contingent upon raising the entire emergency goal," Moyer said. "The final total for the campaign will be over $608,000.

"Funds to help erase the Attic's debt came from a variety of sources. Approximately $110,000 was contributed by more than 1,400 individuals — subscribers, donors and friends of the Attic Theatre. The business community came through with contributions, pledges, debt forgiveness or reductions, and in-kind contributions."

Moyer said that several new developments have been implemented to ensure continued growth for the theater.

These include four days of low-priced preview performances for all six shows, an extensive Guest Artist Series, and added personnel including a new business manager, marketing director, box office and theater staff.

Register for writers' conference

Final registrations are being taken for the 29th annual Writers' Conference, cosponsored by the Division of Continuing Education and Detroit Women Writers, Oct. 19-20, at Oakland University, Rochester.

Aspiring and professional writers can choose from 32 workshop sessions at the Oakland Center on Saturday and, at lunch, hear best-selling author Shannon O'Cork discuss "How to Write a Mystery." O'Cork's latest book, "The Murder of Muriel Lake," is a tale of death at a writers' conference.

Jeffrey Zaslow, of West Bloomfield, syndicated writer who replaced Ann Landers at the Chicago Sun-Times, will speak on "All That Jazz" at the Friday dinner at Meadow Brook Hall.

Deadlines and fees are: Friday dinner and cocktail reception, $39, Oct. 12; Saturday luncheon, $8, Oct. 12; and conference registration, Oct. 15. For a brochure, and to register, call 370-3120, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. weekdays.

Cub Scouting offers family opportunities

Cub Scouting is a family-oriented program that weaves lifetime values into exciting and challenging activities for boys from the first through the fifth grades, according to Robert Shoemaker, scout executive of the Detroit Area Council, Boy Scouts of America.

Boys begin their scouting experience as Tiger Cubs, a one-year program for first-graders. Each boy participates with a parent (or another adult family member) in activities ranging from family entertainment to preparing for emergencies.

From the second through the fifth grades (or ages 6 through 10), boys are eligible to join Cub Scouts. The home and neighborhood-centered program supports family life. Here a boy learns respect for home, God, country and other people.

Cub Scouting also provides the opportunity for boys to develop new physical skills through sports, crafts and games; to learn how to get along with others through group activities; to develop new mental skills, including an understanding of nature and the outdoors; and to achieve a sense of personal independence.

When a Cub Scout completes the third grade (or reaches the age of 10), he transfers to a Webelos den and begins preparing for his graduation from Cub Scouting into the Boy Scouts.

For more information about scouting, call the Detroit Area Council at 897-1965.

Getting off the tourist path and getting close to Bond Falls paid off handsomely for Nagler in this dramatic, almost romantic photograph.

Get off the tourist path

One of the most important ways to begin to make photographs rather than just take snapshots is to "get off the tourist path" both literally and figuratively.

Literally, it means getting away from touristy spots when you travel. By all means see the sights of Rome, but don't overlook that obscure, quaint marketplace where numerous photo opportunities are awaiting your camera.

Get off the tourist path by passing up scenic overlooks for more intimate views of nature and landscape. Hike down into that canyon or follow the path to the base of the waterfall. If you do, you'll be rewarded with photographs you ordinarily just can't get.

Figuratively, getting off the tourist path means involving yourself in your photography to the point where you do what's necessary to obtain a rapport or "one-on-one" relationship with your subject.

For example, if you enjoy photographing wildflowers, moss-covered logs, or mushrooms coating the forest floor, be prepared to get dirty. In other words, get on the ground, put your heart and mind into your photography, and just do it!

If you like photographing waterfalls as I do, be prepared to get a little wet. Don't stay back at the tourist overlook — rather get close for a much more dramatic view that will make a statement about the waterfall. The picture shown here was taken at Bond Falls in Michigan's Upper Peninsula. The impact of the photograph testifies as to how close I was to the actual falls. Getting off the tourist path also means shooting at the right time of day.

I made sure I was at the falls at the crack of dawn to take advantage of morning light and morning mist.

Getting off the tourist path means doing what it takes to get your photograph even in a potentially embarrassing situation. For instance, if it takes laying on the ground in front of a group of fellow travelers to get that worm's-eye view of a towering redwood tree — just do it! Don't be concerned what others may think.

Getting off the tourist path will pay you off with more meaningful, impact-filled photographs.

Pragmatic language is LDA topic

The Learning Disabilities Association of Grosse Pointe (formerly MACLD) will present a program by Dori Martinuzzi on "Pragmatic Language," Monday, Oct. 15, at 7:30 p.m. in the Grosse Pointe Central Library.

The term "pragmatics" refers to the nuances of languages — comprehending implied meanings, maintaining eye contact, appropriate social interaction, etc. Many learning disabled students have successfully mastered English language forms, and in a one-on-one situation may not be seen as language impaired.

But in group situations, or situations where idioms or figurative language is used, they are lost. If they have difficulty identifying or expressing emotions, they may act out those feelings inappropriately and be seen as behavior problems. Since these are problems which arise in group situations, small group or individual speech therapy is not particularly effective.

Martinuzzi is a speech and language therapist for the Grosse Pointe public schools, serving Trombly and Maire schools. Last year she began entering the LD II classroom at Trombly to provide language lessons in a larger group setting, approximating the settings where pragmatics normally break down in those children.

That approach was continued and developed further during the summer when Martinuzzi and Deb Sutherland offered a class called "Language in Action." Nine 4th-6th graders were guided through a variety of activities throughout the community and taught language skills not ordinarily covered in the classroom. Lessons included telephone skills, cooking, grocery shopping and going out to lunch, among others.

Martinuzzi will explain how subtle language problems can affect a child's development in other areas, and what schools and parents can do to help these children. She will share changes which have occurred in the teaching of speech and language in recent years, and new developments on the horizon. She will also answer questions and offer advice in parents' areas of concern.

LDA (MACLD) programs are open to the public at no charge. Refreshments will be served.

All that jazz

Pianist brings classic style to new generation

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

Bess Bonnier has been called Detroit's Empress of the Jazz Piano, a title she's earned through decades of performing, composing and teaching.

This year she'll combine those three aspects of her career as artist-in-residence at Grosse Pointe North High School.

Music department chairman Ben Walker said getting Bonnier to serve as artist-in-residence had a two-fold purpose.

"I'm always interested in exposing the kids to all different forms of art," Walker said. "I believe jazz is the least well known of all the art forms in Grosse Pointe. I saw it as an area where we needed to do something."

Bonnier will give individual consultation to students as well as general lectures and demonstrations for music appreciation classes and the North and South combined jazz band.

She will also perform in a major concert, and a coffee concert and will make her stage debut in a cameo role as the rehearsal pianist in the school's production of "42nd Street."

"There's been a real positive response from the kids," Walker said. "She's only been with us a short time and I'm amazed at how much they've been helped by her. We're auditioning '42nd Street' now, and I can see how free they're becoming. It's really amazing."

This is the second time Bonnier has served as artist-in-residence for the Grosse Pointe schools, the last time being in 1980. This time she hopes it will be for four years, the duration of the Michigan Council of the Arts grant which made the position possible. Money made from her performances will go back to fund the program. After this year, she will spend more time in other Grosse Pointe schools.

Bonnier has been playing piano since she was 10. Partially sighted, Bonnier's school required students in the Braille class to take one year of music in place of art. The classes brought out "that little drop of something in all kids" that allows creativity to breed in children. Once she made her professional debut, she was hooked.

"If you say 'professional' is the first time you play and get paid, then I was a professional at 13 when I was paid $2.50 to play one song," she remembers. "That got my mother and I part way home in a taxi."

In high school, she played with a dance band and learned the basics of jazz while studying classical music.

She has played all over Detroit, setting up home in places like Brokensha's which was devastated after the Detroit riots, working as she raised three children and teaching when she wasn't performing.

Also a composer, Bonnier is getting ready to print "The Bess Bonnier Songbook" and is having her music transcribed from Braille.

While not strictly a voice teacher, she is giving personal attention to three vocal students in addition to two piano students and a jazz trio.

"Those people who know their instrument, I am able to help," she said. "I give them the tools they will need — the jazz nomenclature for example. But given the nature of jazz they eventually have to jump in the water and be on their own."

It's not only the music classes which will receive help from Bonnier. She talked and performed recently to a humanities class, drawing parallels between her music and life.

"Jazz is a microcosm of life," she said. "It involves taking risks, taking a chance with yourself. You also have to keep your options open when you play, you have to be constantly thinking. If plan A doesn't work, go to plan B. You have to be a pragmatist. The students are learning that."

"I will have considered myself successful here if I can help just a few students understand jazz better."

Farms issues new procedures for leaf and brush collection

Because the City of Grosse Pointe Farms is taking steps to reduce the amount of solid waste entering the waste stream, the city has announced a new set of procedures for leaf collection by the department of public works.

As of Oct. 15, the city will require all Farms residents to place leaves in clear plastic bags, which are available at City Hall. Leaf bags must be kept apart from regular household refuse bags and must be placed on the curb on regular pickup days.

Brush and tree trimmings must be kept within four feet in length and will be picked up on regular pick-up days.

Performance to help blind children

Seedlings, a non-profit organization that provides low-cost braille books for blind children across the United States, will hold its fifth annual theatre benefit on Friday, Oct. 19, at the Baldwin Theatre in Royal Oak, at 415 S. Lafayette.

The evening will begin at 7 p.m. with coffee and dessert, followed by the Stagecrafters performance of "West Side Story" at 8 p.m.

The tickets are $20 ($10 of which is tax-deductible), and

More news, more views: everyone's 200 year legacy

This is National Newspaper Week, a good time to ask, "Who is the press, anyway?"

When it comes to the Bill of Rights it means all of us. When our founding fathers wrote the First Amendment to the Constitution they were intent on protecting the freedom of all Americans to speak and write as their conscience dictated, and they simply used the word "press" as a substitute for "write".

They were not attempting to create a privilege for newspaper editors. They were intent on protecting everyone's right to speak, write, worship, assemble, and demonstrate.

They understood—sometimes better than we understand—that to protect the rights of all of us, they had to protect the rights of each of us. No other country goes quite so far as America in protecting personal liberty. No other government has ever been willing to adopt a constitutional guarantee of personal liberty that is as absolute as our First Amendment.

Some people do abuse the right of free speech. Some publications do abuse the intent of free press guarantees. Some demonstrators go so far in abusing the right of protest that they burn flags.

But for 200 years we have been smart enough to realize that what we are protecting is more precious than the occasional abuse which we must tolerate. And for more than 200 years, we have been able to enjoy the benefits that a free press makes possible.

All across America today reporters, editors, advertising professionals, circulation managers, and production people are working to assemble information—vital information we need so we can make important decisions including what to buy and where to buy it, where to vote and who to vote for, where to work and who to work for, even when and where to speak up, write up, and demonstrate.

The theme for this National Newspaper Week is "Free Press-Free People; More News-More Views."

The dedication of tens of thousands of working newspapermen and women helps to enlighten and brighten our lives. Because of them, and because of you, America is a place where newspapers continue to provide "more news and more views."

State Fair recycling effort success

The 142-year-old Michigan State Fair's first attempt at recycling, coordinated by Wayne County, has been a success, according to Wayne County Executive Edward H. McNamara.

The fair, in cooperation with the county's Solid Waste Unit, processed 3,330 tin cans, 2,200 plastic containers, 150 glass bottles and 9,420 pounds of corrugated cardboard. As a result, the fair saved $2,823 in waste disposal costs.

The benefits of the State Fair's recovery system extended far beyond financial considerations according to Wayne County Resource Recovery Coordinator Les Vilcone, who organized this year's program.

"The 2,200 plastic containers recovered not only result in energy savings of 60 percent, but also contributes toward the conservation of a crucial resource — oil," Vilcone said.

"In addition," he added, "the project saved more than 70 trees and significantly reduced the amount of waste that was transported to landfills and distributed into the waste stream."

The Michigan State Fair recycling volunteers collected corrugated cardboard which was condensed and bound by a bailer on the fairgrounds. The project also served to educate fairgoers with brochures and displays of sample materials that can be produced by recycling plastics. An example is plastic wood, a substance which can be bolted together and will never rot.

The group hopes to require vendors at the 1991 fair to use and distribute only recyclable products. Importantly, Wayne County also has plans to provide a complete recycling center on the fair grounds so visitors can bring in recyclables from home in addition to depositing recyclables from fair purchases.

The reason the proposed East Pointe area isn't safe, according to Allor and Richie, is that the city of Detroit has failed to provide its most basic function: protection of its residents.

In fact, Allor, who is a retired research engineer/scientist, looked into the legal arguments for secession from Detroit. He points out that Detroit's charter states, "The city shall provide for the public peace and health and for the safety of persons and property in the city."

The East Pointe organizers' overriding theme is that the first and most important function of government is the protection of the people. And the city of Detroit has failed to protect its citizens and appears to be taking no steps to provide protection, they believe.

To force or persuade the state Legislature to take action on its request for its own Home Rule city, the East Pointe committee will be passing out petitions. Allor said he needs 7,000 signatures, but he plans to get 20,000.

The East Pointe area has 45,000 residents, including 21,000 registered voters. There are an estimated 700 to 900 small businesses, though Allor can't get a firm count because so many are leaving the area.

The East Pointe boundaries are Mack Avenue to the south; Balfour, Bedford and Hayes to the west; Kelly Road to the north; and Kingsville (two blocks above Moross) to the east.

Two lawyers are working with the East Pointe committee to write the petition language and charters for the new city and school district. The charter committee is planning on a mayor, vice mayor and eight councilmen, two at-large and six by wards representing the existing neighborhood groups.

A new 88-member public safety department would provide police and fire service. The school district would tentatively have a high school, a junior high and two elementary schools.

A preliminary city budget, based on Harper Woods' budget, indicates that the East Pointe residents will get added protection and services for less than the 30.6 mills they now pay to the city of Detroit.

Allor believes the legislature, as the body that creates city governments and their boundaries, has the power to detach the east-side communities from Detroit and create the municipality of East Pointe. If the Legislature is unwilling to do that, then the East Pointe committee would at least like its own residents to be allowed to vote on the matter — independent of all of Detroit.

When asked what their chances for success were, Richie estimated an optimistic 90 percent. Allor merely stated, "It depends on what lawyers you talk to."

"We're not making an unreasonable request," said Richie, who as a city employee may face retaliation for his secession efforts. "We just want to be safe."

"It's survival. There's a lot of other things I'd rather do, but it's either this or move out of the city."

Airport

during the next few weeks seeking their approval of the committee's recommendations and commitment to cover the costs.

The cities are buoyed by Burnley's initial report that found that based on his experience as head of the federal Department of Transportation for six years, the city of Detroit is over-optimistic in its expectations of receiving some $342 million in Federal Aviation Administration grants during the three phases of the proposed $501 million airport expansion.

