AIDS death leaves former patients wondering

By Donna Walker

Staff Writer Did Dr. George Frederickson Jr. of Grosse Pointe Woods, a retired oral surgeon, pass along the AIDS virus to any of his patients before he died of the disease at his home on July 9?

The Wayne County Health Department has said that the possibility is very small. However, it is weighing heavily upon the mind of at least one Grosse Pointe Woods man, the father of one of Frederickson's former patients.

Frederickson, 47, practiced oral surgery on Mack Avenue in Detroit for several years and retired in 1987.

The health department has been investigating his death, and said in a statement on Monday that "this dentist was very meticulous and followed careful infection control practices throughout his career.'

The department also said, "The Centers for Disease Control and other leading experts on AIDS have estimated the risk of acquiring AIDS from an infected dentist during dental procedures ranges from 1 in 263,000 to over 1 in 2.6 million.

Based on this information, the Michigan Department of Public Health and the Wayne County Health Department believe that there is very little, if any, risk to this dentist's patients, staff or the community at large."

However, that doesn't ease the fears of the Grosse Pointe Woods father, who wished to remain anonymous. He said that his two daughters and wife had oral surgery performed at the office Frederickson shared with Dr. Robert M. Skau in the mid-1980s.

When the Grosse Pointe Woods man learned of Frederickson's death, he rushed to find the receipts of his family's office visits.

He discovered that his wife and older daughter had seen Skau. The man's younger daughter - who had the most extensive surgery of the three - had been a patient of Freder-

He said he is especially worried because one of the dentists - and he doesn't remember which one - pricked his finger while working on one of his daughters.

"I can't remember which one it was," the man said, "but I definitely remember one of my daughters telling me that she moved the wrong way while the doctor was working on her and that that caused him to prick his finger. If it was Dr. Frederickson, and if there was a drop of his blood on his glove while he was working on my

Severe storm knocked down profits as well power lines

By John Minnis sistant Editor

The great storm of July 7, 1991, will long be remembered in Grosse Pointe - especially by businesses that were left in the dark for up to a week.

The severe evening thunderstorm that ripped through the Pointes, packing 70 mph wind gusts, was by far the worst ever experienced by Detroit Edison as far as damage is concerned.

A total of 670,000 customers were without power following the storm, said Edison spokesman Scott Simons. Last week's storm surpassed the next worst storm, which was the March 1976 ice storm that knocked power out for 373,000 customers. It took 16 days to restore power to all customers after that storm, Simons said.

While some customers were still without power last Friday, Edison expected to have everyone's power restored during the weekend. The lines to individual homes were the last to be restored.

Some Grosse Pointe Woods residents, however, who listened to reports that all power had been restored Monday, called WWJ-Radio to report they were still without electricity. The residents were advised to notify Edison by calling the number on their electricity the second, more severe storm hit about 9 p.m.

In the Pointes, it was not unusual for power to be uninterupted on one side of the street but not the other. Some neighborly residents shared power by running outdoor extension cords across the street.

Businesses on the south side of Kercheval and the northeast corner of McMillan and Kerchval on the Hill were without power, while those across the street were not affected. Simons said it is not unusual for homes and businesses in close proximity to be on different circuits.

Businesses up and down Mack were still without power last Friday.

Neil Bell, owner of Village Foods on Mack in Grosse Pointe Farms, said his power has been out since the day of the storm.

He rented two generators and is playing "generator tag" that is, he runs one, then the other, then the first one again, so that he can keep the generators fueled.

One neighbor complained about the noise the generators caused, which irritated Bell.

"In the past few days I've learned more about refrigeration, diesel engines and electrical engineering than anyone should know." he said.

Bell estimated the power outage, as of last Thursday, had cost him $20,000 incl expense of running the generators and the value of spoiled inventory.

His non-frozen refrigerated stock started to go bad two days after the storm.

"I called different charities," Bell said. "I tried to give it away, but no one wanted it. They wouldn't take it unless it was delivered. No one wants to work for a freebie."

He got some dry ice, but that was of little help so he started throwing out food by the buggy-full.

Kastran slandered, wins $100,000 award

By Ronald J. Bernas

Staff Writer

A retired Circuit Court judge has ruled that Dr. John Kastran, principal of Grosse Pointe North High School, was the target of intentional slanderous statements and has ordered two teachers and the teacher's union to pay Kastran $100,000 in damages

Retired judge Thomas Roumell, sitting as a special Circuit Court arbitrator, handed down a 113-page opinion in the lawsuit filed by Kastran against Doris Cook, who was then president of the Grosse Pointe Education Association, and North teacher David Harchick.

"Dr. Kastran is happy that his reputation is unblemished now, and that he's been redeemed, so to speak," said Kastran's attorney, James Goulding. "This sort of thing is no fun, but it's important that people know he did nothing wrong.

Joseph Firestone, attorney for Cook, Harchick and the GPEA, said they are reviewing their options, and may file an appeal, but no decision has been made.

"Very disappointed is a real good way to describe the way they feel," Firestone said on behalf of his three clients.

He would not discuss Roumell's findings.

In June 1989, Kastran charged that Cook and Harchick sent a memo to then school Superintendent John Whritner, and his then deputy Ed Shine, stating that Kastran had told students he used pornographic videos to sexually arouse his wife and discussed teachers' buttocks with students. Kastran's original suit asked for $2 million.

The opinion was handed down after two years of depositions from "nearly everybody who could have been involved," Goulding said.

"Time and time again, during the course of these proceedings," Roumell wrote, "a consistent pattern of discrepancy has emerged between the allegations, accusations and charges which the defendants published concerning Dr. Kastran and the testimony of the individuals." The case went to court in January. Roumell's opinion was handed down last week.

Cook has since retired from the schools. Harchick still works at North.

54 percent of Farms drivers buckle up

A July 15 survey of 100 motorists in Grosse Pointe Farms found that 54 percent of the drivers questioned were wearing their seat belts.

While the seat-belt usage was not as high as Farms and Michigan State police would like, the Farms survey results were comparable to a pre-Memorial Day statewide survey that found 56.5 percent of motorists buckled up.

The survey was part of a May through September statewide "Buckle Down with the 'Blitz'" campaign, which in turn is part of a nationwide goal to increase seat belt use to 70 percent by 1992.

As part of the campaign, the Farms also kept track of how many citations were issued from June 2 through July 12 to those not wearing a seat belt or using child restraints. The Farms issued 64 such tickets during the six-week period, according to officer Jack Patterson, who worked on the survey.

Park officer tackles suspect

An unnamed Park police officer who is a part-time football coach at Grosse Pointe North High School practiced what he preaches July 4 when he downed a fleeing suspect with a flying tackle.

When Park police attempted to stop a car for erratic driving at 8:07 p.m., the driver refused to comply and fled into Detroit. At Windsor and Somerset, the driver bailed out of the car and fled on foot between houses.

The Park officer/football coach spotted the suspect and after a short foot race, he lunged at him and brought him to the ground.

The man was charged with driving while impaired.

Skull gives diver jolt

Mark Dupuis of Grosse Pointe Park came up with a somewhat unusual find while practicing diving with fellow members of the Grosse Pointe Marine Rescue team June 30.

What he found was a skull, and it "scared the hell out of him," said Leon Sehoyan, leader of the emergency dive unit.

Dupuis added, "When I found it. I had to check my suit to make sure I didn't do anything in it."

He said the skull is made of ceramic and is quite lifelike and true to size. He imagined some kid having it in his room and his mother telling him to get rid of it, so he tossed it into the lake. It was found near the Crescent Sail Club drive.

Much to his wife and children's, uh, delight, Dupuis took it home, where he has it proudly displayed — out in the garage.

14-year-old borrows family van

A 14-year-old Grosse Pointe Farms boy was arrested after he borrowed the family minivan, apparently without the knowledge of his parents.

An anonymous caller reported the incident. Police found the youth driving east on Lakeshore near Moran. He was going 25 mph, 10 mph under the speed limit, and holding up traffic.

The youth was stopped by police and arrested. Police were unable to reach the boy's parents, so they called his grandmother, who picked him up from the police station.

The boy was cited for driving without a license.

Paint removers accidentally set home afire

Painters who were using an open-flame torch to remove paint from an 80-year-old home in Grosse Pointe Shores accidentally set it afire July 11.

A resident of the home in the 600 block of Lakeshore reported the fire at 12:48 p.m. Responding firefighters found flames in the dining room. They tore off outside wooden lath and some inside flooring and walls to extinguish the fire.

The painting contractor had been using an electric heat gun to remove old paint, but because of the power outage following the July 7 thunder-storm, he switched to propane torches.

Public safety officials ordered the contractor to stop removing the paint until a permit was obtained from the village.

A Shores public safety official said the fire could easily have been a disaster due to the age of the wooden home.

A guy and his camera make good with 'A Boy and His Car'

Mark Ruzzin loves to be where the action is - behind the camera on a movie set.

The son of Richard and Merrie Lynn Ruzzin of Grosse Pointe Park, he is a graduate of the Columbia University's film school in New York, and directed a 25-minute film that has won several awards over the past year.

The film, "A Boy and His Car," has been in 15 film festivals, including one in Australia. It was named Best Narrative at the Brooklyn Arts Council Film Festival, which was held at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in March, and won a gold medal in the short subject category at the Houston International Film Festival in

"It's a children's story," the 28-year-old Ruzzin said. "Or as we like to say, a film for children of all ages. You could also say that it's a modern-day, urban fairy tale."

The story is about a boy who wishes for a remote-controlled model car, and magically gets one. The boy, who lives in New York, is sort of a loner, an outcast among his peers. But through the car, he becomes friends with his classmates.

A man in a business suit steals the car while the children are playing with it, and they go down to Wall Street to look for the man and the car. Although their search ends in vain, the story has a happy ending. The children, portrayed by members of a choir at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York, remain friends

The film is for sale through a New York bookstore, and so far, it has been purchased for broadcasting by a cable television company in Begium and Holland, and someone in Sweden bought 10 copies, Ruzzin

The film was written and produced by Ruzzin's former classmate, Anne Richardson. Pre-production work on the film began in July 1989, and it was shot on location in New York over a 14 day period in August 1989. "The whole process, including film and sound editing, took about 11 months," Ruzzin

Although he and Richardson were still students at Columbia when they made "A Boy and His Car," Ruzzin said they never entered it in the student category at film festivals.

'Violent man' arrested in Park

Park police responding to a report of a "violent man" in the 1200 block of Maryland July 8, arrested the man and took him to the Detroit Psychiatric Institute.

The man was breaking windows and furniture and saying he wanted police to kill him. He made attempts to injure himself and had to be forcibly restrained.

The incident occurred at 1:45

Mark Ruzzin likes being behind the camera, not in front of it, but he good-naturedly agreed to pose for this photo.

"We never thought of it as a student film," Ruzzin said. "Not that student films are bad; there are a lot of good ones out there. But we just never felt it was a student film, so we entered it in the non-student, or what you could call the professional category."

That's why the awards the film has won are especially sweet for Ruzzin and Richardson. Their film was judged against professional, short-subject films, and stood the test.

Ruzzin said that the film has been a calling card for him and Richardson. Producers and others in the film industry are starting to look at their work. Richardson and Ruzzin have co-written a feature-length screen play, and are seeking producers to back it, he said.

'People in the film industry, including producers and directors, have told us that this film ("A Boy and His Car") shows that we know how to make movies. Now it's a matter of proving to someone that we have the right script so that we can get the money to make another one.'

Ruzzin said that he hasn't directed a film in about a year, and he's anxious to get back artist or a writer, you can paint or write anytime. It's something you can always do. But you can't always make a movie. A lot of work goes into just being able to make one.'

Born in Mount Clemens, Ruzzin grew up in Clinton Township with his younger brother, Greg, and younger sister, Alyssa. He graduated from Notre Dame High School in 1980, and earned a bachelor's degree in general studies from the University of Michigan in 1984.

He said he never knew what he wanted to be while he was growing up, but in his junior year of college, he became interested in film studies. He entered the Columbia University School of Arts Film Division in 1985, and earned his master of fine arts degree in 1990.

Ruzzin, who shares an apar ment with two roommates on the upper west side of Manhattan, has been on vacation in Grosse Pointe Park for the last few weeks. However, it's been a working vacation. A friend of his, who attends New York University's film school, is shooting a film at Cranbrook, and Ruzzin has been working as script supervisor and conti-

Ruzzin, who thinks of himself as a director who tries to write, too, said he hopes that someday he'll reach the point where he won't have to worry about whether his last film really was his

"Right now, I'm kind of in limbo," he said. "But I think that if you want something bad enough, and you've got the talent to do it, then it's not a matter of if you'll get the chance to do it again, but when. That's what keeps me going."

Public hearing set on proposal to expand Bon Secours parking

Assistant Editor
Residents packed the Grosse Pointe council chambers Monday night as Bon Secours Hospital officials unveiled plans for a new parking lot along Cad-

For the past month, the hospital has been discussing the parking lot with neighbors. The lot would displace seven of eight homes on Cadieux that the hospital has purchased over the past few years. The eighth house is protected by a living trust that allows the residents to remain in the home the rest of their lives.

The homes are north of the Cadieux Village Condominiums at Cadieux and Jefferson in Grosse Pointe City.

While residents were eager to express their views, Mayor Lorenzo Browning said the proper time to do so would be at a public hearing, which is scheduled for Aug. 19 during the council's next regular meet-

At that time, the council will sit as the planning commission, which will decide on whether to recommend Bon Secours' rezoning request to change the properties from residential to park-

Property to be subdivided

By Donna Walker Staff Writer

Developer W. James Mast has received the go-ahead to subdivide the property at 237 Ridge Road into four lots.

Mast had asked for a variance to subdivide the property into five lots at the June 17 meeting of the zoning board of appeals. He said he needed the variance to create a cul-de-sac. contending that was the only way he could put five lots on the property.

Neighbors on Stephens Road objected to the cul-de-sac, and the board decided to table the issue until the July 15 meeting.

