

Grosse Pointe students post gains on '92 MEAP tests; shine in science

By Shirley A. McShane
Staff Writer

The Michigan Educational Assessment Program scores are in and Grosse Pointe schools fared quite well — but one administrator said it's hardly cause for the district to rest on its laurels.

Parents, teachers, administrators and board of education members should be pleased, said Roger McCall, director of research and evaluation for Grosse Pointe schools, but everyone should buckle down for the challenges that lie ahead in order to keep Grosse Pointe students competitive.

MEAP tests are administered by the state annually. Fourth, seventh and 10th graders take reading and math tests. Fifth, eighth and 11th graders take the science exam.

"The reading test is divided into two portions: story and informational. It was updated in 1989. The math exam was revamped in 1991. The state is expected to implement its new science test in 1994," McCall said.

Grosse Pointe schools usually rank among the top 10 highest scoring districts in Michigan, he noted.

Highlights of each grade level's scores are:

FOURTH-GRADE READING: 61.1 percent of the students passed both the story and informational sections of the exam; 85.7 percent passed the story portion; 64.9 percent mastered the informational section.

McCall said that, typically, girls score higher on story read-

2 Pointes hit 100

To commemorate the centennial celebration of Grosse Pointe City and Grosse Pointe Farms, the Grosse Pointe News will present a series of stories related to the history of the two communities.

The series begins next week with an editorial by our editorial writer Wilbur Elston.

Each week thereafter until July, we will publish a story pertaining to housing, transportation, clubs, churches, sports, noted people, businesses, Lake St. Clair and memories, among other things. The features will be identified with a logo created by our production department which will make its first appearance next week.

The series will lead up to the official week-long celebration by both cities in early July. At that time, the Grosse Pointe News will reprint all the earlier stories in a separate section as a keepsake of the celebration.

We'd like to hear your suggestions about topics you think ought to be included in this commemorative series. Call Margie Smith, features editor, at 882-0294 with your ideas.

Christmas tree recyclers mulch appreciated

Several hundred Christmas trees were "recycled" at Grosse Pointe Farms' Pier Park last Saturday as residents of the five Grosse Pointes and Harper Woods brought in their discarded plants.

Organizer Ken George said he was delighted to see many residents returning home with mulch from the trees to be plowed back into their gardens and flower beds. Christmas trees will again be accepted at Pier Park this Saturday, Jan. 9, between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Special activities and exhibits will also be available to tree recyclers.

March deadline set to resolve Robin Hood school suit

By Shirley A. McShane
Staff Writer

Supporters and opponents of the lawsuit involving the District Commercial and Industrial Tax Base Sharing Act — the so-called "Robin Hood" school financing plan — met Dec. 29 and agreed to resolve the matter, at least at the local level, by March.

Attorneys representing the plaintiffs and defendants in the 1991 case filed in Macomb County Circuit Court met with Circuit Judge Lido Bucu last week. No action was taken, but both sides agreed to reach a resolution at a Jan. 25 hearing.

On Nov. 30, Bucu declared unconstitutional section 752 of the Robin Hood act, which spells out the penalties for school districts that do not comply with the act. The matter remains unresolved, however, because the act also contains section 753, which goes into effect if section 752 is not used. Bucu has yet to decide the fate of section 753.

"None of this has been resolved," said William Moore, attorney representing the Grosse Pointe School System. "There are a number of opinions of what the outcome of Bucu's decision on 752 means.

Bucu said it no longer applies to the act, but not all the attorneys agree."

Moore said if the two sides agree at the Jan. 25 hearing, the lawsuit will be cleared at the local level and plaintiffs then can begin the appeals process. If the issues are not resolved, both sides will meet again in late February.

Jane Woodfin, Michigan assistant attorney general representing the state departments of education, treasury and the attorney general, said she filed a "motion to limit construction" at the Dec. 29 conference. Bucu will consider the motion on Jan. 25.

"Bucu has a problem with the penalty provision (section 752) because it would deprive school districts of funds that he found to be required under the Headlee Amendment. Our motion asks Bucu to restate in the penalty an exception to any funds required under the Headlee Amendment," Woodfin said.

Grosse Pointe and other out-of-formula school districts claimed a small victory late last year when Bucu declared 752 to be unconstitutional. See ROBIN HOOD, page 2A

CPR skills help women save stricken man's life

By Debra Pascoe
Staff Writer

Bernice Pokorski headed to the Shorecrest Lanes Nov. 13 looking forward to bowling a few good frames. But she did better than winning the jackpot — she helped save a man's life.

It wasn't for Pokorski and Joanne Grimschaw of Grosse Pointe Woods and St. Clair Shores resident Gretchen Rosar, Thomas Brennan when he was not alive today, said St. Clair Shores firefighters Craig Meldrum and Bud Walleman.

The three women received meritorious awards from the St.

Clair Shores Fire Fighters Union Local No. 1744 for resuscitating the 73-year-old man, who suffered a heart attack while bowling.

Pokorski said she was at the St. Clair Shores bowling alley with members of the Grosse Pointe Senior Bowlers when a fellow bowler ran across the lanes looking for someone with medical skills.

"I said I was a retired nurse," Pokorski said. "I thought it was someone with a pinched finger."

But when she saw Brennan slumped over in his chair, she knew it was more serious. Pokorski said she asked some of the men in the area to lower Brennan to the floor. She then started administering cardiopulmonary resuscitation and chest compressions to bring him back.

"I'm a nurse and I've been practicing CPR for umpteen years but I've never done it on anybody," Pokorski said.

Shortly after she started CPR, Pokorski had Rosar take over for her while she continued with the compressions. Grimschaw stood by to lend a hand.

Meldrum said when he and Walleman showed up, "we really weren't prepared to do CPR and the ladies were already doing it." The 911 call answered at the fire department said firefighters were needed to assist a sick man.

The firefighters then hooked Meldrum up to a monitor, found he was suffering a heart attack and administered shocks to regulate his heartbeat. He was then taken to the hospital.

Françoise Marcus will not allow her French students at University Liggett School to use the word "boring."

"Nothing is boring," Marcus, of Grosse Pointe Woods, says in her thickly accented English. "It is boring, you make it boring. You must make it fun."

That's not only how Marcus teaches, it's how she sees life — an exciting series of adventures of her own making. And she's enjoyed each one, she says. That's obvious when she talks of her life, her husband, her children, her grandchildren and her students. She smiles often, laughs a lot and her eyes occasionally fill with tears. But

4 armed robbers hold up Kroger store in Village

Grosse Pointe City police are investigating a number of leads following the Jan. 2 armed robbery of the Kroger grocery store in the Village.

Police are looking for four suspects, all black men in their early 20s and armed, possibly with 9-mm automatic handguns, who entered the closed store about 9:10 p.m. by prying open the rear automatic exit doors and then ordering employees at gunpoint to hand over cash register drawers, said Grosse Pointe City public safety Lt. Al Fincham.

The robbers fled the store, which had closed at 9 p.m., with an undisclosed amount of money contained in eight to 10 cash register drawers and in two envelopes. Fincham said it is not known what type of vehicle the suspects used in their getaway, but police have since recovered the empty cash drawers, which were found scattered on sidewalks between Kercheval, Cadieux and Mack.

"They must have been throwing them out the car window as they were going along," Fincham said.

Two customers and 20 employees were in the store during the robbery, but no injuries were reported, he said.

ing and boys fare better on informational reading. All students need to improve their informational reading skills, he said. The district is looking into ways to balance scores through reading requirements and incentives for both genders, he said.

FOURTH-GRADE MATH: Pupils scored 72.6 percent on the essential skills math test, a slight improvement over 1991's score of 71.8. Fractions, decimals, ratios and percentages presented the greatest difficulty for students, McCaig said, largely because these objectives are only now being introduced at the fourth-grade level.

SEVENTH-GRADE READING: 63.7 percent of the students passed the story and informational sections. And like the elementary students, scores were higher for the story portion, at 83.6 percent, than the informational portion, at 69.2 percent.

SEVENTH-GRADE MATH: Students' scores improved following the second year of testing with the updated, more challenging tests. 67.5 percent passed this year compared with 62 percent in 1991. Geometry, algebraic ideas, problem solving and logical reasoning posed the greatest challenge for the students and are being addressed as part of the math curriculum update, McCaig said.

10TH-GRADE READING: 68.1 percent passed both story and informational reading tests. 82.9 percent fared well on the story section; 75.4 percent scored high on informational reading. The overall score was lower this year. Last year 10th graders scored 72.9 percent overall for reading and ranked highest in the state.

10TH-GRADE MATH: An improved score of 43.8 percent over last year's 40.1 percent showed students fared well considering the degree of difficulty the test presents, McCaig said. The weakest area for 10th graders was geometry, which typically is not taught until 10th grade. The district will have to conduct massive restructuring of its math curriculum to prepare 10th grade students for algebra and geometry, he said.