He pointed out that the FAA's largest grant to date was $351 million for Denver's new $2 billion airport. Furthermore, Detroit Metropolitan Airport, which is planning a $1 billion expansion and modernization, is expecting FAA grants totaling $185 million — half as much as City Airport although Metro will cost twice as much.

Burnley also pointed out that Detroit's environmental impact statement for City Airport is inadequate, that pollution concerns have not been fully investigated and that noise issues have not even been addressed.

Presumably, the aeronautics and environmental experts to be hired will delve deeper into the pollution and noise issues.

Councilman Daniel Clark pointed out that while Burnley's initial report was superb, the affected cities cannot sit back. Time is short and quick action is necessary, he said.

glish. Each time, Bielski said, her father raised his hand. "He was one of the few lawyers who could try cases in five languages," she said. He became Patton's personal adjutant and translator.

Immigration for displaced persons was ending in 1950 and the family had to decide whether to remain in Germany or leave. Her father had remarried and he decided to stay. Her brother went back to Poland and Bielski decided to emigrate to America.

She secured a sponsor, a couple in Massachusetts who wanted someone to care for their expected child. It took a year to process her papers before she was on her way, alone and unable to speak English.

When she arrived at the railroad station in Worcester, Mass., however, she learned that her sponsors no longer needed her. She spent the night at the station, waiting for someone to help her.

"The next day, a lady from the refugee committee picked me up," Bielski said. She was sent to Chicago where she had friends from her student days. She worked at all kinds of odd jobs, learning the language. "It took almost five years to get the level of the language," she said.

A family in Cleveland who knew her father took her in.

Blood drive

The Grosse Pointe Community Blood Council will hold a blood drive Thursday, Oct. 18, at Grosse Pointe Memorial Church, 16 Lakeshore, from 2 to 8 p.m.

Appointments are appreciated, but walk-ins are welcome. For more information, call 885-3609.

Remember that when you give blood, you give another birthday, another anniversary, another day at the beach, another night under the stars, another talk with a friend, another laugh, another hug, another chance.

"They nurtured me back to where I lost some of my fear," she said.

From there, she ran into the man from the American Consulate in Germany who had helped her emigrate. His name was George Bielski and he was working in Detroit. They were married.

In 1955 they moved to Grosse Pointe Farms and had two sons. Christopher Andre, 30, is married and has two children, and Andre Christopher, 20, attends Wayne State University.

Bielski went to work for J.L. Hudson's, doing various jobs for the first five years. Then for 15 years, she was a buyer, starting out in handkerchiefs and then children's and later, teen's clothing.

She finally became a buyer for the St. Clair Shops, traveling to Hong Kong, Israel, the Far East, Europe, Japan and Singapore as well as New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

"I loved it," she said. "Trend-capturing was my specialty and I somehow could foresee what would sell."

Her father, in the meantime, emigrated to the United States, accepting a job as a gardener for a family in the East. When it was discovered who he was, Bielski said, he was offered a position at Harvard, where he taught international law until he died in 1979.

The same year Bielski lost her job at Hudson's and looked around for something to do. She began her own company, Perfect Closet, over the objections of her family. The idea, new at the time, was to organize space in bedrooms, kitchens, storage areas, workrooms and businesses.

"I'm an organizer," Bielski said. "All my life I wanted to organize the world."

Today, her oldest son is in the business and the other son will be joining the company.

She feels her retail background of setting up thousands of units on a floor has given her the edge over her competition, which is now proliferating rapidly.

"My business is based differently," she said. "I don't just build a closet, but I arrange everything in it."

Bielski spends time talking to each customer. "I want to understand the beat of the client. Closets are very personal things."

Everything is measured and then cut to order at her shop. The installers bring it in and put it together "like a puzzle," so there's no mess on the premises. And everything is put back and arranged according to the person's lifestyle, Bielski said. Her company can do a complete house in one day, she said.

She'll organize garages, studios, doctor's offices, "any place where they have a need to get a hold of their mess," she said.

"I don't believe I would have been as successful if the community wasn't as wonderful as they are," Bielski said. "Grosse Pointe has been so supportive."

Her client scrapbook reads like a who's who of the metropolitan area, with signed photos and letters. Her business number is 885-3587.

Her husband died three years ago and now, in her spare time, Bielski reads and enjoys bicycling and going to the theater. She once taught a cooking class. "I baked some lovely tortes and I invented pressure cooking, where you spend three hours in the kitchen once a week and have meals for the rest of the week."

And she has her dreams. She went back to Poland with her son in January. It was a magnificent experience, she said, to see it free after 45 years.

"I think I'm going to live forever," she said with a laugh, "so I might start something over there."

"I've learned that life is such a precious thing. I learned you should plan forever but live every day as if it's your last one. You will find your enthusiasm and nothing will shake it."

Youth

what we try to do," she said. "It seems to be working."

Indeed it is. Grosse Pointe South High School has an organization called Students Against Violations of the Environment (SAVE) and Our Lady Star of the Sea High School boasts TUFF, Teens United For the Future, and University Liggett School has several classes involved in environmental projects.

The theme for Grosse Pointe North High School's Homecoming parade last week was "Save the Planet," and while they don't have an organized group yet, classes participate in environmental protection projects.

McCaig is pleased. "The more students we have developing these attitudes, the more hope there is for the next generation," he said.

Ruffner named scouting chairman

Grosse Pointe resident Peter Ruffner has been chosen to serve as the Detroit chairman for the 1990 Year of the Eagle celebration being sponsored by the Boy Scouts of America.

Ruffner, who earned his Eagle Scout badge in Troop 250, chartered by Christ United Methodist Church (Warren and Haverhill), said the Year of the Eagle will spotlight scouting's flagship rank. He added that noted Eagle Scouts include former President Gerald R. Ford; Apollo astronaut Neil A. Armstrong and James Lovell, Jr.; Dr. William C. DeVries, who transplanted the first artificial heart; Texas businessman H. Ross Perot; J. Willard Marriott Jr., president of the Marriott Corp.; and film producer and director Steven Spielberg. Eight current U.S. senators, 24 representatives and three governors are also Eagle Scouts.

"Since the first Eagle Scout ranks were awarded in 1912, nearly 1.2 million young men have earned Eagle Scout awards," Ruffner said. "Unfortunately, the Boy Scouts of America has lost track of a majority of adult Eagles, those aged 22 and older. During the Year of the Eagle, we will be attempting to locate as many of the 'lost' Eagles as possible."

Ruffner urged individuals to send the name, address and year of birth of Eagle Scouts to the Detroit Area Council, Boy Scouts of America, 1776 West Warren, Detroit, Mich. 48208.

Ruffner is vice-president of Omnigraphics, Inc., a Detroit based publisher of reference books.

Humans run dating service for endangered whooping cranes

By Donald Smith
National Geographic News Service
Andre the Giant is one unhappy bird.

The 3-year-old whooping crane is being shooed into a corner of his outdoor pen at the Patuxent Wildlife Research Center. Never exactly pleased to see people, Andre glares at the intruders with golden eyes, and hisses.

Named in early chickhood for his exceptional size and bad disposition, Andre is one of only 214 of his kind left in the world, a condition brought about largely by human transgressions.

Now humans are having some success in bringing the species back from the brink of extinction.

At the beginning of each mating season, scientists try to arrange pairings that they hope eventually will produce offspring.

Of course there is no way of explaining this to Andre, who had been spending a peaceful morning with three female companions in the roomy, 40 by 120 foot runway, probing the grass for edibles. Now his caretakers close in with upraised arms, their protective goggles glinting in the sun.

"He could have chosen any of the three females he's been with," veterinarian Glenn Olsen tells National Geographic. "But he hasn't shown any preference. Basically, they were just buddies."

Playing matchmaker to cranes is no lark.

"It's kind of like a dating service," says Claire Mirande, curator of the only other captive whooper flock in the world, located at International Crane Foundation headquarters in Baraboo, Wis. "It's a real challenge sometimes to get birds together. They have to be genetically matched, then introduced, and they need supervision. They can be quite aggressive to each other. Sometimes later we have to do marriage counseling."

Until recently, Patuxent was the home of 54 whooping cranes — one-fourth of the species' survivors and the only captive flock. Most of the population, 146 birds, live in the wild, migrating between the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge in Texas and Canada's Wood Buffalo National Park. A smaller flock of 13 migrates between New Mexico and Idaho. One crane resides at the San Antonio Zoo.

Cranes are remarkable animals. The tallest birds in North America, they reach a height of about 4 feet, 6 inches. They are notably intelligent and develop distinctive personalities.

"Some are friendly and follow you around, and some are feisty," says Patuxent caretaker Jim Stevens. "During breeding season, their hormone levels go up, and it's like dealing with a tall, ticked-off rooster."

Never especially abundant, whoopers have been overhunted, and much of their habitat has been destroyed. From an estimated 1,300 to 1,400 birds before 1870, the population declined to as few as 19 adults in the early 1950s, making their comeback since then all the more extraordinary.

"I'm cautiously optimistic," says Robin W. Doughty, University of Texas geography professor and author of "Return of the Whooping Crane" (University of Texas Press, Austin, 1989). "The wild flock has done remarkably well in the last decade."

Besides discouraging hunting, the recovery effort seeks to protect the wild birds' breeding and wintering grounds and to raise captive birds for eventual release into the wild.

In December, 1989, the Patuxent flock was split. Twenty-two were put into crates, loaded onto a military jet, and flown by Marine reservists to the Wisconsin preserve. The idea was to ensure against a single disaster, such as contaminated food or an epidemic, that could wipe out the entire captive group.

Andre's macho displays notwithstanding, the staff hopes to find him a willing companion. Hopes are also high for another large male with good bloodlines and a somewhat gentler disposition: C.J. — an offspring of one of Patuxent's first cranes.

The female chosen by Patuxent manager Scott Hereford to be C.J.'s trial mate is Tarzana, a lithe beauty named for some acrobatic tendencies she displayed as a chick. Her specialty was backflips.

C.J. enters his runway first. Later, Tarzana arrives in the arms of caretaker Jane Nicolich and jumps into the adjacent pen. For the next several days, the pair will be watched for signs of compatibility, including staying close to each other on opposite sides of the chain-link fence.

To the delight of onlookers, Tarzana heads straight for the corner where C.J. is preening.

They eye each other for a moment at close range. Then Tarzana seems to lose interest, turning away and pecking at the ground. But C.J. stays pressed against the fence, watching her every move.

"They're friendly," says Olsen. "That's a good sign."

Carefully preening, a whooping crane at the Patuxent Wildlife Research Center in Maryland keeps its dazzling feathers fit for flight. Once teetering on the brink of extinction, whoopers are staging a comeback.

Pumpkins, apples, mums lend color, flavor to autumn

October is a lovely month of colorful foliage, cider mills, harvest festivals and Halloween pumpkins. More than 90 percent of fresh pumpkins in the United States are sold during the month of October. The greatest sales occur during the last two weeks of the month.

Pumpkins, or pompions, as the earliest American settlers called them, were a staple food of the Indians, second only to corn. With other squashes, pumpkins were quickly adopted by the colonists. In Roger Williams' book, "Key Into the Language of the Indians of New England," he refers to Isquontersquashes (what a neat word!) as the native American name for the English pompon. Well, a pumpkin by any other name makes just as good a jack-o'-lantern or pie.

Peppers are another bountiful fall harvest. They come in a greater variety of sizes, shapes and colors than any other vegetable, and have an almost legendary amount of vitamin C. They are members of the same family as tomatoes and eggplant and require similar growing conditions.

Peppers are native to tropical America and were grown by Indian tribes in both North and South America more than 2,000 years ago. Columbus discovered small hot peppers in the West Indies and introduced them in Europe where they were an instant success.

Ever since Adam and Eve, people have been eating apples. The cultivation of apples dates back to the Stone Age. Countless varieties have been developed over the centuries, and cookbooks have given recipes using this lovely fruit in literally hundreds of ways. In Michigan, after the lumbering years were over, growing fruit trees became a major industry. Today our state produces millions of bushels of apples annually, in addition to vast quantities of cherries and peaches. The production of apples and other fruits has been steadily increasing since 1841. By 1870, apple orchards in Michigan covered more than 238,000 acres.

The legendary character Johnny Appleseed, whose real name was John Chapman, planted nurseries of apple trees in the Ohio River Valley and distributed apple trees to the Indians. He is generally credited with being the founder of southwestern Michigan's extensive fruit culture.

Grosse Pointe can boast many apple trees in its lovely gardens and the apple orchards and cider mills in the surrounding countryside have already begun to attract crowds of people who will pick countless bushels of apples and drink thousands of gallons of cider before the season ends.

There is something about the spectacle of water wheels and cider presses and the pervading scent of apples adding a tang to the air that symbolizes the fall season. It's an annual attraction like color tours to see the autumn foliage.

In the 12th century B.C., the time of Ramses III, apple trees were cultivated in the Nile valley. In the Roman world of the fourth century A.D. there were 37 varieties of apples. They're mentioned in the writings of Cato and Pliny.

There are several thousand varieties today and they are generally classified on the basis of their time of maturation (summer, autumn or winter) and their color, size and degree of tartness. There has been a great revival of interest lately in so-called antique varieties. Names like Northern Spy, Golden Transparent, Snow and Winesap are again being heard.

Apples are used in countless ways as food and to make cider, applejack and calvados. There really is a basis of truth in the old adage: "An apple a day keeps the doctor away," as apples are an ingredient in many remedies and nutritional supplements.

There is something about early fall that makes us think of brisk country walks and the scent of burning leaves, which are non-existent for city dwellers. It's still a country delight, and although there will be summery days still to come, the unmistakable tang of fall is in the air.

Now is the time for drying herbs for teas and winter use and now is the time for making jam or jelly if your garden includes currants or elderberries or rose hips.

Almost any variety of rose hips may be used for jelly, but Rosa Regosa is best because the seed pods, or hips, are larger than most others. Rose hips are very high in vitamin C and can be dried and frozen. They are used for teas and sauces as well as jelly and have a tart, astringent quality and a pleasant taste.

During World War II in England, when citrus fruits were hard to come by, many people harvested all the rose hips they could find and used them as a substitute for oranges and grapefruit to maintain their vitamin C supply.

In the Oriental flower calendar, the blossom for October is the lovely chrysanthemum, which, in the Victorian language of flowers, stands for cheerfulness and optimism, long life and happiness. Perhaps that is why chrysanthemums are so popular for autumn weddings. They express all the right omens for such an occasion.

Mideast crisis intensifies search for new oil sources

By Michael Woods
National Geographic News Service
Under deserts and icecaps, below mountains and oceans, the endless quest for oil — lifeblood of the industrialized world — has taken on a new sense of urgency.