However, Mast withdrew the request for a cul-de-sac and his site plan for five lots on July 3. At that time, he asked the board to instead consider his plan to divide the property into four lots.

Under the four-lot plan, two lots will face Ridge Road and two lots will face Stephens Road.

Mayor Joseph Fromm said that if the property had no existing structures on it, Mast would not have had to come before the zoning board of appeals again, because the four lots would have complied with the city's zoning ordinance.

However, a three-story home and garage, built approximately 72 years ago, are on the property. Their existence infringed on the front, side and rear yards of the proposed lots, creating the need for a vari-

"If you had torn the house and garage down this morning, you wouldn't have had to come here tonight," Fromm said.
"No, make it last week, not this morning."

During a public hearing held on the variance for the four-lot plan, James Carlin of Stephens Road asked the council if the city had any regulations regarding the style of homes Mast could construct.

"For example, there's a house on Lothrop that just doesn't fit in with the neighborhood," Carlin said. "It seems to me that there should be some kind of control. I'd hate to see a crazy house put across the street from me.

Robert Irhie, city attorney, said that the Farms does not have an ordinance dictating the style of homes that people can or cannot build on private property because it would be difficult to uphold in court.

The zoning board of appeals - which consists of the members of the city council - unanimously voted to give Mast the variance, with some provisions. Mast has to tear down the house and garage, and see to it that at least two trees are in front of each of the four houses. If they are not destroyed, the existing trees may count in meeting the requirement.

Before the vote, board member/councilman John M. Crowley said, "It's too bad (the existing) house never hit the market. I understand the free enterprise system, and that it's the right of the buyer and seller to do what they want, but it's a shame (because the house might have been saved)."

Fromm, however, told Mast, "I think I speak on behalf of the council and the neighbors when I say thank you for the changes you have made in coming up with a plan that calls for four lots instead of five."

Mast said that he would like to begin work on the property as soon as possible, but that he can't do anything as long as Elisabeth Lepard, the current owner, has posession of the house. According to their purchase agreement, Mast said, Lepard has the house until Aug. 15.

Henry DeVries, Bon Secours chief operating officer, and Mike Serilla, assistant vice president of operations, gave the council an overview of the hospital's parking plans.

DeVries said that parking needs have increased due to the fact that the hospital now performs more outpatient services. In 1970, about 80 percent of the hospital's surgeries were inpatient operations, he said, while today about 60 percent of surgeries are on an outpatient basis.

Serilla presented a Plan C. which included 112 parking spaces and access from within the Bon Secours property, not off Cadieux Road. Neighbors had expressed a desire not to have more entrances to the hospital along Cadieux.

Previous plans included one that called for 124 spaces with access off Cadieux, and another with 118 spaces and no entrance or exit off Cadieux.

Plan C further addressed some of the neighbors' con-

Zoning, variance, lot split, sign fees raised in City to meet costs

Petitioners seeking zoning changes, variances or lot splits will have to cover the city's administrative costs, according to new fees adopted in Grosse Pointe City.

The city council approved the increase in fees at its Monday night meeting. The increase was the first in 25 years, said administrative assistant Christine Bremer.

She told the council that the $50 fee for a zoning, variance or lot split application fails to cover the city's costs in processing the applications.

Typically, such requests require review by not only city employees, but also by city consultants, such as the city planner, attorney and engineer. Also, mailing costs are incurred in notifying residents and sometimes the city has to pay for notices in the newspaper.

The new fees are: Variances (board of zoning appeals), $90;

Commercial site plan review,

cerns, such as building a higher wall along Cadieux and landscaping improvements.

Residents at the meeting, however, were allowed to raise some questions that they felt needed to be addressed:

• Is the hospital's current ratio of beds to parking spaces adequate?

• Is the new parking lot merely a short-term fix? Will parking needs continue to increase in the future and require even more parking?

• Could Cadieux be designated a one-way road?

• Is Bon Secours' parking lot plan meeting the setback requirements from the street as stipulated in city ordinances?

• Can a level be added to the hospital's existing parking structure, thus making the construction of a new lot and the demolition of existing homes unnecessary?

Browning and hospital officials assured that all the residents' questions will be considered and addressed at the $150 plus any actual expenses exceeding $150:

Rezoning, $250; Lot split, $250 plus any actual expenses exceeding $250. The council also raised the sign permit fee to $50. It was "For the work involved, the

By comparison, according to a study conducted by Bremer, all variance, zoning, site plan and lot split applications requiring public hearings carry a $75 fee in the Woods and $50 in the Shores. The Farms has no fee. but it charges for actual mailing costs.

public hearing. The city encouraged residents to call or write the city manager, Thomas Kressbach, to express their concerns or ideas.

City planner Brandon Rogers said that he will be looking at the parking plans. He said it is clear that Bon Secours needs more parking, but he is not convinced a new lot along Cadieux is the way to go.

"I see the need for more parking," he said, "but the question is, 'Is this the place for parking?"" n 1992, the 500th anniversary of the 'discovery of America" by Christopher Columbus will be observed in the United States and elsewhere but it apparently will also heat up a new controversy over his role in history.

The revisionists are having a field day with the explorer who in our view should be given credit for opening the New World to Europe, which is perhaps saying the least about what happened almost 500 years ago.

After reading newspaper and magazine references to the controversy, we conclude that some people and organizations now are attempting to judge Columbus and his achievements, not on the prevailing morality of his day, but on the basis of 1991 (or 1992) thinking about civil rights and especially the treatment of minori-

As a consequence, the critics ignore his persistence, his organizational abilities. his seamanship, once extolled as superb by Samuel Eliot Morison, and even his willingness to venture into uncharted seas in search of his dream, even though he never found the long-sought route to Asia that was his goal.

Instead, the critics complain about what happened in the New World after Columbus found the way to it from Europe. The National Council of Churches, for example, has said that the 1492 discovery began "an invasion and colonization with legalized occupation, genocide, economic exploitation and a deep level of institutional racism and moral decadence."

The moral reasoning involved in such an attack seems to be comparable to terming Abraham Lincoln a racist because he once said, to save the Union, he would agree to free the slaves by buying them from their Southern owners and shipping them back to Africa.

It is true that many cruel and atrocious crimes were committed by the Spanish conquistadores, and, in fact, even by many of the later colonists in New England who did not even practice or believe in freedom of speech, religion or the right to vote by all men.

But, as the New York Times pointed out the other day, "what is left out (of the denunciations of the early colonists) is that Spain almost from the beginning acknowledged that Indians were also God's children, a ruling that gave moral lever. age to clerical defenders of indigeneous

Overall, however, the critics who have landed on Columbus tend to accept a sentimentalized or "noble savage" viewpoint of the native populations who in actuality were often no better or worse than the "invaders" who followed Columbus.

It is also true that some native American groups have organized their own events. One alliance has declared 1992 "The Year of the Indigeneous People," and more than 200 groups are reported to be planning native commemorations, presumably to emphasize what they have achieved since Columbus' arrival.

Latin American historian Dauril Alden of the University of Washington says that "Columbus was a product of his times," and adds that he was apparently beastly to his sailors as well as to the Indians.

But more memorable words of advice came from Princeton anthropologist Jorge Klor de Alva, who suggested that it's time to remember that "we're descended from both sides, the conqueror and the conquered," which, he said, should make this "a time of great reflection."

A good suggestion for 1992.

A great dissenter's final 'no n the final opinion of his 24-year career on the Supreme Court, Justice Thurgood Marshall warned in another memorable dissent that "an even more extensive upheaval of this court's precedents may be in store."

In his dissent, he lamented the court's reversal in Payne vs. Tennessee of a decision made four terms earlier and reaffirmed more recently because, he contended, it illustrated the current majority's tendency to overrule precedents solely on the basis of recent changes in the court's membership.

"Today's majority," he observed, "overrules both of these votes and credits the dissenting views in these cases. Neither the law nor the facts supporting (the earlier decisions) underwent any change over the years. Only the personnel of this court did."

It was at this point in his dissent that he issued his warning about the further upheaval of the court's precedents and then added:

"Renouncing this court's historic commitment to a conception of the judiciary as a source of reasoned judgments, the majority declares itself free to discard any principle of constitutional liberty which was recognized or reaffirmed over the dissenting votes of four justices and with which five or more justices now disagree.

The majority today sends a clear signal," he went on, "that scores of established constitutional liberties are now ripe for reconsideration, thereby inviting the very type of open defiance of our precedents that the majority rewards in this case."

The last member of the once liberal high court to leave it, Marshall denied at a press conference that he had quit out of

"frustration" or "discouragement" at being in the minority on many important social issues. But surely his dissatisfaction with the current majority's thinking was apparent in that last dissent.

Some critics contend that time has "passed by" this grandson of a slave who became the first black (he prefers the term Afro-American) to serve on the high court but more objective observers say that his presence, words and opinions helped to extend the achievements of human rights through the law and the Constitution.

The important question now is whether the conservative court will reverse other constitutional liberties as Marshall warned it might. Surely that course of action is at least possible. If it occurs, Justice Marshall's prediction may come true: "Tomorrow's victims may be minorities. women or the indigent," whom he felt the court during his years had served to pro-

Reversals of court opinions are not all that rare, of course, although the doctrine of stare decisis implies a policy of following rules laid down in previous decisions unless they contravene the ordinary principles of justice.

But if the court goes too far in reconsidering the precedents established in many civil rights cases, powerless victims may have reason to feel a personal sense of loss from Marshall's departure from the court. It's a feeling the American people could come to share.

As to President Bush's nomination of Clarence Thomas as Marshall's successor, we prefer to defer an opinion until the conclusion of the Senate Judiciary Committee's confirmation hearings.

John, the giant killer of 1990

Tobody yet knows whether John Engler will be a one-term governor, follow several predecessors by becoming a long-term occupant of the office or even move up eventually to higher political office.

However people view Engler's political future, we think many Michigan residents will find The Detroit News' campaign review of Engler's successful 1990 race for the governorship, "The Journey of John Engler," a good, fast read. The authors are the staffers who covered the campaign.

In its early stages, the book is especially informative by showing that Engler's 1990 success was just the latest in a series of well-planned political campaigns that brought him, step by step, to the state's top elective post.

When he started his political career by upsetting a GOP incumbent, Rep. Russell Strange, in 1970, Engler won by following his own advice, offered in a term paper for a Michigan State University political science class. He advised good organization, hard work, people-to-people contacts and a campaign with plenty of perspiration and participation.

In fact, the authors contend that the 17page report "would serve as a blueprint for many future campaigns, including a run for Michigan governor two decades later."

Engler also got several strong campaign assists from his opponent, the incumbent governor James Blanchard. The first came years earlier when Blanchard's unfortunate recommendation for a 38 percent increase in the state income tax proved to be so unpopular that it led to the Democrats' loss of control of the state

John Engler, of course, couldn't have planned it quite that way but GOP control of the Senate certainly served his long-range purpose. From minority leader, he suddenly was elevated to the post of majority leader and thus was in a position to determine the success or failure of the Democratic governor's legislative proposals.

That tax hike wasn't the only error of the administration but whenever Blanchard took a misstep, Engler and his planners were ready to capitalize on it. So if Blanchard lost the election, Engler also took positive steps to win it. He had a plan and it worked.

Blanchard, in fact, also had a plan. It was to have his staff answer every campaign charge or question raised about him or his administration and to do so in what staffers even called "hand-to-hand combat" with Engler's staff and support-

Many people felt that tactic backfired and helped convince the public that Blanchard was arrogant, out of touch with the voters and a loser who wasn't doing much to improve the state's skidding economy.

The authors seek to be fair and impartial. Indeed, they found the 1990 TV com-mercials for both candidates "filled with half-truths and bald-faced lies," and lacking in any discussion of the issues such as "improving education, cleaning up the environment, reducing crime and drugs." Incidentally, we would agree with that assessment.

In an epilogue, the authors also concede that the Engler administration's opening acts, including proposals to chop spending, "rankled every human services and arts advocacy group in the state," but that even his adversaries concede Engler supports an agenda "to make the bold moves needed to achieve his goals."

Writing early in the new governor's term, the authors left the safe implication that Engler and the state still face tough problems but did not offer any prediction about whether he would be a one-term governor.

At this stage, it appears likely the public will permit him more time, given the popularity of the administration's conservative views, although the unpopularity among some powerful interests of Engler's budget-cutting proclivities may spell serious trouble in the future.

One claim by the publisher that is of doubtful validity: The book will tell us who Engler really is. We don't think it Still, as we said, it's a fast read that will be perused with pleasure by most Michigan Republicans. Democrats who wish to learn more about how Engler did it could also profit from at least skimming this fast-paced blueprint of a successful campaign.

Good story

To the Editor:

The Grosse Pointe News June 13 story about Delores and Henry Arsenault and their 17 children was delightful! I am tired of reading about abortions, dope peddlers, violence and millionaire owners of the Tigers losing money even with overpriced tickets. (No rent is paid but they want a new stadium financed by a near-bankrupt city and county. It's like someone with a chaffeur-driven Cadillac filled with groceries driving up to the Capuchin Soup Kitchen or Mother Waddles asking for a hand-

Did Delores and Henry come from a large family? How do they celebrate birthdays? Did they take vacation trips together, and if so, how many cars did they use? How many television sets did they have, and who decided what program would be viewed? Did the children borrow one another's clothes without permission? How was the use of the cars handled?

Even with so many bathrooms, when all of the children were at home, how was bathroom usage decided?

Come on up to my pad

Most human body parts have multiple functions.

We close doors and drawers with our hips; park pencils behind our ears; stabilize armloads of laundry and stacks of books with our chins; carry parking tickets in our teeth; illustrate Michigan's geography with our left hands; prop telephones on our shoulders.

The shoulder trick has become more difficult for women because of a certain fashion accessory.

