Middle school student feels war effects firsthand By Ronald J. Bernas

Staff Writer Mike Rhode speaks very matter-of-factly about his parents, Dale and Ruby

The 12-year-old knows they're safe and he isn't worried, even though they're halfway across the world participating in Operation Desert Shield.

He's also matter of fact when he talks about having to take the second semester of the seventh grade - which he started at Parcells Middle School - in a new school. Mike, an only child, is moving tomorrow to live with his aunt and uncle in Fostoria, Mich., until his parents come home.

He's had a few months to prepare for the separation; his parents, both members of the National Guard, left shortly after Thanksgiving for training at Fort McCoy in Wisconsin. They were home for a surprise visit at Christmas, then on Dec. 29 they left to help staff an evacuation hospital in Saudi Arabia.

His parents told him exactly where they will be, what they'll be doing and even gave him "A Soldier's Guide to the Middle East." "There's all sorts of rules in it," he said.

"They're all dos and don'ts about Saudi Arabia. It's like if you're a woman you have to sit in the back of the bus, and you can't eat food or drink on the streets during the religious days and things like that. There's all sorts of rules.'

One of the rules - not wearing a crucifix - prompted his mother to give him her crucifix, which he wears proudly outside his clothing.

Although his mother wasn't called to duty, she volunteered to go because her husband was called. She is a medical technician and he is a supply sergeant.

"I don't worry about them too much," he said. "I know they're going to be in safe hands being together. And they're not worried either. My grandma on my mom's side is real worried, though."

When his parents were home at Christmas, they told him what they would be doing and showed him the NBCs (Nuclear Battle Combat suits) they were issued "It's kind of like a snowmobile suit and

To gauge the effectiveness of the control measures, the City Council hired traffic engineer Tapan K. Datta, of Goodell-Grivas Inc., to conduct a before-andafter traffic study at 34 locations between Fisher and Lewiston and Kercheval and Mack.

While presenting his findings to the City Council and residents, Datta said Ferber's control measures have accomplished what the they were intended to do. He said traffic has been diverted from minor to major roads.

Furthermore, while the traffic study indicated traffic has increased in the area 23.8 percent since 1985, the roads are not overburdened.

'In the level of traffic congestion, traffic delay," Datta said, "I don't think the city of Grosse Pointe Farms has anything to be worried about at this time on the major road system.'

His comment was based on his study of several intersections. He found that the wait time for motorists at the intersections was in the "A" and "B" range. "C" is the desired value of wait time at an intersection; whereas, "A" and "B" are better and "D" and "E" are problems.

The designation of major and minor roads was a sore spot with Designated major roads are Fisher, Moran, Kercheval, Ridge, Charlevoix and Chalfonte. Minor roads in the area north of the Hill and included in the study are McKinley, McMillan, Lewiston and Merriweather.

Moran Road resident Charles Leahy, who said he put a lot of research into the major vs. minor road issue, said no engineering study was made prior to the designations being made in the 1950s. Furthermore, he pointed out that Ferber's traffic control measures were not made based on a traffic study.

Leahy urged the council not to make the control measures permanent, and he asked that a traffic engineering firm study the situation and come up with its own plan.

Fisher and Moran residents argued that regardless of their roads' designation, they are residential streets and not designed for heavy traffic. Eight Fisher Road residents, including one in

As the new administrator of Michigan's Attorney Grievance Commission in Detroit, Grosse Pointe Woods resident Philip J. Thomas has his work cut out for him.

His appointment to the Attorney Grievance Commission (AĞC) followed an investigation and critical report of commission policies and mishandling of ethics cases concerning two of the state's most prominent lawyers, including the president of the State Bar of Michigan.

Following the report, the former AGC administrator and several state court commissioners resigned. State Supreme Court staff attorney Frank Greco was named interim administrator, and Thomas was appointed deputy AGC administrator.

On Jan. 1, Thomas officially became the administrator for the AGC and Greco returned to his iob with the Supreme Court in Lansing. He will act as part-time liaison with the AGC.

Despite the cloud over the AGC, Thomas is thrilled with the appointment.

Arsonist torches cars in the Park

Police believe three car fires at two addresses in Grosse Pointe Park last week were the work of an arsonist.

At 2:58 a.m. Jan. 7, firefighters responded to a car fire in the 800 block of Westchester, where they found a 1991 Oldsmobile Calais in flames. Investigators believe the car was deliberately set on fire by someone who poured a flammable liquid on the front and rear of the car.

At 4:30 a.m. Jan. 8, another car fire was reported in the 700 block of Middlesex, about two blocks away from the previous car fire. This time, a 1988 Pontiac Bonneville and a 1990 Cadillac were ablaze. A flammable liquid had been used to start the fires, according to police.

Park detective Lt. David A. Hiller said the arson attacks were not directed at any individual but were random in nature. The victims were not related in any way.

He said the incidents are very serious. At the Middlesex address, the garage was damaged by the fire from one vehicle. He said it is fortunate no one was hurt. Arson of insured property is a felony carrying a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison. - John Minnis

The board of education, Citizens for a New Library and the Friends of the Grosse Pointe Library are planning to use the next 2-1/2 weeks to sell what they call "the most important referendum to come before the people in years."

They are, of course, talking about the Feb. 4 vote on the bond issue to fund a new library. Although the library has been a community issue since Central Library was built from donated funds in the 1950s, this particular plan at this particular site is three years in the making.

The board hopes it ends happily with voters approving a $7.6 million bond issue for a new 43,000 square-foot building on the grounds of Brownell Middle School.

To date, more than 400 families have contributed funds to the campaign run by the Friends of the Grosse Pointe Library and the Citizens for a New Library which paid for, among other things, mailings to Grosse Pointe homes about the proposed proiect.

The school district has distributed a series of pamphlets. Superintendent Ed Shine has spoken to city councils, PTOs and other community groups which were willing to listen.

"We want to get all the information we possibly can out to the people so they can make an informed vote," Shine said. "The more they know, the better for all concerned."

Dr. Charles Hanson, director of libraries, has set aside office hours for answering questions about the proposal and the need for a new library. He said residents have been asking him questions in person and on the range from the cost to the need to what went into the selection of the site.

Opposition to the new library has been centered on its proposed site, not the library itself. Neighbors of the proposed site vehemently opposed it at two meetings of the Grosse Pointe Farms City Council. The Farms council rejected the plan at the first meeting but approved it at the second meeting.

Although opposition remains - based on the assumption that traffic will increase tremen-

"The Public Library from Stone Age to Space Age" is the topic of a presentation to be made by Dr. Charles Hanson, director of the Grosse Pointe Public Library, at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, Jan. 24, in room B-133 at North High School.

"With an important election for a new public library slated for Feb. 4, the Department of Community Education is offering this session to provide background to the ballot issue," said Dr. George T. Eddington, director of community education. The program is free.

Topics to be discussed are: What is happening as traditional public library services meet the computer age? What does the information explosion mean to our public library and its users? The proposed library will also be discussed.

Brownell students, limiting field space and possibly lowering property values - it is not organized.

'There is opposition, but it's a rather small group," said Dexter Ferry, who has been working behind the scenes to encourage a ves vote on Feb 4

Ferry, whose family donated the land and building for the present Central Library, has contacted people who have been vocal in their opposition and met with them privately.

"Public meetings are the worst way to get yourself heard and to listen to people," he said. "By and large the meetings have been friendly. I won't say I've changed any minds, but I wasn't trying to.'

Although Ferry is working for the passage of the bond issue. he says he's "submerging my own feelings of what would be the best way.

He says while he has ideas where a new library should be, the question before the community is the library at the Brownell site. It is a bond issue he says should be passed.

"I'm working for the passage because I want us to get off dead center," he said. "We have been working for four years, and it's time to move forward. You can't have what you want all the time. There's a thing called compromise. That's what we all need to do.'

A recent survey conducted by the Grosse Pointe schools shows that 46 percent of those who responded would support the new library, 39 percent wouldn't and the remainder was undecided.

While those figures please the district, no one is planning anything until the polls are closed and all votes are counted.

It's business as usual for unusual medical conditions at Children's

When Children's Hospital of Michigan dedicated its new ambulatory care center Jan. 7, Ryan Miller, 13, of Grosse Pointe was there to help celebrate. His parents, Denise and Tom Miller, give Children's the credit for their son's current good health.

The Millers took Ryan for a routine checkup four years ago with a new pediatrician, Richard Ryszewski, M.D., then chief of staff at Children's. Ryan seemed fine, although he tired easily. But the doctor found blood and protein in the boy's urine and knew something was wrong. He suspected a kidney problem.

Ryszewski referred the Millers to Larry Fleischmann, M.D.,

Youths detained in BB-shooting incident

Three boys were detained after a window was shot out with a BB gun in the 400 block of Touraine in the Farms Jan. 10.

At about 8:30 a.m., officers saw a car with three youths traveling at high speed northbound on Touraine. When the driver failed to obey the stop sign at Mack, Farms officers in two police cars pulled the car over.

A Farms 16-year-old was driving the car, while a 17-year-old Park youth sat in the front passenger's seat and a 16-year-old Park youth sat in the back.

One of the Farms officers saw the butt of a pistol sticking out from under the passenger's side of the front seat, and all the vouths were ordered out of the car. The pistol was a BB air gun. During the traffic stop, the officers received a report that someone had shot out the front window of a home in the 400 block of Touraine. The resident reported hearing a car slow down in front of her house. Then her front storm window shattered and the car took off at a high rate of speed.

The youths were taken to the Farms police station. The 17year-old said the gun didn't belong to him, but he admitted shooting at street lights. He said one BB accidentally hit the window of the house.

The 16-year-olds were released to their parents, and the 17-yearold was released pending further investigation.

Fleischmann, who also lives in Grosse Pointe, ordered numerous tests, including a renal biopsy that put Ryan in the hospital for a week. The diagnosis: membranoproliferative glomerulonephritis, a disease affecting the membrane around the kidneys.

Ryan had Type 3 of the disease, the rarest type. No one is sure why he developed the condition; the culprit may have been a strep infection.

"The kidney is like a tight filter," his father said. "The disease inflamed both of Ryan's kidneys and made the holes in the filter too large, so that blood and protein were being excreted."

If the condition hadn't been caught early, it could have led to irreparable kidney damage.

Ryan was given Prednisone, a steroid, to reduce the kidney inflammation. The medication made it difficult for him to sleep and to concentrate, but the boy maintained his status as an A student at Pierce Middle School.

His parents made him stop playing hockey and other contact

Options for learning disabled

The Learning Disabilities Association of Grosse Pointe (formerly MACLD) will present a program on "Vocational Education or College? Options for L.D. Students" on Monday, Jan. 21, at 7:30 p.m. in the Grosse Pointe Central Library.

The program will feature a panel of teachers, including Annette Zola, Sandy Kuhl, Leo Lamberti, Karen McAllister, resource room teachers at South High, and Cindy Manetta, vocational coordinator for the Grosse Pointe schools.

Vocational education has been declining steadily in Grosse Pointe schools in recent years, due in part to increased requirements for graduation and lack of enrollment.

As a result, students who might want or need to pursue options other than full-time college are graduating poorly prepared to exercise those options. sports. "We're very protective of his kidneys," his mother said. But Ryan continued to play baseball. Last summer he led his team in home runs and made the Little League all-star team.

"We tried to keep a positive outlook," Tom Miller said. "Dr. Fleischmann encouraged Ryan to stay active and maintain as much of his normal activity as he could."

Although Ryan's disease wasn't life-threatening, dealing with it was hard on the family. The Millers also have a daughter, Sarah, 11.

A year after his disease was diagnosed, Ryan had a "closed" biopsy, which meant an overnight stay in the hospital. The second biopsy and additional tests showed the kidneys were no longer inflamed and had returned to normal.

Fleischmann started weaning Ryan off the Prednisone. He's been free of medication for several months now. Ryan continues to see the doctor for a checkup every two months.

Tom Miller, a developer, was so impressed with the way ng disabled L.D. students are just such a group. Since, by definition, a student with a learning disability has normal or above normal intelligence, many of them are capable of succeeding in college. But because of the challenges posed by their disability, they may need to extend their college education beyond the usual four years, work and go to school part time, or pursue some other type of further education. The panel of teachers will discuss these and other options for students, and they will offer ways to creatively combine to the ways to creatively combine both college preparatory and vocational classes to develop an individualized high school program for each student. They will allow time at the end of the program to answer questions and discuss concerns.

The program is open to the public at no charge. Refreshments will be served. Children's Hospital cared for his son that he volunteered to help the hospital and was recently elected to its board of trustees.

"When Ryan was first diagnosed, I called physician friends all over the Midwest for advice on specialists," he said. "Whomever I called referred me back to Children's Hospital of Michigan." Another young resident treated at Children's for an unusual condition was 3-year-old Lauren Ahee, born with a hemangioma in the airway.

Hemangiomas — red, bloodfilled sacs — are common birthmarks, often called "strawberry" marks. On the chest or back, even on the face, they're usually harmless, and disappear by the time the child enters school. But in Lauren's case, it could have been life-threatening.

Her parents, Julie and Chris Ahee, took her to a hospital near their Grosse Pointe home when she was 3 weeks old and having trouble breathing. The infant spent three weeks in intensive care before physicians were able to diagnose her condition.

When she was 2 months old, Lauren had a tracheotomy. Surgeons cut a hole in her windpipe below the hemangioma and inserted a tube so she could breathe.

Several times, the doctors removed the hemangioma with a laser, but it kept growing back.

Although she was satisfied with the care Lauren was getting, Julia Ahee took her to Dr. Walter Belenky, chief of otolaryngology (ear, nose and throat) at Children's.

"The staff had more experience in dealing with this type of problem," she said. "They see about five cases a year."

Living with an infant who depends on a tube to breathe is difficult, and the Ahees also had a toddler to care for. Lauren needed 24-hour nursing care; someone had to be there in case her tube became blocked. Lauren was hooked to a monitor that sounded an alarm whenever there was a problem.

Her parents were eager to wean her off the tube, but the girl had a hyperactive airway. Whenever physicians tried to remove the tube, her airway would go into spasms and she'd stop breathing.

Belenky advised the Ahees to wait until Lauren grew a little more, to give the scars from the laser procedures a chance to heal thoroughly.

"Periodically, we would close up the 'trach' with tape to give her an opportunity to make sounds and strengthen her vocal cords, but she couldn't talk or vocalize until she was 18 months old," Julia Ahee said. "Then she learned quickly."

At 18 months, after five laser treatments and numerous stays in the hospital, Lauren was able to breathe on her own.

She spent a week at Children's when physicians removed the tracheal tube. They wanted to observe her closely so they could intervene quickly if she couldn't breathe on her own. She spent another few months on the monitor with home nurses watching her at night.

Lauren has not needed treatment for the hemangioma since she was 22 months old. The scar from the tracheotomy will be repaired surgically when she's about 5.

News efferson Chevrolet takes over old Hammond dealership By John Minnis

Assistant Editor Jefferson Chevrolet, which is owned by a Park resident, took ownership of the old Hammond Chevrolet dealership Jan. 9.

Hammond Chevrolet on Jefferson in Grosse Pointe Park closed in October after only a couple of years under the ownership of Ivy Hammond. The reason given for the closing was continued operating losses.

Ray Tessmer is president of Jefferson Chevrolet, a dealership on East Jefferson between Chene and Adair near downtown. Tessmer has owned the dealership since 1953.

Another Park resident, John J. Cook, who formerly owned Cook Ford on Mack where Bob Maxey Lincoln-Mercury is now, will operate the Park dealership for Jefferson Chevrolet Co.

Cook said he and Tessmer have both lived in the Park for some 40 years and together have more than 100 years in the automobile dealership business. Cook said he first began working for Tessmer in 1962. He then operated his own Ford dealership on Mack from 1966 to 1975.

"We're looking forward to a showroom expanded and long relationship (in Grosse Pointe Park)," Cook said, adding that because he and Tessmer are longtime Park residents, they are concerned about making the business live up to the standards of Pointe customers and residents.

The interior of the 40-year-old building is being completely refurbished from top to bottom. The walls are being painted; carpeting replaced; the service and prep areas steam-cleaned and painted; customer lounges and rest rooms modernized; and the brightened. Already, 144 fluorescent tubes have been replaced in the showroom alone. 'We are going to try to make this a showplace," Čook said, "and a clean operation that is a definite asset to the community.'

He said the dealership should be open on a skeleton basis by Jan. 21, and he hopes full operations will begin by Feb. 1. "This will be a full-fledged dealership in service and sales," he said.