Long before the latest crisis in the Middle East, oil companies had dispatched prospectors into some of the most remote regions of the globe.

The promise of new, more secure oil sources led them from the snow-swept desolation of Alaska's Beaufort Sea to the steamy rain forests of Papua New Guinea.

"We're looking for gnats where we once used to look for elephants," veteran oil explorer Bob Laing told National Geographic. Laing, chief geophysicist for Caltex Pacific Indonesia, echoes the words of others engaged in the quest.

In the 1950s and '60s, oil companies were searching for bonanzas — new fields containing at least a billion barrels of recoverable crude oil. Some petroleum geologists despair of ever repeating such huge strikes.

Their pessimism emerges from current understanding of the geography and economics of oil exploration.

It teaches a bitter lesson to everyone hoping for major new oil strikes outside the strife-torn Middle East — for the foreseeable future, the world's principal petroleum repository.

The most recent estimates of world crude-oil reserves, deposits recoverable with existing technology, were made last January by the U.S. Energy Department.

They show a total of 1,002.5 billion barrels. Fully two-thirds of that cache — 645.7 billion barrels — lies under the Persian Gulf trouble spots of Saudi Arabia, Iraq, the United Arab Emirates, Kuwait, and Iran. Most of the remaining one-third is divided among the Soviet Union, Venezuela, Mexico and the United States.

Experts agree that important new oil fields will be discovered in the future. But no expert predicts a discovery the size of the Middle East fields.

Oil and natural-gas deposits exist under every continent and ocean. Many remote regions have not been thoroughly explored.

Big new oil deposits almost certainly will be found in traditional oil-producing areas, where governments sometimes are highly conservative in estimating actual reserves.

In 1989, for instance, Saudi Arabia acknowledged that its reserves were 50 percent larger than previously announced. Likewise, experts say, there is great potential for discovery of rich new oil fields in the Soviet Union and China.

The Soviet Union already is the world's largest oil producer, pumping about 11 million barrels a day. Estimates put Soviet reserves at a relatively modest 58 billion barrels. But additional reserves are believed to exist in interior and continental-shelf areas of that vast country.

China, which now produces 2.8 million barrels of oil a day — as much as Iraq — likewise may have huge undiscovered petroleum reserves.

New oil strikes also are likely in countries not usually regarded as energy producers. A group of oil companies drilling off the northwest coast of Australia, for instance, recently struck a field that contains an estimated 100 million barrels of oil.

The five Andean nations of Columbia, Peru, Chile, Ecuador and Bolivia already produce a total of almost 1 million barrels of oil daily. New exploration efforts are under way in the region.

State of the art in offshore drilling, the Endicott field is a man-made island extracting 100,000 barrels of crude oil a day from the Beaufort Sea off northeastern Alaska. Another promising source of Alaskan oil is the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge — but environmentalists strongly object.

Estimated global reserves of crude oil total more than 1 trillion barrels. Two-thirds of that lies under five Persian Gulf countries. Most of the rest is divided among the Soviet Union, Venezuela, Mexico and the United States.

In Africa, oil companies are exploring or preparing to explore areas of Zambia, Zimbabwe, Kenya and Chad.

In Southeast Asia, several big Western oil companies are exploring or producing on Sumatra, in Myanmar (formerly Burma) and in Vietnam. Geologic features that hint of enormous reservoirs of oil have made the rugged highlands of Papua New Guinea the focus of an intensive search.

The potential for discovery of major new reserves also exists in the United States — but at a risk that environmentalists view as too great. The most promising site is the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in northeastern Alaska.

Energy Department studies indicate that the area may contain between 600 million and 9.2 billion barrels of oil. But ecological concerns have led Congress and President Bush to keep the area off-limits to oil exploration.

How much more oil, recoverable with conventional technology, remains undiscovered in these and other areas of the world?

Nobody knows. But 500 billion barrels — about twice the reserves of Saudi Arabia — is a frequent estimate. At current world petroleum production levels of 61 million barrels a day, even that would last barely 23 years.

However, vast reserves of other forms of petroleum could help supply an energy-hungry world well into the 21st century.

Petroleum occurs not just as a liquid, but in solid form in certain rocks and sands. Known deposits of these materials in North America contain more oil than all the Persian Gulf countries combined.

Britten's 'War Requiem' a dimly lit master work

By Alex Suczek
Special Writer

The death of war is the wishful message of pacifist Benjamin Britten in his "War Requiem" which was the sole work of last week's Detroit Symphony concert series.

Like death itself, Britten's Requiem is sombre. It is also esoteric in form and very philosophical in content. Yet for the listener willing to follow the texts and gain awareness of Britten's innovative combination of musical and philosophical ideas, it is a highly moving experience.

Britten mixed and matched texts from two disparate sources — the Latin requiem mass and the anti-war poetry of Wilfred Owen, a young British officer killed in World War I. The masterful achievement is the way Britten interwove the hypnotic ritual of the age-old liturgical prayer for the dead with the sorrowful battle metaphors of the 20th century poet.

Performing this remarkable score takes lots of resources. Joining the DSO for the concert were the excellent Symphony Chorus directed by Eric Freudigman, soprano Lorna Haywood, tenor Robert Tear, baritone David Arnold and the Christ Church Choir of Boys and Girls directed by Frederic DeHaven.

They were led by conductor Yoel Levi, music director of the Atlanta Symphony, replacing the ill Robert Shaw who was originally scheduled.

For the most part, the soprano and the choruses sang the Requiem segments and the tenor and baritone soloists sang the poems in Britten's unique melodies. The orchestra accompanied, punctuating the work instrumentally to link the pieces in an artistic whole.

It is an effective device since the familiar Latin text is well suited to the massed voices of a chorus, while the poems warrant a more freely expressive and understandable treatment by a soloist.

The two choirs were highly effective. Freudigman has made the Symphony Chorus sing with remarkable unity and drama.

The Boys and Girls of Christ Church provided the most arresting effect, however. Singing from the third balcony, their faint words and tones of the Requiem seemed to be echoing out of the distant past, unreal and only imagined.

Britten must have consciously chosen the fluting young voices to create this remarkable illusion.

Following the Dies Irae and the Lacrimosa segments of the mass, the poems sung by Tear and Arnold were particularly effective. Welshman Robert Tear, especially, phrased and articulated the words and music with consummate skill, reflecting, in part, the many times he has sung this work.

It remained for Maestro Levi and the symphony to provide the glue to hold the various vocal elements together. It seemed almost as though the orchestra had to be subordinate to the rest and link those contrasting elements. Levi, too, proved his complete familiarity with the work by conducting from memory — no mean feat in a work this large and complex.

There was a major drawback for any listener trying to achieve a total experience at the concert. This required following the text which was printed in the program. Given the glossy paper, the not very large type and the dim light in Orchestra Hall, this was nigh impossible a good deal of the time.

The management would be well-advised to turn up the house lights a little on such occasions, or tell the audience to carry flashlights. The power of Britten's "War Requiem" is so dependent on its text that full enjoyment of the work depends on getting the words to a much greater degree than in the case of older, more familiar vocal works.

With a flair for dramatic contrast, the symphony's program this week moves from gloom to sunshine. Opening the concert will be Schubert's Third Symphony in the happy key of D mafor which the composer used for several works composed, as this one, in his teens. With it in the first half, the orchestra will offer Aaron Copland's echoes of mariachis and the Hat Dance — El Salon Mexico.

In the second half, pianist Mischa Dichter will join the orchestra in Brahms' perennially popular Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor. The conductor for these concerts is Henry Lewis. The times are 8 p.m. tonight, Oct. 11, 10:45 a.m. Friday, and 8:30 p.m. Saturday.

Thursday evening's concert will be preceded by a free lecture in the Hall at 7 p.m. The speaker will be Peter Schoenbach, Music Department chairman at Wayne State University.

For information and tickets, call 833-3700.

Mr. Accordion

Playing his million-selling hits like "Lady of Spain" and "Granada," accordionist Dick Contino will appear in concert at Macomb Center for the Performing Arts at 7 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 21. Tickets, at $14 for adults and $12.50 for students and senior citizens, may be obtained at the Center's box office or reserved on credit card by calling 286-2222, Monday through Friday, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Macomb Center is located on the Center Campus of Macomb Community College at Hall (M-59) and Garfield roads in Clinton Township.

Old World Market recaptured Oct. 19

In 1926, the International Institute, a social service agency for the foreign-born, created the Old World Market — the first ethnic festival in metropolitan Detroit — as a way for new Americans to earn much-needed money by selling their native handicrafts. Now held at the Southfield Civic Center, the unique flavor of the original market will be recaptured on Friday, Oct. 19 through Sunday, Oct. 21.

Representatives from Laos, Japan, Mexico, Somalia, Yugoslavia and more than 30 other nations will unite to present their music, dance, food and folk arts in a weekend of fun and exotic shopping.

The special theme of this year's festival, "Stand Beside Her — The Statue of Liberty," will honor the newly emerging democracies of Eastern Europe with performances and artwork by natives of Hungary, Poland, Romania, Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union.

Tenor, bass auditions

The Detroit Concert Choir, under the direction of Gordon Nelson, will hold auditions for tenor and bass singers. Rehearsals are on Monday evenings.

Auditions will be held throughout October at Grosse Pointe Memorial Church, 16 Lakeshore Drive, Grosse Pointe. For audition appointment and information, call 882-0118.

The celebration begins on Friday, Oct. 19, at 9 a.m. with a formal swearing-in of new American citizens.

Many Old World Market participants came to these shores in a quest for personal freedom. Just ask Estonian woodburning artist Johanna Spargo about her girlhood during the Russian Revolution of 1917; or while admiring her exquisitely embroidered blouses and tapestries, talk to folk artist Maria Munte about life behind the Iron Curtain in Romania.

If you can catch high-kicking Slovak dancer Milan Straka after his performance, learn about his escape from Prague after the Soviet tanks invaded in 1968. Half the fun of the event is gaining a first-hand experience of the cultures of our newest immigrants.

Features new to this year's market include concerts by well-known Soviet jazz pianist Vladimir Karminski, now a Detroit resident; demonstrations by the only craftsman in the United States making Dutch wooden shoes by hand, Bob Siegel of Wisconsin; and a salute by the Michigan Opera Theater to composers ranging from the Gershwins to Andrew Lloyd Webber in "Broadway Babies and Phantoms."

On stage, 40 ethnic groups will range from high-flying Scots Highland hoofers to feisty Spanish Flamenco dancers, from popular local folk singer Phil Marcus Esser to the reggae beat of the King David Calypso Band.

The Old World Market is the place to buy anything from genuine imitation Egyptian mummy jewelry to strings of Baltic amber beads from Lithuania; from African-American soft sculpture portrait dolls to Mexican Day of the Dead figures; from hand-embroidered Ecuadorian dresses to olive wood Israeli sculpture. Authentic folk artists will demonstrate Ukrainian egg-decorating (Pysanky), lacemaking, weaving, leatherworking, quillwork, silversmithing and Japanese origami.

Tickets are $2 for adults, $1 for seniors and children 16 and under, $5 for families. For advance tickets and group rates of $1 per person, contact the International Institute at 871-8600. Tickets are also available at the door. The Southfield Civic Center is located at 26000 Evergreen, Southfield. Old World Market hours are Friday and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.; Sunday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

History of pleasure travel on exhibit

History of Pleasure Travel Unfolds in "Americans on Vacation," Henry Ford Museum's major new exhibit

"Americans on Vacation," the first comprehensive museum exhibit about the history of our national pastime of getting away from it all, opened Saturday, May 26, at Henry Ford Museum.

With nearly half of all American families enjoying long-distance pleasure trips each year, the vacation has become a key part of our culture with a growing industry devoted to servicing it. "Americans on Vacation" traces how vacationing evolved from a demonstration of elite status to a symbol of "the good life" for all.

Organized by Donna Braden, Judith Endelman and Jim Van Bockove and designed by Tom Elliott (all of Henry Ford Museum), "Americans on Vacation" showcases more than 400 artifacts from the museum's rich travel-related collections. Presentation of the exhibit is supported, in part, by grants from AAA Michigan and from the National Endowment for the Humanities, a federal agency.

The 7,200-square-foot exhibit depicts 150 years of change in the four steps of the vacation experience: planning, getting there, being there, and remembering.

Featured objects in "Americans on Vacation" range from luggage and travel kits to 1930s fishing gear and a 1960s surfboard, and from mass-produced souvenirs to personal mementos of trips to resorts, world's fairs, national parks, and contemporary attractions like Disney World.

The exhibit also includes historic vehicles associated with different sorts of vacation experiences: A 19th-century stagecoach, an 1880s resort omnibus, a 1906 sightseeing bus, and a 1950 station wagon.

"Americans on Vacation" incorporates "hands-on" interactive elements, including a packing game for children, a recreated resort front porch, and a replica "sailor, mermaid and fish" graphic cut-out where whole families can pose for photographs. It also features short video presentations on travel promotion, postcards from vacation sites across the nation, rare turn-of-the-century kinoscope films, and home movies.

"Americans on Vacation" is accompanied by a 96-page illustrated catalog with short essays by Donna Barden and Judith Endelman. The exhibit will remain on view at Henry Ford Museum through Sept. 2, 1991, and then will begin a national tour with expected stops in Washington, D.C., Oakland, Calif., Rochester, N.Y., and several other cities.

There is no additional charge for the exhibit beyond regular museum admission.

Henry Ford Museum & Greenfield Village is a national museum of American history and technology located at Oakwood Boulevard and Village Road in Dearborn, just west of the Southfield Freeway (M-39) and south of Michigan Avenue (U.S. 12).

'Desperate Hours' is desperately in need of a story to tell

By Michael Chapp
Special Writer

The title of the film is "Desperate Hours."

That's appropriate. For viewers, the most desperate hours they're likely to experience this month are the ones they spend stuck in the theater watching this film.

How bad is this movie? It's so bad that its stars, Mickey Rourke and Anthony Hopkins — both of whom were considered good at least once in their careers — may have a difficult time finding work in the future.

Unless it's in more movies like this.

"Hours" is a very confusing hodgepodge that's supposed to be a character study and a psychological thriller, but which fails at both. What's left are moments of graphic violence and car chases. And we can get that virtually anywhere.

In the film's early moments, we're in the courtroom to see Rourke's murder trial. Here's where we learn Rourke is an excellent writer. And that he has an IQ of 130. And that he has a thing about taking hostages.

Before long, he's managed to escape. Then he's in a high-class neighborhood. Then he's broken into Hopkin's family's house. Then he's holding the family hostage.

All he's waiting for, he says, is his fiance. Once she comes to pick him up, he'll leave them alone. In the meantime, he makes himself comfortable. And he makes everybody else uncomfortable.

That goes for the other people in the film, of course. But it especially goes for those of us in the audience, because with every new development, we're left wondering what the heck is going on. In that respect, the film is much like television's "Twin Peaks."