Like it or not, shoulder pads are in. They'll probably, uh, stick around for a few more

Those who resisted them at first ("Sure, they look good on Linda Evans. Everything looks good on Linda Evans": 'They're just a one-season fancy"; "The last thing I need is some extra padding on my body";) have caved in and joined the pad fad.

There are shoulder pads, however, and there are SHOULDER PADS.

Shoulder pads are little puffy things that add a bit of shape in places I tend to slope or droop. They are permanently stitched into seams. They can't be removed.

SHOULDER PADS are major fashion accessories. They're attached to shoulder seams with strips of Velcro. I have to rip shoulder pads out when I wash or clean the shirt/sweater/ jacket/dress. I have to store these things, retrieve them, replace them in the proper clothing item. They need to be cleaned, matched, plumped, pampered and unstuck from each other.

I have about three dozen

I Say Margie Reins Smith

pairs stored in their own and vanilla-colored pads dresser drawer. They have jelled together into one huge, spongey clump and I think they're secretly having sex because they seem to multiply, like wire coat hangers do when you're not paying attention to

I think I'm storing shoulder pads from clothes I donated to the Salvation Army three years

Shoulder pads come in an infinite number of colors and sizes. For instance, I have white, off-white, cream, ivory small, medium, large, industrial and National Football League sizes.

I am an occasional victim of the stacking syndrome. I put on a shirt with shoulder pads. Add a sweater with shoulder pads. Top it with a blazer or a jacket with shoulder pads. By the time I put on my coat, with its own sewed-in shoulder pads, I'm up to my earlobes in foam rubber, adding new meaning to the term: "dressed to the teeth."

Sometimes I have the illusion that somebody is sneaking up behind me.

Shoulder pads are more socially acceptable than other items of underclothing such as, say, padded bras. It's OK to make conversation about them. It's OK for people to know you're wearing them. It's even OK for them to be clearly visable through your clothing.

And when someone gets smart alecky, it's OK to reach under your sweater, rip one of those suckers off its Velcro strip and lob it across the room.

Wearers of shoulder pads have occasional embarrassing moments, however, like the heartbreak of pslippage.

You're at work, making a brilliant presentation to a roomful of clients and superiors. You're pacing back and forth, making fantastic eye contact, telling amusing anecdotes with appropriate, animated gestures. You glance down. There's an unusual lump on your forearm. Or an extra bump on your chest. Or a hump on your back.

Is it proper to stop talking, reach inside your clothing, retrieve the wayward pad and put it back on its shoulder? Or should you surreptitiously twitch it gradually up your arm while distracting your listeners with charts and graphs?

We can have our faces tightened, our tummys tucked, our ears flattened, our eyelids lifted, our lips and breasts augmented and our spider veins zapped. We can pay someone to permanently tattoo eyeliner on our upper lids; we can have fat sucked off our thighs and hips; we can get our noses straightened and bobbed: our cheekbones and chins reshaped. We can color, perm, straighten, streak, curl or highlight our

Is shoulder augmentation next?

Recycling also collects skeptics

Out where I live, the voice of the skeptic is loud in the land. I haven't heard the complaints from Grosse Pointe, but some of the same questions ap-

Our town has just started a recycling drop-off center and is about to embark on curbside pick-up. The center is operated by Waste Management and the pick-up probably will be too, although the bid process isn't finished yet.

Despite a groundswell of environmentalism, there is plenty of nitpicking going on. The major question is:

What is Waste Management going to do with recyclables when there is a glut on the market and it can't actually recycle them?

A lot of people out here believe Waste Management is guilefully soothing us with talk of recycling, while cynically trucking our No. 2 plastic and bags of newspapers straight to the dump. The old wolf in sheep's clothing trick. (Oh, and charging us more than we paid for regular garbage pickup,

Now I'm the first to admit that this pastoral and quaint community that time forgot is really big on conspiracy theories (on any subject). But it's also hard to get firm answers to these questions.

804 S. HAMILTON

Waste Management's Susan Todoroff explains that disposing of recyclables is no problem because the company has created alliances in order to ensure and even create - markets for recycled materials. This is the marketplace at work.

Waste Management owns a share of Stone Container Corp., which recycles newsprint into cardboard. Glass and metal go through a network with National Can. An alliance with Dupont takes care of the plas-

That's good.

But can we trust them when there is also a general consensus that the markets have not kept up with citizen demand for recycling?

It's been reported that a recycling center in Macomb County threw newspapers in the landfill when the market dried up. And I'm told on good authority that "strong, informed suspicion" indicated that plastics collected in one of the Pointes also got dumped (not by Waste Management)

Greenpeace Magazine recently ran a piece about recycled paper that isn't. A lot of what is labeled "recycled" is really sweepings from the mill floor, not paper that has already been used once by consumers. Even "post-consumer" paper often contains only 5 or 10 percent used paper, according to the magazine.

Greenpeace says there aren't yet enough mills doing the deinking process. Further, government subsidies make it cheaper to cut down new trees than to re-use paper fiber. California has warehouses full of mixed-color glass without a market. It's costing someone storage fees while the experts try to find a use for it.

Clearly, there are still some

As Sheila Osann of the Pointes' recycling group understands it, there are no written guarantees in the cities' recycling contracts with Waste Management. But Osann thinks the arrangement is a pretty safe bet.

They have national markets for everything they're collecting already," she said. "If you were talking about a smaller company, I wouldn't be so confident. But Waste Management has too much to lose to chance getting caught dumping.'

Meanwhile, the news that recycling in the Pointes has freed up so much capacity at the Grosse Pointes-Clinton incinerator that they're taking in trash from several other communities can only be described as good. It means that a quantity of goods is being saved from the waste stream - and that the incinerator can do some cash business while reducing other towns' reliance on landfills.

Let's hope all those communities (and ourselves) are taking steps to keep toxics like batteries out of the incinerator.

After deadline, I talked with Joe Leonard, who wrote the master contract for the Pointes' curbside recycling. He made some interesting points, which we'll touch on next week.

From Germany comes a solemn black-bordered envelope bearing an announcement of the death of someone dear to us, though we knew him little.

He visited us almost 12 years ago, the father of our muchloved and endlessly challenging exchange student and old friend of Dr. Eberhard and Hanna Mammen of the Woods.

"Bolla" had only a middling uknsu and poo s grasp of German didn't get beyoud Achtung or Dummkopf, but the two men drew up their chairs at one end of the diningroom table and talked about the war, the big war, the only real war, the war that had made them theoretical enemies.

And what they found was they were really just two kids, one 19 and serving in the Navy to avoid the Army draft; the other 17, yanked out of high school by Hitler's edict, shot full of shrapnel, spending most of the war in a French prison camp. Now they were together, not always understanding each other's words, but comprehending the experiences perfectly.

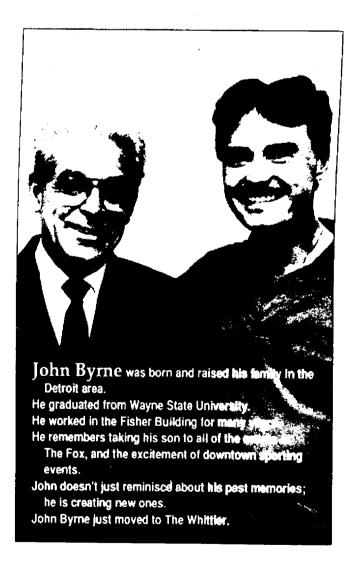

We treated him to an American picnic with hot dogs and corn-on-the-cob, and only later found that everyone he visited was treating him to the same meal. Hanna Mammen made the evening exotic with a home-baked Schwarzwald torte (which she doesn't remember anymore, but I do).

What she does remember is how much fun her old friend wrung from life. Incapacitated in the '60s by a weight-reduction medication gone amok, he fought every minute to enjoy

"Everybody loved him," she remembers. "He was so boisterous. He knew he was ill, but when we visited, he was the one who would stay up all night and talk.

"We were a group of friends who had all gone through the war and known hard times. He is the first to go.'

Bob and I have always meant to go to Germany to visit, and now we see we have put it off too long. Now, he won't be there.

Bad example

To the Editor:

It is said children learn more by example than words. Are we, as a community historically committed to our children and their education, aware of what we taught at the Grosse Pointe and Harper Woods "Salute America 1991" parade on the fourth of July? Let me share some image-lessons I saw .

A float made of paper flowers with the American eagle at the controls of a gun mounted on top of a tank. Children riding decorated tricycles immediately behind an armored military truck. A boy, perhaps 8 years old, atop a large cardboard/wooden "tank" pretend-shooting at a cheering crowd with a play weapon. Adults celebrating as heroes men and women who were compelled to be part of killing hundreds of thousands of men, women and children in another country.

What lessons did we teach our children on the Fourth? Lessons of peace, non-violent conflict resolution, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto vou"? Or lessons of violence, "Might makes right," and "We're No. 1!"?

Good neighbors

To the Editor:

'Offerings from the loft," July 11, hit the nail squarely on the head about this being a caring community. The recent storm brought out the best in us. We checked on our friends and neighbors to find out if they had power and, if not, if there was anything we could do to help. Last week's experience is yet another example about who cares, and illustrates how the citizens of the Pointes and Harper Woods help each other and why we can count our blessings. Older residents who had no close-by friends or relatives were assisted by Services for Older Citizens (SOC).

I was impressed and thought that others would like to hear how SOC's emergency plan went into operation right away on Monday morning after the Sunday storm. SOC was best friend and caregiver to many frail elderly people in our community. Although SOC had no electrical power at its Ferry School site, staff and volunteers saw to it that those people who were counting on home-delivered meals got box lunches and the attention they needed.

Ten volunteers a day, more than 50 good neighbors, delivered meals during that week. The activities of Food and Friendship continued in spite of the power outage. SOC's professional staff, two social workers and a nurse, made more than 100 telephone calls to check on the frail and made home visits to those who needed a more personal contact. Such calls as one from a 90-year-old woman, who needed her refrigerator moved in order to unplug the cord, were received and responded to. (A neighbor offered to give her help.)

The storm may have caused a great deal of damage but the concern for each other was given and felt by many.

Betty Rusnack Vice President for Program Services for Ölder Citizens Bury the cables

To the Editor: Several people are dead because we had no electricity: crews from as far away as Indiana had to be brought in to help. Some 2,500 power lines were down in greater Detroit

Many merchants had to toss out ice cream and milk; untold damage happened because Detroit had no electricity.

The solution? Put all cables underground. Will it cost money? Of course it will, but what is cheaper, damages in the millions and small children dead (how much is a child worth in terms of money?) or putting the cables underground?

Brilliant

To the Editor:

One notes that the great assemblage of mental might known as the Michigan Legislature has cut funds for adoptive and prenatal child care. This, of course, complements the decision to cut the funds for abortion. More children. less care — brilliant.

One wonders what the Legislature has against abortion, when so many of its members are living examples of its need.

Speak out

To the Editor:

"Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just Powers from the Consent of the Governed. And whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these Ends it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it, instituting a new Government, laying its Foundations on such Principles, and organizing its Powers in Such Forms, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness.'

In this time of trouble these words have never been more true. With American troops having fought and may fight again a war in a far off desert, it is time that the American people speak out against our president's and Congress' policy in the Middle East, if that is how they feel about it. (And if you agree with it, speak out in support of it.)

It is up to you as Americans and a free people to change a government that vou feel is abusing its powers and heading down a course you don't agree with. You must carry out a revolution, and over the next year and a half an opportunity has been offered to you to do just that.

Many people say that the anti-war demonstrators are unpatriotic and that we should support our troops in the Gulf. They are right, we should. And we all but for a small minority do. But that does not mean we have to support the government that sent them there.

The war in the Middle East and the flag burning controversary of the past summer have raised questions about what is patriotism.

Many "conservatives" call the anti-war demonstrations and the demonstrators against aspects of American foreign policy un-American. They tell us that we are betraying the men and the women who fought and will fight, who have died and will die securing and keeping the freedoms that allow us to demonstrate. But what is more contemptuous, using the rights they sacrificed their lives for and speaking out against the injustices of our government, or criticizing those same people and saying they shouldn't be allowed to express their point of view? For when people become complacent and don't use the rights that our soliders and sailors died for, those soldiers and sailors have died for nothing, they have died in

A true patriot is not someone who wears red, white and blue, flies the flag on national holidays, attends artificial, staged parades, and blindly supports his or her government. A true patriot is a person who knows and understands the history, the ideals and the philosophical origins of his country. He is a person who understands the sacrifice made by its peple and appreciates that sacrifice.

Many beorle have said to me that when it comes to America I should "love it or leave it" and that I should support my country "right or wrong." But I say to them: I love America, everything about it, its land, its people, its ideals. and its system of government. But I don't necessarily love the government itself. I also say to them my country right, and if it's wrong, Providence, let me make it right. I would like to quote Adlai Stevenson. "What do we mean by patriotism in the context of our time? ... a patriotism which is not short frenzied outbursts of emotion, but the tranquil and steady dedication of a lifetime. There are words that are easy to utter, but this is a mighty assignment. For it is often easier to fight for principles than to live up to them."

Police directing traffic need to be seen for their own safety.

They need to wear something to make them highly visible - like a bright orange vest.

Lake level

Lake St. Clair at the end of June was at elevation 574.72 feet above the mean water level at Father Point, Quebec, or 36 inches above chart datum. This was about 5 inches above what it was a year ago, and about 1 inch below one month ago.

The June monthly mean level of 574.79 feet was about 10 inches above the long-term average for June.

The lake, however, remained about 21 inches below the alltime high June monthly mean level, which was recorded in 1986. The forecast shows that at the end of July, the level of Lake St. Clair will be about 3 inches below what it was at the end of June.

The level of the lake is expected to continue its seasonal decline into November. The water level in December 1991 is expected to be about 4 inches above the long-term average for that month, or about 12 inches below what is was at the same time in 1990.

BirthCare at Bon Secours.

It's a child's game, but it's also good advice.