The dealership's motto is "Dedicated to total customer satisfaction.

The Park dealership is owned and operated as a satellite facility of the Jefferson Chevrolet Co., Cook said. It is not a separate franchise.

He said that while Jefferson Chevrolet-Grosse Pointe - as the Park dealership will be called will offer all the amenities of a full-service dealership, there will be additional benefits in being a satellite of the downtown dealership.

One advantage will be tapping into the 37 years of experience and success of Jefferson Chevrolet. Another bonus will be the downtown dealership's vast stock of parts.

On Monday, Cook was answering a stream of questions from painters, electricians and building officials in his attempt to get the dealership ready to open. And while the facilities will be presentable, Cook said improvements will be an ongoing pro-

"This operation will be designed to take care of the automobile needs of the local Chevrolet owners," he said.

Jefferson Chevrolet-Grosse Pointe is also an authorized Geo sales and service dealership.

Dear Dr. Weber:

Thank you for your message and for telling me about what the members of the Grosse Pointe War Memorial Association are doing to demonstrate support for the members of our Armed Forces serving in the Persian Gulf. I am heartened by the number of individuals who have initiated such projects. They serve as a source of strength as we work to

A second man then came into the manager's office. The gunman handed the cash bags to the second man, who then went to the drive-through window and handed the cash bags to a third man waiting in a car.

The gunman then told the manager to get into the cooler and not come out for 10 minutes. ... if you come out before that, someone will be waiting," the gunman said. The manager waited, then called police.

fast as we would like."

One of four Mercy surgeons who have Vietnam combat experience, Abbe says mass-casualty drills help fine-tune the teamwork essential to caring for hundreds of critically injured military personnel. The exercise also helps prepare the crew psychologically for a "worst-case" situation that few on board have ever seen.

"On a bad day in Vietnam, we saw 30 to 40 wounded," recalls Abbe, who served on the longsince-retired hospital ship USNS Sanctuary 20 years ago in the South China Sea. "Today we have to prepare for something far, far worse.'

If the United States goes to war with Iraq, Abbe and military doctors ashore in Saudi Arabia have been told to expect anywhere from 5,000 to 40,000 casualties, depending on the length and type of battle.

Should war come, the Pentagon has in Saudi Arabia scores of portable hospitals and thousands of doctors, nurses and medics. Facilities range from sandbagged aid stations to airconditioned tent cities called combat support hospitals.

In mid-August the Navy dispatched the Mercy and its sister ship, the USNS Comfort - the first hospital ships sent to a war zone since Vietnam. As supertankers, they once hauled crude oil from the Persian Gulf. Refitted in the 1980s, they are the ninth-largest U.S. hospitals, military or civilian.

More than 800 doctors and nurses staff a brand-new modular hospital in northern Saudi Arabia. Called Fleet Hospital 5, it supports U.S. marines stationed near the heavily fortified Kuwait border.

The 500-bed facility sprouted from 450 containers loaded on pre-positioned ships - some anchored in the Indian Ocean - for quick unloading and assembly by navy Seabees. Like pieces of a puzzle, Fleet 5 was snapped into place in less than two weeks. It now occupies 28 acres of Saudi coastline.

High-technology hospitals like the Mercy and Fleet 5 are designed for "definitive," long-term care of battlefield wounded, say military medical officials in Saudi Arabia.

Closer to the front, combat medics and surgeons would help keep alive the thousands of

As the Persian Gulf standoff me," Abbe says. "Some patients wounded who would be expected in the opening hours of a desert battle. Hundreds of helicopter ambulances, called "dustoffs" by U.S. troops, would fly the wounded to the Mercy, the Comfort and hospitals scattered across the desert. Still closer to the lines, Army and Marine Corps doctors are teaching combat lifesaving skills to riflemen.

"My goal," says Capt. Rick Visor, a doctor with the Army's 1st Cavalry Division, "is to have one in every 10 soldiers trained to stop bleeding, start an intravenous injection and treat for shock.'

To overcome the squeamishof battlefield medicine, ness other Army combat units have practiced loading body bags used to transport dead GIs, reading the last rites to dying soldiers and handling slaughterhouse waste.

About one in six patients on the Mercy and Comfort are being treated for emotional or psychological problems, according to the Navy.

To help doctors and nurses face the potential of mass casualties, the Navy has dispatched teams of psychological counselors to the Mercy and Comfort.

"Now that we've been here several months," says a psychiatrist, "the fear of going to war seems to be a normal part of life.'

War buildup reaches into the Pointes

s the countdown to war continued early this week, the preparations reached deeply into the homes of Grosse Pointe relatives and friends of the men and women called to service.

The Grosse Pointe War Memorial at the latest count listed 25 servicemen and women now on duty in the armed forces in the Persian Gulf or in training to serve there who are residents of the Pointes or have other connections with the community.

The kind of family hardship that results from Operation Desert Shield is illustrated by the 12-year-old student at Parcells Middle School in the Pointes, Mike Rhode, who is moving to Fostoria, Mich., to live with an uncle because both his mother and father are serving in a Michigan National Guard unit in Saudi Arabia.

But the effects of war preparations are being felt elsewhere on the home front, too. Oil prices rise and fall with the arrival of optimistic and pessimistic news from the Mideast. Stock market prices respond in the same manner to the same incentives. And product shortages, plant closings, layoffs and other disruptive reactions to the preparedness efforts hit families everywhere.

As the Jan. 15 deadline neared, many churches in the Grosse Pointes and elsewhere remained open for prayers for peace and the safe return of loved ones in the combat area

For it is the fate of the men and women in the front lines that remains foremost in the minds of most Pointers, whether they have sons or daughters, fathers or mothers or other relatives or friends in the Gulf.

That is why it was good to learn about the informative and grateful responses from service people who have been getting news letters, packages of needed items and messages of support from the War Memorial through its cooperation with Operation Desert Shield.

As in previous wars, news from home is still valued above anything else that servicemen and women receive. By contributing to that transmission on behalf of the Grosse Pointe community, the War Memorial is performing a welcome service not only for the people in the Gulf but for their supporters on the home front as well.

The letters from the war zone to the War Memorial expressed common themes: a big thank you for letting the people in service know we at home care about them and usually another thank you not only to Pointers but to people from all over the country who have sent them magazines, books, games and packages containing everything imaginable.

In their letters to the War Memorial, written well before the Jan. 15 deadline, most of the service people also said they hoped for a peaceful solution of the Gulf crisis but they also expressed a quiet confidence that if called upon they could do the job they've been assigned to perform.

Through its project, the War Memorial is bringing the war buildup and those serving in it closer to all of us at home. By supporting the project with contributions of needed items or money, we at least can show our support for the men and women of the armed services and our appreciation for their efforts on our behalf.

hatever happens in the Feb. 4 vote on a new Grosse Pointe Public Library, the supporters of the $7.6 million expansion start their final drive with at least one indication of public backing.

Superintendent Edward J. Shine told a media briefing last week that the recent community survey of the public school system showed a vote of 46 percent in favor of the project and 39 percent opposed with 14 percent of the respondents undecided. The major reasons for opposition, the critics said, were questions about the need for the expansion at this time and the selection of the Brownell School site which is opposed by some residents of that area. Despite the continuing threat of war and the recession, library supporters hope to build on the base of support shown in the community survey by spreading the message of the need and by answering questions about the project throughout the Grosse Pointe School District.

same explanation was given for the division among Michigan's 20 members of Congress who voted 13 to 7 against the resolution.

Rep. John Dingell, who broke with his Michigan Democratic colleagues to back the use of force, denied it was a partisan issue and pointed out that the resolution would not have carried in either house of Congress without Democratic support.

As the American people always do at the onset of war, they are rallying behind the president and no doubt expressing stronger support for his course now than was given in a poll after the U.S.-Iraq talks in Geneva failed last week.

That poll, surveying 1,000 people for Time magazine and the Cable News Network, reported that 54 percent of the respondents favored having the United States go to war soon after the Jan. 15 deadline, and only 40 percent preferred to wait.

In view of the Washington warnings that war could begin sooner rather than later, it may even be under way by the time these words are read on Thursday.

Like the great majority of American people, we are still hoping against hope that war won't come but with feelings of both apprehension and resolve, we, too, are ready to support the president and our U.S. forces in the Persian Gulf if it does come.

States, cities in dire straits pending by state and local governments has more than tripled in the last 30 years but federal contributions have dropped off since hitting a peak in 1978

In addition, the federal government has continued to mandate higher state support for federal programs. Medicaid, for example, took 3 percent of state spending back in 1970 but 12 percent in 1990.

As a consequence, 27 states including Michigan are being forced to reduce spending below what they had planned for the current fiscal year to head off deficits which, unlike the federal government, they are forbidden to run.

In a report on the financial crises in the cities and states, the New York Times quoted Henry Aaron, director of economic studies at the Brookings Institution, the Washington-based research organization, as saying that their fiscal plight "seems to be worse than at any time" in his memory.

Even worse, the lack of revenue spells special disaster for poverty-ridden inner cities, the Times was told by Richard P. Nathan, director of the Rockefeller Institute of Government at the State University of New York.

He said cities face "a new crunch time" because of worsening economic prospects, a tapering off of state aid, a sharp drop in federal aid and a "hardening and concentration" of social problems like drugs, crime, poverty, homelessness and AIDS.

The Times does not see much likelihood of any improvement in the situation as a result of the budget compromise worked out by Congress and President Bush last fall. That provides "some added money for domestic programs this year but freezes domestic spending for the next two years and restricts its growth for two years after that," the paper pointed out.

Under the circumstances, it's understandable that Gov. John Engler of Michigan took such a hard line on spending in his inaugural address but the future looks bleak for the poor and others unable to meet their own needs in the months ahead, even if we avoid war in the Middle East.

Shades of the Depression!

Again, thank you, Grosse Pointers!

Questions but no answers

What is news and when does it cease being newsworthy and become an invasion of privacy?

The media are being taken to task by an irate public which perceives them as a callous and sensation-seeking mob out to get a story no matter who gets hurt in the process.

I've sat in classrooms and workshops where case studies were presented and photos passed around with the question: Would you publish this story or this photo and why or why not? There's generally no consensus because there's generally no right answer.

What is offensive to one person is acceptable to another. Or: One man's garbage is another's treasure.

Like Janus, we are a two-faced public who on one hand abhors a gory photo or one with nudity in our community newspaper, but on the other hand regularly buys out the National Enquirer at the supermarket. We say we're appalled by violence, yet we follow fire trucks or slow down on the freeway when there's an accident to get a better look at someone's tragedy.

What does it mean when we say the public has a right to know? And how much should the public know before the line separating good taste from bad is crossed? It's a tough question.

I was listening to the news last week while preparing dinner, occasionally glancing at the TV. A reporter was interviewing family members of a National Guard unit being sent to the Persian Gulf.

The camera focused on a child as the reporter asked something emotion that people truly underto the effect: And what is a 9year-old girl like you so sad about? The youngster tried to answer but became overcome with emotion. She struggled unsuccessfully to answer until finally her mother spoke for her. Even when her mother spoke, the camera never left the child's face.

I was angry. At that point, that young girl's privacy was invaded, I felt. But another person would argue that it's only through such a display of raw stand the tragedy of families being separated by the threat of war.

Right after that, Channel 7 anchor Doris Biscoe interviewed a mother whose son was in Saudi Arabia. She asked the mother if her son felt war was imminent and if he was ready to fight. The woman broke down and when she finally answered, there was so much anguish in her voice, I don't think there were many dry eyes in the viewing audience.

When the camera came back to Biscoe in the studio, she said: "It's so difficult for me to ask these questions," and she, too, was overcome and unable to continue. Her co-anchor went into the next segment.

My reaction was different this time. It was a touching and very telling moment. The mother agreed to be interviewed, the circumstances were difficult and both she and her interviewer reacted in a very human way.

But I was bothered by this whole issue. I called Joe Weaver, Channel 2 editorial director. Joe lives in the Woods and he has more than four decades of broadcast experience. I wanted to know how these situations were handled years ago and when it became the fashion to ask highly emotional questions.

"I always hated that part of the business," he said. "It's a difficult thing to do and I've been guilty of it."

It's hard, he said, and sometimes it's harder on the reporter. "I remember Walter Cronkite questions is not any more prevalent now than it has been in the past. We are more aware of it because there's more TV coverage than in the past.

Undaunted, he cut it in half and reassembled it outside. The boys took the reconstituted "glider" up to Mile-a-Minute Hill for its virgin flight. But the budding engineer got his first comeuphanging on the flying machine, he ran down the hill and flipped upside down in a quick lesson about the aerodynamics of the airplane tail. He grasped better the physics of the deep sea dive. With half a hot water tank strapped over his head and shoulders, he descended into the depths of the gravel pit, carrying a 50-pound horse tether weight to keep him down. The boys watching on the shore above kept him supplied with somewhat fresh air through a garden hose powered by two bicycle pumps. The "diving bell" provided entertainment for the whole neighborhood for a summer, as all the boys took turns.

He was the ringleader, the eldest, the smart one, the first one who went to college.

One time the two older boys caught the younger ones smoking. Agonized pleas "not to tell Dad" resulted in a neat blackmail arrangement: The big boys wouldn't tell if the guilty parties would sign a confession and be their slaves for life.

It wasn't long before the slavery wore thin and the oppressed decided to take their fate into their own hands. Feeling pretty sure that the dread letter of confession was hidden in the clubhouse (a new and improved wooden one this time), they torched the place.

The shack burned to the ground; unfortunately, the confession didn't, being buried under the doorstep. But the conflagration caught Dad's attention. A true Solomon, he punished everybody, blackmail weighing as heavily as arson.

THE WHITTIER

"a tradition of excellence in senior living"

415 Burns Drive Detroit, Michigan 48214

Grosse Pointe is a beautiful place to live. The residents rightfully take pride in their cities. They have a wonderful school system and beautiful parks. Manicured lawns and well-kept homes show that people care about their surroundings.

It is a pity that the condition of Central Library, a highly visible community meeting place, does not also reflect the care of Grosse Pointe residents. Shelves are overflowing, even though boxes of books have been stored in the attic of Richard School and shelving has been added.

Seating is at a premium, especially at night and on weekends. Lack of space and an outmoded electrical system prohibit potential uses of current technology. Meeting space is woefully inadequate and the staff operates in areas that are severely cramped.

I am aware of these conditions because I worked there as a librarian for several years until it was necessary for me to move this past year. You only need to visit to see them for yourself. Ask for a tour. Take a look around and consider that these problems are not the fault of the outstanding, knowledgeable staff, but the result of meeting your demands and needs in a burgeoning, worldwide information explosion.

Let me make a comparison with a new library in a community not much larger than Grosse Pointe that I have started work at this year. In a beautiful, open, airy environment, shelves have ample room for growth, and people are rarely disappointed by not finding what they want.

Several tables, comfortable chairs and private study rooms allow the library to accommodate a number of people without appearing crowded. Several public access terminals take the place of the outdated card catalog. Meeting rooms are available and equipped for current technology.

The spacious Children's Department even has its own story room. In the workrooms, staff members are able to work comfortably. There is plenty of room for both people and books.

This is the kind of library that Grosse Pointers would love to have. This is the kind of library that people should think of when they think of Grosse Pointe. This could be Grosse Pointe's future Central Library - if you will vote for it.

Peace

To the Editor: Enclosed please find a photo/message of hope for peace in the new year.

The golden ribbon, partially obscured and weatherbeaten, clinging to the evergreen, reveals the fragile but enduring symbol of hope for peace. The powerful stars and stripes sentinel of defense is a shield behind which we all hope for peace.

Irresponsible To the Editor:

I just wanted to say thank you to the car full of teenage girls who "zapped" my brand new 1991 Plymouth Acclaim in the parking lot behind the Clairpointe Restaurant and Arbor Drugs on Sunday, Dec. 16.

It was a beautiful sunshiny day and no reason for these irresponsible kids to drive the way they did ...

and without even acknowledging what they had done. I had just left the Clairpointe Restaurant after shopping at Jacobson's and Arbor Drugs when I spied these teenagers between my car and theirs looking at my car. Immediately I realized that something was wrong and as I approached my car to see what had happened, they quickly scrambled into their car and drove away. As they did so, I hollered out "thanks a lot" but I don't think they heard me as they had their windows rolled up.

I am a very good and careful driver and I have been driving since I was 13 years old — having gotten my driver's license at 14 (in those days, you could). I am a 73year-old woman who lives in Detroit in a senior citizen complex and I do practically all my shopping in Grosse Pointe.