The difference is that the film isn't filled with intriguing characters, set design, music or humor.

What we do have is an impossibly long opening sequence, in which Rourke's attorney inexplicably drives her sports car through a beautiful mountainous setting. Later, there's an impossibly long sequence in which one of Rourke's cohorts wanders aimlessly through the same area.

Then there's a lot of mumbogumbo in the hostage house. Who trusts whom? What's the motivation of each character? Perhaps most important for viewers, why should we care about any of these people?

Frankly, we don't care about these people. Hopkins and his family are bumbling idiots. And Rourke, who's supposed to be a genius, can't even predict how and when the police and FBI are eventually going to converge on him.

"Desperate Hours" is filled with hokey dialogue, loose ends, uninspired performances and frustrating moments. And, like most films from producer Dino DeLaurentis, it is worth missing.

'State of Grace' chronicles bloody demise of New York's Irish gangs

By Marian Trainor
Special Writer

"State of Grace" is an intense saga played out against a closed, violent world bereft of a normal law-abiding society.

The screenplay, written by the late Dennis McIntyre, a former Detroit, drew its inspiration from journalistic accounts of the Westies, the Irish Mafia that controlled New York's Hell's Kitchen.

When the neighborhood changed and condominiums began to replace the tenements in the '70s, the gang joined the Italian-Americans.

It was an uneasy collaboration. The Westies were wild men. They didn't play by the old rules. Suited to collection, extortion and teenage beatings rather than elaborate planning, eventually their weakness for wanton self-destruction and for killing one another, their best friends and sometimes their own relatives, took its toll.

The fictionalized account turns the downfall of the Westies into a tragic Irish melodrama.

The story begins as Terry Noonan (Sean Penn) is returning to his old neighborhood after being away for 12 years. He is welcomed back by his best friend Jackie (Gary Oldman). At the height of the Westies' reign they had been singled out for high places.

Now Oldman carries out orders given by his brother, Frankie (Ed Harris), who has left the scene of the action for a New Jersey suburb with his family, but still retains control of the gang.

In this time of change and displacement, Penn has come home presumably to take up where he left off. Actually, he is an undercover cop sent there to spy and testify against the gang.

But it is not that simple. Back in the old neighborhood where he grew up, old loyalties assert themselves and he becomes a man caught in the squeeze of conflicting loyalties.

In a beautifully built script, Director Phil Joana unfolds a charged story of violence, fratricides and betrayal. Filmed in bars and tenements on the west side of Manhattan, he captures the sense of time and place that defines urban crime and the ethnic and territorial distinctions.

Although Penn's character is the story's nominal center, it is Oldman's Jackie whose electrifying performance establishes and explains why his world is such a terrifying place.

An added human touch is injected by the appearance of Burgess Meredith as a frail old man living in poverty, who reprimands Penn for what he has become and reminds him how outraged his father would be if he had lived to see him as he is.

"State of Grace" has both a jarring and spectacular ending as the director alternates between scenes showing a colorful St. Patrick's Day parade and a slaughter in a corner bar.

Tough and relentless, "State of Grace" holds viewers locked in its ferocious grip.

'Anything Goes' opens at Bonstelle

"Anything Goes" will open the Bonstelle Theatre season Friday, Oct. 19, at 8 p.m. The musical comedy features the music and lyrics of Cole Porter and is scheduled for a two-weekend run, Oct. 19-28.

"Anything Goes" incorporates all of the elements of the 1930s' musical style. Porter's tunes match the saucy impudence of the characters, the uninhibited double entendres of the script, and the glitter of the entire fast-moving story.

The production takes place on the S.S. America cruise ship. True to musical comedy style, a potpourri of interesting characters is aboard for the ocean crossing. They band together in several ploys of deception in an effort to attain their desired goals, which range from dodging the authorities to finding true love.

Tickets are $10; $8 for students, senior citizens and WSU alumni. Reservations can be made by calling the Bonstelle box office at 577-2960.

The American wine seminar will be held Thursdays, Oct. 25 to November 15, from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. at Macomb's Fraser Campus, 32101 Caroline, off Masonic between Hayes and Utica Roads. The fee is $57.

Also offered in October is a "Harvest Wine Tour" to Oakland County's Seven Lakes Vineyard. Participants will enjoy a tour of the 96-acre vineyard, a private wine tasting session, and a specially prepared fall luncheon.

The tour will depart by deluxe motor coach from Macomb's South Campus on Oct. 27 at 10 a.m. and return at 3 p.m. The fee is $32.50.

'King of New York': Heralded by some, but most turned off

By Marian Trainor
Special Writer

Noelgia has hit Hollywood in a rash of gangster films reminiscent of the '20s and '30s. Among them are "GoodFellas," "Millers Crossing" and "State of Grace" with "Godfather III" and "The Krays" in the offing.

An exception to this trend is Abel Ferrara's "King of New York," starring Christopher Walken as a psychotic, contemporary Robin Hood who professes that he has a mission to wipe out the bad guys who are responsible for society's ills, steal their ill-gotten drug gains and distribute them to the poor.

Set in the five boroughs of New York, the plot is part sci-fi, part like something out of a tabloid feature and probably meant to be a social comment on what is seen as the country's hopeless drug problem.

To make sure the viewer gets a close-in picture of the decadence and violence that is rampant and the lost lives caused by drug traffic, the film takes the viewer right down to the nether world of the lowest form of addicts and pushers.

To make sure that convicted dope dealer, ex-con Frank White (Walken), is recognized as a self-ordained messiah come to save the city from a Sodom and Gomorrah end, his white-stone-like, expressionless face is flashed on the screen more times than you care to look at it, presumably to impress on our minds the solemnity of his mission even as we watch him more times than we care to, slaughter victims left and right.

Supposedly during his stay in prison, Walken has been pondering the drug culture and has decided to persuade Columbian, Italian and Chinese drug kings to turn their profits over to support hospitals.

His key men Jimmy Jump (Larry Fishburne) and Kabce

(Giancarlo Esposito) help him knock off the Columbian connection King Tito (Ernest Abuba), the Italian boss, Artie Clay (Frank Gio) and the Chinese ganglord Larry Won (Joey Chin). Because some of the drug money is directed into a city hospital, Walken becomes a hero on the streets and a scourge to the trio of detectives who are trying to nail him. After Walken succeeds in wiping out his competition, the film moves on to a series of confrontations between the gangster and the cops led by Dennis (David Caruso), Tommy (Wesley Snipes) and Roy (Victor Argo).

In one riveting scene where the cops and the gangs are engaged in a shootout, we see wounded Snipes next to wounded gangster Fishburne. As they moan and scream in their death throes, we see Dennis running back and forth between them, giving mouth to mouth resuscitation to one and a bullet in the throat to the other. Throughout the film, the blood of warring gang members is splattered onto wallpaper, car windows and bed sheets. In one sequence a bullet-riddled gang member screams in agony while Ferrara's camera looks into the face of a dying cop.

Notable in the cast is Caruso's Dennis, a red-haired, tough-talking Irish cop and self-proclaimed "Degenerate donkey with a gun."

Fishburne's Jimmy Jump tries to be cool but is obnoxious and overbearing. There are no likable characters in the film, but Walken is riveting as White with his steely, penetrating stare, dead-pan oval face and brain-filled expression. He gives an intense, thoughtful performance.

"King of New York" is not for everyone. Some will herald it as hard-hitting and electrifying for its gritty depiction of the rhythms and texture of New York's mean streets. Others will be turned off by its theme of profanity and violence.

Michigan CPA association offers financial tips on planning and spending your vacation

When your dream vacation is trekking in Nepal, visiting Buckingham Palace or backpacking in Vermont, the Michigan Association of CPAs suggests that you plan your vacation with some financial realities in mind.

Planning a trip

To get an idea of the types of discount vacation packages available and their costs, begin by looking at the Sunday travel section of your newspaper. There you'll find a list of some of the current tour packages in the United States and abroad, including airfare and accommodations.

If you have the time and patience, you can plan a vacation on your own and even save some money by doing so. But, be prepared to spend hours on the phone to shop around for the best deals. Travel guides, which list hotel rates, restaurant prices and the cost of local tourist attractions, can help steer you to or away from a particular locale. And the airlines will be happy to quote you their discount fares depending on the length of your trip.

For those of you who do not want to make the necessary number of phone calls to plan your trip, or are even uncertain about your destination, it's a good idea to use a travel agent. They have access to the latest tour packages and updated airline fares and hotel costs.

Paying for your trip

To take the bite out of vacation expenses, try to spread the cost over an entire year by including a travel line in your monthly budget. For example, if you want to visit Hawaii next summer and expect the trip to cost $3,000, you can pay for the trip in full by setting aside $250 a month. If you cannot afford to save that much money, try to save as much as you can to offset the vacation's overall cost. Other options are choosing a less expensive trip or taking less frequent vacations.

Of course, saving for next summer's trip will not help you right now. If your heart is set on a vacation that you cannot pay for in cash, you have a few options. You may be able to take out a personal loan, for example, or draw on a home equity credit line. In general, CPAs advise against applying for costly loans for such fleeting pleasures as a Caribbean cruise. A better choice would be charging the vacation to a credit card that charges a low interest rate. In either case, make a commitment to repay the debt as soon as possible. Remember, interest on consumer debt is only 10 percent deductible in 1990.

Insurance considerations

Before you fly off to distant lands or simply venture down to the shore for a few weeks, review your homeowner's or renter's policy with your insurance agent and make sure that it will protect your home and possessions against vandalism or theft while you are traveling. In addition, be sure you have an up-to-date inventory and photographs of your valuable and your household possessions. You may also want to consider putting valuable jewelry and papers in a safe deposit box if your trip will last longer than a few days.

The other insurance option you may need to consider is flight and car rental insurance. You can purchase flight insurance through a travel agent or tour operator to protect you from lost or stolen luggage or trip cancellation. But before you buy extra insurance, check your regular health and homeowner's or renter's policies, which may provide adequate flight insurance. In addition, you should find out whether any of your credit cards or your own automobile insurance policy cover car rentals or other related travel insurance.

Life goes on

Vacations are designed to take you away from your daily chores, but remember that while you are away life does go on. Mortgage payments will still be due and utility bills will still show up in your mailbox. If you are planning a long trip, you might want to authorize your bank to automatically transfer funds from your account to cover such bills as your mortgage, car loan, utilities or insurance payments. Check with your bank and the companies to whom you owe money to see what arrangements can be made.

You should also review your investments before embarking on an extended trip. Find out, for example, if any of your Certificates of Deposit (CDs) or Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs) will mature while you are away. If so, without specific instructions from you, most banks will automatically roll the funds over into another account of its own choosing. To avoid this scenario, leave instructions with an officer at the bank on how the money should be reinvested.

Financial tips while on vacation

WSU black theater's 20th season

The Black Theatre program of Wayne State University will open its 20th season with "Stop The Great War," an original play written by sophomore student Monice Mitchell, on Thursday, Oct. 18, at 8 p.m. in the Studio Theatre, downstairs at the Hilberry. Performances continue on Oct. 19 and 20 and on Oct. 25, 26 and 27, all at 8 p.m.

Mitchell originally wrote "Stop the Great War" as a poem for an English class assignment in 1987, while attending Martin Luther King Jr. High School. As months progressed, she witnessed the increasing amount of violence and senseless deaths of teenagers that occurred in Detroit. Moved by the desperate situation of young adults in the late 1980s, Mitchell developed her original poem into a full-length drama that deals positively with teenage violence, pregnancy and drug use.

The play is a collage of violent scenes: gang wars, drug deals and the accidental shooting of an innocent bystander. Throughout these scenes, which are infused with music and poetry, the author challenges the audience to take action and to go forward, rather than dwell on past problems that cannot be changed.

Tickets are $6 and $4 for students and senior citizens. For tickets and information, call 577-2972.

Animal rites

Eric Eshman's water dragon, Flash, was one of the most unusual animals at St. Paul's blessing of pets.

Jan Michaelstump feels better now that his frog, Terry, has been blessed.

Even though Tommy isn't a mutant, in his teens or a martial arts expert, Eric Eshman had him blessed anyway.

Even with nine lives, it couldn't hurt to have Sniffer blessed. At least that's what Abbey Clark of Grosse Pointe City must have figured.

More than 125 people brought their favorite creatures for the annual blessing of pets at St. Paul Catholic Church Saturday afternoon.

The event is held to commemorate the feast of St. Francis of Assisi who was known for his concern for animals. St. Paul's has been offering the blessing for about five years, according to Sandy Fisher, director of adult religious education.

Father Alberto Bondy, associate pastor, conducted the ceremony.

Prizes are awarded for the largest and smallest, and the oldest and youngest dog and cat. Prizes for the most unusual pets went to a water dragon named Flash and a newt who answers to Mr. Potato.

Pointers make dough, have fun with pasta enterprise

By John Minnis
Assistant Editor

If you've eaten in some of the finest restaurants in Detroit, then you've probably enjoyed gourmet pasta made right here in Grosse Pointe Park.

A group of five Grosse Pointers began Pasta Fresca about a year and a half ago, and already its products are being used by top chefs in some 40 restaurants and clubs from Grosse Pointe to Birmingham to downtown.

Locally, Tom's Oyster Bar serves Pasta Fresca fettuccine, linguine and tortellini. But at Tom Brandel's new restaurant, Tom's Steamer, which will open toward the end of this month, an extensive pasta menu is planned. Two of the pasta delicacies will be ravioli stuffed with crab meat and escargot in pasta shells, Brandel said.

"It's excellent," he said of Pasta Fresca pasta. "It's as good as it gets."

Brandel said he had planned to make his own pasta at the new restaurant, opening at Mack and Nottingham, but because Pasta Fresca's product "can't be beat," there's no sense in making his own.

Other restaurants and chefs seem to agree.

"We can customize our pasta for chefs," said Doug Andrus, one of the owners. "We become an extension of their kitchens."

Often the chefs will send their own stuffing for tortellini. Pasta Fresca will make the tortellini with the stuffing and ship them back to the restaurant. The chef will then cover the pasta treats with his own sauce and, voila, his personal masterpiece.

Because many restaurants that use Pasta Fresca products pass off the gourmet pasta as their own, the company guards its customer list, even though the publicity wouldn't hurt.

But Pasta Fresca owners — Andrus, his wife Jerry, brother Dennis, and Mike and Cindy Troyanovich — don't mind a certain amount of anonymity, as long as the orders keep coming. And they do.

Recently, Jerry Andrus began running the business at Nottingham and Mack as the general manager. In a couple of weeks she booked a dozen new orders, and that's mostly from word of mouth from chef to chef, customer to customer. She said the business has reached the point to begin showing profits.

But her past work experience is in an office; her husband and his brother own The Prudential Grosse Pointe Real Estate Co.; and the Troyanoviches are both lawyers. So where did the expertise in pasta come from?