FIFTH-GRADE SCIENCE: Students scored 90.5 percent this year, maintaining stable, high scores over a four-year period. But McCaig said the science test is word-for-word the same each year. The district this year is in the midst of conducting a K-12 science curriculum study in preparation for the new MEAP science test in 1994, he said.

"These scores make it look as though the students do much better in science than in reading and math," he said. "The only way you can make comparisons is across the years or with other school districts."

EIGHTH-GRADE SCIENCE: 77.6 percent of the students passed the science test, with three-quarters of them obtaining 75 percent or better of the objectives.

11TH-GRADE SCIENCE: This year's 70.4 percent score is markedly improved over the previous three years, with scores in the low 60 percent range, McCaig said most of the gain is because the stakes are higher. High school students must pass the science test to get an endorsed diploma from the state. "When it counts, students try harder," McCaig noted.

High school students who do not pass the MEAP tests - between 10 and 15 percent of the student population this year - are permitted to retake the test and attend after-school and weekend clinics in order to earn a passing score, McCaig said it is often the same group of students whose scores are falling below the minimum score in one or more of the testing categories.

McCaig, along with district administrators, said parents need to get more involved with their children. Last year, Grosse Pointe South High School administrators invited parents of at-risk students to attend a meeting to help their children pass the MEAP test. Half of the parents became involved, he said. Those students whose parents became involved eventually passed the MEAP tests, he said.

"Overall, we're very pleased, but that doesn't mean we don't have a whole lot of work to do," he said. "We're working on science and accelerating the math curriculum at the middle schools by one full grade."

The district fully supports the state's increasingly tougher educational standards, he said, because they recognize it's the only way to prepare students to compete in the global marketplace.

cause its sanctions include the loss of state aid to school districts that do not comply with the act.

Under the Headlee Amendment to the Michigan Constitution, the state must provide funds for state-mandated programs and services in local school districts.

"Section 752 implies a loss of aid except aid that is required to be paid under the Headlee Amendment," Woodfin said. "We're asking the court to assume that that is what was intended, although it is not expressed in the statute. This is a principal of law that has been recognized in Michigan for many years."

"I don't think the Legislature intended for the school districts to be denied funds entitled to them under the Headlee Amendment."

At the Nov. 30 hearing, attorneys for the plaintiffs argued that by forcing out-of-formula school districts to share a portion of their tax base with in-formula districts, Robin Hood was, in effect, making out-of-formula districts pay for programs and services in the in-formula districts.

And under the Headlee Amendment, out-of-formula school districts are entitled to state aid to pay for those programs and services.

Bucci also will have to decide on section 753, which states that school districts that do not comply with the provisions of Robin Hood will be prohibited from levying their voter-approved operating millage.

"Bucci left section 753 open," Moore said. "The parties are trying to work out an agreement on that one section. There could be a possible resolution."

Moore declined to elaborate on the possible resolution.

The act has been referred to as Robin Hood because it takes money from "wealthy" out-of-formula school districts and redistributes it to "poorer" in-formula districts. Enacted by the Michigan Legislature in 1991, Robin Hood is part of a program to reform public school financing in Michigan. It took effect on Oct. 9, 1991.

A lawsuit initiated by the Macomb County Taxpayers Association on Nov. 8, 1991, later included Grosse Pointe and Dearborn schools as plaintiffs against 12 Macomb County out-of-formula school districts, and the state departments of treasury, education and the attorney general.

The suit was filed to prevent the school districts from paying their share of tax-base-sharing dollars and alleges that the act violates several provisions of the Michigan Constitution.

An original injunction preventing out-of-formula districts from paying the regional controller (in Grosse Pointe's case, the Wayne County Intermediate School District) was modified to allow tax-base-sharing payments to be put into an escrow account maintained by the intermediate school district.

The act has been suspended during litigation, Woodfin said, and in-formula districts are not receiving their funds from the out-of-formula districts.

Grosse Pointe Schools have paid $145,000 into the escrow account for both the 1991-92 and 1992-93 school years.

"I think Bucci made it quite clear that we resolve the remaining issues before March," Woodfin said.

minimum for most charters, and the cost of a three to five hour trip would be about $220, Forster said.

"So if you have a group of 20 people, it's about $10 a head," he said.

Hartmann said one of his goals for 1993 is to develop a market base for his company in the Grosse Pointes.

For example, he said if someone wants to hold a cocktail party that's different, why not consider having everyone meet at the host's house, and then have Royal Transportation drive them to a theater, and back again?

That way, he said, guests won't have to worry about parking, drinking and driving, or security.

While the guests are in the theater, the Royal Transportation vehicle will be parked nearby. The driver is allowed only one 15-minute break, Hartmann said, and it must not be taken within an hour of when the party is due back in the vehicle.

That's because customers might leave the event early, Hartmann said. Customers are given the number to the cellular phone in the vehicle, and if they are leaving early, they can alert the driver, who will then pull in front of the door of the building.

Otherwise, the driver will be waiting for them in front of the building at a pre-arranged time.

"Then they can step into a nice, heated vehicle, and have

Marygrove offers management certificate

The War Memorial Association and the Business Management Institute of Marygrove College, in cooperation with the non-profit American Management Association Extension Institute, are offering a certificate in management program.

To earn a certificate in management, students must take six business courses in any order. Participants will be awarded a Marygrove certificate and 1.5 continuing education units after completing each course. Some employers may provide tuition fees for continuing education. Each course meets three hours a week for five weeks.

The first course offered covers "Creating a Winning Marketing Campaign" and meets on Mondays, starting Jan. 18, from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. with instructor Michael Holzschu. Learn how to integrate advertising, distribution channels, pricing, promotions and sales into a winning marketing campaign.

Grosse Pointe FOP helps kids

By Donna Walker
Staff Writer

The Fraternal Order of Police Grosse Pointe Lodge 102 has been busy helping children and needy families in Wayne County.

Recently, the lodge donated $2,000 to the Wayne County prosecutor's office child abuse unit. The money, which the lodge raised through a raffle in September and October, will be used to buy food, soft drinks and juices to feed physically and sexually abused children who are brought to the prosecutor's office.

Many of the children do not get enough to eat at home, so members of the child abuse unit set up a room where children can be fed before they are interviewed by attorneys, said Detective Lt. David Hiller of Grosse Pointe Park, a member of Lodge 102.

He said the children's kitchen is funded entirely through donations.

For the past few years, at the lodge's annual Christmas party, FOP members and their children have donated canned goods to make up holiday baskets for the needy.

This year, the lodge was able to fill five food baskets which were delivered to needy families, Hiller said, and thanks to a large donation from the Vegas Food Market in Harper Woods — which has been contributing food items to the program for the past two years — the lodge was able to deliver a pickup truck-load of frozen turkeys and cases of food to the Children's Home of Detroit.

The lodge had enough food left over to deliver cases of canned goods, potatoes and rice to the Capuchin monastery in Detroit, Hiller said.

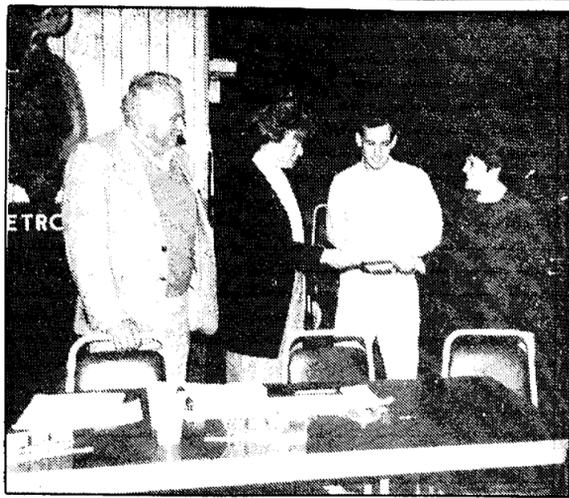

Also, the group donated soda pop and potato chips to the Foundation for Exceptional Children in Grosse Pointe Farms for its Christmas party.

"Those guys at Vegas have done a tremendous job," Hiller said.

The store got involved with the lodge's holiday food program a couple of years ago when a case of Oreos cookies was stolen from Vegas. Harper Woods police found the cookies, and Tony DiMarco, general manager of the store, told police to give them to needy children, Hiller said.

"From there, it developed into literally truck-loads of food Vegas has donated," Hiller said.

The Fraternal Order of Police Grosse Pointe Lodge 102 serves police officers in the five Grosse Pointes and Harper Woods.

Dueling pair face charges

Two Detroit men face charges of disorderly intoxication in Grosse Pointe Park Municipal Court for an altercation they engaged in on Dec. 31 in the presence of police officers.

According to Grosse Pointe Park public safety Lt. David Hiller, officers were approached in the early morning hours at Wayburn and Mack by a Detroit man who pointed out two other men and accused them of assaulting him and damaging his car.

Hiller said the three men had attended a house party in Detroit and were traveling in the same car when two of the men got out of the car and began fighting. Police officers had observed the confrontation, Hiller said.