If these kids are old enough to drive and can get a driver's license, I think they should live up to their responsibilities and should have acknowledged that they hit my car and then we could have exchanged information like insurance companies, driver's licenses, etc.

I have a $100 deductible on my car and when I had the damage assessed by the claims department of my insurance company, it came to $487.35. (P.S. If I had had time to get their license plate number, I would have contacted the driver or the parents of the driver and made them pay the $100 deductible. But they drove away too fast.) I thought to myself: What kind of upbringing do these kids have, anyway? Don't their parents teach them what to do in cases like this (or anything else)?

It's a shame that these young people (the ones who hit my car) do not live up to their responsibilities. And they will probably go all through life living like this. Again, I say, "Thanks a bunch, kids you don't know what inconveniences this has caused me — having to take my car to be assessed by my claims assessor ... and now having to take it to a bump shop where I will have to leave my car for two days — due to your careless driving. I really need my car.

In case you didn't know it, young lady, when you park your car in a lot with angle parking, you drive one way, not the way you drove, in the opposite direction, because that is the only way you could have damaged the left-hand side of my right front fender.

Perhaps this young lady could take a lesson or two from this golden girl who has been driving for 60 years without an accident to my name. On two other occasions, I was rear-ended by two different drivers who didn't stop when I did -both at traffic lights.

Vote yes To the Editor:

Grosse Pointe's three libraries have given me much pleasure, help and education over the 30-plus years I've lived here. I voted for expansion in 1967 and 1987, but it failed both times. Thanks to our excellent library staff, the library has continued to meet most of my needs.

Now, however, we are nearing the 21st century. Whether we are 3, 30, 60 or 90 years old, we must expand our horizons — and our library — to keep up with our new needs and interests, modern communications, and technology.

Unless we vote "yes" in the millage election Feb. 4, we risk short-changing ourselves, letting our library become caretaker of the past irrelevant to our present and future. This would be a terrible limitation for Grosse Pointe residents — and would reduce our community's desirability.

Grosse Pointers were given the Central Library free – a gift from the Ferry Foundation. No one likes to statist pay higher taxes, but after 38 years it's time Grosse Pointe residents face up to paying for a new building ourselves.

I urge fellow residents to votes "yes" in the library bond election on Feb. 4.

Frances L. Schonenberg Grosse Pointe Farms

Leader

To the Editor:

As a resident of Grosse Pointe and a professional librarian, I would like to encourage a yes vote for the library on Feb. 4.

While studying for my degree, the Grosse Pointe Public Library was always used as an example of a library on the cutting edge of service to the public.

The changes in library service in recent years have been overwhelming. Videos, computers, CDs – all have had an impact on what libraries can offer their clientele and what the public now expects from its library. The Grosse Pointe Public Library was originally designed to house mainly books and periodicals in what was then (1950) perceived as adequate space. Now, however, the information explosion together with technical developments make it imperative that the library have more space. The current Grosse Pointe library can barely keep up.

The time has come for the library to take its place again as a leader. Vote yes on Feb. 4, and make the Grosse Pointe Public Library a library to be proud of. Sally D. Arrivee

To the Editor:

The propaganda barrage continues! The school board seems to have unlimited funds for their mailings. (Whose money do you think they're spending?)

As a design/build contractor of 40 years' experience, I can unequivocally tell you that far and away the best and least expensive approach is to expand the present Central Library. The building could be very simply enlarged with a generous twostory addition to the north, out into the Grosse Pointe High School playfield.

The board has had the attitude up to now that G.P.H.S.'s land is sacrosanct and cannot be used for library expansion, but I ask you, is the playfield more important than the library?

It would seem that the biggest single parcel of land in Grosse Pointe (except for the Country Club of Detroit and Lochmoor) could spare 3/ 4 of one acre of playfield for this worthy project. It's okay to take 2-1/2 acres from the smaller Brownell field, but unthinkable to take 3/4 of one acre from G.P.H.S. The logic escapes me.

First: If the library is so short of space, let's give it some added room right away and at no cost to the taxpayers by:

1. Getting out of the tool loan business entirely. Replace all those tool cases with bookcases and you'll have room for several thousand more volumes.

2. Getting completely out of the videotape business. There are a dozen nearby video rental shops (which are taxpayers, not tax spenders). Many people were shocked at some of the titles; "Karate Kid" being a good example of how the people at Central Library have lost their focus on education.

3. Getting out of the art rental business. Devote that floor space to "real" library functions. In a meeting with Mr. Dexter Ferry, he suggested that we might make some sketches for a simple, energy-efficient addition to Central Library and I'm working on that now.

John Bruce has let us know that our library is 40 years old, as if that's a real crime. The suggestion being, "it's obsolete and we must get rid of it." The libraries at Eaton and Oxford are over 400 years old and neither is slated for abandonment.

Since this controversy has been under way, I have checked the library parking lot 25 times to try to understand the "terrible shortage of parking space." Today, Sunday, Jan. 13, at 1:30 p.m., the parking lot was filled, but there was plenty of close-up free parking on Kercheval and Fisher roads. In 25 trips through the lot, this was the first time I saw it filled.

The Ferry family's generous gift of $500,000 in 1949 has a 1991 value of several million dollars. How can we be such ingrates as to scrap this fine library in favor of (redundant) school board offices?

John Bruce indicates that it's going to cost a great deal of money to maintain this building. The suggestion that we'll save a lot of expense by letting the board have it for offices is in glaring error. If the board gets Central Library for its new offices, whose dollars are going to pay for the deferred maintenance? Think!

To the Editor:

"Legally the board is on very thin ice. The Ferry family's gift was for a library. I've seen copies of the original documents and the gift was clearly spelled out as "library." How can we not be outraged by the illegality and immorality of this proposal to scrap this fine facility for some redundant offices?

Grosse Pointers are mostly wise, thrifty, careful buyers. I hope they won't be hoodwinked into approving this expensive, ill-conceived, badly timed, gross error.

Peace: Our fondest hope

Hope: Webster's Thesaurus - anticipation, assurance, belief, desire, expectation, confidence, faith, optimism, prospect, trust.

Webster's Dictionary - feeling that one's wish will come true, want, expect.

Recently, during his sermon, our minister spoke of hope. His usage of the word confused me somewhat and when I returned home, I hastened to my desk resources and proceeded to read varying definitions of the word hope.

I realized that my connotation of the word was a limited childlike definition, as in things hoped for. Upon reflection and after considerable time contemplating the enormous scope of the word, I now have a fuller realization of its almost limitless meanings.

We often say I hope and pray, but aren't these words synonymous? Our minister said he had never hoped so completely as he had during a recent crisis. I suspect that in his particular instance many of the aforementioned definitions came to mind, not the least of which was faith, hut also ontimism, assurance, belief, desire, confidence, trust and the ultimate wishing for positive results.

It would seem to me that now, more than ever before, we are in a world situation that requires extreme hope on the part of every one of us. We can pray for wisdom and caution from the leaders in whose hands our future lies and we can hope with all our hearts that peace will prevail.

Georgia Miriam Lane

A funeral mass was held Dec. 29, 1990 at St. Paul Catholic Church for Georgia Miriam Lane, of Grosse Pointe Farms, who died Dec. 26, 1990. She was Home. 93.

Miss Lane was born in Detroit Nov. 11, 1897. She moved to the Farms 54 years ago, but as a youth she spent summers in cottages on the Provencal Weir farm when Grosse Pointe was a resort town. The two cottages were rented by the family from Mrs. Weir - one was used during the day and the other for sleeping only.

Miss Lane was the last surviving member of the John Lane family which settled in Detroit after migrating from County Kerry, Ireland, in 1836.

Mr. Lane became the city weighmaster at the Hay Market located at Michigan Avenue and Third which was the western Detroit city limits in the 1850s.

That site later became the location where two of his sons, James and George, established their business, Lane Brothers, a heating and cooling company.

The youngest of Mr. Lane's seven sons, William P. Lane, after passing the bar became Wayne County clerk from 1887 through 1890. He then became the second lawyer in the United States whose practice was exclusively medical-legal after graduating from the Detroit College of Medicine with a medical degree in 1897.

Mr. Lane's eldest son, Georgia Lane's father, was a builder, and as general contractor built the older buildings in Waterworks Park, many schools and the old Wayne County jail.

Miss Lane was a graduate in liberal arts from Detroit City College (now Wayne State University) and from the Detroit Conservatory of Music. She was a member of the Women's City Club of Detroit for more than 50 years. She was a member of the Neighborhood Club where she played bridge every Tuesday until her death.

Miss Lane is survived by her niece, Suzanne Lane Gidday. She was the sister of the late Ella Lane Gidday, Blanche E. and Hazel D. Burial was in Mount Elliott Home

Children's Trust Fund: A check for kids

Childhood. It's a time of innocence, fun, adventure, discovery and growth. But for thousands of children in Michigan, "The Wonder Years" could more accurately be described as "The Years of Living Dangerously.

More children are living dangerously because their lives are besieged by violent crime, drugs and child abuse. Children in Michigan are especially vulnerable. Consider these alarming trends, based on newly released statistics from the state Department of Public Health:

• A white child in Michigan is more likely to die before the age of 20 than most other children in America.

• A black child in Michigan is twice as likely to die before the age of 20 than most other children in America.

• A growing number of Michigan children are dying violently and from suspicious causes, such as sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS).

 An increasing number of Michigan children continue to die, despite state officials' findings in 1989 that 60 percent of about 3,000 childhood deaths each year are preventable.

Even more distressing than the fact that babies and children age 5 to 19 in Michigan die at rates higher than the national average, is the reality that this pattern won't change any time soon. According to L. Annette Abrams, director of the state Office of Children and Youth Services, budget cuts prompted by the state's current deficit of almost $1 billion will be "devastating" to efforts to save more children's lives.

Today, more children's lives are affected by violent crime than ever before. Their neighborhoods are virtual war zones where shootings, beatings, rapes, and drug and gang-related violence are everyday occurrences. In Detroit, more than 30 children 16 years old or younger were shot to death last year. Most were innocent victims who were simply at the wrong place at the wrong time.

While crime can victimize anyone at random, it preys mostly upon the weakest and the most vulnerable in our society - the very old and the very young. The lives of young black males are the most endangered. In fact, the average black life span has actually declined as a result of the murder and drug epidemics.

Young people are not only the victims of violence; they are also increasingly the perpetrators of violence. Homicide is now the leading cause of death among children in many American inner cities, and about half the assailants are other youths.

According to FBI figures, 2,208 juveniles were arrested in the United States in 1989 on charges of murder or nonnegligent manslaughter, 25 percent more than the year before. That's twice the number killed in 1965, when there were 6.5 million more people under 18 in the United States.

Charles Patrick Ewing, a forensic psychologist and au-thor of the book "Kids Who Kill," predicts that killings by children will quadruple by the end of the decade.

"We're about to see an epidemic of juvenile violence such as Americans have never before witnessed," Ewing said. "In the past five years, juvenile homicide has increased five times faster than homicides committed by adults."

While drugs, family instability the availability of guns and poverty all contribute to the increase in violent crime, Ewing points out that child abuse is the one factor most closely linked to later killings by teenagers. "Kids learn to be violent nd they learn from their and role models, especially their parents. And kids who are especially brutalized by their parents learn to be the most brutal, the most likely to kill others," Ewing said.

The evidence proves that he is absolutely right. Child abuse is a tragic legacy that is passed on from one generation to the next. The majority of adults who abuse or neglect children were abused or neglected themselves when they were young, and at least 80 percent of prison inmates were severely abused or neglected during their childhood.

That's why child abuse is everyone's problem. Every taxpayer pays the price of child abuse. The question is: Wouldn't you rather pay to prevent child abuse in Michigan? All of us face a simple choice: Either we pay now to prevent child abuse, or we pay a much higher price later.

That's where the Children's Trust Fund of Michigan (CTF) comes in. The Children's Trust Fund is a non-profit, independent organization that works to prevent child abuse. By checking the CTF box on your state income tax form, you not only help prevent child abuse and neglect in Michigan – you also help prevent the escalation of violent crime.

The Children's Trust Fund is a source of funding for more than 100 local councils and programs throughout the state that work to prevent child abuse and neglect. To date, more than 300,000 children and families have directly benefited from CTF through educational and prevention programs that really do make a significant difference.

cases represent only a fraction of the total. What will happen to these abused children and others like them in the years ahead? Without help, many of them will turn to drugs and crime.

That's why your help is needed so desperately. And current federal and state budget cuts make the funding of child abuse prevention even more urgent. If you're getting a refund this year. we urge you to check the CTF box on your state income tax form and donate a portion of that refund to CTF. If you're not getting a refund, we urge you to also check the CTF box on your state income tax form and make a direct donation to help prevent child abuse and neglect in Michigan.

Help prevent child abuse before it happens. If every Michigan taxpayer donated $5 in 1991, it would result in $21 million in donations that could be used to help hundreds of thousands more children and families in every county of the state.

We can't fight crime or win the war against drugs if we fail to prevent child abuse. Remember, you have the power to make a difference by simply checking a box and making a small once-a-year donation. Farms traffic study: Changes are working

By John Minnis Assistant Editor

Barricading McKinley at Mack and making McMillan a one-way street is working, according to a traffic study commissioned by Grosse Pointe Farms.

"The city of Grosse Pointe Farms has achieved exactly what was stated in the proposal," concluded the study by engineer Tapan K. Datta of Goodell-Grivas Inc.

The purpose of the sevenstep temporary traffic control measures implemented in July was "to improve and expedite the flow of through traffic to and from the Hill area and Cottage Hospital from Mack Avenue on the west end of the city, while preserving the integrity of the city's existing major road system." Datta said.

In July, as part of several temporary traffic control measures, the Farms barricaded McKinley at Mack and made McMillan a one-way southbound road from McMillan to Ridge Road. Also, several sections of road were posted as "Not A Thru Street."

The study counted traffic on sections of Fisher, McKinley, Moran, McMillan, Muir, Lewiston, Merriweather, Kercheval, Ridge, Charlevoix and Chalfonte. The counts were taken in May, before the traffic control measures were implemented, and in October after they were imposed.

The study found traffic volume on the affected streets decreased 12.3 percent from May to October. The decline is attributed mostly to seasonal variations and the traffic control changes that were made in July, according to the study.

McKinley experienced a 22.6 percent decline in volume from May to October; Mc-Millan traffic fell 37.6 percent; Muir was down 43.1 percent; Lewiston fell 28.3 percent; and Merriweather saw a 26.4 percent decrease in traffic.

The reduction in McKinley traffic is credited to the barricade at Mack, forcing drivers to take alternate routes. Mc-Millan's traffic lessened because when it was changed to a one-way street, northbound traffic was eliminated.

The reduced traffic on Muir and Lewiston is also credited to McMillan becoming a oneway street.

Reduced traffic on Merriweather occurred because motorists found using Fisher (northbound) and McMillan (southbound) was more direct. As a result of the control measures, the study concluded: 1) The changes had no effect on the capacity of the major roads.

2) The barricading of Mc-Kinley at Mack and making McMillan one-way southbound forces traffic to travel major roadways, thus reducing use of minor roadways.

Designated major roads are

Fisher, Moran, Kercheval, Ridge, Charlevoix and Chalfonte. Minor roads are Mc-Kinley, McMillan, Muir, Lewiston and Merriweather. Not everyone agrees with the study's conclusions. Elaine Hartmann, a former member of the Farms traffic committee, said traffic is actually less than it was two decades ago when the Hill had a grocery store and more retail businesses. She is particularly opposed to barricading streets.

"It's unfair and this is a flawed study," she said, contending that the study is incomplete because it doesn't include traffic on Kerby and Moross or on north-south streets in Grosse Pointe City, such as Lincoln.

Grosse Pointe City Manager Thomas Kressbach said he and some of the City Council members have received calls from residents concerned about what effect the Farms' traffic controls are having on streets in the City.

Because the Farms study did not include City streets, there is no way of knowing what the traffic volume was on nearby City streets before the Farms implemented its new traffic controls, Kressbach said.

He and the council are eager to hear from their residents at the public hearings scheduled by the Farms City Council at Grosse Pointe South High School Auditorium Jan. 14 and 28.

Thomas said he is not reforming the commission. The actual reforms and changes were put in place four months ago, he said, and he is continuing the process. He said new employees have been hired to work with the staff at the AGC.

The AGC investigates complaints of alleged unethical and sometimes criminal behavior against lawyers. If a preponderance of the evidence indicates an attorney did act inappropriately, disbarment could result.