Bon Secours was the first hospital in the Detroit area to offer single-room maternity care. This alternative to traditional childbirth allows the mother-to-be to stay in the same warm, comfortable room throughout her delivery. We call it BirthCare, and when we first introduced it, other hospitals were still wheeling their laboring mothers from one room to another.

We thought it was a good idea to design a delivery around the mother, not a delivery around the hospital. That's why BirthCare has become so popular. And that's why a lot of women have chosen Bon Secours as their hospital. Maybe you should, too.

For more information about BirthCare, a tour of the unit, or referrals to qualified obstetricians who can answer questions about your pregnancy, call 779-7911.

Nobody does it better. Nobody's done it longer.

American small cars improve; Japanese target luxury market

One of the odd effects of the mass communication explosion in this century, particularly the emergence and rapid growth of television, has been an enormous increase in the importance of images relative to facts and ideas.

A nation chooses its president on the basis of an accumulation of images, slogans, "codewords" and sound bites, with virtually no serious discussion of any of the real problems we

The auto industry has been selling images ever since the mid-'20s when Ned Jordan wrote an ad for his Jordan Playboy which told of an adventurous young woman

"Somewhere West of Laramie" and said nothing at all about the car, except that it would fulfill all your dreams.

Hard times call upon us to examine the images we hold, because an automobile is an expensive item and choosing the right one is important. Who sits in the White House is all very interesting, but you have to live with your car.

I have driven several cars this summer which indicate to me that the American automakers are strongest where they are believed to be weak small cars - while the Japanese have shifted their attention to the luxury car segment where the Europeans and Americans are preceived to be strongest.

I came to this conclusion after driving a Mercury Tracer, Dodge Shadow, Chevrolet Cavalier, Nissan Sentra, Mazda 323, Subaru Loyale and three models of Infiniti.

The small American cars compared very favorably in performance, comfort and styling with comparable Japanese models and in most cases had a price edge, particularly in the Chevrolet Cavalier and Dodge Shadow (and, of course, Plymouth Sundance) lines. Slightly upscale, the Ford Tempo, Plymouth Acclaim and Chevrolet Corsica have even greater price advantages over similarly sized Japanese cars.

The Japanese have unquestionably had a very positive effect on the American industry by applying competitive pressure that has forced it to improve its products. Had Washington protected Detroit from the Japanese, it is unlikely that American cars would be any better than they were 10 or 12 years ago. But they are.

Now that Detroit has improved its products, buyers should consider them, not out of patriotism, but because many of them are good values. Detroit has talked about diversifying for years, but is still closely tied to the fortunes of its auto industry and that is why it is in severe economic trouble. Our recovery may be impeded by images from the past.

Infinite imagery

The Infiniti line of luxury cars was introduced in 1989 by Nissan with one of the most bizarre new-car advertising campaigns ever, in which the automobile was never seen. Most of us would still have trouble identifying an Infiniti.

New for 1991 is the G20, at the lower end of the Infiniti line. The G20 is a four-door mini-size luxury sedan that combines performance and fuel efficiency (24 city, 32 highway with five-speed manual transmission).

The G20 is powered by an all-new aluminum four-cylinder engine with dual overhead camshafts, four valves per cylinder and platinum-tipped spark plugs. The valve train features outer-end pivot Yshaped rocker arms, an unusually sophisticated design for a production car engine.

The engine puts out 140 horsepower, which translates into very peppy performance. The G20 is the first front-wheel drive car to feature the Infiniti multi-link front suspension, which provides excellent control and good steering feedback.

The G20 has just about everything you would want as standard equipment, including power steering, power disc brakes with ABS, clearcoat paint finish, variable/intermittent wipers, anti-theft system. power trunk and fuel door release, air conditioning, AM/FM stereo with cassette deck, power windows, power door locks and cruise control. Only three options are available, leather upholstery ($900), power sunroof ($800) and automatic transmission ($800).

The Infiniti G20's base price of $17,750 makes it a very attractive package.

The M30 is a strange combination of old and new. Its boxy, sharp cornered styling seems from another era (in fact, it is; it is basically the car that was introduced in Japan in 1986 as the Nissan Leopard). New for 1991 is a convertible version of the M30 coupe, which was introduced in the fall of 1989.

The M30 is powered by a 3.0liter overhead-cam V-6 engine rated at 162 horsepower, mated to an electronically controlled four-speed automatic transmission. Performance is very adequate, but not as peppy as the Ğ20.

With its front-engine, reardrive configuration, the M30 seems aimed directly at the sporty coupes from Europe. Four-wheel power disc brakes with ABS are standard equipment.

With base prices of $24,500 for the coupe and $31,000 for the convertible, the M30 does not seem quite as competitive as the G20, except for one feature on the just-introduced convertible, a one-touch button for putting the top up or down. One button releases panels, releases the top, puts it down tucks if away covers it with a panel and runs the side windows down. The only other car with a system like that is the $92,000 Mercedes-Benz 500SL.

At the top of the Infiniti line is the Q45 high-performance luxury sedan. The Q45 is powered by a 4.5-liter aluminum V-8 with four camshafts and 32 valves, which puts out 278 horsepower. The car is said to be capable of 170 miles per hour. (I don't know, I didn't try it. but I don't doubt it.)

If performance is its strong suit, its trump is its new-for-'91 Full-Active Suspension, which provides the handling of a world-class sports car with the smooth, comfortable ride of a luxury sedan through use of a computer-controlled "actuator," which keeps everything under control in sudden or panic maneuvers. Such maneuvers are rare and are attempted usually to avoid an impact. At such time, the rather high price of the option ($5,000) may well seem a good investment.

Another new option for 1991 is Infiniti Electronic Traction Control, which makes the Q45 a sure-footed beast in slush or snow or any other unpleasant conditions you may find.

The Q45 also takes the prize for the most ornate nameplate badge, a rococo design, incorporating the modern and mysterious Infiniti symbol with trim right out of the baroque era. It has drawn criticism as not fitting for such a modern design as the Q45, but I like it. I think it shows a reassuring sense of humor, or something.

The base price for the Q45 is $40,000 or $45,000 with the Full-Active Suspension, which makes it quite competitive in the luxury sedan market it is aimed at, which counts such denizens as Mercedes-Benz, BMW, Jaguar, Cadillac, Lincoln and, of course. Toyota Lexus. The Q45 price is close to Lexus, well below comparable Mercedes, BMW and Jaguar sedans, but higher than top-of-the-line Cadillac and Lincoln sedans.

The Infinitis are very tough competitors, but seem to threaten the Europeans more than Americans. Detroit is very competitive now at both ends of the market.

Little quilts

Judith Adams of Grosse Pointe Woods uses cross-stitching to make patchwork quilts that cover miniature beds in dollhouses and room settings. She'll teach the skill in a two-session class at Miniature Makers Workshop, 4515 N. Woodward, Royal Oak. The sessions are from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Wednesday, July 31, and Wednesday, Aug. 21. Information is avail-

Adams is one of 150 artisans of the International Guild of Miniature Artisans. She became interested in miniatures when she agreed to help her mother. Agalee Adams, also of the Woods, create a dollhouse. They found it physically impossible to make dollhouse-size patchwork quilts because the fabric pieces were too tiny to stitch, so Adams devised a way to achieve the same effect with cross-stitching. Formerly an architectural designer, Adams now works full time as a miniaturist, weaver and designer.

Pre-registration is requested and necessary materials are available.

The tiles are available for nurchase at the Woods city hall, but they sell out quickly. Many of the older editions are no longer available.

Urban also did pen and ink sketches of the Grosse Pointe Park municipal building for that city's 1990 commemorative tile, and the four auto baron homes (the Henry Ford Estate, the Edsel & Eleanor Ford House, Meadowbrook Hall and the Fisher Mansion) for the Detroit Visitor and Convention Bureau. She was also commissioned by Bon Secours Hospital to do the four poster-size sketches that hang in its board room. The drawings depict scenes from the hospital's his-

Urban's studio is located in the basement of her home, and she apologizes for the way it

"I call it the pit," she said, and quickly added that she's in the process of redecorating. She's going to ask a contractor to install better lighting, she said, to make it look more professional.

However, Urban doesn't need fancy lights to make her look more professional. The proof is in her work. Sketches upon delicate, detailed sketches for which she received commissions are piled on a long table in the center of the room. A thick portfolio contains commercial ads that used her drawings, and portraits she has done line the walls of the studio and are propped up against table and chair legs.

Many of her works are in pen and ink. Others are in watercolor, charcoal and oils. Many of them she was paid to do. Others she did just for fun, to keep in practice.

When Urban learns that a Grosse Pointe mansion is going to be torn down, she asks permission of the owner to sketch the home for posterity. If the owner approves, Urban takes photographs of the home from many different angles. When she can, she also takes photos inside the home.

Then, she said, "I grab my TV table, folding chair and equipment out of the car, sit down in front of the house and get to work."

Sometimes she can finish the sketch in one to three hours. Sometimes, she said, it takes her a couple of days.

Urban said that she prefers to sketch things "live." "Photos are wonderful, and you have to rely on them of-' she said, "but there is nothing like doing it from life. Photos never get the true color. They can't, because a camera is a mechanical thing. It can only take the image of a flat surface. There is nothing like the human mind and eye and hand. When I'm looking at a building, I can swivel my head and get a totally different view of what I'm looking at, things I wouldn't see in a photo. And the mind and eye can see things that a camera can't."

The daughter of the late Ludwig and Matilda Michaelsen, Urban said she loved to draw as a child, growing up in Detroit. Her grandmother, an immigrant from Germany, worked as a gourmet cook for the Firestone family, and traveled with them around the country. One day, Urban recalled, when she was about 4 years old, she got a gift in the mail from her grandmother.

"It was a silky cushion, a souvenir from Florida," Urban said. "It had a beach scene on it, and the colors were real rich and gaudy. I remember looking at that pillow and thinking Tve got to get some paper and crayons.' I had to draw the sand and the bathing beauties and the palm trees, and of course, I couldn't get the intensity of the colors. That's a problem all artists have. You know in your mind what you want to achieve, and so often you can't achieve it.

When she was in high school, Urban's art teacher encouraged her to apply for a college art scholarship. Urban was in an advanced art class in high school, and members of the class were taught by some of the leading artists of that time at the Detroit Institute of Arts on Saturdays.

The artists at that time focused on modern art, and I liked to draw more realisticlooking things, so they weren't very encouraging," Urban said.

So she decided not to apply for a scholarship.

At the age of 17, she went to work as a secretary in the public relations department of the Detroit public school system. Her office published manuals and other items used in the district, and Urban learned how to specify type faces and otherwise lay out work for commercial printers

"That's why I can do commercial work (such as magazine advertisements) now without any problem," Urban said.

She married Neil F. Urban in 1959, and quit her job with the school district at the age of 24. when their first child, Christina, was born.

In 1975, Urban took a commercial arts class at Macomb

Community College. The next year, she and her family, which had grown to include a son, Michael, moved to Grosse Pointe.

In 1977, Urban took a portraiture class at the Grosse Pointe War Memorial. "I thought this would be great. I could paint my kids," Urban said, "but I never have painted them, because they won't pose for me."

Urban sold her first painting to a model she had sketched in class.

In 1980, Urban needed to make some extra money, so she put together a portfolio of her drawings and went to businesses on Kercheval on the Hill and in the Village, and on Mack Avenue. A few, including a furrier and a furniture company, hired her to make sketches for their ads, and Urban's commercial career was

For the last five years, she has sketched the homes that appear in Champion & Baer Inc.'s real estate ads.

The job keeps her busy. So busy that she's five months behind on her other work (including portraits). Sometimes, she'll sketch 15 homes a week, she said. Each home takes between 1 1/2 to 3 hours to sketch, depending on its size. Sometimes, Urban will take a photograph of the house and work from that. But most of the time, she said, she sketches the home while sitting in front of it in her car.

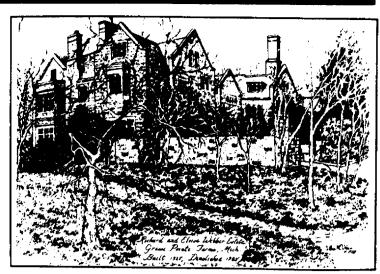

"In the beginning, people would call the police on me, because I'd be staring at a home for more than an hour," Urban said. "Now, most of the police officers know me and know what I'm doing."

Urban said she likes to flipflop between portraits and architectural renderings, and between using ink, charcoal, watercolor and oils to stay fresh. She said she sometimes feels "burned out" and said she might have gotten out of the art business a long time ago if it wasn't for her classmates in the Wednesday afternoon portraiture class at the War Mem-

"They're like family," Urban said. "It's very easy to fall away from art if you're not with artists or at the studio each week, because art is sometimes trying on your soul, and you need to be around other people who understand that."

A member of the Grosse Pointe Artists Association and the Progressive Artists, Urban said that she wishes she had time to hold a one-woman show. She'd also like to have more time so that she could learn how to sculpt and Scarab Club in Detroit.

But her favorite wish, she said, is this: "That someone in England or Scotland will write to me and say that I could stay

She can handle it once every 10 years, she said.

Tony Langone, co-owner of Langone DiMango Shell on Mack in Grosse Pointe City, said his business was still without power last Thursday

When asked what he and his workers have been doing since their power went out on Sunday, he said, "Sitting in the dark and hoping.'

Nothing at the station was operable without electricity. The workers couldn't pump gas or work on cars. The only business they did was selling cigarettes and pop.

"We've lost a lot of money in four days," Langone said, "but the customers are very good. They say they'll come back later. We have good custom-

Doug Graham, the branch manager at Standard Federal on Mack and Stanhope in the Woods, said the bank was still without Edison power last Thursday and was operating on two and sometimes three generators.

The branch had a few newaccounts desks open. A single row of lights was on and three to four teller windows were open.

"It's certainly not neat and tidy," he said, "but it gets the job done.'

There was no power at the drive-through window building - which is not connected to the main building. The drivethrough building also houses the automatic teller machine, which wasn't working either.