After a brief foot chase on the Detroit side of Mack, the two men were arrested and held overnight. The Grosse Pointe Park city attorney is reviewing the case and is expected to issue arrest warrants under a city ordinance prohibiting disorderly intoxication. They will be arraigned later this month.

Thieves ransack Farms home

A home in the 200 block of Williams in Grosse Pointe Farms was robbed while the owners were in Florida.

Farms police were called to the home after a neighbor noticed a broken kitchen window. The house had been ransacked, according to the police report, but televisions, a video cassette recorder and several blank checks were untouched.

Two boxes containing valuable coins were missing.

The owners have been away since Thanksgiving.

Shots shatter car windows

It seems someone in Grosse Pointe Woods got a pellet gun for Christmas.

Sometime after 9 p.m. on Sunday, Jan. 3, seven Woods residents reported having their car windows shattered by what appeared to be pellets shot from a gun. Most of the cars were parked on the street, but some were in driveways.

Police have no suspects and the incidents remain under investigation.

they are tears, she says, of happiness.

"I have been very lucky," she said. "It's been such a fun life."

She was born in a small village in Normandy where as a child she weathered World War II with her family.

In 1953 she arrived in America to study English. Not knowing a word of the language, she was to stay with the family of Eric Marcus, an American soldier her family had befriended during the war when he worked as an interpreter in her Normandy village.

It wasn't long after she moved to the states that the two fell in love and were married.

"I didn't want to fall in love," she said. "But we did. He was 24 years older than I was and he'd never been married before. I guess he was waiting for me."

The family she married into — the Marcuses — was well-known in Detroit. They ran Marcus Hamburgers, the second oldest hamburger chain in Detroit. The hamburgers were long and served on a hot dog bun. People sometimes still ask if she's related to the Marcuses of Marcus Hamburgers. The chain has long been closed.

"He was a wonderful man," she said of her husband. "He had a degree in music, but he didn't do anything with it. He worked for his family's business. He was a wonderful piano player and when FM radio first started he was an opera commentator."

When he died five years ago, the couple had been married for 33 years.

They had three children. Orlie, who quit his medical studies to take up the culinary arts, is the executive chef at Pebble Beach Country Club in California; Corinne, who as a child told her mother she would never be a teacher because "all you do is correct, correct, correct," is a teacher of learning disabled students in Detroit; and James, the youngest, is in marketing, now living in St. Paul, Minn. She has two granddaughters, Corinne's children.

When Marcus left France she had been a teacher for three years. Accordingly, she enrolled at Wayne State University to get her teaching certificate so she could teach French in the states.

"I've taught for 40 years now," she said. "With a few years off when I had my kids. And I loved every year I taught."

She often uses examples from her own life when teaching students.

"I have my own style, but how do you describe it? I tell students not to be worried about learning a new language," she said. "And I use humor. When I came here I didn't speak a word of English and I made it. I made some mistakes, though. It took a while before I stopped saying 'I'm disgusting' when I meant 'I'm disgusted,' and when I got married I said I take Eric as my 'awful husband' instead of my 'lawful husband.'"

"You have to make students think they can be great because they can be. You shouldn't judge youth, you should respect them when they are in the wrong and when they are in the good. There was a Michelangelo and an Einstein once, but that doesn't mean there won't be another. You must give them hope all the time."

"I'm not just a French teacher. I'm an educator. I'm interested in their growth as people."

She has taught French to couples at the YMCA, to engineers at the Detroit Institute of Technology, to learning disabled students and taught at Le Lycee Francais, a school for French students whose parents were transferred short-term to the United States by various auto companies. She also taught at the University of Toronto for five years before coming to Le Lycee.

"I was made a principal there but then I heard about an opening at University Liggett School and I thought I'm more of a teacher than an administrator so I took the job 10 years ago and I've never regretted it," she said.

She is often invited to weddings of former students and still is in contact with several couples she taught at the YMCA some 30 years ago.

While in Toronto she was asked to translate the voice-over narration for a film called "Homage to Chagal," a documentary on the life and work of painter Marc Chagal. The film was nominated for an Academy Award as the best documentary of 1976, but lost.

When she's not teaching she loves to read and travel. She compares art museums (The Louvre is still her favorite over the Hermitage and she insists it's not just because it's in France) and can be found rock hunting everywhere.

"All my children love to collect rocks now, too," she said. The trophies — ancient fossils and beautiful geodes — are on display in her quaint apartment.

Not long ago the French government called her and asked her to send her curriculum vitae for consideration as a recipient of Le Palmes Academiques, a decoration given to people of French descent who have lived lives of service. The real honor, she says, is simply being under consideration, whether she is granted one or not.

"My life has been very good," she said. "I'm very lucky."

University Liggett School French teacher Françoise Marcus is not just a teacher, she is a friend and an educator who has been helping students for 40 years.

Diet, exercise will keep Stimpu off the growing rolls of pet obesity

It's time to make those New Year's resolutions again and while you're at it, why not include your pet on the 1993 list.

A great resolution is signing pets up for an obedience class. This allows interaction with the pet's owner and other dogs, and gives them a chance to think and make their masters proud.

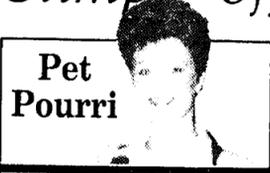

Among the most needed resolutions for our pets is diet and exercise. Pet obesity affects more than 44 percent of American dogs. Did you know that one large doggie biscuit packs 125 calories?

Dr. Jacqueline Carew from the Harper Woods Veterinary Hospital says pet owners don't usually count their pet's daily caloric intake, particularly those "free" table scraps or bits. Seldom do we think of dinner plate leftovers as "fattening," or view them as calories.

Although I've become accustomed to reading my own food labels, I'm among millions who couldn't begin to tell you what things like "crude fat" mean on a pet food label. However, Carew assures us that major brands of dog food like Purina, Alpo and Iams (to name a few) are totally balanced and provide ideal amounts of nutrients, vitamins and minerals. These foods are low in fat and calories and high in fiber. The balance these foods provide is crucial for our pet's good health.

Raw carbohydrates such as pasta, rice, potatoes and breads have low caloric densities and aren't necessarily "bad" for your pet, but generally aren't ingested in their raw form when given to pets as "treats."

Pet Pourri
By Kathleen Ferrilla

If one of these starches is occasionally included at mealtime for variety, most of the time they contain butter or something else that's unhealthy for your pet. The rule to follow here is never give your pet table scraps, especially if it's meat or something with sauce on it — both are loaded in fats. It's important to remember that even when a tablespoon of raw pasta or rice is added to a meal, a tablespoon of fortified pet food is left out and, possibly, more harm than good is being done.

Pets "awarded" the traditional after dinner plate to lick generally are or will eventually become overweight. Carew says that she's never seen a diet work successfully when table scraps are not strictly forbidden from the pet's menu.

One diet regimen by Science Diet, begins with "Prescribed RD" diet food and is the best food for initial weight reduction. Followup to this plan is the "Prescribed WD" food that helps keep the weight off. WD keeps your pet's tummy feeling full between meals because of its high fiber content.

Daily exercise is the key factor in weight reduction and overall health for your pet. If you and your pet aren't exercising at all right now, begin at a low level (remember pets get tired too). If you walk 10 or 15 minutes a day now, add another five or 10 to your route, weather permitting, of course. The goal is to reach the recommended exercise level. Two 15-minute walks a day are recommended to keep your pet young and happy, just like us.

Pet obesity happens much the same way as it does in humans — overeating and under-exercising. We all know the myth about putting on extra weight during the winter. We'd like to think our bodies need the added insulation for cold weather but that's not true at all, unless you're an Alaskan Eskimo. The truth is that we just slow down in winter and get lazy. We don't get enough exercise and with such limited daylight we have less energy and desire to exercise, therefore causing weight gain.

House pets are the same. Unless the animal is living out in the wilderness and needs extra body fat to keep warm; pets, too, are victims of winter's reduced energy and exercise levels.

A 15 percent or more increase in ideal weight indicates a problem for your pet. Carew says a great way to tell if your pet should be dieting is to feel for their rib cage. Most people worry that if they can feel their pet's ribs, they aren't eating enough, when in actuality, being able to feel the rib cage is a good indication of a healthy pet.

Your pet is considered chunky when you have to struggle to feel the ribs, and it is considered fat when you can't feel anything, indicating that you should begin a weight-loss plan.

As always, consult your veterinarian before beginning any new exercise or diet program for your pet.

A few tips:

It's best to feed your pet in three or four small portions throughout the day — not one large one; no treats should be given when your pet is dieting. You could take a portion of a meal and roll it into tiny meatballs for treats, but this doesn't mean you can add more food to make up for the amount lost in making the treats. If you have two dogs and one is dieting, make sure they have their own dishes and feeding areas — this limits temptation. Walks and quality time are better treats than biscuits.