The whole idea of going into the pasta business came about one night when Doug and Dennis Andrus were having dinner and they were wishing they could get good, fresh gourmet pasta. So they decided to start a company with some investors.

To make the pasta, they hired a master chef and bought some equipment. The deal with the chef didn't work out though, and the partners decided to run the business themselves — or, actually, Jerry Andrus would run it for them.

The master pasta maker is a retired postal worker, John Kapaz of Grosse Pointe Woods, who began making pasta as a second career. He and his crew mix the dough, run the machines and do the packaging. In a rush, though, the partners have been known to roll up their sleeves to get the job done.

Pasta Fresca products include angel hair, tagliarini or spaghettini, linguine, fettuccine, tagliatelle, lasagnette or papardelle and two filled pastas, tortellini and ravioli.

of pasta to make anything from angel hair to fettuccine. Another machine makes various pasta shapes, such as shells, rotini and mostacoli.

All the pasta is made fresh each day, and even the all-natural ingredients are bought almost daily. Doug Andrus said Pasta Fresca products have no preservatives or artificial flavorings or colors.

He stressed that Pasta Fresca products are not the dried pasta we've typically grown up with in this country. "We don't make spaghetti. We don't make a dry product. We make the old-world pasta."

Comparing dried pasta to fresh pasta is like comparing dried and fresh fruit, he said.

Pasta Fresca's pasta is cholesterol-free, Andrus said.

"We've gotten away from a meat and potatoes America," he said. Also, with both adults often working outside the home today, pasta is a quick, easy meal to make, he said.

While much of Pasta Fresca's business is through restaurants and clubs, individuals can pick up pasta right at the store at wholesale prices. The entrance to Pasta Fresca is off Nottingham at Mack. Andrus warns that the current store is more of a factory than a retail outlet — nothing fancy — but the food is good.

The owners' plans call for getting a larger building on Mack in the Pointes where they can have a retail Italian deli and pasta counter. The gourmet pasta will still be made on the premises and the wholesale orders will be packaged in back.

Pasta Fresca

Products: Fresh gourmet pasta of all kinds and flavors, including custom orders, wholesale and retail.

Owners: Doug and Jerry Andrus, Dennis Andrus and Mike and Cindy Troyanovich.

Manager: Jerry Andrus
Location: 15326 Mack, Grosse Pointe Park (entrance off Nottingham).

And the pasta comes in all flavors, including spinach, red pepper and tomato, to name a few.

The owners are especially proud of their tortellini and ravioli machine, which cost some $70,000. Pasta Fresca is the only company in the Detroit area that can make the small tortellini using a special die. Doug Andrus said that originally the company had a smaller, less expensive machine, but it couldn't consistently make a good product.

Pasta Fresca also has a $30,000 machine for making the varying widths and thicknesses

Pasta rolled through a screen opening determines its width, such as angel hair or fettuccine, as John Kapaz of Grosse Pointe Woods illustrates.

The five Pasta Fresca owners, all Grosse Pointers, from left, standing, are Mike Troyanovich and Dennis and Doug Andrus and, seated, Cindy Troyanovich and manager Jerry Andrus.

A day in the life of a new-car dealer service adviser — ouch!

Wednesday morning, Joe Orlando was still recovering from the night before.

As the service adviser was preparing to close the service department at Roseville Chrysler-Plymouth Tuesday evening, a furious customer brought his car back to the dealership.

He had brought the car in Tuesday morning because it was stalling. He drove away from the dealership that evening and at the first red light it stalled. He was beside himself. He returned to the dealership. The problem hadn't been solved and the car was no better than when he brought it in, the customer complained.

The he began shouting and became abusive. Orlando finally asked the owner to leave and promised they would discuss the problem when the dealership reopened Wednesday morning. Orlando's colleagues laughed when he arrived a few minutes later than expected on Wednesday. They thought he might not make it in.

By 8:30, Orlando and the four other service advisers at the suburban Detroit dealership were deeply involved with customers. The evening before wasn't forgotten, but the incident was shelved.

Orlando joked with a woman who described a rattle in the trunk of her car. "Maybe there's a mouse loose," he said, winking. They both laughed, but he carefully recorded her complaints on the repair order. When the list was complete, he read it back to her to be certain he had understood.

On a list of high-stress jobs, new-car dealership service adviser should be near the top. These men and women spend up to 60 hours a week working with people who are upset. Owners hate to be without their wheels. They don't like the inconvenience. They are suspicious, worried about the quality of service they get and they know unless the vehicle is under warranty it may cost them a lot of money.

So customers are on the muscle when they arrive. At Roseville Chrysler-Plymouth, owners leave their cars in the drive and walk into a reception area where there's coffee to sip while they wait to see one of the dealership's five service advisers.

Business was getting off to a slow start this languid gray Wednesday morning. One adviser, a 30-year veteran, blamed the Mideast crisis. "People are holding onto their wallets," he said. "They'll postpone having work done on their cars until the future is more certain."

Despite the early hour, there was plenty of friendly bantering as technicians stopped in the cashier's office for jelly-filled donuts, mingling with customers and the advisers on their way.

Tim Binder is Roseville's service director. He started at the dealership 13 years ago as a service adviser. Now he supervises a large staff, handles advertising, oversees payroll and attends to myriad administrative details. His assistant, Roy Melvin, works directly with the technicians.

"If you learn to do the service adviser's job, you can do anything," Binder said. "At some point, all vehicles wear out or break down. Service involves a lot of money, difficult technical and mechanical problems, and working with people. The adviser has many different hats to wear."

Orlando knew nothing about cars when he started the job four years ago. A former retail salesman, today he sounds like an automotive expert with his customers. While the service adviser is not in a position to diagnose problems, it helps to know as much as possible about the products the dealer is selling. Training materials abound. Seminars are available for newcomers and veterans alike.

Product knowledge includes memorizing warranty and maintenance information. Selling service is an important aspect of the adviser's assignment. Many are paid a percentage based on the orders they write. When an owner shows up with a sticking door problem, the adviser notes the car's odometer reading and consults the owner's service record to see if regular maintenance is being done at the dealership. It's time for a tuneup, the adviser reminds the owner.

"I only suggest service," Orlando said. "I never push the customer."

Adviser Karen Dunn was faced with another problem that Wednesday morning. The timing belt on a customer's car broke as the vehicle was being driven from the service area. The car was there for a tuneup. Belt replacement would run $200. Part of Dunn's job was to contact the customer and break the news.

Dunn, the youngest of the five advisers, took it all in stride. This vehicle had close to 80,000 miles on it. These belts wear out, said the former manager of a quick-lube shop, as she prepared to explain the situation to the owner.

Meantime, another customer approached Orlando. He was composed and articulate, but miffed. The fan that cools the engine of his minivan won't shut off, he explained in a heavy Far Eastern accent. "This is the same problem we had before. There is something fundamentally wrong," he said.

Orlando asked if the fan was running at that moment. No, the customer replied. This was beginning to resemble the incident from the night before, when the customer's car stalled at a light. The dealership tests all vehicles that have been serviced or repaired. Often it's the service adviser who runs the test. If the problem doesn't occur during the test — or when the customer describes it to the adviser at a write-up time — it's even harder to find the fault and make the right repair.

"Driveability" complaints are the most dreaded of all. Roseville Chrysler-Plymouth groups its technicians into areas of expertise. Some do "heavy" work — engine repairs, transmissions, etc. Another group handles electrical problems. One technician specializes in repairing recovered stolen cars. Some do mufflers. Just inside the main service entrance, several bays are reserved for "driveability" complaints.

These are the intermittent problems that can bring the car or truck to a standstill, service director Binder said. And they can be the hardest to pinpoint. Technicians working here are worth their weight in gold.

Back at service write-up, Orlando greeted a woman who wanted to have her tires rotated. How many miles did the car have on it, he inquired. Three thousand? She didn't need to rotate them until she returned from her trip to Arizona, he told her. A rotation today would be a waste of money.

Orlando was proud to have people ask for him by name. A Chrysler retiree had been waiting patiently to talk with Orlando. He had even brought along the bolts needed for his repairs.

The repair order was back from the technician who checked the engine fan that wouldn't stop running. "Could not find problem," it read. Another tough telephone call. Orlando phones the customer and tells him he will have to bring the vehicle in when it is malfunctioning. The technician cannot make it malfunction. Neither can the owner, of course.

Grosse Pointe Garden Center's house tour will be Oct. 27, 28

By Ellen Probert
 Special Writer

October in Michigan is delightful. Nature provides sunny days, glowing colors, autumn leaves, bright chrysanthemums. It's a perfect time to visit some of Grosse Pointe's most charming homes.

The Grosse Pointe Garden Center will sponsor its 36th annual tour of homes on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 27 and 28, from 1 to 5 p.m.

The four houses on the tour are an interesting mix, ranging from a small country eclectic style to a large formal English regency style. Each home is filled with collections and heirlooms which make it distinctive and personal. Three of the homes are owned by professional decorators and are full of innovative ideas. A tour of these homes is a wonderful way to see what the experts can do.

The home of interior designer Marilyn Wood is decorated in a cozy country style, with colorful chintz fabrics, crewel cushions, heirloom furniture and paintings that she and her three daughters have painted. All is set against a backdrop of dark green walls, a welcoming fireplace and wide windows that open onto an unexpectedly large garden.

Of particular interest is the country kitchen and dining area which repeats the dark green background color in white dotted wallpaper. The brick-patterned floor picks up the red tones in a large painting which was done by the owner of the house. Accessories are brass and silver.

The home of Judith O'Connor of Bay Tree Interiors Ltd. is filled with treasures from the owner's travels and mementos from her residences in exotic places.

A wonderful collection of antique and modern clocks fills the air with musical ticking. The open design, many windows and bright accents of brass and glass light up the rooms.

The house was built in 1987. Dominating the entrance hall is a Chinese horse made of terra cotta, acquired in Toronto. Some Chinese porcelain jars came from Hong Kong, Celedon porcelains came from Thailand, a mask is from Borneo and a collection of 19th century botanical prints came from England.

Other items of note are a chair from Brazil and replica warrior heads from the archaeological digs at Xian, China.

The dominating colors in the house are rose and taupe, with variations on the theme provided by Oriental rugs and bright chintzes.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. David L. Barnes, which was built in 1950, is a showcase for a variety of family collections. The wide entrance hall welcomes visitors with an antique trunk from Norway, filled with an unusual collection of antique shoes. Assorted antique toys, a collection of bird cages, carousel art and primitive folk art are displayed throughout the house.

The decor in the spacious country kitchen is a whimsical take-off on the name Barnes, featuring farm artifacts of cows and roosters. Barn red is the predominant color.

The home of Daniel Clancy and Jack Perlmutter is a large English regency style house built by John Booth. It appears in Hawkins Ferry's book, "The Buildings of Detroit."

The gardens were designed in the English style with boxwood, a lily pond and a swimming pool.

The foyer features Chinese wallpaper and leads to a gallery overlooking the garden.

The house contains treasures of Oriental art, 18th century furniture, Waterford crystal, sculpture and paintings. The house itself is a beautiful background with its curved bay windows, sweeping freestanding staircase and spacious gardens.

A collection of antique blue and white porcelain and a magnificent Coromandel screen share honors in the living room with Oriental rugs, a grand piano and a large painting by Pierre Grim. In the gallery is a winsome painting of a child by Hogarth. A touch of nostalgia is evident in some of the furnishings which came from Rose Terrace.

The kitchen and adjoining breakfast room feature blue and white Portuguese tiles on the walls, marble counter tops and a collection of antique wicker doll chairs.

The Grosse Pointe Garden Center serves as headquarters for all the garden clubs in Grosse Pointe and the east side of metropolitan Detroit. It's a non-profit organization with headquarters in the Grosse Pointe War Memorial, 32 Lakeshore.

The center maintains a reference library of gardening materials which may be used by anyone in the community. It also sponsors lectures, workshops and programs for the community and maintains the Trial Gardens on the grounds of the War Memorial.

An annual autumn house tour is the Grosse Pointe Garden Center's only fundraiser. In the past, tours have earned between $4,000 and $8,000 which is used to support the Garden Center and to provide scholarships for graduate students in horticulture on alternate years at Michigan State University and the University of Michigan.

Tickets for the tour are $8 in advance; $10 on tour days, when they will be available at the houses.

Tickets are available at the Grosse Pointe Garden Center on the second floor of the Grosse Pointe War Memorial on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Tickets are also available at Maskell Hardware, 17020 Mack; Village Records and Tapes, 17116 Kercheval; Grosse Pointe Florist, 174 Kerby; and Hollywood Pharmacy, 20853 Mack.

For more information, call the Garden Center at 881-4594.

The front porches and doors of four Grosse Pointe homes will be cleaned up, dressed up, decorated and ready for visitors on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 27 and 28, when the Grosse Pointe Garden Center presents its 36th annual house tour.

The Lake... The Pointes...

We Understand.

The Blake Company has been members of the Grosse Pointe community for three generations. We know why people live here, and why they go to great lengths to remain here.

Over the years their homes have become too large and difficult to maintain and until now, the Grosse Pointe area has offered very few alternatives to people who want to change their homes, not their lifestyle.

We Understand.

The Blake Company has created the alternative, Harbor Place: a luxurious condominium community located on the shore of Lake St. Clair, near everything you hold dear.

Designed with traditional New England architecture with an emphasis placed on privacy, security and scenic beauty. Choose between townhouses or terrace homes each in two- and three-bedroom configurations, lavished with an endless list of amenities, including a 2 car garage, exceptional landscaping and boat slips. Call Rob MacGregor today for an appointment and experience the tradition of Harbor Place, you'll see that we really do understand.

Cucumbers are cool; use them for gazpacho, soups, pickles

Cucumbers were cultivated by emperors centuries ago. They originated in the foothills of the Himalayas, where they once grew wild. Cucumbers have been cultivated in India for more than 3,000 years. They were introduced into Egypt and cultivated by the Hebrews in Galilee. The Greeks and Romans were fond of cucumbers.

The word cucumber comes from the Latin name, Cucumis. It is the fruit of an annual climbing plant of the gourd family, which may be eaten raw or cooked.

There are several varieties of cucumber, classified in two ways — those grown in greenhouses, known as Dutch, and those cultivated either in the open or in the greenhouses, known as ridge. The Dutch ridge varieties differ more in size, shape and shade of green than in taste.

Small, bumpy cukes called kirbies are sweet and crunchy and are available year-round. They may be eaten whole or pickled.

The kirby cukes become dill pickles and tiny kirbies become pickled gherkins.

The cucumber is 96 percent water and contains only 12 calories per 100 grams. Cucumbers are rich in minerals and vitamins A and C. They should be bought fresh and firm, never wrinkled.