The AGC handles some 3,500 complaints a year that vary from minor to serious infractions. Thomas stresses, however, that the complaints involve a very small percentage of the state's lawyers.

For five years before joining the AGC, Thomas was the Judicial Tenure Commission's trial lawyer. "I tried all the big cases while I was there," he said.

Much of the investigative work was done by the FBI. "At the time, I didn't realize how exciting it was," he said of his stint with the Judicial Ten-ure Commission. "It was a very fast track."

Early in his career, Thomas went after murderers, armed felons and rapists as one of the top trial lawyers in the Wayne County prosecutor's office. He handled many of the high-visibility cases.

Unlike the internal affairs officer despised by his colleagues in Hollywood police thrillers, Thomas said he does not sense any animosity toward the AGC or himself from his peers in the legal community.

"I have not detected that en masse," he said. Of course, he's not counting on dinner invitations from the lawyers and judges he has prosecuted in the past.

Thomas earned his undergraduate degree from Wayne State University and his law degree from Detroit College of Law. He worked for about a year for the biggest case as far as evidence firm of Jemal & Jemal in Harper Woods.

His wife, Susan, is a supervisor at Bon Secours Hospital, where she has worked for 13 years. The Thomases have three children: Amy, 17; Michelle, 16; and Megan, 3.

Thomas said he was 19 when he and Susan were married. After a long respite from childrearing, Thomas said they decided to have a third child. "It's like starting over," Thomas said. Referring to his Lebanese-American background, Thomas said, "Everybody in my family parents were both Lebanese-Americans who were born in this country. He grew up on the southeast side of Detroit.

His father ran his own business, Phil Thomas Produce, until he died. The company continues today under the management of Thomas' mother and brother.

Farms company brings animation to engineering

By John Minnis Assistant Editor

The normally staid field of engineering becomes animated as practiced by a Grosse Pointe Farms company.

Simulation Dynamics Inc. (SDI) was founded five years ago by Mark and Deborah Rupersburg in their basement. Today the thriving company has a modern office in the renovated Punch & Judy Building on the Hill.

At first glance, one would think the company merely makes neat computer animations, such as a Ford Bronco swerving down a test track but the graphics are far more than cartoons.

Using the company's own software - SDI Animator - the Bronco not only is seen moving, but it also does so realistically that is, it obeys all the rules of physics.

"A lot of people can make cartoons," said Mark, who is president of the firm. "But these are based on physical laws.

The computer animations are used to test yet-unbuilt products, such as the suspension of a future car or truck. But instead of actually making the parts and manually testing them, they are built and tested on a computer.

For example, SDI tested a new suspension system for one of the automotive companies. The data about each part of the suspension system are entered into the computer. One software program, called ADAMS, analyzes the moving suspension assembly and provides a report.

Rupersburg took the ADAMS simulation a step further by marrying it with his SDI Animator program. The result is a physically correct test drive of the new car suspension that engineers can view as well as verify with the ADAMS numbers. While watching a computergenerated vehicle produced by the SDI Animator, engineers see the rear of the vehicle squat slightly as the vehicle takes off. As it brakes, the front drops slightly. The engineers can then refer to SDI's analysis on paper to see exactly how much the front and rear ends of the vehicle moved.

Simulation Dynamics Inc.

Owners: Mark and Deborah Rupersburg Location: Punch & Judy Building, Grosse Pointe Farms Product: Engineering consulting, analytical prototyping, software, hardware

Slight adjustments can be made to the suspension system, for example, to get better performance. And because it's a computer prototype, the changes can be made in minutes and the results are obtained immediately.

"Analyzing prototypes can be done quicker and less expensively," Rupersburg said, "and that shortens the design cycle and makes the company more competitive.'

Also, while engineers are putting the computerized prototypes through their paces, they can change the angle of view from below to above and all around the prototype.

SDI can also provide its computer simulations on videotape. By connecting a Silicon Graphics

By Ronald J. Bernas

Iris 4D workstation running the SDI Animator to a Lyon Lamb MiniVAS animation controller, SDI can transfer the computer simulations onto videotape.

While the computer animations run at a not-quite-smooth 3 1/2 frames a second, the SDI Animator feeds one frame at a time to the animation controller so that the videotape records at a life-like 30 frames a second. A sound track can be added to the videotape explaining the analysis as it rolls along.

"It's not flashy by Hollywood standards." Rupersburg said. But it is pretty slick for the engineering world of analytical prototyping, as the entire process is called.

Along with the hardcopy engineering report, computer simulation and videotape, SDI clients also get an SDI Chart package, which creates presentation-quality charts and x-y plots of the ADAMS analysis.

While the novice can watch the computer simulations with the fascination of a youngster at a Nintendo game, the setup is complex, and untold hours of programming went into it.

"We take this for granted," Rupersburg said of his product and the business, "but when you sit back, you think it's amazing.

Surprisingly, Rupersburg didn't get his degree in computer science. Actually, he has a mechanical engineering degree from Wayne State University. (A faithful alumnus, he donated a copy of his SDI Animator software to the WSU School of Medicine for use in designing a safer helmet for bicyclists.)

Rupersburg, 35, is experienced in the aerospace and defense industries. He worked for some five years for Lockheed in California before he and his wife returned to Michigan, and he was employed with General Dynamics Land Systems.

Braving the cold weather paid off for Nagler in this snow scene taken near Traverse City.

Winter photography is rewarding

Don't let the cold weather keep you indoors this winter. Winter scenes are distinct, beautiful, and have a mood all their own. Quite often, ordinary scenes in the summer take on a totally new dimension in winter light.

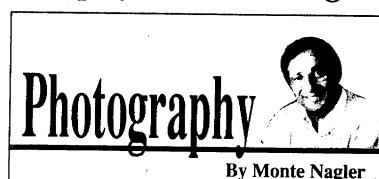

The minor discomfort you might encounter in the cold air is more than worth the picture possibilities that await you. Bundle up both you and your camera gear and head outside for some adventurous shots.

In preparing for cold weather shooting, there are some things to consider. The first is your film which, without precautions, may become brittle and break in your camera. Minimize the danger by keeping your camera and film as warm as possible by storing them under your jacket and never leaving them in your car for prolonged periods. Also, on cold days, the camera's meter can become sluggish because of a weak battery. Always make sure your camera batteries are fresh and get into the habit of carrying an extra one with you.

Use a slow, steady movement when advancing the film from one exposure to the next. A slow cranking will reduce the strain on the film and cut the possibilities of static electric marks.

Wear thin wool or cotton gloves under your regular gloves. When you're about to take a shot, remove the outer pair. The inner gloves will give cold and also flexibility to handle the camera controls. If you plan to do a lot of winter photography, it would be wise to purchase a special photography vest. They have many pockets providing convenient space for carrying film, lenses, a spare battery, etc. Because the vest is worn right next to the body, all items are kept warm by your body heat.

Here are some pointers to help add impact to your winter photographs:

 Back lighting or side lighting give dramatic effects. Your pictures will capture the sparkle of sunlight on the snow and reveal textures and patterns not obtainable from direct, overhead light.

Sun or bright snow can cause flare in your shot. Always use a lens hood.

 The abundance of white all reward you with a fine shot. areas in winter scenes can fool your meter which is calibrated to read normal proportions of lightness and darkness. Pay particular attention to exposure or snow may come out too gray. Open up a stop or two, or better still, take your reading off a Kodak gray card or the back of your hand.

• On a blue sky day, use your polarizing filter. The sky's blue hues will be darkened for added impact without adversely affecting the color values of other subjects in the scene. You won't lose the effects of sparkling snow either.

 Daylight balanced film will render true color reproduction of your shot. But, for a special effect, try using tungsten balanced film outdoors without the necessary correction filter. Your pictures will pick up a romantic blue tint that can be quite unusual and dramatic.

• Keep your vision tuned for closeup photo possibilities. Frost patterns on a window, sun shimmering on an icicle, or snow delicately etching a tree branch will

Pointers play key role in U-M Marching Band

Former students from the Grosse Pointe area played an important role in the successful 1990 season of the University of Michigan Marching Band. The reward — a trip to the Gator Bowl in Jacksonville, Fla., to spend the holiday season in warm weather.

Among those in the U-M Marching Band from this area were former Grosse Pointe North High students George Deeb, George Nichols and Erik Kuszynski.

In addition, Deeb was named the director of the marching band's smaller unit, the Fanfare Band, which toured the stadium after half-time to perform various tunes to cheer on the students and alumni.

For Nichols and Deeb, the 1990 season was their finale, winding up with their appearance in the Gator Bowl on New Year's Day. Nichols has appeared in three bowl games and parades, including two Rose Bowls and this year's Gator Bowl. In his four seasons, Deeb has played in the Hall of Fame Bowl in Tampa during his freshman year, two Rose Bowls and the Gator Bowl.

Kuszynski was performing in his first bowl game as the Wolverines trounced Mississippi. Since he is not graduating this year, he plans to be in the U-M band again next season.

Deeb wrote the score of the Simpson family theme for the Fanfare Band and performed the piece around the stadium for his final appearance at home, donning a Bart Simpson headpiece to go along with the music.

Omnimax Theater gets boost from Kresge Foundation

The trustees of the Kresge Foundation approved a $75,000 grant to the Detroit Science Center for the renovation of its 12year-old Omnimax Theater. The grant requires that the DSC raise about $50,000, the balance of its $300,000 campaign goal, by April 1.

"The grant demonstrates the foundation's faith in the people of Detroit and the friends and staff of the Detroit Science Center," said Jerry Porter, executive director of the DSC. "It is now up to us to live up to the Foundation's expectations by raising the rest of the money we need to complete the restoration. We have an excellent steering committee for the project, and we're well on our way to reaching the goal."

The restoration began on Jan. 2 and will include replacement of 240 specially constructed highback reclining chairs, cleaning and painting the giant. domed screen, upgrading the sound system and installing new carpet throughout the theater.

Grosse Pointers Cynthia and Edsel B. Ford II are honorary co-chairmen of the project, dubbed "To the Max." Corporate contributions and grants are expected to finance almost half of the project.

Joan Gehrke of Grosse Pointe and Dr. Susan E. Harold of Franklin are general cochairmen of the drive to raise $100,000 through chair sponsorships.

For each $500 donation, the sponsor will be recognized with a brass plate attached to a chair and on a larger plaque outside the theater.

The Detroit Science Center's Omnimax Theater, which opened in 1978, is the third oldest theater of its kind in the United States. It features a domed screen more than 67 feet in diameter, a six-track stereo sound system and the projection of images three times larger than in traditional movies.

The theater will remain closed during renovation. It will reopen on Thursday, Feb. 7, with the film "To the Limit," about how the body reponds to exercise and to physical and mental stress.

The Detroit Science Center is a private, non-profit corporation located in the city's Cultural Center, at 5020 John R. The center's exhibit hall with its more than 50 hands-on displays and the Discovery Theater will be open during the construction period at a reduced rate: $3 a person for those 6 and older; $2 for 4- and 5-year-olds. Hours are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Fridays; 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturdays; and noon to 6 p.m. Sundays.

The notable rank entitled "Life Master" is a conspicuous position that honores those players who have accumulated three hundred master points in competitive duplicate play. When you consider that there are some thirty-six million bridge players in North America and a little over sixty-seven thousand have achieved this distinction, then they are a very elite number indeed.

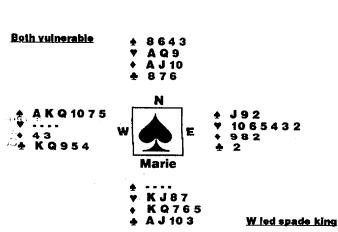

One of those who just celebrated that prominent level of playing attainment is Marie Efthimides. We have competed in the same game often, but recently Joyce Krout suggested we partner each other in play. It was a very pleasant three hour exercise and I enjoyed it immeasurably. Marie's game is well structured and her bidding is basic and disciplined. Many would be satisfied with her gains to date with no intention of initiat-

Many would be satisfied with her gains to date with no intention of initiating further improvement, but I perceive that Marie won't rest on her laurels. This now becomes the hard part for she must search out better players, above her grade and learn from them and that experience. It isn't easy to pick the brains of a pro much less enroll them in play, but there are those who are considerate and take joy in coaching the accomplished who are at the door step of becoming more proficient.

Here is a harrowing hand from our recent game that Marie handled in an extremely commendable manner.

Marie gave East's double a lot of contemplation, but she finally passed the decision to me. In fairness to my lovely partner, I should have probably corrected to five in the diamond minor (only three pairs were there) but even with a Moysean fit and some kind of heart stack against us I surmised that ten tricks were easier than eleven. So much for my erroneous omen. Note that six diamonds (which no one found) via the route of a dummy reversal was unbeatable.

When the dummy hit the table, Marie didn't flinch even though you knew she would have liked to. Tipped that the trumps weren't behaving she never the

To touch a trump would have been disastrous so she went about gaining a top by utilizing those cards separately. At trick 1, she ruffed the spade; 2, a diamond to the ace; 3, a second spade ruff; 4, the club ace before someone discarded that suit; 5, a diamond to the jack; 6, a third spade ruff; 7, a diamond to the ten. Up to now, East had followed suit, but from this point on he only had trumps left and four of them were in a losing position. 8 dummy's last spade ruffed which East had to under ruff. The Pastor's Corner

Let there be peace

By Rev. John Corrado Grosse Pointe Unitarian Church

By the time you read this we may be at war.

I hope not and so do you.

As individuals, we may have little effect on keeping the peace in the Persian Gulf. As individuals we can have a significant effect on keeping the peace in our communities, our families and our churches.

War and the threat of war can bring out the worst in us, even (and perhaps especially) when we are determined to work for the best. Working for peace with warlike rhetoric and tactics makes us thralls of the demonic tendencies which lead to more war.

I'm 50. I've been a Unitarian Universalist minister nearly half my life. The early years of my ministry were taken up with much social strife: the cause of racial justice and the Vietnam War.

Some people, remembering the highs they could get marching, singing, sitting in and, yes, tearing down, think of those years as a kind of golden time.

I can certainly remember some peak moments. I also remember another side: the acrimony; the yelling and shouting; the judging and accusing; the broken friendships and split congregations.

Few were the places where people of goodwill were able to agree to disagree on whether there is such a thing as a "just war" or, if there is, what constitutes one.

Those questions are emerging once again.

Those who fought for peace often muddled and muddled their message with gratuities: lampoons of the president; vicious and vulgar placards; petty personalizing. I've already seen evidence of similar behavior in reaction to our present crisis.

An ironic folk song of the Vietnam years mocked those who justified war by claiming that we had God on our side. The Deity had better be more tolerant than most of us are in this present situation, for those at the ready call upon him by three names: God; Allah; and Yahweh.

When we reach to hold hands in peace and solidarity in the Grosse Pointe community, we would do best and most favorably for peace by puncturing old parochialisms. No longer can open and plural witness or worship for peace be limited by language or predisposition to variously denominated Christians. In this time, in this community, there are also Jews, Moslems and Humanists.

Peace proclaiming, peace building, peace keeping are not only intra-faith, but inter-faith as well.

I hate war. I hate war-mongering.

setting convenient to the Pointes.

I hate situations where all possibilities seem bleak. Women and men of my generation share a legacy which easily inclines us to favor peace. America has been at war much of our lives. Our grandfathers fought in "the war to end all wars.'

Utter recommends preconcep-

"It's especially important because in many cases, care of the high risk pregnancy begins prior to pregnancy. There are certain health behaviors that a woman can begin prior to becoming pregnant that increase the chance of a successful outcome for her and her baby," he says.

Some medications such as certain anti-hypertensive drugs, anti-thyroid medications and blood thinners, have been associated with abnormal physical development in babies. So women who use these medications may be prescribed alternative drugs before attempting a pregnancy.

Diabetes is one pre-existing condition that can place a woman or her baby at high risk. Utter notes: "The risk of anomalies is increased, the risk of miscarriages may be increased with poor control of diabetes around the time of conception. So a diabetic woman planning on becoming pregnant should see her obstetrician prior to becoming pregnant so she can get good control of her diabetes. Then, certainly, that tight control has to go on throughout her pregnancy. It does include more frequent, early visits to her doctor to maintain good blood sugar control.

According to Utter, with modern care of diabetic pregnancies, the incidence of illness and death in newborns has decreased, approaching that of the normal obstetric population.

Then our fathers went to war. We went to school with refugees from that war.

Our older brothers went to Korea.

Vietnam was our war. We held our baby boys in our arms while we sang: "When will they ever learn," wondering if someday somebody would see them as cannon fodder.