The bank was able to steer customers to other branches, and 98 percent of the customers have been understanding, Graham said. A few complained when their needs couldn't be met at that moment, he said.

"On Monday, we did a few real estate closings with flashlights near the windows," he said. "It was fun for about two hours, but. . ."

To help compensate for the additional hardship the power outage caused for its employees, the bank bought lunches and soft drinks and generally tried to keep their morale up. but it was pretty hard, Graham said, especially without air conditioning on 80- to 90-degree

More than 50 years after the Grosse Pointe News began publishing from a second floor office at the Punch and Judy Theater, current employees were ironically back, this time in a second floor office of the Punch and Judy building, putting the paper together under the barest conditions. The staff moved some computers, desks and chairs to the building last Tuesday when the power was still out at its offices. Power was restored Wednesday afternoon.

it's been very difficult for the employees," he said. "Their stamina is being put to the test, but they're coming through.'

He also advised that customers don't need to worry about the bank computer losing account information. The computer has several fail-safe methods of keeping the information from being lost.

Ray Laethem, owner of Ray Laethem Pontiac-Buick-GMC Truck on Mack, said he was lucky. When the storm started, he went to the dealership to make sure everything was OK.

He shut down the computer system so power surges wouldn't damage it. He got his power back the day after the storm, but it was too late - the dealership lost all the Monday business, the busiest day of the

"We probably won't be able to make it up," Laethern said.

Chuck Riley, executive vice president of the Meade Group, which owns Pointe Dodge, said the dealership was without power for two days, without phones for three days and without computers for four days because of downed computer phone lines.

Everything is dependent on computers at the dealership, even the service orders, so a lot of work had to be done by hand, he said.

"I have a portable generator at home that I brought in," Riley said, "and we were able to plug in a bunch of calculators and a few lights in the showroom and operate that way.

Businesses along the south side of Kercheval were without electricity until about 3 p.m. Wednesday, July 10, and many businesses couldn't use their telephones because their systems were hooked up to electronic switchboards.

Some of the shops, including the Christian Science Reading Room and Carl Sterr men's wear were closed Monday and Tuesday. The majority, however, stayed open, conducting business by natural light, flashlights and candles.

Leon Sehoyan, owner of Coiffures by Leon, said that his stylists shampooed and cut customers' hair near the front of the store, by the light coming in through the front window.

Their hair dryers and curling irons were useless, but they could use the phones, Sehoyan said. His son, Alan, found a way to wire the phones so that they bypassed the electrical switchboard.

Business was 25 percent of what it normally is on those days, Sehoyan said.

But we had to stay open," he said. "We're like the mail. Beauty will prevail in all kinds of adverse conditions. That's because women are the tougher of the species. They'll step over a hot (electrical) wire to get to a beauty salon."

Anne Craparotta, co-owner of Young Clothes Children's Shop, said the power outage may have helped her business.

"We did pretty good those two days (Monday and Tuesday)," she said. "Maybe it's because a lot of people were without power at home and wanted to get out and do something, so they went shopping."

She couldn't operate the cash register, so she worked out of a cash box and wrote out receipts. Customers couldn't use their charge cards, because she uses the telephone to verify charge accounts, and her phones were dead.

"But, really, the only inconvenient part about it was that I had to use a flashlight to see things in back of the store and to find (school) uniforms in the basement," Craparotta said.

She said she couldn't use candles inside the store because of the risk.

"It would be too much of a fire hazard," she said, "with all the clothes in there.'

Skip Baer, a broker at Champion and Baer Inc., said that the real estate firm's business "was not terribly affected because most of our agents worked out of their homes or used their car phones." They were also able to use the computers at Champion and Baer's board office in the Village.

John A. Moss, president of Tappan & Associates Realtors, said his office stayed open Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, but closed a couple of hours early the first two days.

"We could call out, but we didn't know when calls were cause the buttons weren't light ing up and the phones weren't ringing."

He solved the problem by directing the calls to an answering service. Brokers periodically called the service to find out if there were any messages. Other agents worked by candle-

'Electronic cottagers' love being stay-at-homes

By John Minnis Assistant Editor

As part of a nationwide trend, "electronic cottages" are sprouting throughout the Pointes.

No, these are not silicon-chip houses in a modern-day Hansel and Gretel. Rather, they are homes where residents are making a living sitting at computer terminals rather than jumping into cars each morning and driving to the office.

Instead of being connected to their offices by miles of concrete, these telecommuters are linked by telephone lines and modems.

They even have their own professional organization, the Association of Electronic Cottagers, based in California. Association members converse by dialing a local access number for CompuServe, an international computer information network. They share information, ideas and encouragement.

According to the association's Paul and Sarah Edwards of California, typical home businesses include word processing, bookkeeping, desktop publishing, executive search and private investigating.

A recent nationwide study showed a 12 percent increase in those working at home this year over last year. The largest categories of those working at home on computers are selfemployed, 11.8 million; parttimers, 10.5 million; telecommuters, 5.5 million; and lateshift workers for corporations, 10.6 million - that's 38.4 million electronic cottagers.

Telecommuters are employed by a corporation or company but work at home via a computer link up with the office during normal working hours.

One such Grosse Pointe Park telecommuter is Fred Girard, an investigative reporter with the sports department at The Detroit News. He uses the same software that the paper's bureaus use to link with the downtown editorial offices.

"You might say my home is the Grosse Pointe Park bureau of the sports department," he said.

Instead of going to the paper's offices downtown, he covers his assignments and then writes and files his stories from home - or anywhere else he happens to be working.

"My electronic cottage travels with me," he said.

Not only is Girard's home computer tied into The News' system, but he also logs on with a portable laptop when he's out of town.

Girard, also a part-time journalism instructor at Wayne State University, does much of his research by computer. He has access, for example, to the Wayne County Circuit Court docket, land records, Wayne State mainframe, the National Credit Information Center and computer information services, such as Lexus/Nexus and CompuServe.

Some of the best investigative stories in The News and the Free Press are assisted by computer research done by Girard and fellow investigative reporters at the two papers.

Grosse Pointe News columnist Nancy Parmenter is a parttime electronic cottager. Besides writing her weekly column for the Grosse Pointe News, she also free-lances for such papers as Adams Publishing's Suburban Sunday, which circulates in Macomb and southern Oakland counties.

Parmenter, who works hard and quickly, likes the flexibility that working at home gives her. Instead of completing her assignments and then having to hang around the office until quitting time, she can now get her work done and then relax.

"Mentally and emotionally." she said, "people are happier to not have to punch a time

She said the few people she knows who left jobs to work at home are the type who work hard, and then enjoy more leisure time.

Park residents Richard Wright and Jenny King, auto columnists for the Grosse Pointe News, operate an electronic cottage business out of Wright's home. Their company, Wright-King Editorial Services, does automotive writing and desktop publishing.

Wright is also director of the journalism program at Wayne State. He uses CompuServe to transfer some files from home to school and also uses the modem to transmit editorial copy to and from clients.

His advice to would-be home electronic cottagers: Buy computer equipment that is easy to operate and does the best job for your line of work.

Given the low-profile nature of electronic cottagers, no one has a handle on how many Grosse Pointers are logging in from home each morning, night or whatever their hours are.

Workers at home are unsupervised, meaning that completing the work may be difficult for those who have trouble getting motivated without a boss breathing down their necks.

Parmenter said she tries to work every morning.

"I've tried to set hours," she said. "It's very easy to start doing something else first."

She said she is currently involved in a decorating job at home which takes her from her free-lance work. "It's hard to go to my office and write when I have a lot of scraping to do on the walls," she said.

Girard echoed Parmenter's comments.

"The one and only problem you have is self-discipline," he said. "I get around that by being very goal oriented. I set a goal a dav.

His one piece of advice to those want to be electronic cottagers is to be completely goal oriented. "Show positive goal accomplishments every day," he said.

In fact, he said meeting goals is an effective way to show your boss, who is most likely suspicious about what you're up to at home alone and unsupervised, that you're doing the

"That's how your boss makes a living," Girard said, "by supervising people." He said the bosses are slowly coming around to the idea of not having their employees in sight constantly, but it'll take a while for managers to get used to electronic managing.

You don't have to be a computer whiz to be an electronic

"I don't know a lot about my computer," Parmenter said. But as long as she can handle her word processing and telecommunications programs, she's in business.

Girard said, "I had absolutely no connection with computers of any kind."

Like most others who grew up when apples were gifts brown-nosers gave to teachers, Girard and Parmenter learned computers as they went along - as the need arose to do their jobs or to do them better.

Girard now even teaches a college journalism course on using computers and data bases as research tools.

Telecommunications — the exchange of computer information via telephone lines - has been made possible by standardization, making many types of computers with different software programs and operating systems able to communicate.

All that's required to be an electronic cottager is a personal computer and a modem, which is the device that connects the computer to the outside telephone line, and, of course, something to do on that computer that someone will pay you for.

Word processing, whether it's writing or editing stories or legal briefs, is an increasingly popular home vocation. Many private investigators have also gone on line, due to the growing number of data bases now available. Such computer information services include CompuServe. Dialog and Prodigy. Research of all kinds, including a lot of stock and financial data, is available on these services, as Girard demonstrates every day.

Data-base research, however, can be quite expensive. Researchers are charged so much per minute while they are on line and additional fees for each service and each search. Looking up "electronic cottages" on CompuServe's I-Quest service cost this reporter $15.50 in search fees alone.

CompuServe, for one, has an electronic forum just for those who work at home (on Compu-Serve they simply type GO WORK, and they're in their forum). And because getting paying work is the most difficult thing about being an electronic cottager, having a forum where you can exchange ideas and encouragement with others

The computer forums may also serve as the social function that's lost when people stop going to the office.

And like starting any business, it can be scary.

"You have to be a little bit of a risk-taker," Parmenter said. "I think it could be a really good thing to stay home."

light in the back of the office. "Higbie Maxon across the street was very helpful," Moss said. "They offered to make copies of documents for us and said that if we needed anything to be typed, we could send it right over.'

Kathleen Renick, one of Tapnan's sales agents, said, "It was very frustrating to work under those conditions, but at least we could make coffee, because we have a gas stove.'

Without electricity, Pointe Peddiar employees couldn't do any baking, so there were no croissants, brownies, cookies or bread available Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. However, customers could still look around the store and purchase kitchen items.

"We gave them flashlights to use as they walked around the store," said salesperson Margo Eitel.

Owner Gert Laferte said, "The three days didn't total one day's take, but we had to stay open, to show our commitment to our customers."

Denise Bellemore, a sales consultant at Margaret Rice, said she used a nearby pay phone to tell customers that their clothing orders were in. However, the women's shop fell behind in its tailoring and pressing orders.

Greatways Travel Inc.'s fax line worked, but the company couldn't receive incoming calls on its other phones. Calls were directed to a voice mail service, which employees contacted every few minutes to get messages.

Greatways' computers were also down. "But we have a preferred status with most of the airlines, so we could get rates and other information from them that we would normally get on our computer by calling a special number," said Phoebe Weinberg, president of Greatways.

Across the street, the building housing Jumps restaurant was without power.

"It was rough," said Jumps owner Art Bokatzian. "We didn't lose a lot of food, but we lost a lot of business."

He said he put the food on dry ice the first two days of the power outage.

"On the third day, I started to get worried," he said, "because I didn't know how long it would be. Some people were saying that the power wouldn't come on until Saturday."

So Bokatzian, whose roommate is Chris Hessler, the chef at the Lochmoor Club, took his perishables to the private club and stored them in a walk-in

"It was really great the way they helped us out," Bokatzian

The other businesses on the west side of Kercheval, however, had electricity, including Cottage Hospital.

Jan Duster, public relations manager at Cottage, said, "Our power was interrupted only momentarily, like little blips in the phone and electrical lines. We don't really know why we were graced that way while everyone else around us was

The hospital was prepared for a power outage, however. Its backup generators can power the hospital for two to three days on their existing fuel, "and we could use them indefinitely, as long as we kept refueling them," Duster said.

Michigan Bell repair crews have in many cases been following Detroit Edison repair crews. The phone company crews cannot work in an area where there are downed power wires, Hovey said. That's why in some cases power may be restored well before phone service is back on line.

Grosse Pointe Cable repair crews face the same problems. said Mary Schultz, operating manager.

Last Thursday, several cable customers called the Grosse Pointe News complaining that they were still without service even though electrical power had been restored.

Schultz said there were areas in Grosse Pointe Woods and Harper Woods still without cable service, but her crews - as was the case with the phone company - could not go into the areas because Edison crews were still working on power lines.

She estimated that nearly 8,000 cable customers were affected by the storm for varying lengths of time. A small area of Grosse Pointe Woods was still without cable service Monday, but Schultz hoped to have those customers' service restored

"We've been really badly hit." she said.

One caller complained that the cable company refused to credit their bills for the days and hours without service. Schultz pointed out that the agreement customers sign when they pick up up their cable converter boxes states that the company will not credit service disruptions due to storms or circumstances out of the cable company's control.

She said all Harper Woods subscribers were without cable and that they will be credited for four days' service. She said it is impossible for the cable company to determine what houses in the Pointes were without service and for how long.

Garden tour will feature Pointes' prettiest bloomers

By Margie Reins Smith Feature Editor

A horticultural catastrophe crashed into Bo and Mary Lou Boresch's back yard three months ago. The event has led them down new garden paths, so to speak.

"An 80-foot maple tree fell down on April 15," Mary Lou Boresch

"There was a lot of wind that day. While we were eating lunch - it iust fell. It took the fence down. And some power lines. And the raspberries. Fortunately, no people were walking on the sidewalk at the time. It was a mess."

The Boresches had a portion of the giant tree ground into mulch, which they're using in the garden. The rest of the nearly 100-year-old maple was carried away. The power lines were repaired. Four 8foot panels of redwood fence were replaced with a new cedar fence.

The traumatized raspberries are recovering nicely.