When making your list of resolutions, remember not to be too hard on yourself or your pet. It's better to expect less and get more in the long run. I hope 1993 will be the happiest and healthiest year yet for you and your pet.

Happy New Year and remember banging pots and pans or setting off fireworks near pets not only frightens them but can shatter their ear drums.

Christianity and global ecology

Earth dreams while mankind schemes. Does Western Christianity support the vision of a planetary community? How far does our faith-view commit us?

"Christianity and Global Ecology" explores Thomas Berry's classic text, "The Drama of the Earth," as a springboard to discuss contemporary issues of ecology and good stewardship. The discussion group meets on Tuesdays, beginning Jan. 12, from 2:30 to 4 p.m., lead by Sister Mary Francis Hush.

The fee for the six-week session is $30, or $6 for a single session.

Mugging attempt in Village

A 46-year-old Grosse Pointe woman was the victim of a mugging attempt at knife point in the Village last Monday night.

The woman had just turned west into the parking lot off Notre Dame, north of Kercheval, at 8:25 p.m. when she was approached by a youth. He threatened the woman with a kitchen knife and demanded her purse and a ride into Detroit, said Grosse Pointe City detective Dennis VanDale.

When another shopper approached the victim's car, the would-be mugger fled on foot, VanDale said. No one was injured in the incident.

The suspect is described as a juvenile black male.

Clown classes to be offered

The Grosse Pointe Clown Corps will offer clown classes at Grosse Pointe Woods city hall beginning Jan. 25. The classes end in March.

Registration is at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Jan. 12, and at 7:30 p.m. Monday, Jan. 18, at city hall on Mack.

Students will learn make-up, routines, gymnastics, skits, how to make balloon animals and more.

Classes will be held in the community room in the basement of city hall. The Jan. 25 class begins at 7:30 p.m.

For more information, call Arthur J. Kuehnell at 881-8186.

HEALTH WATCH

Love's not the only thing that can break your heart.

Headed for heartache

Love's just one of many things that can make your heart ache. These factors can increase your risk of a heart attack or stroke:

- Smoking
- A diet rich in saturated fats and cholesterol
- Stress
 - High blood pressure
 - Being overweight
 - Lack of exercise
 - Excessive drinking
 - High salt intake

A heart on the mend

The good news is that you can change these habits. Not all at once maybe, but over time.

Try starting with an exercise program, building up to three 30-minute workouts a week. It should help lower your weight, your cholesterol level and your stress. Read food labels; they'll tell you where salt and fats are hiding. Get your blood pressure and cholesterol checked. Join a program to quit smoking or drinking. It's not too late to mend a broken heart.

Royal Transportation's profitable and on the move

By Donna Walker
Staff Writer

Given the sluggish economy last year and the high failure rate for new businesses, locally owned Royal Transportation Co. is where nobody thought it would be.

In the black. But that, said treasurer and co-owner Ron Forster of Grosse Pointe Park, is exactly where the company stood when it celebrated its one-year anniversary Dec. 31.

"We've exceeded our expectations for the first year," Forster said, "and are operating in the black. We thought we'd be in the red right now, and we planned our reserves that way."

Now, he said, the company can use those reserves to buy more equipment.

"We plan to double the size of our fleet over the next year," which includes eight 25-seat deluxe mini-buses and two 14-seat passenger vans," he said.

Royal Transportation is owned by Forster, president Joseph Hartmann of Grosse Pointe Farms; and vice president operations manager Don Fitzsimmons.

Hartmann said he began thinking in September 1991 that there was a need for a shuttle service in downtown Detroit.

He envisioned a company that would transport people from restaurants to theaters or sporting events and back again.

At the time, Hartmann had been president of Commuter Transportation Co. at Detroit Metropolitan Airport for eight years, and he said he was looking for a chance to get out because his job had become boring.

Through his wife, Elaine Hartmann, he met Forster. Elaine was trying to save the Cadieux Farmhouse, on Cadieux at Jefferson in Grosse Pointe City, from demolition, and she convinced Forster to invest in a non-profit organization she founded to purchase, renovate and resell the home.

Forster said his family had owned two Drexel Heritage furniture stores - in Grosse Pointe Woods and Sterling Heights - and he worked in the family business for 20 years until it was sold in 1987.

Then, he said, he turned to investing in commercial properties.

Hartmann told Forster about his shuttle service idea, and they discussed it for several months. Hartmann quit his job at Commuter Transportation, and in December 1991, they purchased two white deluxe passenger vans from Pointe Dodge.

Their first customer was Joe Muer's restaurant, on New Year's Eve. They shuttled Joe Muer's customers to a Detroit Red Wings hockey game at Joe Louis Arena, and then back to the restaurant. The shuttle service, dinner and hockey tickets were included in a package price, Hartmann said.

Fitzsimmons, who had worked with Hartmann at Commuter Transportation, joined Royal Transportation a short time later.

As demand for the company's service grew, so did its fleet and staff, which includes Marie Messer, a former Commuter Transportation Co. employee who was recently named manager of Royal's charter department; public relations consultant Mary Lou Wood of Grosse Pointe Farms; and 14 drivers.

"Fifteen drivers, if you include Ron," Hartmann said.

Forster said he got a commercial driver's license so he could help during an emergency.

Fitzsimmons' wife also drove during the early days "because we wanted to keep our overhead down," Hartmann said.

"We have a corps of experienced drivers who you could place anywhere in the world," he said. "Paris, New York - they could drive in any city without a problem."

Drivers - including three female drivers - wear tuxedos, he said, and do not work regular shifts. Rather, they receive varying assignments.

"The gratuities they receive help offset (the pay) they miss by not having shift-type work," he said.

The 10 vehicles in Royal's fleet are stored outdoors in a fenced commercial yard Forster owns on Jefferson in Detroit.

The vehicles are washed every day in a nearby garage, also owned by Forster.

"Someday, we'd like to have a garage to store the vehicles in, but again, we want to keep our overhead low," Forster said.

None of Royal Transportation's vehicles have wheelchair lifts, but Hartmann said the company can furnish a hand-capped accessible vehicle if a customer requests it by subcontracting the job to another transportation company.

Royal Transportation also subcontracts work when larger buses are needed, or when it receives more orders than it can fill at one time, Hartmann said.

"We don't subcontract work to just anybody," he said. "We only deal with a few bus companies that we know and that have a proven track record."

Royal gets a percentage of the fee for each trip it subcontracts.

The company deals with several restaurants, hotels, theaters and arenas in downtown Detroit, Hartmann said.

Customers can sign up for shuttle service packages at those establishments in advance, or they can call Royal directly.

"The more advance notice we get, the better," Forster said. "But we will do anything at the last minute if we have the equipment. We've had restaurants call us an hour beforehand, saying they counted wrong and need an extra mini-bus. Because we're centrally located, we can usually respond quickly."

Royal Transportation has also driven the casts of visiting Broadway shows and conventioners to and from the airport and hotels, Forster said, and the company provides a shuttle service to employees of a downtown Detroit firm and a company in Troy. Employees of those firms park in lots several blocks away from their place of employment, and Royal Transportation mini-buses shuttle them to and from their buildings.

Royal Transportation also offers day trips and overnight excursions to Native American gambling casinos up north, Hartmann said.

"Every time we turn around, we find something new that people want transportation for," he said.

There is about a three-hour

History of Park neighborhood traced in booklet

By Donna Walker
Staff Writer

Under some Christmas trees in Grosse Pointe Park this year were copies of a new booklet detailing the history of one of the city's neighborhoods.

Written by resident Bruce L. Sanders, the 51-page, blue-covered booklet is entitled, "Seven Acres of the Poupard Farm: the 1300 block of Yorkshire."

He started working on the booklet a little over a year ago, at the suggestion of his neighbor, Liana Drath, and received the finished copies from the printer last week.

"Liana was interested in the history of the block, and she thought I'd be a good one to carry out such a project because I've done a lot of genealogical research (as a hobby)," said Sanders, a political science teacher at Macomb Community College.

From the title abstract to his home, he got the names of the various people who have owned the land on which his house sits, all the way back to 1796, and put them in the booklet.

The earliest known owners of the land are Joseph Socier and Ambrose Tremble. Yorkshire was not a street yet — and wouldn't become one until Nov. 24, 1915, when the road was platted. Sander's property was part of a large block of farmland that Socier and Tremble purchased in July 1796.

After several owners and two lawsuits — one concerning fraud and the other, eviction of a farmer — the land was purchased by Genevieve Poupard in 1860.

Her heirs divided the farm into three parcels, selling one parcel to a private couple and the other two parcels to two companies. Later that year, one of those firms, the Berkshire Land Co., acquired all rights to the Poupard Farm, and from 1924 to 1957, the 30 houses on the block were built.

Sanders said he went to the Grosse Pointe Historical Society for more information, but they had very little. Same with the Grosse Pointe Library. So he took his search to the main branch of the Detroit Public Library.