Cucumbers may be baked in the oven, cooked au gratin or sauteed in butter or olive oil. Travel has enlightened consumers to the many possibilities and uses of cucumbers. Holidays in Spain have introduced consumers to gazpacho. Cucumber and yogurt salads and soups come from Cyprus and the Middle East. Lovely creamy dishes of cooked cucumber come from France. And stuffed cucumber, cucumber garnish for salmon, and dill-pickled, sweet-sour cucumbers come from Poland.

Gazpacho

- 4 large ripe tomatoes, peeled
- 1 cup peeled, chopped cucumber

- 1 cup chopped green bell pepper
- 1 garlic clove
- 1 cup clear beef stock or consommé
- 2 Tblsp. chopped fresh chives
- 2 Tblsp. chopped fresh parsley
- 2 Tblsp. chopped fresh basil (or 1 tsp. dried)
- 2 Tblsp. chopped fresh tarragon (or 1 tsp. dried)
- 1 Tblsp. Worcestershire sauce
- 6 drops Tabasco sauce
- 1/8 tsp. freshly ground black pepper
- 1 cup peeled, finely diced ripe tomato
- 1/2 cup peeled, seeded, finely diced cucumber
- 1/2 cup finely diced green pepper
- 1 cup fresh croutons

In a blender, combine whole tomatoes, chopped cucumber and green pepper and garlic clove with the beef stock. Puree until smooth.

basco sauce and pepper. Blend until thoroughly mixed.

Refrigerate soup or set bowl in a pan of ice for 2 hours. Pour into individual serving bowls. Top each with a sprinkling of the finely diced tomato, cucumber and green pepper.

Sprinkle with croutons and serve at once. Yield: 1-1/2 quarts.

Croutons

- 4 slices white bread
 - 1 cup olive oil
 - 1 clove garlic
- Trim crusts from bread and discard. Cut into 1/4-inch cubes.

Heat oil in a small pan, add garlic and saute until brown. Remove garlic and discard.

Add diced bread to hot oil and saute quickly until golden brown on all sides. Remove croutons with a slotted spoon and drain on paper towels.

Scandinavian Cold Cucumber Soup

- 5 cucumbers
- Salt
- 1/2 cup chopped parsley
- 6 scallions, chopped
- 2 Tblsp. freshly chopped dill
- 1/4 cup lemon juice
- 1 quart buttermilk
- 1 pint sour cream or creme fraiche
- Freshly ground white pepper

Garnish with 1/2 cup finely sliced radishes, 1/2 cup cucumber, finely cubed, and fresh mint leaves.

Peel the cucumbers, cut in half lengthwise and remove the seeds. Sprinkle them with salt and let them stand for 30 minutes.

Drain off the accumulated water, chop the cucumbers coarsely and place them in a blender with parsley, scallions, dill, lemon juice, buttermilk and sour cream. Blend at high speed.

Add salt and pepper and chill. Pour the soup into a large tureen and garnish it just before serving. Serves 8.

Quick Dill Pickles

- 14 to 16 cucumbers, about 3-1/2 inches long
- 2 Tblsp. vinegar
- 4 cloves garlic, peeled
- 1 tsp. whole mixed pickling spice
- 1/2 tsp. whole mustard or celery seeds
- 4 bay leaves
- 2 small bunches fresh dill
- 1 quart water
- 1/2 cup coarse salt

Wash cucumbers and drain. Pack in upright position in two sterile quart jars. Add half the vinegar, garlic, pickling spice, mustard, bay leaves and dill to each jar.

Bring the water and salt to a boil and pour over the cucumbers, filling the jars to within 1/2 inch of the top. Seal at once.

Let stand in refrigerator for at least one week before using and use within two to three weeks. Yield: 2 quarts.

Bridge

HAVE A PLEASANT TRY AT PERFECTION
BRIDGE BY WOODY BOYD ♠♥♦♣

Great partnerships don't become one easily or because of a series of good fortunes at the table. Such a result is the tip of the iceberg of success. Beneath the surface one usually finds many frustrating experiences, anguishing moments in the development of system and style. Add to that the vital requirement of compatibility which takes time for a team up to consummate and it becomes obvious that the way to a victorious confederation is delicate and demanding. As Henry Ward Beecher said, "It is defeat that turns bone to flint; it is defeat that turns gristle to muscle; it is defeat that makes man invincible." In bridge it is defeat that prepares a pair who persist to ultimately achieve victory.

Few will completely agree which pairs in bridge history are the most notable, but the ten named here wouldn't be easy to unseat.

1. Balladonna/Garozzo
2. Hamman/Wolfe
3. Goren/Sobel
4. Jais/Trezel
5. Schenken/Leventritt

Tom Smith of New York is my gage of greatness and when I measure players who have embraced my game I compare their talents and partner performance with his.

Our lead player in this week's piece I have played with but once and that was late last August at Woody Ott's Sunday evening extravaganza. While not as experienced Dr. Robert Bitterman's card playing personality, technique and tact comes very close to the celebrated Mr. Smith's way of play. Beyond each one's competence there exists in a partnership with either a conscious perception that inspires your finest gamesmanship which truly can make your effort enjoyable and rewarding.

Here is a hand from Woody Ott's game many in three no trump or four hearts found unmanageable. Bob concluded he could, even though it was a high risk endeavor.

I bid the hand as though I'd never seen 20 points before. Bob could have been pointless, but he was graced with the diamond ace and the way he played this one he needed no more.

West led diamond 4

He won east diamond king and played a small heart to dummy's king which east let him hold. Now declarer made the play of the ages... the club ace! ... Dropping East's lonesome king. His assumption was that card was there for East to bid and if it was singleton so be it. This now allowed for two trump losers which you can see were inevitable. Next the ace, king of spades and ruffing the good queen so he could return to his hand. Now he let the club nine run which East ruffed with his heart jack. East exited with a small diamond ruffed by dummy's heart six. Now the trump ten which East won with his ace and again exited with a diamond which dummy ruffed with his last trump the heart queen. At trick eleven the club queen. At trick twelve a club ruff with declarer's last trump. Trick thirteen, the diamond ten to East's Jack but that was only a total of three for the defense and ten for Bitterman and his abundant accomplice who played jeopardy with his twenty points.

THE FOCAL POINT

It is important to make sure that each picture has only one focal point... the spot where the viewer's eye travels first. To establish that point of interest, the artist must arrange a path for the eye to follow by eliminating distracting details.

RESTORING A BRUSH

If you ever had the misfortune of leaving your favorite watercolor brush standing in the water jar, there is a way to restore it to its original shape. Dip the brush in a honey or sugar solution. Shape it carefully with your fingers and suspend it in an empty glass. Let it dry for several days, and it should be as good as new.

The Pastor's Corner

Just a bite

By Rev. William C. DeVries
First Christian Reformed Church

One of the problems with dessert is that if you've really eaten well, you often don't have the room to down some sweets.

You may feel that way. You have patiently chewed my vegetables for the past two weeks. I don't blame you a bit if you push back your plate, sigh, and say, "No thank you, I've really had more than enough. I'm satisfied."

But really, you've come this far. Won't you at least try a small piece? Just a smidgin?

After all these green beans (or spinach, or brussels sprouts, or zucchini or whatever) I am afraid I don't have anything very unusual to offer. In my first course, I said sensory and scientific tests and experiments can never answer certain questions about meaning and source.

In my second course, I pointed out that answers from within our private or collective human consciousness are equally weak in coming to grips with these questions.

You've eaten with me this far and now I offer you . . . ice cream cake roll. Rather common, ordinary uncreative fare. Won't you try just a slice? A bite? You see, it's one of my favorites. The spongy cake with the less than distinctive lineage is somehow satisfying. And the ice cream which seems not quite white and more ice than cream is somehow delightful as I spoon it out from the chocolate spiral. Nothing new, nothing very shocking, nothing all that profound.

I suggest that there really is a personal being who is able to and has given us profound directions as to these questions and answers.

There is another option left for dessert. It is that there are no answers to questions of meaning, value and source. That solution is far, far less than even ice cream cake roll.

Some persons today seem to want to support this position as right and true. They say there is no meaning to life beyond what we can see and taste and test and touch. In effect, they say that the questions have no meaning and therefore no answers.

Few have the courage to follow this thought to its logical conclusions: That there is no value, no cause and effect, no meaning to human living.

While this option for dessert is open on the menu, I would suggest that it is spoiled and might make more than your tummy sick.

My dessert is, of course, the proposition that there is a personal God who has spoken to humans about key questions of reality.

Some of you will jump in to say that I don't have the courage to face the truth that questions about value and meaning are meaningless. You will say I have had to invent God to enable myself to live.

That is possible. But I don't think so.

You see, you tried to give a cause, a meaning to my action. But why, if such questions are meaningless themselves?

Harry Meserve to lecture at Grosse Pointe Unitarian Church

Harry C. Meserve, former minister of the Grosse Pointe Unitarian Church, will return to speak at the church on Friday, Oct. 26. His topic: "How Religion Heals."

Meserve will consider some aspects of life and health (such as birth control, abortion, limitation of population, living wills, euthanasia, drugs and addictions, environmental issues, attitudes toward nature and healthy lifestyles) and how religious beliefs are involved both now and in the future.

Meserve was minister of the Grosse Pointe Unitarian Church 22 years ago, when he introduced Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. to a packed house at Grosse Pointe South High School for a speech that was interrupted by heckling and applause.

Meserve is a graduate of Phillips Academy, Haverford College and Harvard Divinity School. He holds an honorary doctor of divinity degree from Meadville-Lombard Theological School in Chicago.

He has published several books, including "No Peace of Mind," "Faith in the Making" and "The Practical Mediator." He and his wife, Kay, collaborate on the editorship of The

They live in Maine, where they garden, sail, read, travel and enjoy their children, grandchildren and friends.

Harry Meserve is currently a trustee of Southwest Harbor's public library and chairman of the town's conservation commission. He also preaches at the Ellsworth Unitarian Universalist Church in Southwest Harbor.

The Oct. 26 lecture at the Grosse Pointe Unitarian Church begins at 7:30 p.m. Cost is $5 at the door.

You see, I am not forced to believe in God by my fears or anything else. And I cannot force you to eat your dessert. It's just that it fits. It's just right. It makes sense of what I see and hear and feel.

Believing in God begins to explain why some things are wrong (like racism and greed) and other things are right (like help and love). And getting to know God helps me to see where evil must not have come from and where it seems to spring from over and over again.

Admittedly, my dessert will make you hungry. If you try to get to know God, more and more questions will jump up for your mind and heart to wrestle.

What can be done about evil which is so human in its heart? What is the point of things?

But try my dessert. As you chew on your job, or your recreation, or yourself, open yourself up to knowing God. It's easy to try a bite.

It's no wonder

This can't be real. Someone tell me it's really not happening. Don't wake up University Liggett School tennis coach Bob Wood — he's enjoying one of his finest dream seasons in 30 years of coaching.

After winning their 10th consecutive Class C-D girl's state tennis championship last season, Wood and his crew decided that challenging the Class A schools would be the next task. And believe me, they've tackled the job.

Wood met with all players and parents and asked them to vote on the move. This was serious. If the players and their parents checked the yes box, then a two-year commitment was required.

The Michigan High School Athletic Association granted the request to join Class A and ULS was about to embark on its toughest task yet.

And because of its loaded lineup, ULS was given the top ranking in Class A by the coaches. Why? Because of players like Shannon Byrne, Heather Heidel, Anne Cavanaugh and Carrie Birgbauer, who are all sophomores. Others like Ali Frederick, Ify Obianwu, Lauren Gargaro, Lynn Sinkel, Natasha Levy and Liz Thomas lend more support and experience.

This team has more talent at the high school level than some colleges can boast. It's almost unfair, unjust and illegal to call this a high school team and it's no wonder it is unbeaten.

On Oct. 4, the Lady Knights hosted defending Class A state champ Ann Arbor Huron. Here it was, the test of the season. Win, and confidence builds and the door may be open to win the Class A championship. Lose, and the confidence is shattered, the move is questioned and spirits are dampened.

No pun intended, but the match was dampened and suspended by rain.

ULS plays a tough schedule, and with the talent it has always had, it should. Some of the girls are nationally ranked, while others should be, so it's no wonder they always win.

But, within a year's time ULS has jumped two classes and become the state's highest ranked team. It's kind of unheard of to make this type of move, let alone get top billing. Then again, with sophomores who play like college players all locked in at the singles spots, it's no wonder ULS is a favorite to win the state title.

So where does all this talent come from? How is ULS able to continually beef up its lineup and enjoy the championships?

The dynasty has been etched in stone and maybe that's what attracts players to the school. Years of tradition and winning don't hurt, either.

Besides gaining a quality education, players are given the opportunity to compete against some of the finer high school athletes and teams in the state. It just so happens that ULS is now one of those perennial powers in Class A, a place that will be home for some time.

A championship in its first year would be a great accomplishment for the team, but if it falters don't question the move. It was something ULS needed to do to follow its school theme and offer its students the finest in education and athletics.

Every team, including No. 2 ranked Huron, wants to show ULS it doesn't belong with the Class A teams, but ULS has a different tale to tell. The Knights are going to be in Class A for at least one more year, and with the talent they have it won't leave anyone in awe if they win back-to-back titles.

Norsemen stymie South for second straight time

By Rob Fulton

For the second time in less than a month, the Grosse Pointe North soccer team soundly defeated South, 2-1.

North, which beat South 3-1 on Sept. 12, took an early 2-0 lead and held on to knock the Blue Devils out of first place in the Macomb Area Conference White Division Oct. 5 at Barnes.

The win catapulted North (7-1) into first place, just one point ahead of South (7-2), which had held the spot despite the loss to North earlier in the season.

South, 10-2 overall, had recorded six straight shutouts since losing to North, but lost its scoreless streak midway through the first half when North's Arnaud Beavois beat South goalie Chris Dowe.

Dowe stuffed North's John Ferguson on a penalty shot early in the first half.

"There's no doubt that was a big save," said South coach Mark Christensen. "Going into the game we had been playing so well, and I was concerned we'd fall into a lull sooner or later, and we did in the first half. After Chris made the save on the penalty kick, we thought that would get us going."

Although both teams had to play into the stiff wind, North had the wind at its back in the first half. Any ball booted into the air hung up and didn't travel very far, making it difficult to clear the zone.

"There's no question the wind was a crucial part of the game," said North coach Guido Regelbrugge. "We were in a good spot to start with it at our backs, so I told the kids we had to have a lot of offense in the first half in order to take advantage of the wind."

But it took North at least 15 minutes to get busy.

"What we had to do offensively had to be done in the first half," Regelbrugge said. "We started the game slow because we didn't want to open up play too soon. We wanted to see what cannons South was shooting before we attacked back. In the first 15 minutes, though, we were too cautious so I decided it was time to move forward and attack so I told the kids to push the ball."