That portion of the Boresches' yard that had nurtured shade-loving plants is now basking in bright afternoon sunshine.

Not to worry. They built a pond. surrounded it with a raised stone wall, filled it with with three kinds of water lilies, some bog plants, water hyacinths and assorted gold-

The Boresch's garden — and five other spectacular Grosse Pointe gardens - will be ready for visitors this Friday, Saturday and Sunday, July 19, 20 and 21, for the Council of Grosse Pointe Garden Clubs' 18th annual tour.

The council is composed of representatives from 17 local garden groups. The proceeds from the annual fundraiser go toward beautification projects in all five Grosse Pointes.

Money from last year's event was used for such projects as the beautification of Grosse Pointe Park's gateway to Grosse Pointe. Grosse Pointe Woods' island at Fairford and Morningside, Grosse Pointe City's Lakeland circle and Grosse Pointe Farms' island on Lakeshore. Other beneficiaries included the Shade Tree Council, the Grosse Pointe War Memorial, the Detroit Garden Center, the central library and Grosse Pointe North and South high schools.

The rest of the Boresches' garden is made up of mostly perennials. Many of the beds are enclosed by thin wire grids to keep their dog from digging up what they've planted.

Mary Lou and Bo Boresch do all their own garden work and Mary Lou Boresch knows the names of nearly every plant, tree, vegetable and herb. Most of the specimens are associated with an interesting story or anecdote.

Some are transplants from her mother's garden; some are gifts from friends' gardens; some were moved several times until they settled comfortably into the perfect spot; some were grown from seeds ordered from catalogs.

"I don't move furniture. But I move plants around all the time." she said.

The garden has a raspberry patch; a vegetable plot; an herb garden (which supplies the dried flowers Mary Lou Boresch uses to make wreaths); a rose bed; several fruit trees; wildflowers; and a few annuals.

There are beds chock-full of familiar perennials like lilies in a half dozen different colors, daisies, feverfew, lithrum, Japanese anemones, pink and yellow yarrow and Veronica; and beds filled with less familiar plants like Echinops, gooseneck loosestrife, cimicifuga, liatris, and two specimens she uses for dried flower arrangements, zeranthemum and acroclinium.

Granddaughter Kathryn Kelly, 7, is learning the names of some of her favorites and expects to help out on the day of the garden tour by answering questions from tourgoers.

The Boresches make their own garden mulch. A tumbler and two bins are used to turn ground leaves, grass clippings, ground garden debris and ammonium sulphate into a valuable gardening additive. To this they also contribute kitchen leftovers such as potato peelings, fruit skins, coffee grounds and egg shells.

"It takes about six months to a vear for the compost to be usable. We use it throughout the garden," Mary Lou Boresch said.

The Sullivan garden, 241 Hillcrest, is also a do-it-yourself project, but with an English country cottage garden flavor. Some of its highlights include 25 varieties of miniature roses and dozens of aza-

Other favorites include some rare ferns and hostas and a grouping of potted annuals, tender perennials and experimental plants just outside the garden gate.

The Guilliaumin garden, 1545 Fairholme, is a compact collection of herbs, vegetables and flowers.

The herbs are labeled: rosemary. bay tree, oregano, curry, basil, parsley, English lavender, tarragon and four different varieties of mint.

Behind the garage, a compost pile is cooking up a rich mixture that keeps the garden in tip-top shape.

The Mills garden, 85 Woodland Shore, has an Oriental theme, a swimming pool, several decks and a large lawn area for games and entertaining.

Designed by Tony Bellomo of The Black Forest Building Co., the garden features several wooden decks on different levels and a number of focal points with seating areas for meditation, relaxation and reflection. Among the unusual trees are a blue atlas cedar tree, a Japanese maple, a Hanoki pine and a Tanyosha pine.

Oriental sculptures are featured throughout the garden.

The Wilt garden, 25 Woodland Shore, is a shady, secluded area reminiscent of a courtvard retreat in New Orleans.

It features a fountain, a brick patio with space for dining and sitting and a profusion of mature shade trees.

A collection of potted herbs —

basil, rosemary, sage, tarragon, etc. - are tucked into a secluded corner beside a wrought iron loveseat.

In the front yard, an antique French dog cart spills over with a profusion of pink impatiens.

The Tech garden, 76 Sunningdale, was designed with wildlife in mind.

It includes a number of unique bird houses (one looks like a church; another look like a tiny English cottage), dinerent kinds of bird and squirrel feeders, a bird bath, and a profusion of pine trees and foliage to encourage nestbuilding. Many of the pine trees in the garden were once seedlings, carefully coaxed and nurtured to maturity.

The Techs said the garden has gone through several transformations. It changed as the family

HAVE A PLEASANT TRY AT PERFECTION BRIDGE BY WOODY BOYD 🛦 🕈 💠 🛧

The legendary Sidney Lenz, inspired by a squeeze play he witnessed at a baseball game in 1925 coined the term in it's application to forcing an opponent to discard a winner, potential winner or guard to a winner prematurely. Before then it was only known as a "Coup" a term used to describe many fascinating plays. In those days only a handful of whist or auction players knew how to execute such hoodoozery. Even today the average player places great mystique upon its execution. Most just refer to it as "an experts play." Few have investigated its implementation or the card conditions applicable to its consummation.

Clyde Love has written extensively on the subject since 1951 and his latest, "Bridge Squeezes Complete" first published in 1968 is entertaining, instructive and comprehensive. I like his style as he tends to be understandable to everyone. Early on he refers to the thirteen cards you've been dealt by simply defining them as "Idle" or "Busy" and it's when "Busy" cards are put under pressure a squeeze is being perpetrated.

In the most matter of fact way he states that a squeeze is surely present whenever the following conditions are satisfied. B. One Defender is "Busy" in two suits, his partner being helpless.

L. Declarer has only one "Loser" remaining.

U. At least one threat card lies in the "Upper" hand. (The Upper hand lies at the left of the victim and the one at the right is the lower.)

E. There is an "Entry" to the established threat. Memorize these conditions by remembering the color BLUE and you're ready to execute a simple squeeze.

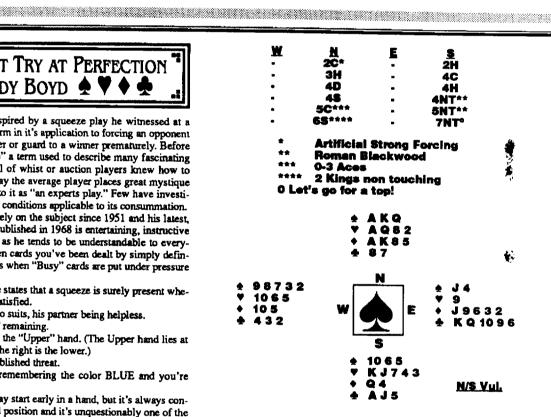

The performance of a squeeze may start early in a hand, but it's always consummated at a three or four card end position and it's unquestionably one of the prettiest plays a declarer can make.

Before we show you a simple squeeze, just remember one more important point. Don't try and count all of the intended victims discards. It will tire you and is a waste of time. While you're running your suits just watch for no more than two or three key cards. If they don't show then you're sure the fourth suit will run or the intended victim was never busy in two suits.

After the club four lead declarer counts twelve tricks, his only chance for thirteen is if one defender has clubs and diamonds then he's busy in two suits. The threat card becomes the club jack after east queen is captured by the ace. As the reader can see BLUE is working so south plays three spades and five hearts. If the club king never appears declarer is sure that at trick ten he can win the last four diamonds or the squeeze won't work as east isn't busy in both

You say, "Amazing!" No. It was just a simple squeeze that any good bridge player can perform.

You say, "How does it work?" I like Clyde Love's answer. "When you slip a nickel in a parking meter and the needle moves you don't care what went on inside. You shouldn't try and visualize what the defenders hands will look like after nine or ten tricks. Just watch for the key cards. In this instance the club king. If it doesn't appear you have him squeezed if he's busy in two suits.'

The serendipitous life

By Rev. Robert E. Neily St. Michael's Episcopal Church

The word originates in a story attributed to Horace Walpole about three princes of Serendip who had set out in search of great treasures. Instead of finding what they sought, they were constantly surprised by unexpected treasures they had not anticipated.

Serendipities are the unsought "happies" of life. They usually come to people who are openly seeking something and are highly sensitive to the people and events around them. Although Jesus never used the term, He seemed to catch the spirit of serendipity when He said, "Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things will be given you besides" (Matthew 6:33). God delights in surprising us with serendipities we never expected.

A serendipitous life is distinguished by surprisability, and expressed in spontaneity. Serendipitous people develop a great awareness for the unexpected and never lose their capacity to be surprised. They cultivate a spirit of openness, delight, and spontaneity. They readily grasp the unexpected, freely respond to the unplanned, and constantly open themselves to God's surprising grace.

An appreciation for serendipity can develop in us a more grateful heart. We will find ourselves praying to be ready for God's surprises, and thanking God for all the little things. We will discover that even what happens is not insignificant, for we will be aware that what happens when we least expect it may make the big difference in our lives.

So often it is in the unexpected times that God richly provides. If you read the Bible with the throttle of your imagination wide open, you will be astounded at how many surprises are packed among its pages. The writers of the Bible frequently point out that what appears to us as chance, may in fact be God's providence.

Serendipity is ongoing; it happens every day. To live a serendipitous life means being ready and willing to receive God's Good News in the unexpected, and to find Christ revealing Himself to us at any time.

The temptation is to outplan God, and to limit the ways God may touch our lives. But when we offer to God an open mind and heart as we travel along life's path, we frequently discover surprises we never anticipated. That's the great joy of the serendipitous life.

Teague, Jordi and Phil Yokers.

First English Lutheran to present Yokers Family Singers on July 28

The Phil Yokers family of Salem, Ore., has been compared to the Von Trapp Family Singers because of the rich warmth of their harmony, the radiation of love and faith emanating from the group, and the professional quality of their performances. Even their car license proclaims: WE SING.

Amy Gwinnell taps to an original composition by her brother, Scott, at the piano.

In the tradition of Mickey and Judy — they're getting together to put on a show!

By Ronald J. Bernas Staff Writer

Eighteen kids who span the musical. Well, four original short musicals, they will present for free at 7 p.m. Tuesday, July 23 at the Performing Arts Center at Grosse Pointe North High School and again at 12:30 a.m. Wednesday, July 24.

It's part of "Talent Today," a new summer school program for gifted and talented performing students. Students auditioned for the program by singing, dancing, playing a musical instrument or writing a scene for a play. The 18 students who were selected include seven who say they're primarily singers, four who say they're principally musicians, five dancers and 18 who consider themselves writers.

Their final product — which like any collaborative effort is still evolving - is a series of four short musicals bound by the common thread that they all occur in the city.

The first one, written by senior Emily Latinis, involves two people who fall in love at first sight only to be separated by World War I. It includes music written by Scott Gwinnell one ragtime piece and one ballad — and a dance performed by Steve Hadala and Alison Jon Opdyke wrote the second piece, a love story set in the days of Prohibition featuring a cast of gangsters, flappers and detectives.

Gwinnell also wrote music for this to be sung by Gail Mar-

"I sing the same song twice. The first time, it's in a higher key and it's kind of upbeat," Marlowe said. "But the story has a change in mood and I sing it again and it's...

"She gets down and dirty," someone velled from the rear.

"That is an example of how everyone works together," said May Krager, who along with Gael Barr facilitates the program. "Scott (Gwinnell) said 'Why don't you play the piano the second time and I'll play jazz trombone.' I didn't even know he played jazz trombone, and he's really good."

Scott's sister Amy Gwinnell wrote the third segment, which is set in the '30s and tells about three girls competing in a dance contest for a $50 prize. She breaks into a high-energy tap number she choreographed to one of her brother's original

The last segment was going to be set at a presidential ball," said Gael Barr. "But when the students listened to the music they had written for it, the lyrics and the style of music weren't fitting, so we'll have to change that a bit."

That piece has evolved into a free-form, unscripted display of talent. While all the students have performed in the past and many said they hoped to make performing a career they say Talent Today is a unique experience for them.

"It's kind of fun, because everyone will come up with an idea and we all work on it,' 12th grader Chris Moisides

"It's really cool because we have so many different ages that we get all sorts of ideas." said Gail Marlow, who graduated from Grosse Pointe North High School in June.

You get a lot of different perspectives," said Mike Babel, also a June graduate of North. "What one person will see as a big jazz number, another sees a different way. We all listen to each other and brainstorm. that's where all the good ideas come from.

'It's kind of strange that we all get along because of all the different ages," Kati Pata, a ninth grader said.

"All these students are so multi-talented, and they work so well together," Krager said. "One thing seems to evolve out of another.

For example: One student noticed that the attempts at earnest love-talk in some of the scenes was, well, funny. So they played it up and took it farther and in the end came up with some very funny scenes.

But who knows, the students may decide to change it again. All they need is a finished product by July 23. But considering that everything so far has been done in just seven days of class time, it's not hard to imagine the final product will be ready when the curtain goes

Stratford dissects family, love in two contrasting

By Alex Suczek Special Writer

The two latest productions in Stratford's 1991 season opened at the Tom Patterson Theatre recently and brought starkly contrasting peeks into the crannies of the 20th century psyche.

'Homeward Bound'

The first is "Homeward Bound," a new comedy by British-American-Canadian playwright Elliott Hayes in its world premiere. As its newness suggests, this is a play very much about today. While the relationships between the people are timeless, there is no mistaking that the context is the subject matter of the '90s like a family's acceptance of their son's gay lover or the right and freedom to choose the time and circumstance of one's Unlikely as it may sound. these are the focuses of a comedy of manners - instead of the traditional topic of love and Hayes has crafted such convincing dialogue that the context seems commonplace and the soapy, conflicting exchanges in this family are hilarious. Only they have that twist that leaves you wondering as you identify with one character or another. "Is this really happening to me?"