He said he spent a total of about 10 hours there, searching through a set of huge books called the "Detroit Directory," from which he got the names of the people who lived in the 1300 block of Yorkshire and their occupations, from 1924 to the beginning of World War II.

"As part of the war effort," Sanders said, "they stopped printing the Detroit Directory, and then after World War II, when they started it back up again, it didn't contain the Grosse Pointes, as it had before. I guess they wanted to streamline it."

To fill in the gaps between World War II and the present, he relied on the memories of people who still live on the block, and people who have moved away whom he was able to contact.

"I expected," Sanders said, "to find that some interesting people had lived on our block, but I was surprised to learn we had three fairly famous people living here in the early days."

He said he knew about one of them already: George "Potsy" Clark, former coach and vice president of the Detroit Lions, who lived from 1940 to 1944 in the house Sanders now owns.

When H. Murray Northrup lived on the block in the 1930s, he was chief metallurgist, and then an engineer, for the Hudson Motor Car Co. After moving away, he became vice president for engineering of the car company, Sanders said.

William A. Kuenzel, who lived on the block from 1925-1964, was a photographer for the Detroit News and was a pioneer in aerial photography.

The booklet contains diagrams of how the block looked over the years, as houses were built. One or more pages are devoted to each house, depending upon its history.

There is also a black and white photograph of each house, and below that, its address, architectural style, year built, and an illustration, symbolizing either a particular residents' occupation, or what life was like on Yorkshire in the 1920s and 1930s.

The houses were photographed by resident Ted Zberanowsky, and Sanders said he got the illustrations from a book of non-copyrighted graphics that he bought at a bookstore.

He also obtained old photographs and illustrations from the Detroit Lions, Jack Miller of Miller Motor Sales in Ypsilanti (a Hudson Motor Car parts and service dealership), the Dayton-Hudson Corp., the National Bank of Detroit and the University of Detroit Mercy School of Dentistry.

He also received a $25 contribution for the project from NBD.

Sanders wrote the booklet on his daughter's computer, and after he printed out the information and pasted down the photos and illustrations, he took it to a printer and had 80 copies made.

He's selling the booklets — which have a black plastic spiral binding — for $6.50 each, which is what it cost to publish them.

Although he's pleased with the booklet, he said there is some information he would have liked to have included, but wasn't able to, information about the architects who built the houses on his block, and photos of what his house looked like in the 1930s that were sent to him a few years ago by a former resident.

"I'm sure some of the houses on this block were built by fairly famous architects," he said, "but I don't know where to find that information."

As for the photographs, he said he put them in a safe place, but can't remember where.

He said the Grosse Pointe Historical Society has asked him if he would conduct a workshop on how other blocks can create similar booklets, and he said he would do so if there was sufficient interest.

For more information about his booklet, call Bruce Sanders at 882-7838.

Cancer society seeks drivers

The American Cancer Society is seeking new members for its Road to Recovery Program.

This is a group of volunteers who drive cancer patients living in Macomb, Oakland and Wayne counties to and from medical facilities for life-saving treatments.

Drivers are needed between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

If you have a car and are able to spare some time during these hours, call the Cancer Control Patient Service Department at 1-800-925-2271.

Pharmacist helps collar suspected prescription forger

An alert pharmacist at a store in the 20400 block of Mack in Grosse Pointe Woods helped police catch a suspected prescription forger.

The pharmacist thought a prescription that a customer had just brought in looked suspicious, so he called the hospital that supposedly issued the prescription to verify it.

A clerk at the hospital said they had no record of it, and that several prescription pads had been stolen from the hospital's emergency room.

While the pharmacist was checking on the prescription, the customer left the store and drove away. The pharmacist called police with a description of the suspect's vehicle, and an officer stopped the car at Allard and Mack.

The suspect didn't have his driver's license with him, and while he was searching for some form of identification, the officer saw a yellow prescription form from the hospital among the papers the suspect was holding.

The Law Enforcement Information Network showed that the suspect, a 41-year-old Detroit man, had not renewed his driver's license when it expired in 1988, and that he was wanted on a misdemeanor warrant for prostitution. Also, the license plate on his car had been stolen from someone else's vehicle.

The officer arrested him for prescription fraud and for driving without a license. His car was impounded, and the officer found another prescription form in the glovebox.

Samaritans recover stolen purse

A Detroit woman went to the Michigan National Bank drive-through on Jefferson and Alter on Tuesday, Dec. 15, to make a deposit, and as she opened the door to reach for the bank cylinder, her purse fell out of her car.

She didn't notice it was missing until she arrived, several minutes later, at a NBD Branch on St. Clair in Grosse Pointe City, where she had taken a friend.

A teller at the NBD Branch called the Michigan National Bank, where an employee told her to call Grosse Pointe Park police.

Two men who were behind the woman in the drive-through lane saw her purse fall out of the car, and took it to the Park police station.

The woman picked her purse up at the station and found everything intact.

"I would like to thank the two men," she said, "but they didn't leave their names."

Central cities' decline hurts the suburbs

A new report of the sharp decline in the number of business establishments in Detroit in recent years offers further evidence of the downhill economic slide of the core city of our metropolitan area.

The Detroit News reported that from 1972 to 1987 manufacturing lost nearly 48 percent of its businesses and 78,200 jobs; the number of retail establishments dropped almost 45 percent and 24,300 employees, and wholesale businesses experienced a 50 percent decline in numbers and a loss of 16,000 jobs.

Most of us living in the Grosse Pointes are aware of what is happening to the central city in a general way but we may not realize what those business reversals mean to these and other suburbs.

Now, through the courtesy of a Grosse Pointe Park reader, we cite a report from the Philadelphia Federal Reserve Bank that offers specific conclusions about the effects of a central city's economic setbacks on its suburbs.

Opinion

Citing 1980-90 population growth rates and 1980-87 income growth rates for 28 metropolitan areas, the report found that in both comparisons, Detroit's suburbs fared almost as badly as Detroit itself.

Overall, the report concludes that the central city decline is damaging as well to the suburbs since such decline "is likely to be a long-run, slow drain on the economic and social vitality of the region."

The report goes on to warn the suburbs that the "long-run, gradual nature of the negative effects of urban decline make it difficult to observe, let alone mobilize support for policies to prevent urban decline."

"In particular, the negative impact may be unrecognized by suburban residents because the suburb is performing so much better than its declining central city counterpart."

And then the report adds: "However, suburbs in metropolitan areas with declining cities are likely to be performing poorly when compared with other metropolitan areas with healthy cities.

"Thus, suburban residents may perceive themselves as relatively better off when compared with their city neighbors, even though their house values are adversely affected by the city decline."

"House values," usually referred to as "housing values" in the Pointes, lie at the heart of one of this community's cherished beliefs.

It is that its support of its public schools and its other public services contributes much to the quality of life in the Pointes and to the maintenance of good property values.

The report does offer some hope, however, by recommending that both city and suburbs "could improve their welfare through cooperative actions to arrest decline."

Possible actions, it went on, "might include regional financing of social service programs, regional efforts to improve educational opportunities for children in poor-quality school districts, and the elimination of large differences in local tax rates."

Policies that require cooperation to achieve long-range objectives, it warned, "may be difficult to forge, since there are likely to be short-run benefits for suburban areas from central city decline."

The report does not cite all of the problems that affect the suburbs, including the Pointes, as a result of Detroit's decline in both population and income growth in recent years, but it does illustrate the extent of the problems.

Fortunately, as the Philadelphia bank's report indicated, improved cooperation between the suburbs and the central city ought to be beneficial in the Detroit area as well as in other U.S. metropolitan areas.

In the interests of their own future, the suburbs have a responsibility to seek that cooperation — and encourage Detroit to reciprocate.

Some Pointers already are among those seeking to help rescue Detroit but many other talented people in this community could offer valuable advice and counsel, too. At the start of another year, they could be helpful by pledging to join the rescue mission.

Can we rebottle the genie?

By a strange coincidence, a new effort at putting the atomic genie back in the bottle has just been made by the United States and Russia in the same month that the world marked the 50th anniversary of the opening of the atomic age.

Actually, the Dec. 2 anniversary of the first kindling of a sustained nuclear reaction was given little attention by the news media and yet that discovery has had a profound influence on the 20th century.

Far more media attention was paid, however, to the Dec. 30 report that the United States and Russia had worked out an agreement to reduce their nuclear arms by two-thirds by the year 2003.

If the agreement is signed and the cuts carried out — both big "ifs" — Russia would be down to 3,000 warheads and the United States down to 3,500, roughly their levels before the development of multiple-warhead missiles which would be banned under the treaty.

When man first achieved a sustained nuclear reaction, it was said that he had let the genie out of the bottle. In fact, however, he had opened the way not only for an age of fearful atomic weaponry but also for an era of atomic development for peaceful purposes.