Having held a son, I will tell you that all the posturing, cant and rhetoric emanating from prideful men in Baghdad and Washington is not worth the dribble on my precious baby's face.

There are things worth living for and things worth risking life for. But in a world made small by our ability to communicate and mis-communicate in an instant - and blow ourselves to bits - we cannot be casual about what those things might be.

Opera isn't just for the elite anymore

By Ronald J. Bernas Staff Writer

'Because of the music, the spectacle and everything else involved in it, for me, opera is probably the highest art form we can offer the public."

But, says operatic tenor David Troiano, opera is not inaccessible to the general public any more, and no one should be afraid to try it - you might like it.

To prove his point, Troiano is teaching a class at Macomb Community College to bring grand opera to those on the street.

The class begins Jan. 21 and runs for four weeks, concluding just before the New York City Opera Company's Feb. 17 performance of "The Marriage of Figaro" at the Macomb Center for the Performing Arts.

Troiano begins the course with a brief overview of opera to 1800, then goes into the specifics of Mozart's "The Marriage of Fi-garo," preparing the class for the performance.

The allure of opera, Troiano says, lies in its stories. They are huge, yes. They are overblown, yes. They are somewhat contrived, yes. But, they are epic tales with timeless themes of love, power and revenge.

For a while, operas only dealt with mythological characters and deeper themes of the nature of mankind. Then operatic works became political reflections of the times in which they were written. French opera, for example, always had to glorify the king. Whatever happened to the characters on stage, the king would set things right.

Then came "singspiele" - operetta for the masses. The themes were not enobling, kings and aristocrats were the fools and the people loved it.

Just as singspiele opened the During the week-long resi-door for opera to the masses, dency, the MOT troupe offers the Troiano says opera companies host community master classes, across the world are trying to bring their art form to greater crowds.

"People are doing all sorts of things with opera these days,' Troiano said. "It's much more accessible, especially with the use of surtitles."

With surtitles, people who aren't predisposed to opera can follow the storylines.

One tried-and-true way to create an audience for opera is to expose students to it at an early age. The Michigan Opera Theatre, like many opera companies across the country, has an extensive outreach program which brings light opera to schools.

David Troiano

MOTs Opera in Residence program will begin its six-week state-wide tour in February with a full-length production of "La Traviata" in which MOT artists take principal roles and community members serve as chorus and production staff.

lectures, demonstrations and one-act operas in addition to the main production. The troupe pulls into Grosse Pointe the week of Feb. 25, after visiting St. Clair Shores, Escanaba and Iron Mountain, and prior to their visits to South Haven and Petoskey.

The demand for the program is so overwhelming, it's booked eight months in advance.

MOT also has a speaker's bureau which is available for discussion of anything from the history of the MOT to special presentations of the season's offerings. Pre-opera lectures by experts are also offered.

Troiano says no one should be afraid of opera. All that is needed is an open mind and a little research into the story and the music.

Books detailing stories of operas are available at any library, as are copies of opera recordings. A line of children's books is also being produced, written by opera stars. The first is "Aida" written by Leontyne Price.

"If anyone goes to an opera, and it's a good production, they will probably be hooked," Troiano said. "It's great singing, it's great music, it's great stories and it's a spectacle. It's really addicting."

David Troiano's "Intro to Opera" class will meet Mondays, Jan. 21 through Feb. 11, from 7 to 9 p.m. at Macomb Community College's Fraser Campus, 32101 Caroline, off Masonic between Hayes and Utica Roads. The fee is $28. For more information, or to register, call Professional and Continuing Education at 296-

DSO Report Violinist raises the spirit of music

By Alex Suczek

Special Writer The ghost of the 19th century's greatest violinist must have been haunting Orchestra Hall exultantly last weekend. Joseph Joachim's only violin concerto, and one of his few major compositions, was performed with a vitality and skill that would have pleased him well.

From the opening notes, it was

The artistic classicizing of the folk music of Hungary came through with inspiration, nonetheless, and Oliveira's playing inspired an eerie sense of hearing Joachim himself.

In the second major work on the program, Dvorak's ever popular and well known 7th Symphony, we had yet another op- cal base with studies in Europe. portunity to appreciate Dunner's This overture, though short, is exceptional quality. He brings out the full expression of the orchestra and projects a clear conception of the music with a very free conducting style. It was most evident in the third and fourth movements of the Dvorak which are rich in Czechoslovakian melodies and rhythms and are among the clearest and most beautifully conceived of all that composer's music. The performance showed that Dunner had done his homework. He knew what he wanted to do with every note of the score but left room for the orchestra to express itself, too. They gave a fresh and invigorating performance. He controlled the orchestra, but never forced his effects. And the audience applauded warmly.

Kay. Here Dunner and the orchestra were dealing with a truly contemporary idiom in classical form. Kay, whose uncle was the great jazz cornetist King Oliver, played jazz while a student at some of this country's greatest music schools, then acquired a more traditional classievidence of his rich background and every bit as interesting as that implies. In fact, it leaves the listener wanting to hear more. For the moment, however, DSO programming leads us on to new adventures. This weekend, on Friday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoon, Music Director Neeme Jarvi returns to lead the DSO in another interestingly balanced program. Soloist for these concerts will be pianist Lorin Hollander with the Piano Concerto No. 5 by French composer Camille Saint-Saens. One of America's most distinguished pianists, Hollander is also famous for his unique college residency programs which complement his recital and orchestra performances. Orchestral works on these concerts are Martinu's Suite No. 1 from Spalicek and Rimsky-Korsakov's Sheherazade Suite. For tickets and information, call 833--3700 lightful, bright, warming cheerful musical.

"Bells Are Ringing" is not a new play. It was one of the biggest Broadway hits of the 1950s and was made into a movie starring Judy Holliday and Dean Martin. It has been revived by the Birmingham Theatre and the world-renowned Goodspeed Opera House of East Haddam, Conn., a collaboration which brought "Oh Kay" to the Birmingham last year - a show that went on to play to sell-out performances in New York.

Goodspeed, which always has charged much less than Broadway prices, keeps costs down by casting younger, less-experienced actors instead of stars in revivals. It works beautifully in "Bells Are Ringing." Filling Judy Holliday's part could have been a difficult task. She made the show her own and even today (she died of cancer at the age of 41), is remembered for that role.

However, Lynne Winterseller, who plays the part of Ella in the Birmingham production, has avoided copying Holliday's voice and mannerisms and presents her own interpretation. She does a bang-up job and for those theater-goers too young to remember Holliday, Winterseller's Ella will stand as a memorable one. She is dynamic, has a Broadway voice with hearty lungs. She is a good dancer and brings an irresistible enthusiasm to the role.

Playing opposite her is Anout of Julliard's Acting Company. He is a superior actor and singer.

Although it features a young "Bells are Ringing" recast. mains firmly rooted in the fifties in New York idealized and celebrated by writers Betty Comden and Adolph Green.

The musical begins in the office of Susanswer phone-answering service where Ella plugs in calls and takes messages but can't seem to resist becoming involved in the lives of her customers and their assorted problems. She finds herself mixed up with a song, writing dentist, a frusthony Cummings, a leading man trated aspiring actor, a bizarre company that takes orders for operatic recordings and a playwright who can't seem to finish the play. She falls in love with his voice and daydreams about him, but has no desire to meet him, which she elaborates on in a lively number, "It's a Perfect Relationship.'

This innocent answering service becomes suspect as a front for a dating service and is being investigated by a bumbling Inspector Barnes (Lew Resseguie). He follows Ella everywhere and when she makes a personal call on her would-be playwright, he is sure he is onto something. Woven into a story with some surprising twists and turns are numbers which have stood the test of time to remain popular today, such as the plaintive "The Party's Over" and "Long Before I Knew You."

There are hilarious scenes such as Ella's visit to an aspiring Brando clone to set him straight, or a scene in the subway where everyone gets involved with Cummings' celebration of his love for Ella with the rousing "I Met a Girl.

"Bells Are Ringing" is a celebration of musicals as they used to be and can be again.

evident that the DSO, led by Associate Conductor Leslie Dunner, was fully in tune with the work's Hungarian character. The haunting gypsy flair of Czardas melodies rang out authentically in the orchestral introduction. But it was violinist Elmar Oliveira who really called up Joachim's spirit with his performance. Like many performers who also compose, Joachim made a conscious choice between the two roles and gave up composing to spend most of his career on the concert circuit. His best known compositions are his cadenzas for the Beethoven and Brahms violin concerti, and he was best known as the greatest performer of the Beethoven concerto.

Joachim's own concerto, "The Hungarian," is as much a demonstration of his brilliant virtuosity on the violin as it is a reflection of his Magyar heritage.

Oliveira's performance provided a thrilling insight into that virtuosity which was appreciated by 19th century audiences. It was a remarkable display of double and triple stop playing, the violin harmonizing with itself in two and three voices, and intricate, rapid variations on the gypsy melodies that are the basic thematic ideas for this work.

Joachim used every trick in the violinist's trade and Oliveira was up to every one of them. Feet firmly planted wide apart, his bow was a blur and the horsehair flew. At times, in fact, when the passages became most intricate and fast, he tended to turn toward Dunner on the podium, perhaps in an effort to ensure that he and the conductor could stay together. The result made the violin more difficult to hear on the left side of the hall.

All this 19th century music was in marked contrast to the brief but fascinating opening work - A Short Overture by the American composer Ulysses

Pianist Lorin Hollander will perform this weekend at Orchestra Hall.

IN!

Nutritious and tasty, American lamb is good all around the complexity of its flavor. The meat lends itself to a remarkable variety of seasoning, cooking and garnishing treatments. The robust qualities of lamb are emphasized with garlic, olive oil, and such assertive herbs as rosemary and tarragon. Lamb can also be treated with fundamental simplicity; small chops or large legs, innocent of any flavoring save salt and pepper, may be roasted or grilled to pink perfection.

There are many exciting dishes featuring American lamb. Most of the lamb sold in American markets comes from descendants of Englishman Robert Bakewell's flocks. The first sheep in the Western world were strong little churros, which were left in the 16th century by Coronado and other Spanish explorers, who had carried the animals on their ships for food. These sheep multiplied into immense flocks, some as large as two million animals, that populated the ranches of the 17th and 18th century Spanish landowners in the Southwest. In the mid-19th century, flocks of larger, finer sheep, such as the Spanish merinos and Bakewell's English breeds, were driven across the continent by pioneering settlers. The ensuing decades eventually produced the meaty animals that still supply American markets.

California, Texas and Wyoming have the largest flocks of sheep in the United States. Michigan also produces lamb.

Although American lamb production of 1.5 pounds per capita has a way to go to catch up with

The distinction of lamb lies in the rest of the world, lamb is the fastest growing meat in terms of per capita consumption. Part of the reason for its recent surge in popularity is that lamb works well in a variety of menus from that very special dinner at a fine restaurant to a variety of ethnic or even "fast food" cuisines.

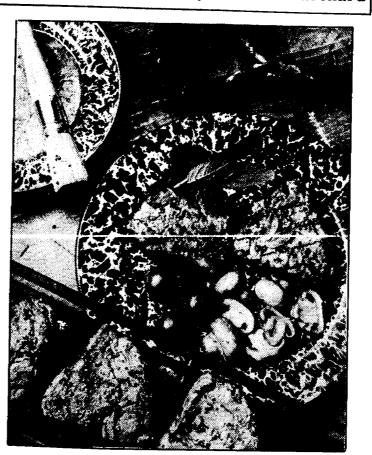

> Lamb is a very healthy meat that fits into a healthy diet. Because it is so low in calories, but high in protein, iron, zinc and B vitamins, lamb is considered nutrient-dense by dietitians. A three-ounce lean serving supplies 74 percent of the recommended dietary allowances for B-12, 30 percent of the RDA for niacin, 17 percent for iron, 14 percent for zinc and 43 percent for protein. A three ounce serving of lean lamb, from cuts such as the leg or loin, only contains 176 calories, making it a good selection for dieters as well as health conscious consumers.

Lambs have been raised in the same manner for the last 7,000 years. Most are raised outdoors, and are herded and protected from predators by sheepdogs. Lamb is unaffected by the antibiotic and hormone issue leveled against other red meats. Since lamb is raised in less crowded conditions, overall antibiotic usage usually isn't required, and because it goes to market so young, hormones would have little effect on it.

American lamb is considered the gourmet lamb of the world. A recent Florida International University pilot study showed that participants who critiqued loin chops for palatability, overwhelmingly preferred the domestic cut for its aroma and flavor. They also rated it higher than foreign chops for juiciness and overall preference. In the same test, the American cut produced 50 percent edible yield compared to 46 percent for the imported 2 T light cream cheese with variety.

See 'old' Hong Kong

As the world changes with democracy in Eastern Europe and the end of the Cold War, there are some old favorite touring places that are also changing - some for the better, some for the worse. Among those old favorites is Hong Kong, which is less than seven years away from a radical change in atmosphere.

For those of us who have had the opportunity to visit this economic and cultural powerhouse, the British colonial relationship that nurtured this location will be missed. Although Japan has become the industrial heart of Asia, Hong Kong's strength and character have grown based on trade, shipping and the romance of tall-ships carrying silk, spices, opium and manufactured goods between Hong Kong, the India colonies and the British homeland.

That relationship with "home" will end when jurisdiction over Hong Kong changes (in 1997) from the U.K. to the People's Republic of China. Along with the change in jurisdiction, there will inevitably be a change in the ambience. The grandeur and the color that have made the "Crown Colony" so attractive to American tourists over the past 30 years are certain to take on a different hue.

At the same time, many of the attractions of mainland China will appear in Hong Kong. This metropolis is destined to continue as the gateway to Cathay - the mother of the Chinese people. For centuries, Hong Kong has been the place where East and West meet in China. Earlier, the mysteries of China were hidden by the peculiar social structure - suspicious of foreigners and internally divided by warring factions.

Since 1949, the mainland has been separated by the conflict between communism and capitalism. It is just since the reconciliation between the two social and economic systems during the past 20 years, that China has moved toward a visible place in the world community.

Hong Kong will provide a familiar setting for increased travel in the People's Republic. With the many tourist attractions and "Westernized" population, Hong Kong is the obvious place to use as a gateway to all the wonders of Cathay. It has the tourist infrastructure to support the tens of thousands of travelers who will continue to use it as a common cultural point for commerce and for uncovering the mysteries of China.

American tourists who have visited Hong Kong before may want to include another visit before its status changes in 1997. Those who have not experienced the adventure will certainly want to see it in its present form before the changes begin. Here, the centuries meld together as exotic boats from junks to ocean liners and the legendary Star Ferry cut patterns across Hong Kong's splendid harbor. Anyone with any imagination can't help but mentally play the Clark Gable role while crossing Victoria Harbor.

Accommodations for travelers are unsurpassed in Hong Kong. You can choose between the Asian opulence of the Mandarin Oriental; the colonial elegance and amazing service of the peninsula; or, the magnificent views and attention to detail at the Regent or the Hong Kong Hilton.

Exotic food is the standard in Hong Kong, with delights and delicacies from all over Asia. In addition to the hotel dining rooms, there are local favorites including specialty restaurants in Kowloon and on Victoria Island. The floating restaurants at Aberdeen are an experience that will highlight any visit to the Orient. All governments concerned with the changeover from British colonial administration to Chinese stewardship are working diligently to protect the special status of Hong Kong in the world of business and the world of travel. How it will eventually evolve is not known. Since the current Hong Kong is something we can be sure of, it really should be included in Pacific area tours at this time. Whether you are a seasoned Asian traveler or a newcomer to the area, Hong Kong is a "right now" destination - before it changes. Like most "old China hands," we already see many changes from the days gone by. Don't let too many more days pass before you explore Hong Kong.

'Teibele' has a strange affair at the Attic

The Attic Theatre ushers in the New Year with its 100th production, "Teibele and Her Demon," by Isaac Bashevis Singer, opening Jan. 23 and running through Feb. 17, with previw performances Jan. 17-20. For tickets, call the Attic box office at 875-8284.

The play is based on a short story by Nobel Prize winner Isaac Bashevis Singer, who also wrote "Yentl" and "Enemies: A Love Story." This stage adaptation by Singer and Ruth Friedman showcases Singer's magical abilities to call up desires and demons - not from hell, but from the depths of the human heart.

The erotic fable is set in a small Jewish village in Poland about 100 years ago, where a beautiful and very passionate woman has been deserted by her husband. Under Jewish law, because her husband has not been legally declared dead, she cannot re-marry.