This is no simple comedy. however. Part of Haves comically startling achievement is the way he has portrayed the weaknesses that bedevil personal relationships today. The play is filled with conversational contradictions, the collapse of convention as a defense against surprises and the turning of traditional values topsyturvy. And there is nothing to do but laugh heartily at the startling confusion that results. because it's genuinely funny.

Barbara Bryne and Douglas Rain as Bonnie and Glen Beacham are the link to the past with their square, conventional approach to dealing with his cancer and death wish, but they are also most in touch with the times in their ability to bring the breaks with convention into the open.

Their daughter's husband Kevin, played by Miles Potter, is a beautifully painful characterization of the plodding wedding photographer who knows he is not meeting anybody's expectations, including his own, and struggles to cope with the crisis lifestyle generated by his wife's bitchy dissatisfaction. In that role, Michelle Fisk generates high intensity irritation with convincing reality.

A tour de force, however, is achieved by Tom Wood as son the Burning Pestle," which Nick and Peter Donaldson as his companion Guy. In the heat of an animated exchange about the developing discovery that Guy has just come from an AA meeting, the looks exchanged across the stage speak more than pages of script ever could about the pair's relationship.

The underlying matter of this play is serious enough. It holds to our times and our clumsiness at human relationships. But it does so with a brilliant wit that elicits sincere and hearty laughter at ourselves as much as at the performance. And however iconoclastic the subject matter may be. the look into our own lives and relationships is a wholesome and highly entertaining experi-

The hand of Hayes, moreover, is felt throughout the Stratford Festival this summer. This remarkably talented writer has also revised the script for this summer's production of "Timon of Athens," edited the script for "Knight of opens Aug. 2, and the stage adaptation of "Treasure Island," which hopes to attract family audiences starting Aug.

It adds a fascinating new dimension to the experience of attending festival productions and anticipating future plans.

Rules of the Game'

"Rules of the Game," by Luigi Pirandello, is the companion production to "Homeward Bound" at the Tom Patterson Theatre. Also a comedy, it provides a dramatic and illuminating contrast in style and content that encourages seeing the two plays as a pair.

The situation, involving the eternal triangle of husband, wife and lover, has long been a cliche. But Pirandello's biting wit and ability to develop characters along unconventional lines brings surprising dimensions to this game. The unfaithful wife is so disgruntled that she works to engineer her husband's death by $\bar{t}he$ hand of her empty-headed, foolish lover. But the husband, played with cool, god-like control by James Blendick, exercises mind control that wreaks devastating revenge.

His trick is a clever manipulation of the conventions of honor which turns the tables.

Watching this brittle repartee in a style that once reigned supreme on the stage is like a trip in a time machine. And the entire cast handles the style with appropriate flair.

Anne Marie Cadieux as the wife and Juan Chioran as the lover are distastefully arch and venal in their idle and poorly disguised conspiracy. Her jerky, exaggerated gestures are wonderfully evocative of the mannerisms of silent film heroines who were contemporary to the writing of this play.

They miss on timing, however, seeming to act Pirandello's brittle and less-than-profound script more thoughtfully than is called for. The result is a slower pace than the dialog can stand. Cadieux's gestures appear more halting than they should, as though stopped by strobes, and Chioran's arrogant posturing becomes too statuesque. The only character who can be thoughtfully paced is Blendick's husband, and to appear so he paces his part even slower than the rest.

The play would benefit by picking up the pace.

"Homeward Bound" will be performed in repertory until Aug. 17 and "Rules" through Sept. 7. To arrange tickets and accommodations call 964-4668.

Summer books offer something for everyone

Summer is a wonderful time for reading. Books are incomparable companions to enjoy in almost any locality and situation, whether lazing one of Michigan's sunny beaches or exploring in darkest Africa. So many promising books are due to make their bookshop debuts during the last two months of this season that I am hard pressed to make popular choices.

In July a trio of spine-tinglers arrives which promises to nervously agitate even the most blase reader. "A Suitable Vengeance" by Elizabeth George (Bantam/$19) deals with the murder of a local journalist which rudely shatters the rural calm of a Cornish village. Stephen White's "Privileged Information" (Viking/$19.95) eerily describes how a psychologist's life begins to unravel when three of his patients unaccountably die. An eco-thriller, "Bushmaster Fall" by Carl Posey (Donald I. Fine/$19.95) teams a British naturalist with a KGB agent who investigates a meteor in the Bolivian rain forest.

Non-fiction has four intriguing entries for July. Peter Matthiessen is the author of "African Silences" (Random House/$20) in which he vividly chronicles his travels through equatorial Africa to examine endangered forests and animals. "The Elephant Book" by Ian Redmond (Overlook Press/$16.95) is a loving tribute, with 56 full-color photographs, to this noble animal now facing extinction. A portion of royalties from the sale of this book will go to Elefriends, which should encourage you, if you are so inclined, to help preserve some of the fast-dwindling members of the animal kingdom. "A Secret Country: The Hidden Australia" by John Pilger (Knopf/$23) is by an Australian journalist and filmmaker who writes an expose of politics and prejudices down under. Timothy B. Benford and James P. Johnson, the authors of a true crime tome, "Righteous Carnage: The List Murders" (Scribner's/$19.95) relate how, in 1971, John List murdered his wife, mother, and three children. He disappeared and was not found until eighteen years later through the TV program, "America's Most Wanted."

August's biggest best-selling fiction offering is likely to be Tom Clancy's "The Sun of All Fears" (Putnam/$24.95). In this techno-thriller, the world teeters on the very edge of nuclear war. As the author explained in a recent interview, "I think that this is the first intelligent book about a very, very serious subject, and that subject is nuclear crisis management. My principal mission is to tell an entertaining story, and if people want to learn from it, so much the better. I'm an author, not a prophet."

Agatha Christie fans will be drawn to "The Christie Caper" by Carolyn Hart (Bantam/$18) wherein detective Annie Laurence Darling goes into action when murder stalks a convention of Christie devotees. Edward Rutherfurd's "Russka" (Crown/$25) is a long saga spanning almost 2,000 years in Russia from the 2nd century A.D. to the present. The ever-popular Rumer Godden's newest, "Coromandel Sea Change" (Morrow/$18) is about how tragedy strikes when a young woman in India becomes involved in a local politician's campaign. "The Night Travellers" by Elizabeth Spencer (Viking/$19.95) tells of a young couple embroiled in the anti-Vietnam War movement being forced to go underground and who eventually must move to Canada.

A different approach to the enduring Brontes is Jane Urquhart's "Changing Heaven" (David Godine/$19.95) which is a love story weaving the life of Emily Bronte with that of a modern-day Bronte scholar. A Grosse Pointe resident, William J. Coughlin, has another mystery novel, "Shadow of a Doubt" (St. Martin's/$22.95), coming up. The plot concerns an attorney down on his luck who is handed a big case — but murder-one may be too big.

In the non-fiction category, theater afficianados have a big treat ahead — two important memoirs of dramatic personalities. "Me" by Katherine Hepburn (Knopf/$25) has the star reflecting on her childhood, career, and political activism, all illustrated with 75 photos. "Walking With Garbo: Conversations and Recollections" by Raymond Daum (Harper-Collins/$25) as edited and annotated by Vance Muse, Garbo's companion on many Manhattan strolls, who recalls two decades of talks with the screen legend.

Two other memoirs are slated to help enlighten the dog-days of a waning summer. The noted biographer, R.W.B. Lewis has produced an authoritative portrait, "The Jameses: A Family Narrative" (FSG/$35) which traces the origins and development of this remarkable American intellectual family. "Henry and Clare: An Intimate Portrait of the Luces" by Ralph G. Martin (Putnam/NP) reveals the lives of this wealthy, politically powerful media couple.

Dominick Dunne's "Mansions of Limbo" (Crown/$20) is a compilation of his essays profiling the "beautiful people" from "Vanity Fair." And, now, to fittingly round up this list of forthcoming books, there is "Waiting for the Weekend" by Witold Rybczynski (Viking/$18.95), a penetrating look at how we spend our free time, beginning with the history of the concept of leisure. That certainly sounds like the kind of book to benefit most of us.

Closing the evening is Foghat, a band with a 20-year history which has seen many talented performers. From 1970 to 1982 the band released 13 albums which included hit after hit — "Fool for the City," "Slow Ride," "Stone Blue," and "I Just Wanna Make Love to You," are just a few.

Travel Trends

By Phyllis Hollenbeck

Minor details

It is a sign of the times. Next time you're on plane, notice the number of children aboard who may be traveling to visit grandparents or are headed for camp or some other special activity. Whatever the reason, they are out there - alone. Mom or dad boards with the child and buckles him in and grandma, grandpa (or whomever) meets him on arrival.

Once the child has boarded and the good-byes have been said and the plane is airborne route, he is initially amused by the comings and goings of the crew and conversation with a friendly seat partner. All airlines have gift toys to amuse young travelers when the novelty of the flight wears off. These are provided with the intention of keeping the child occupied throughout the trip. Unfortunately, they generally give the same gift to a 3-year-old as they give to a 10-year-old.

When a child travels, with or without an adult, it is a good idea to provide him with a carry-on bag with some special toys - books, games and possibly a Walkman with children's story tapes that will keep him quietly amused. Most adults have experienced that "will this flight ever be over" feeling. Consider how a child feels. Children do not usually have to remain seated for long periods. The time drags. They get tired and cranky. The extra effort put into outfitting a carry-on bag with special time-occupying items can make all the difference for any young traveler. If the child will be traveling a couple of times a year, keep the bag and its toys only for trip time.

Different airlines have different policies regarding unaccompanied minors. There are, however, a few rules all carriers observe. No carrier will allow a child younger than 5 to travel without an adult. All carriers require detailed information from the person checking in the child at the airport - the names, addresses and telephone numbers of those delivering the child to the airport as well as those meeting him at the other end. Since the paperwork needs to be completed at the airport before departure, it is best to be there 45 minutes to one hour early.

Several airlines restrict the flights that children are allowed to travel on. Alaska Airlines, American Airlines, Continental, Midway, United and US Air won't board children ages 5 to 7 if they have connecting flights. All carriers offer airport escorts for unaccompanied minors making connections. Special fees ranging from $20 to $30 are charged by American, American West, Continental, Northwest, Pan Am, TWA and United airlines. This charge covers meeting the minor on the arriving flight and remaining with him (in most cases) until the departure of the connecting flights. In some cases, the representative meeting the flight will deliver the child to the agent at the gate who is in charge of the outbound flight.

Some carriers at some airports have special supervised rooms where the children remain until their connecting flight is boarding. At that point, a representative will walk with them to the plane and stay with them until they are boarded. Because of the additional paper work and supervision needed for unaccompanied minors, all airlines except Pan American charge the adult fare for children traveling alone. Children may take advantage of discounted and excursion fares and join frequent flier programs.

Most carriers require advance reservations and few allow any last-minute changes. All airlines require personal identification from the adults delivering the minor to the airport as well as from the adults meeting the unaccompanied minor. Some carriers require a specific "secret" word when the reservation is made. The airline will request the adults meeting the flight to tell them the word before they release the child. These precautions are taken to eliminate the possibility of the child being picked up by someone other than the adult specified.

If you are involved in the planning of a trip for an unaccompanied minor, it is easiest to check with your travel agent regarding different airlines' policies. Plan as far ahead as possible. Look for direct flights whenever possible. If it is the child's first flight, describe in detail what the young traveler should expect. Do everything possible to alleviate any apprehension the child may have, and remember the carry-on bag with the special toys.

War Memorial plans Kentucky trip

The reservation deadline is July 26 for the Grosse Pointe War Memorial's Sept. 30-Oct. 3 trip to the Bluegrass Region of Kentucky.

Highlights of the educational trip include a tour of Pleasant Hill, a town built in 1805 and formerly inhabited by Shakers, a stop at Berea, a college where students pay no tuition in return for work, tours of historic Kentucky homes, the Kentucky

Derby Museum and the Jim Beam Distillery, and dinner in authentic 1940s vintage railroad dining cars.

The cost of the trip is $350 per person double occupancy, ($60 single supplement), which includes three nights stay, round trip motorcoach and a local guide in Louisville. Payment in full is due at the time of reservation. For more information, call 881-7511 Monday-Saturday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

Planning allows older travelers to have fun, too

Summer is vacation time and travel time for many families. Some families may be caring for an older adult who has spe-

According to Suzanne Szczepanski-White, director of A Friend's House Adult Day Care Center in Warren, changes in routine are often upsetting and unsettling to an older adult.

She advises keeping as close to regular routines as possible, including meals. Because the older adult tends to tire more easily, she also advises not overdoing and limiting the length of stay.

"Caregivers need to recognize that special events, such as weddings or family reunions, may be overwhelming for memory impaired persons," Szczepanski-White says. She advises having the family member meet with other family members in a quieter setting at first, with fewer people around.

For the memory-impaired person, Szczepanski-White suggests having identifying information, with the name and phone number of an emergency contact person, on the person at all times, either in a wallet or purse or, better yet, in sewn-on labels on the person's clothes.

In preparing for a trip, Szczepanski-White offers the follow-

 Review your family member's health insurance before the trip to find out about coverage during travel. This is especially important if your destination is out of the country.

• If you are traveling by plane, make reservations in advance and state any special needs such as wheelchairs, special meals, advance boarding assistance. State's shoreline: 3,200 miles of fun

From the lonely isolation of the rugged Keweenaw Peninsula to the industrial might of Detroit, AAA Michigan suggests a tour of the Michigan shoreline is a 3,200-mile odyssey to be savored by residents and visitors alike.

Nestled between the waters of four of the five Great Lakes are quaint towns, bucolic farmlands, soaring sand dunes, acres of orchards, miles of sugar-sand beaches, lighthouses, museums - and memories. Memories of a bygone time when lumber, fur trading and mining were king.

Not far from the waters' edge, add gourmet restaurants, championship golf courses, trendy shops, unparalleled scenery, artist colonies, breathtaking sunrises and sunsets all part of the Michigan coast-

Straightened out, Michigan's shoreline, the longest freshwater coastline in the nation, would stretch along the Atlantic seaboard from Maine to Florida.