For one of the few major articles on the anniversary, the New York Times interviewed Dr. Harold M. Agnew, who was, according to reporter William J. Broad,

"the only person who had witnessed the whole undertaking from pile to weapon to Hiroshima."

Recruited early on to serve in the World War II secret effort to build the bomb, Agnew was present in Chicago on Dec. 2, 1942, at the first atomic chain reaction.

But he also was aboard a B-29 bomber that flew close enough to enable him to record on a movie camera the scene as the Enola Gay's crew dropped the first bomb on Hiroshima on Aug. 6, 1945.

After the war, Agnew helped develop the hydrogen bomb, served as a scientific adviser to the Supreme Allied Commander in Europe, headed a team that oversaw development of new missiles, and opposed early proposals for a comprehensive weapons ban.

Since the cold war's end, however, Agnew has worked increasingly to speed the elimination of nuclear arms but also has backed the development of new reactors for civilian purposes.

Agnew today believes the nuclear era has resulted in far more good than bad and says it deserves an A which "could be an AAA, if they'd get going with these new reactors."

And if the new U.S.-Russian agreement puts at least some of the atomic genie back in the bottle, Broad and the world will have more reason to be pleased with the nuclear age he helped bring about.

Letters

Mean-spirited letters resented

To the Editor:

For two weeks now, I have opened to your letters page and have read vicious attacks upon not only the high schools' new Career Decisions course, but also upon the instructors who have developed it. I feel compelled to respond to these mean-spirited letters both as a product of the Grosse Pointe Schools (North '72) and as a Grosse Pointe teacher (I'm the art teacher at Pierce).

While a student at North, I enjoyed the benefits of a broad liberal arts education, including all the expected "core" classes. I was also fortunate to be able to participate in a wide variety of "non-academic" courses. My experiences in those particular courses continue to shape my personal and professional life to this day.

I am also proud to have spent my last two years at North as a Co-op student. The coursework involved (which sounds like a lot of the Career Decisions material) prepared me very well for my entry into the world of work and then into the world of higher education. In fact, I'd go so far as to say it prepared me for entry into the real, adult world in general.

I feel lucky to have had the opportunity to participate in the Co-op program. Even though I'd always planned to go on to college, my Co-op classwork and on-the-job experience played an invaluable part in helping me to develop as a complete person. My parents always thought my Co-op involvement was one of the best, smartest things I ever did. Being 20 years older and no longer obligated to rebel against them, I publicly agree. I can only wonder why your other writers express such elitist, hostile attitudes.

Dr. Hitch was my Co-op teacher and coordinator. Our paths don't cross very often, but his dedication and concern for all students continue to be obvious to all who bother to look. I taught with Mrs. Yankee at Pierce for several years and know how hard she works to meet students' needs. Both Dr. Hitch and Mrs. Yankee demand excellence of themselves and of their students every day. They deserve to be commended for their efforts, not to be ridiculed or called "barbarians."

I graduated from Grosse

Pointe North having learned both Shakespeare and checkbook balancing — and many other things besides, of course. I strongly resent the other writers' implications that this somehow makes me the recipient of an inferior education. You get out of anything what you put into it, and I got plenty. I hope other Grosse Pointe residents will continue to support the school system's efforts to provide excellence in education for all its students.

Library closed

To the Editor:

Over my Christmas break I needed to use the library services to complete a report. Of course, I left it to the last weekend before school started to work on it — Jan. 2 and 3.

To my disappointment, I found the library closed. Strangers who were walking to and from it all mentioned their need to use the library also. This incident happened to me at Thanksgiving time: the library was closed for the weekend.

I'm writing to let the library know that there are people in the community who are in need of its services over the holidays.

The new rush into gambling

From reading the Detroit dailies, one would think everyone in this part of the North American continent really wants to legalize gambling.

However, it is more accurate to say that a number of promoters as well as several municipalities seeking new revenue believe they could profit from legalized gambling.

Windsor, Detroit, Highland Park and now Port Huron are all considering or talking about plans to install gambling casinos. Proponents justify such moves on the grounds they would boost employment, increase business and benefit economic recovery in general.

In our view, however, the promoters would be the big winners and the people in general the losers.

At least two of the proposals, in Detroit and Port Huron, involve the subterfuge of turning over pieces of property to Indian tribes whose reservations are exempt from the usual restrictions on gambling.

Surely, the intent of legislation giving the Indians special rights on their own reservations was not to enable them to extend those rights into other areas to seek profits from gambling that would otherwise be illegal.

In fact, the Indians themselves are not unanimous supporters of gambling on their reservations. Some Indians and other critics point to the host of problems that gambling addiction spawns.

They include crime, poverty, drunkenness, child abuse, parent desertions and other family issues that require the attention of increased numbers of law enforcement and social service personnel.

If there are financial gains to be made from legalized gambling, the offsetting social ills also must be evaluated by the people who will bear most of the costs. They are, of course, the citizens of such areas.

to his national and international image.

- President-elect Bill Clinton who played golf but also worked on preparations for his new administration at Hilton Head, S.C.

- Common Cause, the nonprofit, non-partisan citizens' lobbying organization, which opened a new drive to seek comprehensive campaign finance reform and expressed its appreciation to Michigan Sens. Carl Levin and Donald W. Reigle for their 1992 support of similar legislation which, however, died in Congress.

A Happy New Year arrives

Among the people and institutions deserving a pat on the back at the start of the New Year are:

- The University of Michigan, whose Wolverines won the Rose Bowl in a scoring parade just after its Fabulous Five had won the Rainbow classic in Hawaii.

- President George Bush, whose whirlwind trips to Somalia to honor U.S. troops, to Russia to sign the new Start II nuclear missile reduction treaty and to France to win its support to enforce a no-fly zone over Bosnia, restored some luster

Younger and older workers are at odds over jobs

Americans are living longer, a fact that has many implications, not only for those who are approaching retirement age — but for younger people as well.

With this in mind, it is encouraging that they support economic security measures being sought by the older generation. One day, even the youngest is going to benefit.

Actually, contrary to expectations, the young people realize this. A Harris poll found that support for Social Security and the willingness to pay higher taxes from the program came from every adult age group in the nation.

A poll conducted for the National Council On Aging (NCOA) revealed that the "Social Security fund is inviolate and is viewed as a bedrock financial institution that must be preserved at all costs."

The Harris poll added, "We found as much or more support for Social Security among the 18- to 64-year olds as we did

Prime Time

By Marian Trainor

among those over 74. There's no generational difference at all on this issue."

For those who worry about discontented young workers being taxed for Social Security, this poll is reassuring. It is good to know that despite rising taxes younger people realize that one day they will be recipients of a trust fund that cannot be matched.

It has been estimated that having made the maximum earnings and having paid the maximum taxes throughout your working life, you would receive all that money back in 19 months.

While there appears to be no difference of opinion between generations on the need and value of Social Security, this same harmony does not appear to exist when it comes to jobs for older workers.

This is becoming increasingly apparent in these stressful times of rising costs and unemployment. Older Americans, feeling the pinch of rising utility costs are trying to stay in the labor market longer.

Such action draws fire from younger job seekers who feel that older workers should retire to open the job market.

Yet a study made by the Urban Institute concluded that there is an illusion that older workers and younger workers compete for the same jobs. Older workers rarely occupy entry-level positions for which younger workers are recruited.

It has been found that employers who try to save money by hiring younger workers at lower wages than those earned by older employees may be shortchanging themselves.

Surveys show that older workers have fewer job absences, fewer accidents and require lower insurance payments than younger workers.

Medicare benefits account for the low health costs of older workers because they sharply reduce premiums for private medical insurance. Pension costs for older workers can also be much lower, it was reported, because the law provides that in cases of defined benefit plans no additional accruals are necessary after retirement

Another consideration is that as the population grows older employers may see manpower shortages. Workers with technical and professional skills may be especially difficult to find as the number of college graduates decreases and skilled workers are not retained.

Among misgivings employers have about retraining or hiring older workers is that older workers are more apt to have health problems. Actually, health care advances have improved the health of the entire population. Furthermore, physical disabilities don't occur just because of advanced years. The productivity of older workers compares favorably with that of younger workers.

A compromise could be that older employees would continue working but not on a full-time basis. Alternatives such as flex time, part-time work and job sharing might be worked out.

While young and old are in unison on the need and value of Social Security and are willing to make whatever sacrifices it takes to sustain it, there are differences to resolve when it comes to employment opportunities for older citizens who want to continue working.

It is hoped some solutions that will be satisfactory to both younger and older workers can be found.

Help on saving energy available

The new Michigan Energy Assistance Program Directory for senior citizens and low-income residents is now available to help with energy-saving programs, including weatherization, home repairs and energy conservation. Information in the directory has also been shared with Area Agencies on Aging, county department of social services offices, community action agencies, senior centers and nutrition projects, state legislative staffs, State of Michigan

Library, and United Way agencies.

The directory is divided into four sections: Emergency/Advisory Services, Energy Payments, Energy Conservation, and Home Improvements. The program description, eligibility, area served, and contact information are provided for the agencies, state departments and companies offering services.