Carrying the play, North's Dave Miller lofted the ball on a cross kick and John Woods converted the pass to give North a 2-0 halftime lead.

"We made a mistake on that play," said Christensen, "and it cost us. It was a nice play, but we should have been able to clear the ball.

"We knew it was going to be tough to score three goals in the second half to win the game, but we were hoping the wind would help us a bit. But, we really didn't get any breaks."

Mounting a comeback, South held the ball in the North zone most of the second half, and Jason Dritsan, who now leads the team with 19 goals, booted a ball that deflected off a North defender and past North goalie Mark Roland, cutting North's lead to 2-1 with about 15 minutes to play.

"I told the kids at halftime to have a lot of respect for South," Regelbrugge said, "and not to take the lead for granted. We knew we were in for a war in the second half and we had to play for our lives."

South's Chris Paul kept dumping the ball into the North zone, but North's Amod Sarniak kept deflecting it. South, playing desperately to tie the score, hit the crossbar with a shot in the first 10 minutes of the second half, and continued to apply pressure. As time was running out South lined up for a kick from the 18-yard line, but time expired before it could get the kick off.

"Every minute was becoming more and more valuable for us," said Christensen. "We kept pushing, but didn't get the break or goal we needed. I thought we played well enough to win."

"I'm very proud of the kids," Regelbrugge said. "They did everything I asked them to do and we came out with the win. We have great respect for them (Blue Devils). They are well coached and we knew going in this would be a war all the way."

Lady Norsemen dump Devils

So North's offense didn't have a great night.

Neither did the South offense.

But the North defense had a better night than the South defense and that's why the Lady Norsemen basketball team beat the Blue Devils 36-21 Oct. 2 at South.

This was the first meeting of the year between the two cross-town rivals, and it also marked the first time the North-South game would count toward the Macomb Area Conference White Division standings.

North, now 6-4 overall and 3-1 in the league, shot only 26 percent from the floor, and South (3-7, 1-3) hit only 24 percent of its shots.

"We really started out getting — and hitting — good shots," said Norsemen coach Gary Bennett. "But after a while we just weren't hitting our shots. The shots were there, but we didn't put the ball in the basket."

It helped, too, that South only

Byrne leads tennis team; football team drops 1st game

By Rob Fulton

In powerful style, the University Liggett School girls' tennis team, playing in its first Class A season and ranked No. 1, won the Cranbrook-Kingswood Invitational Oct. 6, edging defending Class A champ Ann Arbor Huron 20-26.

South had 11 fourth-place points and North finished seventh with seven points.

"This was very exciting to win," said ULS coach Bob Wood.

Winners for ULS were Shannon Byrne (No. 1 singles), Anne Cavanaugh (No. 3 singles), Carrie Birgbauer (No. 4 singles) and Natasha Levy and Liz Thomas (No. 3 doubles).

Heather Heidel (No. 2 singles) and Lynn Sinkel and Lauren Gargaro (No. 2 doubles) were runners-up.

Earlier in the week, ULS beat No. 3 ranked (Class A) Birmingham Seaholm, 5-3. And before rain suspended play, ULS was beating Huron (1-0) and led in four of the remaining six matches.

ULS will play in the regional tournament with North and South Oct. 12-13 at Farwell Field. Play begins at 9 a.m.

The five game winning streak, and possibly the dream of making the state Class C playoffs, ended for the ULS football team Oct. 5 at Birch Run.

ULS, No. 4 ranked and riding a 5-0 record, fell 22-14 at Birch Run.

ULS turned the ball over five times and had more than 150 yards in penalties, but almost pulled off a victory.

With 31 seconds to play, the Knights had the ball at the Birch Run 5, but failed to convert and the hopes ended when quarterback Jason Drook's pass was intercepted.

"This game really hurt," said ULS coach Bob Newvine. "It set us back a little bit, but we'll be back."

ULS' Chris Carroll ran 48 yards to give ULS a 6-0 lead, but Mike Whelan's extra point was blocked. Birch Run marched down the field and tied the score, and Kevin Whitfield returned the favor by blocking Birch Run's extra point, leaving the score a 6-6 stalemate.

In the second half, Birch Run broke the tie and converted the 2-point attempt, taking a 14-6 lead. But ULS tied it at 14-14 when Carroll scored on a 3-yard run and Drook hit Ed Merriam for the 2-point conversion.

"We had the game in hand at that time, but we let it slip through our hands," Newvine said.

The ULS defense, which held Birch Run to 228 total yards, held and forced Birch Run to punt. On the punt, neither Whitfield nor Carroll called for the ball and it rolled 79 yards to the ULS 1. Three plays later, Whitfield fumbled the ball and Birch Run took over at the ULS 12.

Three plays later, Birch Run sealed the victory and ran to a 22-14 lead.

Carroll finished with 88 yards on 11 carries, and Whitfield, who had 25 tackles at his linebacker spot, carried 8 times for 28 yards.

Drook completed seven passes for 76 yards.

"We've got three big games and if we want to get into the playoffs, we've got to win every one of them," Newvine said. "The kids really played hard and battled back from mistakes and some questionable calls. I'm really proud of everyone on this football team."

The ULS soccer team came on strong last week to tie Cranbrook, ranked No. 3 in Class B, 1-1 on Oct. 1.

After a scoreless first half, ULS junior forward Walter Gasser scored six minutes into the second half, but Cranbrook answered with the tying goal with 22 minutes to play.

With strong defense from Rich Berri and James Kim, along with steady goalkeeping by Vince Harkins, Cranbrook couldn't penetrate the ULS defense. Jesse Kasom and Gasser broke into the Cranbrook secondary, but were unable to convert before time ran out.

Hoops

had 12 first-half shots and made only one field goal. Four of South's six first-half points came from the free-throw line, where it converted 25 percent on the night.

"We didn't play very well at all," said South coach Peggy VanEckoute. "We played like we were intimidated most of the game and that's just not our style. At halftime I asked my players if they thought North had walked on Lake St. Clair to get here (implying they were untouchable). I also talked about playing our game and not getting caught up in North's game."

But it was difficult for the Lady Blue Devils to break North's pressure.

"We may have faltered some on offense, but we played some good defense," Bennett said. "We limited South's shots because we forced them to turn the ball over and defense is our bread and butter.

North, behind Noelle Cormier's game-high 13 points, took an 18-6 halftime lead, and built on that in the second half by outscoring South 18-15.

"We couldn't overcome the first half," VanEckoute said. "Every time we play North it seems like we dig ourselves a hole early in the game and have a hard time coming out of it. We did, however, play a strong game the rest of the way."

Stephanie Coddens led South with seven points and Angela

Drake had six.

Amy Sacka had eight points for North and Katie Loeher and Jennifer Shapiro added seven and six, respectively.

"It wasn't one of our better offensive performances," said Bennett. "But we knew we were controlling the ball and getting good shots. We just didn't get them to go down. Even though we weren't scoring a lot, we were keeping the ball out of South's hands by controlling the ball on offense."

Homecoming loss drops Devils to 3rd in MAC race

By Rob Fulton
Sports Editor

Take away two of the 48 minutes in South's homecoming game against Fraser and the Devils would have looked like champs.

However, those minutes cost South a chance to upset the Ramblers and move into a first-place tie.

Fraser scored 10 points in the final two minutes of the first half en route to a 13-6 victory over the Blue Devils Oct. 6. The loss dropped South to 3-3 overall and 3-2 in the Macomb Area Conference White Division, two games behind Fraser with only two league games to play.

The loss also snapped South's three game winning streak, and dropped it into third place in the league.

"This was a very disheartening loss for the team," said Devils' coach Jon Rice. "The kids really played hard and we felt we outplayed Fraser for 22 minutes and all but one play in the second half."

That play in the second half was a 40-yard pass on third-and-long that Fraser converted, setting up a 35-yard field goal that sealed the game.

"We told the kids at the half that if we can dominate the second half like we did the first half then we should win the football game," Rice said. "But for one play we didn't dominate."

"The kids really played hard and the coaching staff is very proud of them. It's one of those situations that you give it your best shot and sometimes it's just not good enough."

For the second straight week, the South offensive line ruled the line of scrimmage, allowing fullback Chris Harwick and tailback Steve Wisniewski to run for a combined 170 yards. Harwick carried 20 times for 120 yards, and Wisniewski had 50 yards on eight carries.

Quarterback Tim Gramling also enjoyed plenty of protection as he completed eight of 17 passes for 100 yards. Aaron Letscher caught five of those tosses for 66 yards.

"We've been improving each week and we feel that this was our best game this season," Rice said. "It was just one of those games in which you execute and do everything right, but you don't get into the end zone."

Gramling, who completed some clutch third-down passes, led the offense to 290 total yards.

The game also marked another fine defensive performance for South, which held the Ramblers to 190 total yards, with 122 of those yards coming on two plays; an 81-yard run and the 41-yard pass completion in the second half.

Joe Wood had nine tackles, Jason Bedsworth had eight and Kelly Graves, playing in his first full game after a hand injury, had seven tackles. Frank Voelker had seven tackles and Charlie Lickfold finished with six.

It was definitely a game of missed opportunities for South.

In the first half, the Devils had a missed field goal, a touch-down called back on a penalty and a dropped catch in the end zone on a third-down play.

With time running out in the first half, South turned the ball over on downs and one play later found itself trailing, 7-0.

Fraser's Lyle Smith trucked 81 yards and Jay Gardziola, who added two field goals, kicked the extra point with 1:50 to play.

On its next possession, South had to chase down Fraser's Todd Aznavorian after he intercepted Gramling's pass and ran it to the South 5. With only seven seconds to play in the half, Gardziola booted a 22-yard field goal to give Fraser a 10-0 lead at the intermission.

After an inspirational halftime speech from Rice, the Blue Devils' offense marched the ball 76 yards and capped the drive with Harwick's 6-yard run. Jay Berschback's point after was wide, but South cut the deficit to 10-6.

"Even at that point we were very much in the game," Rice said. "We knew we could move the ball and still had a lot of time to work, but unfortunately a few things didn't go our way down the stretch."

After Gardziola added a 35-yard field goal in the fourth quarter, South took over on its own 49 and drove to the Fraser 15. However, Gramling's fourth-down pass to Harwick was just long and South never got the ball back.

"Losing is never easy," Rice said, "and it's even worse when you dominate a football game. But, we're going to have to bounce back."

Basketball

Emilie Ayrault scored a season-high 14 points and grabbed five rebounds, but it wasn't enough as the South girls' basketball team lost at Romeo, 42-38.

The loss, South's third straight, dropped the Devils to 3-7 overall and 1-3 in the MAC White Division.

"We had a 45-second lapse that killed us," said South coach Peggy VanEckoute. "The score was tied 32-32, but we allowed Romeo to score a couple baskets and we went down the floor and turned the ball over."

Tennis

Erin Tusa, playing at No. 1 singles, led South to a 5-3 victory over North Sept. 25, in a match which was rescheduled due to rain.

Also winning were Jenny Schutzman (No. 2 singles), Linda Woodrow (No. 4 singles), Erin Skinner and Dayle Dettlinger (No. 3 doubles), and Courtney Dritsan and Becky Budolsson (No. 4 doubles).

South, which finished with a 5-1 league record, took second place in the MAC Red Division Tournament with 44 points, just five behind first place Port Huron Northern.

Woodrow was a league champ, as was the No. 4 doubles team of Dritsan and Budolsson.

Cross country

Freshman Rachel O'Byrne ran a personal-best time of 19:46 to place second overall in a meet against Utica, South Lake, Warren Cousino and Anchor Bay.

With the sweep of all teams, by a score of 20-41, South moved to 14-0 on the season.

Erica Mondro, Sandy Dierkes and Heidi Wise followed O'Byrne, finishing 3rd, 4th and 5th, respectively.

The boys' cross country team moved to 11-1 on the season with wins over Utica (18-38) and Anchor Bay (15-47).

Against Utica, Marty Kraft ran a 17:42 to win the race, and was followed by Dan Taylor, Peter Gillespie, Jeremy Gayewski and Josh Wood.

Tony Oloya led from start to finish on Anchor Bay's tough course, and completed the run in 18:02. Justin Hynous, Kevin Rusch, Chris Alf, John Nickles, Tom Coyle, John Ouloughlin and Matt Solak also ran well in the win for South.

Red Barons roar past Shelby Lions

All three Grosse Pointe Red Barons football teams posted victories over the Shelby Lions Sunday, Oct. 7, thanks largely to some of their best defensive play of the season.

The varsity won 14-0 thanks to two goal-line stands, the jayvee posted a 13-0 victory and the freshman team won, 8-6, on a safety on the last play of the game.

Both varsity touchdowns were scored on two long drives. On the first drive, Jim Candela completed a 25-yard pass to Todd Drake, and running back Vince Thomas scored the extra point.

Thomas also got the second touchdown and the extra point. In all, Thomas carried the ball 34 times and had exceptional blocking from Dan Gutman, Rob ZurSchmeide, Paul Serra, Chris Dely, Dan Vormelker, Ben Reynolds and Tim Northey.

Twice the Red Barons' defense held the Lions inside the Barons' 2-yard line. Defensive standouts included Ben Peters, Wayne Ford, Andy Smith, Paul Dwaihy and Chad Andrus.

Both jayvee touchdowns came on long passes from quarterback Jeff Halso to Keith Huot. Matt Thibodeau converted one extra point. The Barons also got fine running from Ken Marone and Martin Matthews, with help from offensive linemen Ryan Dangrilli, Joey Schmitt and Kevin Brandon.

The freshman team fell behind 6-0, but then tied the score on a 33-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Mike Candela to Justin Macksoud.

The Lions stopped the Red Barons drive on the Lions' 10-yard line with seven seconds left in the game. But on the final play, Charles Ingrassia and Paul Bourke combined to force the quarterback out of the end zone for a safety.

Ingrassia made several key tackles, as did William Solomon, Kacy Matlock and Ben Staperfenne. Jeremy Adragna, Jeff Kellogg, Lawrence Selvaggi, Chris Provenzano and Rory Cleary also played well on defense.

Drugs and your kidneys

The kidneys play a major role in the elimination of many drugs and chemicals from the body.

The kidneys are relatively small organs, however. They receive one-fourth of all the blood pumped through the body and they not only filter these substances, but during the process of elimination, concentrate them within kidney tissue.

Because of this, kidneys are exposed to large quantities of chemicals, which may be present in much greater concentrations than in other tissues of the body. Therefore, it is not surprising that the kidneys are susceptible to damage from a wide variety of drugs and chemicals.

There are many circumstances in which drugs and chemicals may interact with normal or diseased kidneys, resulting in potentially serious medical problems. Almost everyone in this country has taken medicine at some point to control pain, i.e., headaches, backaches and toothaches.