Hopscotch the shoreline to touch on just a few of the state's treasures, remembering there are scores more. The sand dunes along much of Lake Michigan provide breathtaking vistas almost everywnere, but nowhere are they more spectacular than at the Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore in northwest Lower Michigan at Empire.

From the dunes visitors can see Glen Lake and the waters of the Manitou Passage, a graveyard of ships from yesteryear, which wash the shores of the Manitou Islands.

Then there's Traverse City, a swimmer's paradise, with summer theater, and adjoining Old Mission Peninsula, with its blanket of cherry orchards and grape vines. Farther north

odgers win 4th

The Dodgers won an unprecedented fourth straight Woods-Shores Little League baseball championship by sweeping the American League champion Yankees in the World Series, 9-4 and 3-1.

Bob Rini, the manager of the team for the past 22 years, announced after the game that he will give up the job next season because of pressing business responsibilities.

The Dodgers sent Rini out a winner, however, with a heavy hitting attack in the first game and a strong pitching-fielding game in the second contest against the Yankees.

Twice the Dodgers took onerun leads in the opener, scoring on a double by Wes DeGuvera and a sacrifice by Joe Ellis, and again on Vince Meli's stolen base and Steve Champine's RBI single.

Both times, however, the Yankees rallied to tie the game - first on Nick Aubrey's smart base running and again on Paul Thursam's single and Eric Liebold's sacrifice bunt. Base hits by Ellis, Mark Touhey, Mike Spath and Mike Jacquet keyed the Dodgers' go-ahead rally, and homers by Champine and DeGuvera wrapped it up.

In the second game, Champine and Chris Sterr teamed for a four-hitter, while Steve Dube and Thane Laymon scattered nine hits for the Yankees. Ellis singled home the Dodgers' first run and stole home for the eventual winning run. Richard Grosfield singled home the Yankees' only run in a fifth-inning rally that Champine squelched with two strikeouts.

Laymon ended the Dodgers' rally by snagging a hard grounder down the third-base line and turning it into a double play. Sterr and Ellis had key defensive plays for the Dodgers in a well-played game by both

July is a month to bask and delight in garden, flowers

Gardens and flowers are among the great attractions of July. Perhaps it's because we are still remembering winter that the lavish color and scent of summer blooms seems a precious gift.

There are gardens to visit and enjoy, rain or shine. The Council of Grosse Pointe Garden Clubs will present its annual Garden Tour on Friday. Saturday and Sunday, July 19-21, from 1 to 5 p.m.

Six magnificent gardens will be on view running the gamut from quiet, bird-filled glades to romantic formal expanses. New gardens bright with sunlight and timeless gardens shaded by venerable trees are on the list as well as the Trial Gardens on the lake side of the Grosse Pointe War Memorial. These are maintained by the Grosse Pointe Garden Center located on the second floor of the War Memorial. The center is open Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Tickets for the garden tour are on sale before the tour at $6. They will be $8 on tour days.

The Anna Scripps Whitcomb Conservatory on Belle Isle opened its summer show June 1: it will remain on view until October. During the summer months the show house is shaded and cool to provide a moist, glen-like setting for a display of many varieties of foliage plants. And in the outdoor gardens near the conservatory, there is a magnificant array of dahlias to enjoy until early fall.

The gardens surrounding the historic mansion museum, Greenmead, in Livonia are always beautiful in July and the herb gardens are of special interest. The gardens are maintained in part by the Livonia area garden diucs.

Cranbrook gardens are a delight at any time of year but are at their best in mid-July with wooded areas filled with birdsong and green meadows and flowers

Nearer home are the lavish gardens at the Edsel & Eleanor Ford House designed by famed landscape architect Jens Jenson and embodying all of his signature touches of woodland, meadow, water and flowers. The gardens may be visited whether or not you tour the

It's intriguing to know that somewhere back in the 17th century an experiment was under way to introduce this Mexican plant as a food source sinular to potatoes. The plant had been developed by a student of Linnaeus named Dr. Dahl, for whom it was named. As an edible it got nowhere, but the

Save water through naturescaping

Naturescaping, or designing a water-conserving landscape, reflects the newest thinking in environment-conscious gardening. Luckily, says the American Association of Nurserymen (AAN), naturescaping doesn't require radical changes - you may have been using plants for years that are well-suited to this new approach.

The theory behind naturescaping is that everyone can create beautiful, majestic gardens that conserve water and reflect their own sense of style - without being forced to use plants that live only in arid areas or have a rough, rugged appear-

In fact, the only thing you may need to do differently is to engage in some careful planning to minimize your landscape's water usage. If you want to develop a yard or garden that saves water, follow these easy steps from AAN.

First, determine which plants and vegetation you will use. You may be surprised at how many of your favorites are officially characterized as "low water demand" plants. Many plants that grow naturally in vour area - or "improved varieties" of such plants — are good

You can often substitute a low water demand plant for one that requires a lot of water, and no one will know the difference. If you have your heart set on a plant of a specific color, shape, texture or bloom period, it's likely that you can substitute a low water demand plant that meets the same cri-

After you have selected your plants, you will want to determine how to place them to get the most out of the water you

According to AAN, plants which require less water should usually be placed at a higher elevation than plants which require more water. This way, access water applied to the low moisture demand plants will drain down to the ones which require more moisture.

Another water-saving technique is to group plants together which require the same amount of water. In doing this, you will not end up over-or under-watering any parts of your lawn or garden.

Once you've decided which plants to include in your naturescape, you can develop a maintenance plan. Again, this may not differ too greatly from the strategies you have used in the past. It simply involve learning your watering habits and viewing water as a precious resource to be carefully conserved.

Clearly, irrigation plays a large role in maintaining your naturescape. However, this does not mean you need an elaborate sprinkler system. says AAN. A garden hose will do just as well if that is the system you prefer. The most important part of watering is not what you use to water, but how you use it.

According to AAN, you should follow a deliberate watering plan instead of casually watering whenever you have the chance. During most of the year, you may not need to water at all, if nature is providing enough rainfall.

When it's dry, certain practices will help you minimize water use. For example, you may want to water in the early morning hours, because this cuts down on evaporation. Whatever time of day you choose to water, make sure you position your sprinkler or your hose properly. Try always to shower areas of vegetation, rather than the driveway, garage and deck, suggests AAN. It is usually best to water deeply, but infrequently.

Be sure your irrigation devices are in good working order. In many cases, you can cut down on water usage simply by replacing leaky garden hoses or rusty sprinkler parts.

Another way to conserve water in your naturescape is to keep your plants healthy and strong, recommends AAN. Stronger plants require less water than weaker ones, and they will also have a more attractive appearance. Proper pruning, fertilizing and mulching help keep plants strong and healthy.

Luckily, creating and preserving a naturescape doesn't require strange gimmicks or unusual plants. You can use your creativity to bring beauty to the world around you in the same way you always have the only difference is that you will be armed with a new understanding of how to conserve

Save on outdoor plans

To celebrate the return of the sun, individual plans for 13 different outdoor projects - from fences to arbors, from planters to modular deck units - are available now at more than a 25 percent reduction in price.

The plans, if sold separately, would cost $8.25, but Western Wood Products Assn. (WWPA), which publishes them, has temporarily priced the collection at $6 for all 13.

Each piece in this baker's dozen of plans contains step-bystep instructions, illustrations and complete materials lists. Although WWPA sells the plans, called Plan Sheets, to consumers, most of them are wholesaled to lumber retailers as idea stimulators for custom-

However they're distributed, though, the outdoor projects Plan Sheet series has enough appeal that some 220,000 of them were distributed last year.

The offer is good through July 1.

- The projects are:

Things to do in the garden this month

Only weeds crop up faster than lawn and garden activities in July. Michigan State University extension specialists suggest the following tasks this month:

·Control severe aphid infestations in garden flowers with sprays of malathion or Orthene or insecticidal soaps. Spray only when absolutely necessary - these chemicals also kill lacewings, ladybird beetles and other aphid predators.

 Dig and divide and replant iris if it hasn't been done in five or six years. Destroy any rhizomes infested with iris bor-

- Continue to water, weed and defend the vegetable garden against insects, birds and animals.
- · Try to prevent blossom end rot in tomatoes, peppers, eggplant and summer squash by watering often enough to prevent drastic fluctuations in soil moisture. If your garden is on light, sandy soil, you will have to water more often to keep soil moisture fairly constant than if you're gardening on heavier clay soil. Mulching after watering will help hold moisture in the soil.
- Use fungicides labeled for use on tomatoes to control early and late blight and anthracnose in tomatoes. Consider buying resistant varieties next year.
- Wait until tomatoes, peppers and eggplant have set some fruit before you fertilize them. Too much nitrogen too early will give you large plants with lush foliage but few flowers and fruits. Other garden crops can be given a nitrogen boost in July. Keep nitrogen fertilizer off plant foliage and roots. Work it into the soil a few inches away from plants, then irrigate.
- Prune and fertilize climbing roses after they've flowered. corncobs, etc. Snip off faded rose flowers before petals begin to drop.

Solarium, garden spa included in design

This is an intriguing four bedroom, 3-1/2 bath design, which plays on the angles in an unusual roof line that also allows for an energy efficient solarium and enclosed garden

A shed roof with a skylight shelters the entry porch, which is further enclosed by a 16-foot shadowbox housing windows for a downstairs dining room and upstairs bedroom.

With an eye toward the weather, this home also in--cludes an arctic entry, furnishing a buffer from cold, mud and snow, a handy bench for the peeling off process and a closet for stowing boots and outerwear.

Once within the main entry, the eye is drawn to the sunken living room. Virtually sur-rounded by glass, its windows are high enough for imaginative furniture arrangement, yet from the exterior they appear low, completing a balancing act with a triangular window in the second story.

There is a happy dilemma for the occupant here: to luxuriate before the flagstone fireplace in the corner, stoking it from the nearby woodbox, or to watch the rest of the family splash in the garden solarium and spa which is the centerpiece of the home?

Slightly elevated from the rest of the main floor, the spa is enclosed on all four sides by glass - skylights reveal the stars above.

Directly across the main hall, a family room beckons with an informal tone capped by a corner woodstove that, combined with the adjacent solarium, promises many a cozy day. In good weather, a sliding door leads to a deck or patio; in bad, the kitchen's eating bar is handy for a snack.

The kitchen is every chef's desire - a butcher-block cutting board is an island surrounded by continents of counter and cabinet space and an array of modern cooking aids ranging from trash com-pactor to full-sized freezer.

The family has a choice of a casual meal in the adjoining nook or a full-blown affair in the formal dining room across the hall.

Just beyond the nook awaits a full service utility room with enough space for a sewing center and built-in ironing board. And since the nearest bath is quite distant, a toilet and sink are included.

For a study kit of the Emerald 3 (226-73), send $7.50 to Todays Home, P.O. Box 2832-T Eugene, Ore. 97402. Be sure to specify plan name and number when ordering.

Recycling America's vacant schools

AIA News Service

In local school districts throughout the United States. countless partnerships among architects, bankers, community groups, and developers - currently are being forged in order to find productive ways to use schools that have been lying vacant for

Unexpected population shifts caused schools built in the 1950s and '60s to be closed 25 or 30 years later due to reduced enrollments

But the decline in students goes back at least to 1930. when the number of elementary and secondary schools in the United States was 260,000. By 1960, the number had fallen to 116,000. Today, there are a mere 85,000 elementary and secondary schools in operation.

Architects now are converting buildings designed only for educational reasons to museums, corporate headquarters. artists' lofts, health and social services centers, elderly housing and even courtroom facili-

School recycling is one more indication that American society is learning that saving its public resources is well worth the effort.

Daniel Carlson of the Institute of Public Policy and Management, University of Washington, and author of the forthcoming book, "Reusing America's Schools" (Preservation Press), cites several instructive examples.

A case in point took place in the heart of the nation's capital. The Sumner and Magruder schools are over 100 years old and share a prime downtown site worth over $300 per square

The Sumner School, named for U.S. Senator Charles Sumner, an ardent abolitionist, was built for the education of the children of former slaves.

In 1981, shortly after the school had been entered in the National Register of Historic

Denby plans 50th

Denby High school's 1941 January and June graduating classes will hold their 50th reunion at Red Run Golf Club Sunday, Sept. 15.

Advance tickets must be purchased by Aug. 17 only; none will be available at the club.

Call Merlyn Wallace Dittrich, 778-0862, for more information

Places, two key District of Columbia agencies reached an agreement to allow private development teams to compete for the right to construct a largescale office complex on portions of the site not occupied by the schools.

The winning development team included Hartman-Cox Architects, Boston Properties Developers, a minority law firm, and the Metropolitan African Methodist Episcopal Church. After two more years of lease renegotiations and rezoning, a complicated construction process began, necessitating a reconstruction of Magruder School - one brick at a time as well as erecting an L-shaped nine-story office building designed to serve as a backdrop.

The Sumner School now stands proudly as the official museum and archives of the Washington, D.C. school system. Magruder has been rebuilt as the entrance facility to the office building. The site has been leased to the developer for 80 years at a yearly rent of $1.3 million. The result has been a very profitable real estate venture and the architectural creation of a prominent cultural resource for the residents of the nation's capital.

Recent national surveys indicate that while the uses to which schools can be adapted is unlimited, the choice each community must make is affected strongly by specific communitybased criteria; local market demand, such as government agency commitment; and citizen participation.

Local school districts normally do not have the resources or legal authority to recycle their schools, so they seek to create joint ventures with other parties. These frequently include other public agencies, as well as private developers and non-profit sponsors.

Often a school's land is very valuable, while the school itself is part of the architectural and cultural heritage of the community. Today, 90 percent of this nation lives on only 2 percent of its land. As the demand for scarce urban space increases, it is likely that the trend of school recycling will continue to flourish in the decades ahead.