A joint effort of the Michigan Energy and Aging Consortium, the directory displays the national Energy & Aging Consortium logo and theme, Building Partnerships. Too much of a good medicine can be bad medicine

On a visit to Norway several years ago, I called on one of my aunts out in the country, who had married a stubborn fellow who was not too bright.

Her welcome was warm, but her husband sat glumly in a little alcove off the living room. When the greetings had died down, I took a closer look at Uncle Hans, who was wearing a skull-cap.

He was willing to shake my hand, but when I asked how he was he just said, "Look," and snatched off the skull-cap. Half of his scalp was covered by one big scab.

I moved closer to have a better look and could smell some of the ingredients of the salve that he was using. They were stimulating but could also be very irritating to the skin.

Three months ago I had a small breaking out about the size of my little fingernail. Right there," Uncle Hans said, pointing to the center of the scab. "It grew a bit so I called on Dr. Lund who gave me a prescription. It must have been good, for the condition improved for a while.

"Then the sore just got worse and seemed to be getting ahead of the medicine, so I used the salve morning and evening. But the medicine didn't catch up with the eruption, so I asked Dr. Lund for a stronger prescription which he wouldn't give me unless I came to see him. So now I am keeping it covered with the salve and rubbing it in four times a day."

I asked, "Is it getting better?"

"No," he said, "not yet, but I think it has stopped spreading, and the salve will soon get ahead of it."

It was obvious to me that the medicine itself was the cause of this enlarging lesion, so I suggested he give the medicine a rest. His answer: "What? Now, when it's just about to get better? Certainly not."

I continued my visit with my aunt and at the door as I was leaving, I told her that I felt sure that the salve was the cause of the continuing condition, and that if he stopped using it the lesion would get better.

In a few days, the salve mysteriously disappeared and Uncle Hans couldn't get any more. I heard later that the sore healed in about three weeks.

In case any reader wonders why I'm writing about my uncle, it's because his experience underlines the fact that nearly 10 percent of hospital admissions are due to medications taken improperly or used in excess or wrongly selected.

If the use of a salve or a lotion doesn't improve the skin condition rather quickly, tell your doctor about it. Or, if you bought it over the counter in a drugstore, discuss it with your pharmacist. Either the sore needed a rest, or you needed a different medicine.

The same advice applies to medicines used for stomach aches, headaches, diarrhea, or almost any symptom. These results that are due to medication are termed iatrogenic, which means doctor-caused.

This doesn't necessarily mean that it's the doctor's fault. A doctor often has to try out several medicines, particularly in the case of high blood pressure, in order to find the right one for a given patient.

In addition, even though the doctor may have said, "Come back and see me in a week," the patient may decide that there's not much reason for that and may continue the medicine and even increase the dose. This puts the patient in the class with my Uncle Hans.

Most medicines prescribed or bought over the counter are in a sense two-edged swords. The right medicine in the right dosage, and barring a patient's individual sensitivity to it, will serve the purpose for which it was prescribed.

Some medicines, however, have undesirable side effects that occur in a very small percentage of people. These side effects can be slight or severe, or they can even be dangerous, in which case the medicine is the wrong one for that given person.

Some medicines have to be taken exactly as they were prescribed or they can do increasing harm or possibly do no good.

Digitalis is a good example. One needs an exact amount of digitalis in the blood fluids, blood and otherwise, for it to act as intended — and that is to make the heart more efficient.

If the amount that is circulating in the body is too low, the digitalis does no good. If it's too high, it can, during such a period, be very harmful to the efficiency of the heart.

Or it can even be fatal, as it was for a few people where digitalis was an ingredient of a weight-reducing nostrum with no control over the amount used.

Coumarin, used to slow down the clotting of the blood in patients with certain heart conditions, must also be used exactly as prescribed so the patient gets just enough effect but not enough that his clotting becomes so slow that the bleeding can be dangerous.

If a good physician prescribes a medicine and tells the patient to return in a week, it's important that the patient comply so the physician can evaluate the results of the dosage prescribed. If one is taking an over-the-counter medication, a consultation with the pharmacist also is well worthwhile.

Nursing home guide to be published

Citizens for Better Care has been awarded a $9,000 grant from the Metro Health Foundation of Detroit to produce a consumer guide to the nursing homes of Southeastern Michigan.

The grant will establish this project as an annually updated guide to the quality of care offered in the 223 nursing homes in 15 counties.

AARP to see 'Phantom'

The travel committee of AARP chapter 2151 still has space for several more people to see "Phantom of the Opera" on Wednesday, Feb. 17 — the final performance in Detroit.

The "Guide to Nursing Homes" will be based in part on annual inspection reports prepared for each nursing home by the Michigan Department of Public Health. The guide will be completed and available for purchase by June 1993. It will be sold in bookstores and directly by Citizens for Better Care.

The $99 cost includes transportation, lunch, reserved seats and all taxes and gratuities.

More response

To the Editor:

This letter is a reaction to Peter Winkler's letter in the Dec. 31 issue.

First for Winkler's edification, I quote from the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

"Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof..."

You see, you have the right guaranteed in the Constitution to select and practice any religion. Select any one of the hundreds of religious groups listed in various manuals. Modify a traditional church. Start a new religion. The Unification Church and the Church of Scientology are of quite recent origin. Or ignore the organized churches. Do your own thing. Your right to free choice and free exercise cannot be taken away. And, of course, those rights are guaranteed to all other residents of this country.

Further, the Congress cannot give one religious body preferred status, support it with tax revenues and declare it to be the "state religion." Why is the establishment clause in our constitution? The founders of this nation were aware of the disastrous results when a religious group becomes an official policy making part of a country's government. So they said NIMBY!

Yes, U.S. money does affirm "In God We Trust" and in our pledge we declare "One Nation Under God."

Every country is a nation under God. Winkler's letter somehow suggests a belief that the concept of God is a uniquely Christian invention or idea.

For thousands of years, successive civilizations concluded that one power or authority planned, designed and executed the universe. One well known international organization calls this authority The Great Architect of the Universe. American Heritage Dictionary defines God as "a being conceived as the perfect, omnipotent, omniscient originator and ruler of the universe."

Yes, indeed, "In God We Trust." I like the way the Moslem puts it: "If God Wills It."

Now about that Christmas tree. For thousands of years inhabitants of the northern hemisphere celebrated the winter solstice by decorating their homes with branches cut from evergreen trees. That custom continues today with a minor change. Our larger homes allow us to drag the whole tree indoors. A fine old "pagan" tradition.

Winkler states that "This country was founded on Christian ideals." I have read the Declaration of Independence many times as a student in grammar school, high school and at my university. I have read the Constitution with the Bill of Rights. No where in either document can I find reference to Christian ideals. The declaration lists numerous universally accepted human rights that were being violated by the British. Nothing indicated that the declaration was a religious treatise. The same goes for the Constitution.

In the declaration, the signers make an appeal to the "Supreme Judge of the World for rectitude of our intentions" and for a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence." Again, I do not find these appeals to be of uniquely Christian origin.

Just wants to live here

To the Editor:

I am a divorced mother of two school-aged children. I have tried unsuccessfully to get housing in the Grosse Pointe area for two years now. I have a respectful, long-term employment and am well liked at my job.

The problem is that no one wants to rent to me. I feel it is because of my race. I am black. When I call responding to the ads that appear in the newspaper with my obviously white-sounding voice, and my Polish last name, it leads them to believe that I am white. When I arrive to see the rental property, I can see the unexpected expressions. Then I hear the excuses, some that include, "Oh, I'm sorry, the property is no longer available," or, "Oh, you didn't mention that you have children."

I was recently told by a homeowner in Grosse Pointe that there are several homeowners and people owning property in Grosse Pointe that are skeptical about renting to blacks.

I say wake up; this is the '90s, not the '50s or '60s. Blacks have jobs, moral standards, pride; we go to school, live, die and pay taxes just as every other American. And we are all God's children.

Thanks from North

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Grosse

Pointe North Student Association, we would like to publicly thank the members of the Grosse Pointe Crisis Club, who in the past three years have provided $7,500 in Kroger gift certificates to assist the Grosse Pointe North student body in its Adopt-a-Family program. The generosity of the students and staff of North and the contributions made by the Crisis Club enabled the student government to adopt 54 needy families this Christmas.

These families were referred to us from elementary and middle schools of Grosse Pointe, St. Ambrose, St. Peter and Goddard Elementary in Detroit. The 54 families included about 470 children and their parents.

The Crisis Club's generosity helped make this program a huge success and aided in making it a very enjoyable holiday season for some unfortunate families.

A new world is taking shape.

With all the exciting new breakthroughs in communications, "business as usual" is an outdated concept.

Because today, images and data that once took days or even weeks to reach their destination are now received in seconds. So whether you're part of a start-up business or a major corporation, you can have ready access to the data you need to make critical decisions.