There are currently around 100 preparations available without prescriptions which are used for these purposes. The preparations are safe when taken in small amounts for short periods of time.

However, strong evidence now suggests that some of these agents, when taken in large quantities for long periods of time, can produce kidney failure. This problem is most likely to occur when drugs containing combinations of aspirin and phenacetin or acetaminophen (i.e., Tylenol) are used. Several brand name preparations are currently available containing aspirin and acetaminophen such as Excedrin, Gemmisin tablets, Goody, headache powders and Vanquish.

Others are available as generic drugs and all are available without prescriptions. Even though combination analgesics are less commonly available, it is common for people to take different types of pain relievers at the same time. Taking as few as 10 tablets daily of some of these combination analgesics over a period of five to nine years can produce deterioration of kidney function leading to kidney failure.

Another major concern is that in patients using high doses of pain relievers who have developed kidney disease, the incidence of cancer of the kidney and bladder may be nine times greater than the level seen in the general population.

Since these combinations of analgesics may be present in a variety of nonprescription drugs, it is important for the consumer to carefully examine the ingredients of all analgesics (pain relievers) purchased.

The so called non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs are most commonly used for the treatment of arthritis, joint pains, muscle aches or gout. They are rapidly becoming one of the most commonly prescribed groups of drugs.

While most require prescriptions, aspirin and at least one other drug of this type (ibuprofen) are currently available without prescriptions.

Most people who take these medications do not develop problems. However, certain individuals are at particular risk of developing impaired kidney function when taking these drugs. These include: 1) older people, 2) those with underlying kidney disease, 3) those with liver disease (cirrhosis), 4) those with congestive heart failure, 5) those taking diuretics (water pills), 6) those with decreased blood volume (dehydration) from any cause such as diarrhea or vomiting.

These problems do not always develop immediately and may occur after taking the drug for several months, resulting in slowly worsening kidney failure.

A second type of kidney disease related to these medications can occur suddenly. It may be associated with blood in the urine and a decrease in urine output.

It is currently not possible to predict which individuals may develop this type of kidney disease as a result of taking these drugs, but it rarely occurs.

Fortunately, the kidney problems resulting from these medications are usually reversible if recognized early and use of the drug is stopped. It is important to discuss these potential complications with your doctor before taking these types of medications.

The abuse of illicit drugs in the United States has been continually increasing and in some areas has reached epidemic proportions.

Heroin addiction accounts for a large proportion of illegal drug use and may lead to serious medical complications, many of which are associated with kidney disease.

This type of kidney disease occurs in about 10 percent of heroin addicts and results in permanent kidney failure, which can develop as early as four to five months, or as long as years after beginning narcotic use.

There currently is no successful treatment for this disease. Other narcotics and drugs such as "downers" or high doses of tranquilizers or sleeping medications can also cause kidney damage.

Because of the importance of kidneys in the elimination of many drugs, individuals who have impaired kidney function frequently must have the doses of medications altered to prevent toxicity.

In addition, damaged kidneys are more susceptible to damage from the above mentioned medications.

The following are some important points to remember regarding drugs and the kidney:

1) Your kidneys may be damaged even when taking "normal" quantities of certain medications, 2) many medications available without prescription can potentially cause damage to kidneys and cause other medical problems, 3) it is important that your doctor be aware of every type of medication, or chemical substance that you are taking whether it requires a prescription or not, 4) all patients with kidney disease should consult their physician before taking any drug, chemical or medication.

Children's hearts

The prevention of heart disease in adults has been an important issue for several decades, but it has been only in the past few years that equal concern has been directed toward the hearts of children.

As scientists have gathered more data, evidence has consistently shown serious indicators of heart disease do show up in the young. Major symptoms, such as clogged arteries, are usually not present until adulthood.

However, common precursors of atherosclerosis (fatty deposits and fibrous plaque), can appear early in life.

Evidence is mounting linking high blood cholesterol levels in the young to increased risk for developing coronary disease in adulthood. Records show that children from countries with a high incidence of coronary disease have a higher cholesterol count than children in countries with a low incidence. In the United States, it is estimated that 5 percent of all 5- to 14-year-old children have cholesterol levels above 200 milligrams per deciliter of blood (mg/dl), a dangerous high for children.

A group of researchers from Louisiana, who are involved in the ongoing Bogalusa Heart Study, collected data about their parents' health habits and status, analyzed blood, measured blood pressure and assessed diets.

Data collected over a 12-year period revealed that high cholesterol levels can be predicted in children as early as six months, and that those who had the highest cholesterol levels as children tended to maintain those high levels as adolescents and young adults.

Because of these findings and others, most cardiologists agree that limiting your child's fat intake will help to reduce the odds against eventually developing coronary heart disease.

There is, however, some debate about the best approach to use in curtailing the consumption for small children. Although health professionals agree that children younger than 2 should never be placed on fat-restricted diets, researchers have not yet determined how little fat is too little for youngsters older than 2.

Eat Smart

By Mary Busse

Young children still have plenty of growing to do, and fat consumption may be critical for certain aspects of development.

Recently, dietary guidelines for children have been established by various health organizations, but some discrepancies exist.

The American Heart Association recommends that fat intake should not exceed 30 percent of the total calories in a child's diet (over the age of 2), and less than 10 percent of daily calories should come from saturated fat.

The American Academy of Pediatrics, on the other hand, suggests less severe restrictions. Because the academy and other health professionals are concerned that excessive fat limitations may impede the normal growth and vitality of children, the academy suggests that a range of 30 to 40 percent fat calories is more reasonable.

Parents should remember that fat content is only one aspect to consider when preparing meals for children.

Diets should be nutritionally balanced, and each of the four food groups should be represented on a daily basis. This would include a balance of lean protein choices, with plenty of fruits, vegetables and grain products, along with selections from dairy products.

The total number of calories per day is determined by your child's growth rate and individual needs.

One very important ingredient to this recipe for good health is exercise.

Many adults, upon observing a group of children for even 10 minutes, incorrectly assume that all children are spinning derbies, when, in fact, many of our children and teenagers are spending a good bit of time in the famous "couch potato position."

Again, the key to when and how much a child should exercise is in finding a balance point. Exercise doesn't necessarily have to be structured to be beneficial.

Whatever happened to the good old-fashioned word, "playtime?" This time is a very important part of a child's development. We can also help our children by encouraging them to ride their bikes or even walk to a destination, instead of jumping in the car every time they go somewhere. We are fortunate to live in a community that is well suited for biking or walking. If your children seem to balk at the idea of walking by themelves, how about going with them?

Any time of the year is great for walking, and this time of the year is especially enjoyable.

If you are concerned about your child's cholesterol level, contact your pediatrician. Your doctor is the best judge of who should be tested and at what age.

I don't often make book recommendations, but one of the handiest and most helpful books is called "Grocery Shopping Guide." The book, put together by the University of Michigan, lists almost every grocery store food product imaginable with concise and easy to follow guidelines as to fat content, and with some food items, their sodium levels.

If you wish to order this book, call 764-4394. The cost is $21.35, which includes shipping charges.

One great advantage of the current dietary guidelines for children is the hope that children will establish healthful eating patterns at an early age — a positive beginning for a lifetime of health.

Women, smoking and heart disease

At the turn of the century, cigarette smoking was considered risqué for American women.

By the 1950s, it was fashionable, but today, women are faced with the reality that what was once a "fashion statement" is now killing them.

Nearly 22 million American women still smoke, and the American Heart Association urges those women to consider some alarming facts:

- Smoking is the greatest single preventable cause of death in the United States.

- Heart attack is the No. 1 killer of American women.

- For women, smoking is the most significant risk factor for heart attack.

The solution: If you smoke, quit.

Studies have shown that women who smoke are two to six times more likely to have a heart attack as non-smoking women. In fact, any smoker who has a heart attack is more likely than a non-smoker to die from it and is two to four times more likely to die suddenly.

In addition, women who both smoke and use oral contraceptives are in greater danger.

Recent studies show that women smokers who use oral contraceptives are up to 39 times more likely to have a heart attack and up to 22 times more likely to have a stroke, than women who neither smoke nor use birth control pills.

More studies are needed to understand the influence of birth control pills on heart attack and stroke risk. However, it may be because they tend to cause slight to moderate elevations in blood cholesterol and blood pressure.

Studies show that if a woman starts to smoke, she is less likely to quit than a man. However, if she stops smoking, no matter how long or how much she smoked, her risk of heart disease rapidly declines.

In short, the days of "fashion-

'Exercise with Care'

Bon Secours Hospital Community Health Education introduces "Exercise with Care," new prenatal and postpartum exercise classes which follow the guidelines of the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

The prenatal exercise classes meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 7-8 p.m., and provide the expectant mother with a sound and safe fitness program. The class includes warm-up, mild intensity aerobic exercise, toning and strengthening, cool-down and relaxation.

The cost is $25 for four weeks.

The postpartum exercise classes meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 10:15-11:15 a.m., and help new moms get back into shape after their delivery. The class includes low-impact aerobics with emphasis on toning and strengthening the abdominal area.

Babies are welcome to come to the class, too. The cost is $30 for seven weeks.

All classes meet in the gym at the Bon Brae Center, 22300 Bon Brae in St. Clair Shores.

Roast Turkey

Make your holiday turkey a healthy choice for the entire family.

- | | |
|---|---|
| 1 11-12 pound fresh or frozen turkey | 1 cup fresh parsley sprigs, rinsed |
| 2 tbsp. whole black, white or green peppercorns, or a mixture, coarsely crushed | ¼ cup acceptable* vegetable oil (canola oil works well) |
| 1 large apple, quartered | Water |

Thaw turkey if frozen. Preheat oven to 425° F. Remove giblets and discard. Rinse turkey and pat dry. Gently loosen skin from meat on breast and legs by breaking the membrane that holds the skin to the meat and sliding your hand between the two to loosen the skin. Spread peppercorns under the skin and in the cavity. Stuff the cavity with apple and parsley.

Place the turkey on a rack, breast-side up, in the top of a 3-inch-deep roaster pan. Soak a cheesecloth in oil and cover turkey with the oiled cloth. This keeps the meat from drying out. Put water in the pan to a depth of 1 to 1½ inches to provide moisture and pan drippings for gravy. Place turkey in oven and reduce heat immediately to 325° F. Bake 2 to 3 hours, or 12 to 15 minutes per pound. Test for doneness by pricking the skin of the thigh; the juice should run clear. Or use a thermometer inserted in the thigh; it should register 185° F. when the turkey is fully cooked.

Let the turkey rest 20 minutes before serving. Serve turkey on a large heated platter and carve, removing the skin.

PLEASE DON'T DELAY! SPAY or NEUTER YOUR PET TODAY!
An altered pet is a healthier and happier companion. Also, it spares you the grief and pain of having puppies and kittens destroyed when no homes can be found. Countless numbers of sweet, innocent little ones are euthanized every day in shelters across the country because a pet wasn't spayed or neutered. If we cut down on the numbers of unwanted litters being born, we will also cut down on the number of abandoned, lost and unwanted animals to destroy.

Hungarian Grand Prix draws large crowd

By Doris A. Goleniak
Special Writer

This was the summer for Eastern Europe.

Timid westerners with qualms about communism were finally venturing across the Danube to explore the wonders of cities like Prague, Cracow and Budapest. But the sophisticated, glamorous world of Formula One auto racing recently paid its fifth straight visit to the Hungarian capital, and local organizers proudly announced they would be coming back for the next five years.

One of the best attended events on the 16-race F1 calendar, the Hungarian Grand Prix attracted Italians, Germans and Austrians, as well as huge numbers from Eastern bloc nations.

A huge grandstand, with open seating, is opposite the pits. Three-day tickets cost from about $110 to $140 (U.S.). The track is laid out in a natural bowl and the cars make a steep drop beyond the first curve, then climb to the back portion, go downhill again and then uphill in the final runs to complete a lap.

There are grandstands carved into the hillsides around the track, with prices ranging from $38 to $47 (U.S.). Huge standing room areas with an excellent view of the circuit were only $15 (U.S.). Tickets were sold by IBUSZ, the Hungarian tourist office, or were obtained from European agents like Page and Moy of England, which also organizes group tours. Grand Prix Tours of California also features a package plan.

The enthusiastic crowds were fun to observe. Huge banners lined the grandstands, as various groups showed their support for their favorite drivers or teams, especially Ferrari.

McLaren-Honda driver Gerhard Berger, from Austria, was most popular. Unfortunately, while contesting third place in the final laps of the extremely tight race, Berger tried to overtake Nigel Mansell's Ferrari at a narrow chicane, and only succeeded in knocking both cars out of contention. Despite their disappointment, the partisan crowd gave a generous reception to victor Thierry Boutsen of Belgium, whose Williams-Renault led from start to finish.

But it was no easy win for Boutsen. He was under pressure the entire race, first from Berger, then from Sandro Nannini in the Ford powered and sponsored Benetton, and finally from Ayrton Senna of Brazil. Amazingly, the top few cars were only seconds apart throughout the hour and 50-minute race.

Boutsen, who had the pole position for the first time in his 115-race career, set track records for pole and race distance speeds. Teammate Riccardo Patrese of Italy, who finished fourth, set a new track record with his fastest lap of 174 K/ph (about 108 mph).

Three time Detroit Grand Prix winner Senna finished second, after a controversial move that pushed Nannini off the course. But the other Benetton, driven by Nelson Piquet, finished third.

The Hungaroring may be somewhat slow compared to other European race tracks, but it provides great atmosphere and a chance to see the magnificent F1 machines perform through several corners and changes in elevation. But best of all, it gives visitors the opportunity to experience the enduring beauties of Budapest.

Castles, churches, museums, scenic viewpoints in the Buda hills, strolls and cruises along the Danube, famous coffee houses and relaxing sidewalk cafes are all there at refreshingly affordable prices. There's even a McDonalds.

More expensive are the flashy downtown spots like the Duan Intercontinental, Forum and Atrium hotels where you'll find most of the teams and drivers. But Budapest has numerous modestly priced establishments in classical buildings full of old-world character.

Restaurants are plentiful and the Metro (subway) costs about

Maples leads Parcels

Robin Maples has led the Parcels seventh-grade basketball team to two straight wins by scoring a total of 36 points.

Maples had 25 points in Parcels' 35-20 win over Warren Woods, and 11 in a 19-18 win over Eastland.

13 cents, while taxi fares are about $1.

The people are friendly and helpful, and most in the service professions know some English. It is no wonder the Hungarian Grand Prix has proved to be a tremendous hit with racing fans.

Lee the trainer

Lee Shin (center), owner of the Grosse Pointe Academy of Tae Kwon Do, was an assistant trainer of the U.S. National Tae Kwon Do team at the 1990 Pan American games in Bayamon, Puerto Rico, Sept. 6-9.

He's pictured with a few of the team members. Shin was coaching from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. every day during the competition.