But her hot fantasies predispose her to accept the advances of a secret admirer who passes himself off as a demon - and to whom she must, in her mind, submit.

LCE receives grant

The Lyric Chamber Ensemble has been named the recipient of a Knight Foundation grant in support of its Chamber Music for Youth program.

Established in 1950 by John S. and James L. Knight, the Knight Foundation is one of the nation's largest private foundations. It is wholly separate from and independent of Knight-Ridder Inc., but supports worthy causes and organizations in communities where Knight-Ridder has newspapers. The foundation also makes selected national grants in journalism, higher education and the field of arts and culture. LCE's Chamber Music for Youth program provides exposure to classical music for thousands of Detroit area school children and youth. Through this educational project students experience the richness and diversity of chamber music through a combination of workshops, master-classes, lecture demonstrations and concerts.

The workshops and concerts feature professionl musicians, including minority artists and composers and selected members of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. The Knight Foundation grant will make it possible for LCE to not only continue this worthwhile project but to expand its schedule of in-school concerts during the 1991-92 season.

Սաթիիիիիիիի

I don't know if it was a sign of unhappiness, wimpyness or an opportunity for me to exercise my bravado.

Whichever, I now own a weightlifting bench and 200 pounds of weights.

A Christmas gift from my wife, the bench and weights offer me an opportunity to grunt, groan and sweat in the comfort of my own basement. Being in the confines of my own home also allows me to stay away from the muscle gyms where I'd be tossed around like a, forgive the pun, dumbbell.

I can just imagine strutting into See My Muscle's Power Gym with arms like deflated plastic bags, a chest that measures 42, and legs that can run, but perhaps not lift a lot.

"See that guy in the yellow sweatshirt?" a 250-pound mountain of flesh would ask if I were to go to a gym. "Yeah," says another guy who can bench press me and 240 pounds simultaneously. "He's got no meat on those bones, hasn't got a clue on how to strut with his chest pushed forward and legs bowed out, and I bet he can't even lift his own weight.'

Sure I can, I lift it from the couch or the bed every morning. I can even get off the ground after lying under a shady tree during the summer. I can even lift my 170 pounds from my desk to get some water at least 10 times a day.

Now, I don't want to get big and look like an oversized group of protrusions, but I do want to remain firm. So, weights are doing the trick.

I've gone from a 15 1/2 neck to 16. My waist (33) remains the same, and my sleeve length now measures 34. No sissygirly stuff, here, dude.

My resolution was not to be the next Hulk of Bulk, but I decided that what people used to preach when I was younger was finally coming to pass:

"Boy, those poor eating habits will catch up to you someday and when you look at your stomach and see that it no longer is firm and strong, and your arms become soft and your legs just don't work right,

The last time the Grosse Pointe South wrestling team beat the North Norsemen, 99 percent of the Blue Devils' current grapplers were not even born.

South coach Larry Carr was only 12 years old.

South ended a 17-year losing streak to North Jan. 10, with a stunning, high-powered 37-25 win at home over the Norsemen. The Devils got four wins in the final five weight classes, after the score was tied at 25-25, to pull off the upset.

"This was a big win for the kids because it's a continuation of a good season," said Carr. "It's nice to get a win like this, not just because we've never beaten North, but because we've accomplished a goal and now we're on our way to the next goal."

Goal 1: Beat North during the season; Goal 2: Win the Macomb Area Conference.

South, 5-4 in dual meets, knew it was outmanned in the lower weight classes, but persevered in the middle and heavier divisions.

"We knew going in we'd probably be down after the first three classes or so because North has been traditionally strong down there," Carr said. "But we are stronger in the middle and upper team." weight classes, so we just had to be patient.

'There wasn't much to be worried about even though we were down (15-0) because we expected a start like that."

And while South was waiting to put its bigger wrestlers on the mat, North coach Art Roberts was becoming more concerned.

"From the 152 class on up we've got all new wrestlers," Roberts said, "so, yes, it did concern me somewhat.'

But when it came time for South's Brion Czaiczynski to wrestle North's Mark Cespedes, Roberts voided the weight, giving the win to Czaiczynski, and moved Cespedes to 189. Carr pulled a similar move, when he voided 119 and pushed Nate Eriksen into a 125-pound confrontation with North's Hank Henning. Eriksen responded by pinning Henning.

Cespedes managed to stay out of trouble most of the first round against Jesse Culver at 189, but Culver, one of the Devils' hottest wrestlers of late, pinned Jesse pinned his man, but we had to wait before we got too excited because there was still a match to go.'

Culver's pin gave South a 31-25 lead.

The final matchup was between heavyweights Frank Voelker (South) and Dave Pierno. Voelker gave South the 12-point edge with a pin with less than a minute gone in the match.

'The win moves the program a step higher," said Carr, whose teams were the doormat of the now defunct Eastern Michigan League. "We've come a long way. The kids now believe they are a good team and believe in winning. Sure, it's nice to win and beat North, but it's just a great step for the program.

North took a 15-0 lead with wins by Dave Sandercott (103), who pinned South's Kris Hoglund, Bryan Fleming (112) and Reid O'Brien (119), who picked up the win on a void.

Carr decided to scratch Erikson from the 119 slot to wrestle Hank Henning at 125, but it was a move he made reluctantly.

"By doing that, I took away a match from a kid (Tim Quantz) and that didn't make me feel good," Carr said, "but I did what I thought was right for the North's Bryan Fleming (left) is handled - temporarily - by South's Paul Kelley at 112 pounds. Fleming beat Kelley, but South won the team match.

Eriksen got South's first points by pinning Henning, but North came right back with Keith Giannico's 7.5 decision over Lou Preston at 130.

Scott Cairo picked up three more South points with a 6-5 decision over Dan Skuce (135), and South's Chris Giannino, who almost pinned Jim Ulicny, picked up a 12.2 decision at 140. Jon Ostrowski (145), who now leads the Devils with an 18-1 record, beat North's Chris Irving, 10-5, to cut the North lead to 19-16, but North's Tony Romolino stretched the Norsemen lead to 25-16 with a pin of Frank Mc-Carroll (152).

But that was the last of the Norsemen victories, as South's Charlie Lickfold (160), Czaiczynski (171, void), Culver and Voelker took over.

"We felt all along the key match was at 135," Carr said. "We got a matchup we didn't expect, but got a win from Scott.'

And the biggest team win in 17 seasons.

you'll realize that you're getting a little older and your exercise regimen has almost stopped.

Oh, boy, does this mean I'm a little bit older and less wiser than I used to be?

So, back to the basement I go to curl, press, squat and incline. I grab the weights after doing 100 jumping jacks. I pump iron and feel my brains pressing against the walls of my head, and I trust those veins popping from my arms will stay inside the skin.

Three sets (10 reps each) of curling 25 pounds. Two sets of 15 squats with 125 pounds draped across my shoulders. Sweat dripping down my nose. I'm thriving on this struggle to be a lean, mean sports editor machine. Back to the bench, I press 145 pounds 10 times and almost drop the bar on my chest on the final rep, but I survive.

Then it's to the prone position for 50-70 stomach crunchers. They say do them until your stomach burns, but if I were to follow that advice, I'd be done after 18 or so.

As I walk away from my hour workout, I feel my arms throbbing, my legs wobbling and my body asking me what it did to deserve that. But, after a day's rest I head back to the basement and subject myself to the same painful routine all over again.

I've come to appreciate bodybuilders and everyone else who enjoys lifting weights and working out. I even ride a stationary bike three times a week, and now realize I should never have gotten away from working out and eating right.

South hockey team overpowers struggling Norsemen

By Rob Fulton Sports Editor

Cauley didn't know what to expect when his team faced North Jan. 12 in the first of two matchups this season.

The only way to draw a parallel, was to recall his glory days playing for the University of Michigan.

"It was very much like the Michigan-Michigan State game," said McCauley, who took over Dec. 10 after seven-year head coach Tim Zimmerman was fired. "I really didn't know what to expect, but it was definitely a physical and emotional game."

South, ranked No. 5 in the Class A polls, used a three-goal third period to seal a 7-3 win over North.

The victory was South's third straight over the Norsemen, including wins in two of three meetings last season.

Captain Peter Bourke lets go of a slap shot in South's 7-3 win over North.

South is now 7-2-1 overall, 4-2-1 in the Michigan Metro East, South hockey coach Jim Mc and North is 2.8 overall. The win snapped a two-game losing streak for South, and extended North's losing streak to four. The Norsemen haven't won since beating University Liggett School Dec. 15.

South handcuffed North with a combination of finesse, speed and physical play, forcing the Norsemen to spend most of the night defending goalie Geoff Miller.

Miller turned back 28 shots, while his counterpart Chris Paul earned the win by stopping 22 Norsemen shots.

South entered the third period with a 4-1 lead on goals by John Morreale, Paul Hadad, Brian Crane and Brad Warezak.

Ryan Oliver's goal at 5:54 of the third period got North back to within two goals, 4-2, but Warezak's second goal of the game proved fatal. as the Norsemen then trailed 5-2.

South took a 6-2 lead on Steve Tucker's goal, his first ever against North, at the 11:32 seconds later Warezak got his hat trick with a backhander that beat Miller to the glove side.

the scoring when he banged a rebound past Paul with 18 seconds to play.

"We spent the whole night defending our own zone," said North coach Mike Manzella, whose team is still winless (0-5) in the Michigan Metro East. 'We never went to the puck. We were trying to bang them and forgot that we needed the puck. We tried to play too much of a physical game and it cost us." And it cost them big, too.

"Every time we got a goal or a goal," said Manzella. "Their de- termission.

fense played well and held the blue line. They'd drop the puck in and contain us and that forced us to play too much defense.

And that plan worked perfectly as far as McCauley's concerned.

"In the first period we wanted to come out and establish the checking game just to prove to North we weren't just a fast skating team that can move the puck," he said. "We were all over them physically and I think that kind of surprised them a bit.

McCauley was surprised his team reacted so well, too.

"It was a good test for us to see what would happen when they did score," said McCauley, who is 4-2 since taking over. "In some previous games we would let up after a goal, but finally we reacted the right way.'

North was down 2-1, but South extended that lead to 4-1. North closed the gap to 4-2, but that's when South scored three unanswered goals.

"Our conditioning and the fact that we had a few more horses mark of the third period, and 10 than they did made the difference in the third period," said McCauley.

Led by Steve Tucker, Morreale North's John Ferguson capped and Bill Quinn, the South defense contained the North zone just the way McCauley planned.

"I told the defensemen that as long as one guy is in the slot on defense and can get back, then go ahead and pinch the zone," said. "The kids responded he well.

Morreale got credit for the first goal as his shot from the faceoff fluttered toward the net. North's Derek Smith tried to bat the puck out of the air, but redirected it past Miller. Four minutes later Hadad notched the game's second goal and South big play, they answered with a enjoyed a 2-0 lead at the first in-

The Devils had to start the second period short a man, but North failed to capitalize.

"I told the kids we had to come out and concentrate on nothing but killing that penal-McCauley said. "We tv.'' couldn't afford to give up an early goal, and had to get back to playing an offensive game."

South didn't give up an early goal, but did yield to Nesom at the 5:56 mark of the second period, cutting the lead to 2.1.

start the period," said Manzella. We went in and asked the kids how they wanted to break the puck out of our zone. We came up with a solution, but were never able to use it because we mishandled the puck too much."

That enabled South to take a 4-1 lead before Oliver's goal cut it to 4.2.

We had four penalties in the second period, but still managed to kill them and score," Mc-

"We weren't panicking to Cauley said. "It was another good test for us to kill off that many penalties and get back to our game plan. I'm glad we passed the test.

But now it's North's turn to pass its test.

"We've been focusing too much on our mistakes and not enough on our opponent," Manzella said. "South is a good club, but we should never lost that badly. We've got to take a deep breath and hope that something good happens.

South's Brad Warezak (9) scoots past a diving Scott Nesom (13) and fires a shot that hit North goalie Geoff Miller. The puck eventually trickled through Miller's pads for one of Warezak's three goals on the night. South went on to beat the Norsemen, 7-3, to move to 7-2-1 overall and 4-2-1 in the Michigan Metro East League. North is 2-8 overall and remains winless, 0-5, in the league.

South sports Gramling pushes Devils to 6-1 basketball start

By Rob Fulton Sports Editor

Senior point guard Tim Gramling hasn't done it all alone, but he's contributed plenty to the South basketball team's 6-1 start this season.

Gramling, the only starter back from last season's 13-8 team, has averaged 18 points a game, and his season high of 27 lifted South to a 69-57 win over Anchor Bay.

Gramling then scored 18 points three nights later at Fraser, as South ran to a 66-54 victory, its fourth straight and second in the Macomb Area Conference. South, 2-0 in the MAC White Division, is now a true league contender.

'Before the season, many people may have thought we weren't a serious contender," said Devils' coach George Petrouleas, "but now I think teams are very aware of us.

trailed 9-0 early in the first quarter as it had trouble shutting down Jason Steffes, who finished with 30 points for the Tars.

"He kept them in the game," Petrouleas said. "But once we wore him down in the second half it enabled us to shut him down and take the lead."

After trailing 35-31 at the half, South didn't take the lead until midway through the fourth quarter when Gramling hit a basket.

"We had a better shooting selection in that quarter and we were playing better defense," Petrouleas said. "Anchor Bay tried to stop us from any type of shot by fouling and sending us to the foul line, so that's where we had to win the game.'

And South did, hitting on 12 of 14 free throws in the final quarter.

Gramling, who also had eight assists, wasn't the only hot hand for South, however. Mike Mc-Laughlin canned 21 points and in the league opener, South Blair Hess had seven points and seven rebounds.

At Fraser, South shot 40 percent from the floor and only 50 percent from the free throw line, but still managed to beat the winless Ramblers.

"The kids responded well even though we didn't play that well offensively," Petrouleas said. We were up by 10 early and stretched it to 20 at times, but I don't think we took care of the basketball all that well.'

But South, which has averaged 63 points a game, led 33-23 at the half, thanks to its edge on the glass.

"We really did a nice job of rebounding and getting the ball out and that made the difference," said Petrouleas.

Mike Armstrong led South with a season high 20 points and grabbed 11 rebounds. Blair Hess had nine rebounds and Gramling had six assists to go with his 18points. McLaughlin added 12 points.

"At the start of the season I said we needed to get the big guys untracked in order to be successful, and that's happened," Petrouleas said. "We've also had a good chemistry so far and gained a great deal of confidence and that's what potential championship teams need.'

Thanks to Tina Higel's eight kills and Ashley Moran's seven kills, Sharpe was able to get the win. Angela Drake and Sue McGahey combined for nine kills and Sue Faremouth had 22 assists. Jenny Khalifah had 10 service points.

Sharpe couldn't get her 201st victory two days later, however, as the Lady Devils were outmatched at Fraser, 15-11, 15-8.

"The games weren't even that close, either," Sharpe said. "Fraser was smart. They were chest passing the ball to us and our kids kind of freaked out because it wasn't a normal thing. Consequently, we didn't handle it well and didn't run a strong offense.

Drake had eight kills.

Swimming

With a 51-35 loss at Catholic Central, the South boys' swim team remained winless after two meets.

South was led by Ted Stedem, who took a first in the 100 butterfly, and Andy Walter, who was first in the 50 and 100 freestyle. Tim Jogan, Stedem, Walter and Jim Bellanca teamed up to win the 400 freestyle relay.

Stedem placed first in the 100 backstroke at the Livonia Stevenson Invitational Jan. 12, as the team finished fourth with 96 points.

יד ז ווי ז ווי א וויי א 4C January 17, 1991 Grosse Pointe News Concept cars add spice to auto feast at Cobo Hal

The stars of the North American International Automobile Show are, of course, the new cars themselves. They are truly the stuff of dreams, because you cannot only imagine yourself behind the wheel, but you know you can buy one, which gives your dreams immediacy.

But the concept cars that are on display also generate a lot of interest, even if you can't buy one - not yet, anyway - because they offer a peek at what the automotive designers and engineers are thinking about and may give a glimpse of the future.

Many of the concept cars this vear are a little different than they have been in the past. The outstanding feature of this year's crop of concept cars is that so many of them are four-door sedans or wagons of some sort. In the past, concept cars have tended to be coupes, because that is the body style which seems to be the favorite of many car buffs.

But, in fact, the four door sedans and wagons tend to be more functional and have always been popular. And those were the concept cars that caught my eye at the show, particularly the displays at Jeep-Eagle, Mercedes-Benz, Ford, Dodge, Pontiac and Chrysler.

Other design trends that the concept cars may foreshadow include doors with no handles. doors that do not open out in the traditional way and, at the Pontiac display, the return of the mysteriously appealing tiny blue light. But on the Pontiac Proto-Sport 4, the small blue lights are in the front, not in the taillight or under the rear bumper as was popular with car customers in the late '40s and '50s

One of the most appealing designs and one that seems likelier than most to make it into production is the Wagoneer 2000, the Jeep of the future. This sleek, bullet-like wagon is one of the cars at the show that has no door handles, apparently to achieve better aerodynamics. At the Mercedes-Benz display is the dramatic-looking deep purple and smokey glass F-100 fivedoor wagon. While the Mercedes serve regular unleaded gasoline at the end of 1990 than at the start of the year. The Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait and a 5 cent a gallon hike in the federal excise tax on gasoline contributed to the increase in prices. However, prices fell short of the record high of $1.46 recorded in March 1981.

three-pointed star in the grille identifies its heritage, there is not much else about this vehicle in common with current models. Even the driver's position is different, in the center at the front of the passenger compartment, with other occupants behind the driver. It is as aerodynamic as it looks, with a coefficient of drag of 0.24

The Ford Contour is shiny, black, flowing and rounded. And it is a four-door sedan with no apparent way to get into it; no door handles are evident.

At the Pontiac display, when the four doors are opened on the bright red ProtoSport 4, it is quite an unusual sight. The doors look like old-fashioned suicide doors when closed, with rear door handles at the front. But the doors do not open out, they swing up on pivots at the front of the front doors and the rear of the rear doors.

A Chrysler concept car revives the "300" name. Styling is sleek, rounded and flowing, but in a curious way is reminiscent of the '30s, with its rather Morgan-like grille and flaring front fenders. While it looks like a sports car, it is a four-door. This one compromises on door handles, it has them in front, but not in the rear.

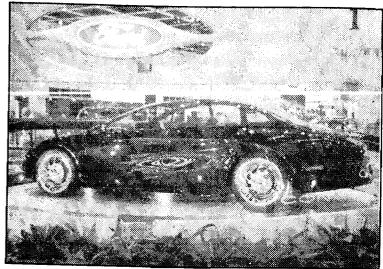

One of my favorites at the show is the Dodge Neon, a small four-door sedan powered by a two-stroke 1.1-liter three-cylinder engine. The four doors look like suicide doors when they are closed, but in fact they open by sliding forward and backward parallel to the body. Styling seems to be remotely inspired by the Citroen 2CX.

An eye-catcher at the Chevrolet display is the Monte Carlo concept car, a sleek coupe which looks like it might not be a long way from production.

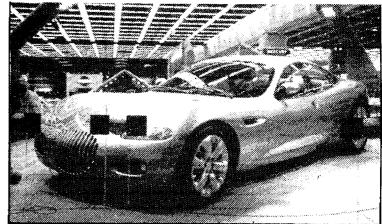

There are plenty of new cars at the show to focus your attention on, but the concept cars are interesting too, supplying some spice to the world-class automotive feast at Cobo Center through Sunday, Feb. 20.

How to get mileage out of your business car deductions

You may know where to find the distributor cap in your business car, but do you know where to find your business car deductions? If you're not sure, park yourself in a comfortable chair and browse through the following tax tips provided by the Michigan Association of Certified Public Accountants.

Unreimbursed employees' transportation costs are considered miscellaneous itemized expenses. As you probably know by now, such expenses are deductible only to the extent that they exceed 2 percent of adjusted gross income. Transportation expenses of a self-employed person, however, are not subject to the 2 percent floor.

If you drive your car for both business and personal use, you must allocate your expenses between the two forms of travel, so be sure to maintain thorough records.

Defining business use

Driving a car for business use generally means traveling between two places of business. A recent IRS ruling may also enable you to claim travel from

Holiday closings

All Secretary of State branch offices will be closed over the Martin Luther King Jr. and Presidents Day holidays.

Branch offices will be closed on Monday, Jan. 21, for the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday and will reopen for business as usual Tuesday, Jan. 22.

Branches will close for Presidents Day on Monday, Feb. 18, and reopen the following morning.

Motorists whose driver's licenses or license plates expire during these holiday weekends are encouraged to renew early. According to Secretary of State Richard H. Austin, waiting times in branch offices are usually shortest on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

home to the first business stop of the day as a business expense.

For example, a management consultant who has a fixed business office may often have early morning appointments that require her to drive directly from home to a client's office. The key is that the client's office is considered a temporary business location. Since this is a recent tax change, you should consult your CPA to see if it applies to your situation

One important fact to keep in mind is that commuting to and from work is not considered business use. The IRS defines commuting as travel from your residence to your first job location of the day and from your last job location to your home.

And for those of you who have equipped your car with a cellular phone, take note that doing business on your car phone or discussing business with associates on the way to and from work does not allow you to define your trip as a business expense.

Methods for deducting expenses

When you deduct automobile expenses, you have two options: You may claim the standard mileage rate, which allows you to deduct a fixed amount for each business mile you drive, or you may deduct the actual costs of operating your car.

Using the standard mileage deduction is the simpler of the two methods since you simply keep track of the business miles you drive during the year and multiply the total by the standard mileage rate. For 1990, the standard mileage rate is 26 cents a mile.

The actual cost of using your car may exceed the amount allowed by the standard mileage rate. If you use the actual-expenses method, you may deduct a percentage of your automobile expenses equal to the percentage of mileage attributable to business.

By keeping track of your business mileage and comparing it to your total mileage, you can determine what percentage of your car's use is for business. For example, if your total mileage at the end of the year is 20,000 miles and your records show that 15,000 miles of that was for business, 75 percent of your car expenses are deductible.

What can you deduct?

If you use the actual expenses method, you may deduct an amount for depreciation. The method you use and the amount you can deduct depends on a number of factors, including when you first began using the car for business and how much of your mileage is attributed to business use

In addition, you can deduct a host of other expenses. Some of the most common deductible automotive expenses are: automobile club memberships, batteries, gas and oil, insurance, tune-ups, repairs, registration and licensing fees, supplies (such as antifreeze), temporary rentals, washing and waxing.

Whether you deduct actual expenses or use the standard mileage rate, you may also deduct parking fees and tolls paid in connection with the business use of your car. If you are an employee and you take out a car loan, the interest you pay is considered personal interest – and that means you will be able to deduct only 10 percent of your interest charges for 1990. Next tax season, the deduction will no longer exist.

Tracking expenses

Keeping good records is a must regardless of which method you use to calculate your transportation costs. Use a logbook and be sure to keep it up to date. In addition to recording the distance driven on business each day, you should note the business purpose of the trip, the names of the persons you saw, and any expenses for which you did not get a receipt.

The IRS forms you use to deduct your expenses depend on whether you are an employee or self-employed. If you are self-employed, you deduct your auto expenses on Schedule C. If you are an employee, you use Form 2106 to claim automobile and other employee business expenses. If you use the actual-cost method, you will need to complete Form 4562 to compute the allowable depreciation.

Bus stop law changes take effect

Beginning in January, new school bus stop laws will provide a different "light look" for motorists at many bus stops. Amendments to Michigan's school bus stop law, signed Dec. 20 by outgoing Gov. James J. Blanchard, spell out guidelines for motorists to follow depending on the buses' flashing lights system.

"How a driver responds when approaching or following a school bus depends on what lights are on and if the bus is moving or stopped," said Robert V. Cullen, AAA Michigan community safety services manager. Motorists should be familiar with the following situations:

• On buses with overhead red and yellow lights - This new lighting system is being phased in on all Michigan school buses. If overhead yellow lights are flashing, drivers should be prepared to stop, because flashing red lights are about to be activated. When overhead red lights are flashing, approaching and following motorists must come to a complete stop no closer than 20 feet from the stopped school bus. Drivers must not proceed until the signals are turned off. • On buses with overhead red lights only - These buses with the standard overhead red light system will eventually be phased out. If the overhead red lights are flashing and the bus is moving, motorists should prepare to stop. When red lights are flashing and the bus is stopped, motorists must stop no closer than 20 feet from the bus. Drivers must not proceed until the signals are turned off.

 All school buses — When yellow hazard lights are flashing (located midway or near front and back bumpers of bus) on a moving or stopped bus, motorists may proceed with caution past the bus.

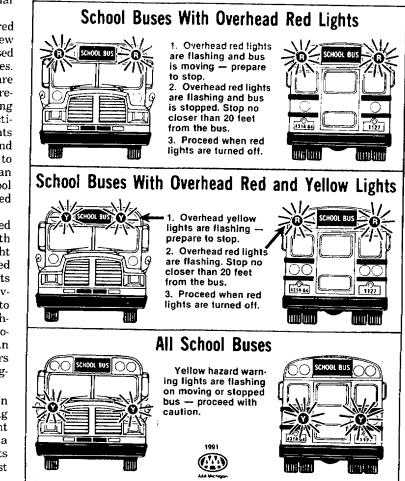

Michigan's school bus stop law - P.A. 187 - originally passed in July 1990, requires all new Michigan school buses to be fitted with yellow overhead lights in addition to the red lights currently on all buses. Retrofitting of old buses, though not required, is encouraged for more uniform and safer bus stops.

The amendments to P.A. 187 are designed to correct difficulties experienced by some districts. School districts are now permitted to use a previous bus stop law in which red lights are activated 200 feet before the stop. This is for buses not fitted with overhead red and yellow lights.

The overhead red-and-yellowlight system is in use in 49 states. National studies have found the system provides a much safer environment for students by reducing illegal passing of stopped buses.

Snowmobiling is fun, if it's safe

Snowmobiling is fun, especially in Michigan's winter wonderland. But, as in any sport, safety is a key ingredient. Since 1986, snowmobile registrations filed with the Michigan Department of State have increased annually, proving the continued popularity of the sport.

During the 1988-89 snowmobiling season, lasting from approximately December to early April (depending on availability ice and riding in groups also enhance the safety of snowmobi-snow), more than 204,000 ve hicles were registered with the secretary of state.

Currently, there are more than 210,000 snowmobiles registered and the season is only beginning. With all these snowmobilers riding on nearly 5,000 miles of scenic trails throughout the state, it is important to remember "safety first."

Operators must know their own abilities, as well as those of the snowmobile. Staying warm, alert and knowing what is ahead on the trail are equally important. According to Michigan State Police, there were 394 snowmobile accidents, including 304 injuries and 11 deaths, in 1989. Total accidents were up nearly 20 percent over the previous year.

As with operating any motor vehicle, drinking and driving is illegal. Both alcohol and other drugs can seriously affect judgment, oftentimes without the person even realizing it. In the winter months especially, people who develop colds and flu-like symptoms take medication to alleviate discomfort. Unfortunately, some of these medications may also impair safe driving ability.

Snowmobiles are low-profile vehicles, meaning riders are more difficult to see and less protected than in a car or truck. For more protection and increased visibility, snowmobilers should always wear a helmet, goggles and other cold weather, brightcolored gear with reflectorized stripes.

Also, when riding at night it is important to be visible. A lighted headlight and taillight are required from half an hour after sunset to half an hour before sunrise. Testing the depth of

L JI JIS Grosse Pointe News How to have winter fun — think about spring

Winter fun is just that for those who enjoy skiing the slopes, skimming like graceful swans over the ice on skates, or sitting out on the frozen river in the chilly wind waiting for a fish to bite.

But for others, winter fun is a contradiction in terms. They find no enjoyment in cold weather and all that it brings - dark, frosty mornings, icy streets, cars that won't start. New-fallen snow is pretty but loses its charm when it has to be showeled. A silver full moon surrounded with twinkling crystal stars against a velvet blue sky is lovely to look at if you are standing behind a window reinforced with storms. As for a weekend in northern Michigan to see nature in full winter splendor, just give them an airline ticket to Florida – return date in May

The first gust of north wind sends them scurrying inside to venture out only when absolutely necessary, such as when going to work, replenishing the food supply or keeping a social engagement.

While watching winter sports on television, they may dream of such daring deeds as giving cross-country skiing a try, putting on a pair of skates or maybe just taking a long walk in the new-fallen snow.

Hardier souls might even contemplate more challenging adventures in winter's wonderland, maybe getting behind a dogsled in Alaska, braving a course that winds along a historic gold rush trail from Anchorage to Nome, breathing freezing cold air, chancing unpredictable storms and encounters with moose. They see themselves mushing along on trackless, shelterless ice behind durable dogs, whose ancestors came to North America with natives thousands of years ago. Now there is a real Walter Mitty daydream.

If it sounds too extreme, it could be modified. No need to go all the way to Alaska How about a make-believe trip

Planning for a week full of Saturdays

Retirement planning? What is there to plan? Instead of going to work everyday and dealing with endless, and oftentimes needless pressures and stress, you get to sleep in and basically do what you want, when you want.

According to experts, life expectancy will continue to rise, therefore, many people spend as many years in retirement as they did in the work force, if not more.

"From a financial perspective, as soon as an individual begins working, he or she should begin planning for retirement," says Esther Callahan, executive director at Waterford Senior Citizens Center, a United Way agency. "People should begin thinking seriously about other aspects of retirement, such as living arrangements, relationships and leisure activities, about 10 years before they actually retire.'

Callahan says that the most difficult part of retirement is developing a strong identity apart from the workplace. "It's not the Saturdays and Sundays that are the problem, it's the Mondays through Fridays – the days your employer owned before you retired," Callahan explains. "Retirees need to generate a base of friends and interests in order to fill that time up with meaningful activities."

Ellen Preisman, executive should look at: leisure time, liv- other people, and respect each ing arrangements, health, inter- other's privacy. personal relationships, and fi-spend your leisure time, it's important to first consider your interests. One of the activities Callahan likes to promote is volunteerism. "It's a wonderful opportunity to meet new people, increase your sense of self worth, and upgrade your skills and learn new ones, not to mention making a difference in someone else's life," she said.

• There are a wide variety of housing options to consider before retiring - apartments, condominiums, mobile homes, and retirement communities are just a few. Preisman warns, if you plan on moving to one of the "sunbelt" states, "look before you leap." Visit the area for a long period of time, and really get to know the community before you move.

• A gradual physical decline is inevitable with age. But a healthy lifestyle - proper diet, exercise and rest - can help any person stay in good shape. It's important to maintain a good relationship with the family physician and to follow medical advice. Remember, minor problems ignored may lead to major problems down the road.

 Marriage suddenly becomes 24-hour-a-day "job" during retirement, Preisman says. "Married couples should carefully discuss and work on their relationship, allowing for the director of the Walter P. Reuther needs and interests of both part-Senior Centers, says there are ners," Preisman explains. "It's basically five areas pre-retirees important to include time with years old, for example, and never thought about retirement until now, there is still time to save and invest the money you have. "Your best bet is to seek the advice of an expert," Preisman suggests. "There are a variety of investment possibilities, with a variety of risks. So check out each one carefully.

The Walter P. Reuther Senior Centers provide a worksheet that will help you "guesstimate" your future income needs. It also has information on financial assistance, such as SSI - Supplemental Security Income. "SSI is a program for people over the age of 65, the blind, or disabled who have a low income and who do not own much in the way of property or other things of value," Preisman explains.

Walter Reuther retirement classes cover other legal issues, such as estate planning, which are addressed by a lawyer. Without a will, state laws distribute property in specified portions among relatives, regardless of what the owner's wishes may have been Bequests to United Way and other charities are often included in wills by those who wish to lend support beyond their lifetime. They may also lower estate taxes and conserve more of the owner's estate for family members. Bequests can be made in the form of cash, specific securities, real estate, or other property.

Everyone looks forward to retirement; however, it is not an extended vacation. There are a lot of issues to consider. The money is different, time is different, and people and their expectations are different, Preisman says, and to make the most of it, you have to plan. For more information on retirement planning, contact your United Way at Work representative, or First Call For Help at 456-8800 to Aspen, Colo., for some real downhill skiing. The 8,000 foot altitude takes some getting used to, but after a day spent letting your lungs adjust you are ready for the spectacular Big Birn, a mile-wide and mile-long chutethe-chute course not designed for the faint of heart.

Or you might choose to sail across frozen lakes in a fiberglass boat in Locoma, N.H., or bobsled in the Adirondacks down a mile-long track.

All of these activities are exciting and fun to ponder, but dyed-in-the-wool true winter-haters would never think of doing more than just think about them.

When tempted, they remind themselves how far away their feet are from the body's central heating system and how much chilblains hurt. They think of their old nose sticking out there turning redder and drippier as Jack Frost keeps nipping away. Ears are vulnerable, too, with their little blood vessels turning to tiny veins of ice.

"What about bundling up in wool, down and thermal wear?' you ask. For the dedicated armchair winter recluse, these are but temporary safeguards in which only those with souls of Eskimos can find comfort.

Besides, staying inside out of the elements in winter is like putting time in the bank for summer. All the projects that have been put aside so as to enjoy summer's munificence can be completed early.

It's not the greatest fun in the world, but now is the time to clean closets, paint, wallpaper, clean the basement. Winter was made for such dreaded tasks.

Perhaps the most compelling excuse for staying out of winter's icy clutches is the eager anticipation of a time when hatless, coatless, scarfless and bootless, we can step out into the sunshine in our back yard, which will be a living picture of fragrance, beauty and color. But it won't be

Personal side of Alzheimer's

Four million victims suffer from Alzheimer's Disease in the United States today. About 100,000 people die of it every year. It is the fourth-leading cause of death among adults.

Projections show that an estimated 12 million to 14 million Americans will be affected by the year 2040 unless a cure or prevention is found.

Lynn McAndrews, in her recently released book, "My Father Forgets," gives us the personal side of the Alzheimer's story by sharing the honest account of her family's experience when her father died of the debilitating disease.

David Hacker, a Detroit Free Press columnist, said: "My Father Forgets" should be must reading for everyone in training to deal with Alzheimer's patients; there are signposts that doctors, nurses, therapists, family, and the like should be aware

The love of a daughter for her father comes across in this informative story of one family's struggle. By intimately sharing the details of her father's dying and the emotions she and her family experienced, the author helps us to understand the debilitating effects of this illness.

We can see it now - the first heralds of summer, the green shoots breaking through the soil, later to burst into purple and yellow miniature orchid-like blooms. Then, they will be joined by masses of colorful begonias and spikey dahlias. There will be clusters of phlox and primrose and daisies and gorgeous sweetsmelling peonies and then comes summer's most beautiful offering roses.

One wishes he or she could buy and plant and care for every glorious promise of beauty in the garden books, but that's an impossible dream - gentler, but somewhat like the one about conquering winter's rugged wastelands.

If you have ever lost a loved one, you will identify with this compassionate and courageous story. "This book is a gift to all of us who have lived and lost with Alzheimer's disease," said Dianne Seidler, a social worker, whose father also died from the disease.

The author is currently president of the Northwest Michigan Chapter of the Alzheimer's Association. She also has background in the hospice movement and in leading bereavement support groups.

Her most important message is that the victims and families of Alzheimer's disease, through the help of the Alzheimer's Association and books like "My Father Forgets" do not have to be alone.

"My Father Forgets" is now available by order through many bookstores or can be ordered from Northern Publishing, P.O. Box 136, Maple City, Mich. 49664, for $8.95 plus $2.50 for shipping, or by calling 1-800-345-0096.

Motivation — the driving force for health enhancement plans, we all begin with admirable intentions.

Whether it be diet, exercise or quitting some ugly habit, there is that original oath that we take unto ourselves. We also seem to a lot of this "pledge taking" during the holiday season.

It is all part of normal human behavior and for some is more ritual than real life. More often than not, our pledges seem to be sabotaged by less will power and some good excuse for straying.

What is needed here is the big "Mo." Self motivation is really the key to any succesful plan for health enhancement.

Mobilization to health

What we are talking about is a true conviction and a belief that certain steps must be taken to bring one a healthier way of life. More importantly, the individual must carry that determination throughout his or her daily life. This does not have to be a ball-and-chain, "I'm applying for sainthood" type of commitment. It is simply a positive attitude that one develops and uses to cope with all of life's daily temptations and distractions.

In order to look at this approach more specifically, let's zero in on a single area. Adopting the lifestyle habit of exercise is as good an example as any. Keep in mind, though, that the regimens I'll describe can apply to better nutrition habits, quitting smoking, losing weight or any other positive change that will affect our health.

Design for the real world

There are actually three key steps in making this positive healthy behavior change. The first is contemplation. or the beginning of self-motivation with a decision. This is where the individual sorts out the conflicts and starts setting realistic goals. Creating an action plan is also a big part of this stage. Specific weekly goals must be written down and seem reachable.

The second stage is the action stage. You have chosen the form

Just do it

As we face winter, healthful habits such as exercising often fade away.

Shorter and cooler days tend to make you want to stay inside rather than take that run or go to the gym. Anyway, you don't need to think about wearing those shorts or that bathing suit again for months. So why exercise?

Because, according to the American Heart Association, exercise is one of the best personal

As with any of our best laid of exercise that you enjoy most out of your control causes a and now are initiating a weekly program. Be careful of any fallback behaviors during the first few weeks.

> Any type of delays, substitutes or escapes must be recognized for what they are. A big help during this stage is strong social support. Telling your family or friends what you have undertaken will help reinforce that self commitment. Being able to balance one's work, recreational activities, daily responsibilities and other physical activities will play a big role.

The third and final stage is simply a maintenance process.

Looking for support systems, i.e., exercise companion or structured environment, will help greatly in the long term.

One must also be ready to anticipate slips and adjust for them. We're not kidding anyone here, nobody's perfect, nor is any schedule fully protected from the distractions of life. The key is not to feel guilty if something missed session.

As a final caution, watch for a major threat to any healthy changes made in lifestyle - relapse activities.

Avoid the collapse

What do we really mean by relapse?

This can simply mean falling back or "bailing out" for a day. Now is the time that motivation is crucial. That driving force or self belief will carry one right past any of these relapses. It propels one back to sea level, escaping the tentacles of defeat.

The three most common relapses are negative emotional states, interpersonal conflict and social pressures.

John P. Foreyt, PhD., health and rehabilitation psychologist at Baylor College of Medicine, believes there are several key predictors of succesful health behavior change: internal motivation, being in control and social support. He also has a final recommendation for staying committed - visual imagery.

Imagery is the process of picturing oneself during an exercise session from start to finish. This will reinforce the ability to actually carrying out the exercise in daily life. What we are talking about is a positive coping skill, an "I know I can handle it" kind of attitude.

Any age applies

We have found that motivation starts even with younger children.

Most kids enjoy participating in organized sports for the fun of it. Studies have shown that winning is not always a priority.

Achieving fitness through sports has become the more dominant motivator. A study done by the University of Arkansas revealed that kids wanted most to "do their best" at a particular sport. Having fun showed a continuing increase in importance as the children grew into adolescence.

These motivators can apply to seniors, as well.

The old concept of aging gracefully meant sitting back and taking it easy. The senior adult now realizes that improvements can be made in endurance, strength and coordination by exercising regularly. This has become a key motivator for seniors who want to enjoy their retirement years in good health. The expression should then become "aging vigorously.

Each of us must develop a big "Mo." There has to be a belief and a desire for fitness, whether it be nutrition, exercise or mental health.

POINTE PLAZA

While health maintenance and medical care are the primary missions of St. John Hospital and Medical Center, recognizing the importance of the community's well-being is also a high priority.

Schostak Brothers and Company, Inc. was brought in to serve as developer for the Pointe Plaza retail and office complex. They are a large and highly respected developer with the financial strength required for a project of this size.

delenses against heart disease.

Diseases of the heart and blood vessels claim the lives of nearly one million Americans every year. But by reducing blood cholesterol levels, controlling high blood pressure, not smoking, maintaining proper weight and exercising regularly. the risk of heart disease can be reduced.

But, that's just one of the reasons to exercise. People who exercise regularly often find that they feel better, look better and even work better than before they started an exercise program.

If you feel too tired to exercise. do it anyway. You'll gain more energy and find that you have an increased resistance to fatigue. Exercise can also improve your ability to fall asleep quickly and sleep well.

Even if you don't need to lose weight - exercise. Exercise burns off calories to help lose extra pounds and helps you maintain your ideal weight. In addition, you'll tone up your muscles and look better.

Have you ever convinced yourself that you "have too much work to do to worry about exercising?" Take heart. Exercise often contributes to increased productivity at work and helps increase your capacity for physical work.

Before you start an exercise program, check with your doctor. Then choose an activity such as walking, jogging, bicycling, swimming, tennis or aerobics. Then set up a schedule and get started.

According to the AHA, exercising regularly for 30-60 minutes at least three to four times a week will improve and maintain cardiovascular fitness.

Home sales decline, but Realtor says now is the time to buy

John Minnis Assistant Editor

While home sales declined nearly 10 percent in the Pointes last year, a veteran real estate broker said now is a good time to buy.

Thomas R. Youngblood, president of the Grosse Pointe Board of Realtors, cited low interest rates, a good selection of homes on the market and numerous financing options as reasons to buy a home now.

'You put all those factors together," he said, "and this is a great time to buy.

"I expect it to be a pretty good year and for some a very good vear."

Home sales by members of the Grosse Pointe Board of Realtors fell 9.9 percent last year compared to the year before. Also, in contrast to previous years, the average selling price throughout the Pointes remained almost flat last year, showing a 1 percent increase over 1989.

The average selling price of homes in the five Pointes in 1990 was $190,329, according to figures released last week by the board of Realtors. The average 1989 selling price was $188,466.

The total number of homes sold last year was 629, down 69 units from the 698 homes sold in 1989, and was the lowest number of homes sold in the last four vears.

In 1988, 667 homes were sold, and in 1987 sales totaled 692.

The number of homes sold last year declined in each of the Pointes except the Park, where 150 units were sold, one more than the year before.

The average selling price of homes increased in all the Pointes, ranging from a low of 0.5 percent in the Farms to 4.7 percent in the Shores.

PROGRESS

The total dollar volume of home sales throughout the Pointes was $119.7 million last year, down from $131.5 million in 1989.

"On the face of it," Youngblood said, "I think there's a lot of nice things you can draw from these statistics.

"I don't think you can draw any real significant areas of concern.'

He said that while the total number of units sold was down, average home prices increased. The Pointes represent a stable market without the roller coaster performance experienced in other parts of the country, he said.

Youngblood believes that while the media are anxious to tell how bad things are and report a lot of negative news, most Grosse Pointers are not that adversely affected.

A large part of the real estate market involves Grosse Pointers selling and buying within the Pointes, Youngblood said. As residents' economic and family status changes, they upgrade to larger houses within the Pointes, he said.

Conversely, empty-nesters many times find their houses are too big, so they sell their large homes and buy a smaller one in the Pointes, Youngblood said. Also, young people who have been raised in the Pointes very often buy in the Pointes so that their children can experience growing up in the Pointes.

"That's the meat and potatoes of our market," Youngblood said, "people moving around within Grosse Pointe."

Having been in real estate for 20 years, Youngblood said he has been through recessions and expects 1991 to be a good year for homebuyers and sellers in the Pointes.

'The market is fine, and I expect it to be that way through sense we're in a declining mar-'91," he said. "I do not have a ket."

He said interest rates are down to 9.25 percent for a 15year, fixed-rate mortgage; funds are plentiful for mortgages; and buyers have a good choice of homes.

Saving home energy: Dollars and sense

By Stephanie Stubbs AIA News Service

It's that time of year - snow and icy rain descend, the wind blows cold, and home fuel bills skyrocket.

And with the current Mideast crisis playing havoc with the price of oil, energy conservation for the home seems more pressing than ever. With about half of the energy used in a typical American house going to heating, that's a good place to start.

If your house currently is an "energy pig," you have the po-tential of cutting your heating bills in half. The measures to save heating energy range from major to minor, in both cost and effort.

There's an added bonus if your house is air-conditioned in the summer; conservation efforts will pay off year round.

Village Shoes

The first thing to consider, because it doesn't cost a cent, is lowering the thermostat and wearing a sweater or throwing an extra comforter on the bed.

• • • • • • •

Home sales by members of Grosse Pointe Board of Realtors

Although it depends on the condition of the house and the climate you live in, lowering the thermostat from 68 to 60 degrees Farenheit can save, on average, 20 percent of your heating bill.

A second relatively easy and inexpensive measure is sealing up cracks where cold air can get into the house. Caulking and weatherstripping usually pay back their costs with fuel savings within a year or two.

Check all of the edges where building components come together; where the walls meet the roof, where two walls come together, where the foundation stops and the walls begin, and wherever a door or window is placed.

Also seal up holes in the building where pipes, electric lines, and even TV wires go through outer walls.

Infiltration usually is the main culprit robbing a home of its heat. After "plugging the holes," adding insulation can be a very effective, heat-saving step, either as a do-it-yourself or a contracted project.

Think of insulation as a blanket to keep heat in a warmed area. The attic is the first place to add insulation.

The basement is next; if it is not heated, insulate the floor above. If the basement is heated, don't insulate the floor above, or you will retard the flow of heat up into the main portion of the house. Instead, work on insulating walls, hot water pipes, the furnace, and the hot water tank.

The second major source of heat loss is the windows. A single glazed window loses about 20 times the amount of heat as an area of wall the same size.

Adding insulating shutters, panels or drapes can prevent a good amount of heat from seeping out of the windows.

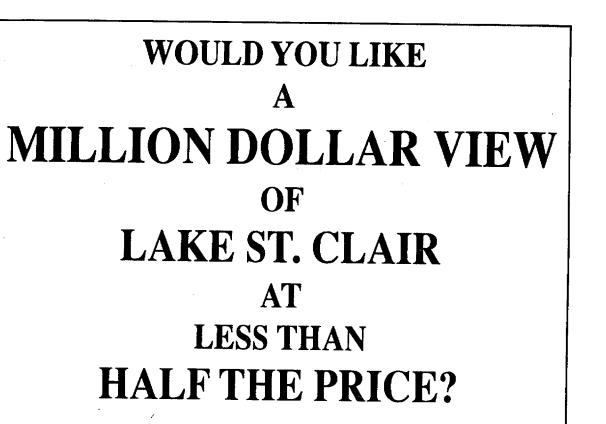

and properly priced home will

Storm windows cut window heat loss in half, and even a conventional roll shade will shave a quarter to a third off the heat loss.

Remember that every house is a solar house of sorts; let the sun shine in during the day and use shades or shutters at night.

An area of much recent con-cern is "sick building syndrome," which can occur if the air in a building is not replaced by fresh air frequently enough. If you are worried about making your house too airtight, an architect can help you balance your energy efficiency program.

Another good source of information may be your local utility company. Many local utilities have energy-saving programs; some even offer complete house inspections affording consumers the opportunity to learn other innovative ways to save energy.

Architects save community landmark

By Stephanie Stubbe AIA News Service

Old churches never die; sometimes they find new life as architects' offices.

Consider the Maywood Presbyterian Church, in Oklahoma City, which stood vacant for 10 years before the architectural firm of HTB Inc., was able to concoct the perfect use for the old building; HTB at Stiles Circle, their new headquarters housing 110 people.

Ten years ago, the church was a sad sight, abandoned and falling apart. It was surrounded by "crack" houses in what had become a bad part of town.

HTB's efforts to save the church have contributed much to the successful citywide planning effort to clean up the neighborhood.

'We call ourselves urban pioneers," said Rex Ball, the principal architect in charge of the homesteads of the original settlement. You know, Oklahoma was settled by 10,000 people in 1889 in one day. We're just carrying on that pioneering spirit."

The church eventually became the house of worship for Colonel Stiles, the commander of federal troops who brought order to the hastily settled territory, and whose name Stiles Circle bears today.

Although the architects fell in love with the 1907 church designed in an ornate Romanesque style, they needed almost four times the amount of space that it had to offer. Therefore, they carefully wrapped a new, Lshaped addition around the back side of the church for an additional 23,000 square feet of trim as the old church, so that the two parts of the complex are in harmony. The addition follows the form of the church, and steps back from the corner to preserve lines of sight around the existing building.

The architects did not, however, try to copy the intricate details of the church; they chose clean, modern lines and vertical strips of windows for the addition. The two parts of the complex are connected with black glass that clearly delineates the old from the new.

Surrounding a three-story, sky-lighted atrium, is a walkway that connects the church to the new building. The open walkway with simple pipe railings permit a view from the new complex of the facade of the old church, and through its stone arched windows to the executives' offices.

The administrators work in private offices in the church portion of the building, where existing stained glass windows and rough brick walls are highlighted by sleek modern furniture.

The new addition houses the drafting rooms. The top floor is capped with a cathedral ceiling, painted with its own stormyhued sky.

The architects own property adjacent to the building site that they hope to develop in the future. They placed no plantings on the building site itself, choosing instead to capture the traditional Midwestern feeling of the building springing up suddenly