Ameritech is leading the way in applying this technology, helping businesses in our communities thrive in this information age. For example, with Ameritech's LAN-to-LAN interconnectivity, companies are managing inventory and sharing information electronically with real-time savings.

A computer-aided design application helped one of the world's largest auto-makers increase productivity by allowing more than 150 suppliers to transfer design files instantly, with just the push of a button.

A regional health information network, designed by Ameritech, links doctors, hospitals, employers and insurance companies. This not only improves the quality of healthcare but also lowers the cost of delivering it.

And a fast-food industry giant watched productivity go up and commute time go down when Ameritech used ISDN lines to link employees working at home with colleagues at their corporate campus.

Business is indeed changing for the better, and Ameritech is committed to helping companies large and small run more efficiently and grow profitably.

INTRODUCING GENTLE CHIROPRACTIC!

Hi, I'm Dr. Mary Quarnstrom. Perhaps gentleness in chiropractic is a new concept to you; it was to me before I began the six years of college training necessary for my doctorate degree. During those six years I learned the precise locations where light pressure can bring chiropractic relief to pain.

In addition to my doctorate, I am a Chiropractic Sports Physician, so well as certified in both impairment rating and ergonomics (man's relationship to his work). I have completed courses in advanced Orthopedics and Neurology. Even now I attended nationwide seminars to stay current on the advances in this rapidly changing field a weekend each month.

If you have hesitated visiting a chiropractor, perhaps you didn't know about this gentle or "soft touch" technique. It has been effective treating:

Back Pain	Headaches	Shoulder Pain	Painful Joints
Neck Pain	Arthritis	Arm/Leg Pain	Stiffness
Numbness	Bursitis	Hip Pain	Cold Hands/Feet

And, because most insurance companies recognize and cover Chiropractic care, your treatment may be at little or no cost to you according to the limits of your insurance policy.

Explosive delivery

Vandals gave a homeowner in the 300 block of McMillan in Grosse Pointe Farms an unwelcome light about 9 p.m. Dec. 22.

He said several lit firecrackers were pushed through the mail slot in his front door and exploded in his home, burning a $500 rug.

He exited his house and saw two white, teen-age boys, between 12 and 15 years old and between 5 feet 6 and 5 feet 8 inches tall, running east on Beaupre from McMillan.

The victim said lit firecrackers have been placed inside or near his mail slot several times over the past month.

Worker suspected in house theft

Two 35-mm cameras, four camera lenses, a VCR and a Hitachi stereo were stolen from a home in the 300 block of Mount Vernon in Grosse Pointe Farms sometime between 3:15 and 10:30 p.m. Nov. 26, police said.

Also, an outboard motor was taken from the garage.

Police said a man who was hired to clean the home's gutters is a suspect in the case.

The owner said the garage is kept unlocked, and that a spare key to the house was kept on a ladder in the garage. The suspect must have seen the key, the owner said, because he used the ladder when cleaning the gutters.

The suspect was hired by the victim after he left a flier advertising his gutter service on the victim's front door, police said.

Woods home fire probed

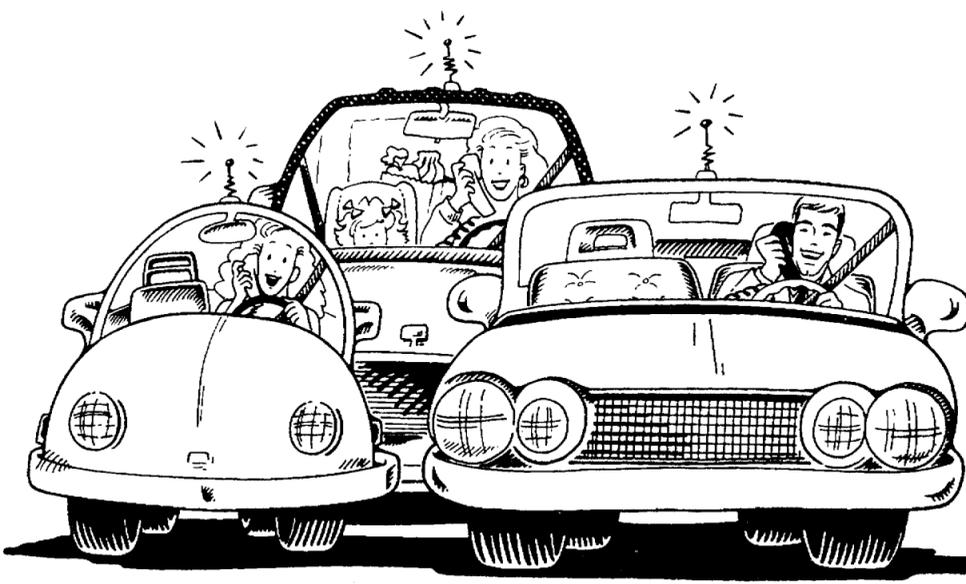

Grosse Pointe Woods public safety officers are investigating the cause of a fire that heavily damaged a home in the 400 block of Desjardins about 12:15 a.m. Dec. 25.

Neighbors spotted flames coming from the house and alerted the public safety department, which dispatched two fire engines to battle the one-alarm blaze.

Firefighters found the back end of the house engulfed in flames, said Woods Cpl. Carl Walker. They had the fire under control within minutes and worked to contain it to that area. However, the rest of the home suffered severe smoke damage, Walker said.

No one was home when the fire started, and no one was injured in the blaze, he said.

All in a day's work

It's been said that a newsroom is not a place to go to see people actually working.

It's been compared to a brothel: people sipping coffee, gossiping, relating stories, procrastinating, complaining, all mixed in with frenzied bursts of activity.

The Grosse Pointe News is not your average newsroom, though. People actually comment on how nice the offices are. That's contrary to most newsrooms I've worked in or been in — even the reporters thought they were dumps.

And we're not like a brothel, either (I'm assuming, I've never actually been in a brothel). We're far above that, just listen to this conversation we had recently. The scene takes place at 4:30 p.m. Thursday. The characters are four reporters.

"Are there any potato chips left?"

"I have 'I Say' this week? I just did one."

"No you didn't. Mine ran last week and you're after me."

"Well, it feels like I just did one."

"What's the plural of pas de deux?"

"Of what?"

"Pas de deux."

"I don't even know what one is, let alone two."

"It's a dance done by two people in a ballet."

"Could it be pas de deux? Like brothers in law?"

"I think you use the same word. Like beer."

"How 'bout popcorn. Is there any left?"

"I don't want cookies, I want something salty."

"What do you mean 'like beer'?"

I Say

Ronald J. Bernas

"You say, 'I drank a lot of beer last night,' you wouldn't say 'I drank a lot of beers last night.'"

"But you'd say 'I drank three beers last night.'"

"Yeah, I guess. Can't you write around it?"

"Not really. I'll just say 'two pas de deux.'"

"Who'd know?"

"Someone will and you know they're going to call. Some lady called this morning all incensed because we printed 'if I were in his shoes' and not 'if I were in his shoes.' It was in a quote for crying out loud. We didn't say it. And it wasn't even my story."

"What'd you tell her?"

"Look, lady, I don't tell you how to do your job, assuming you have one, so return the favor."

"You did not."

"I know, but I wanted to."

"If I don't get at least a pretzel soon my stomach will start digesting itself."

"Did you look it up in the dictionary?"

"What?"

"Pas de deux."

"It's probably not in there."

"But did you look?"

"You sound just like my mother."

"You didn't look."

"OK, I'll look, but if it's not there you have to go get me a Diet Coke."

"Why?"

"Because I want one and I got you one yesterday."

"So what should I do about my 'I Say'?"

"Write it."

"Very funny. I mean it. I have nothing to say."

"Your point being...?"

"You're a bundle of laughs. See if I help you when you want an 'I Say' topic."

"Write about your New Year's resolution."

"Like I made one."

"Then write about when you moved your piano. You've been telling us about it for a week."

"What's to say? It didn't fit. I begged my landlord. She let me cut a chunk out of the stairway. It fit."

"Why can't you be that brief when you tell us?"

"Come on. Help me."

"It's not here."

"What isn't?"

"Pas de deux. And be snappy with that Diet Coke."

"And get me a bag of Fritos, too."

"I'm not getting you a Diet Coke. It's almost time to go anyway. Exercise a little patience and get one on your way home."

"Excuse me, we were talking about what I should write my 'I Say' about."

"No, you were talking about what you should write about. And shooting down all our ideas, I might add."

"I'm putting pas de deux. If people call, I'll say that's how our dictionary had it."

"Well, I'm leaving. There's free popcorn at the bar. Anyone want to come?"

"Some of us have work to do."

"What's Friday for?"

"Wednesday's work. I'm still on Tuesday's work."

"But what will 'I Say'?"

A good name

Mr. and Mrs. Goodheart is the couple featured in our two-part article about 1992's benefits, banquets and balls. The article began on page 1B of this newspaper last week and is concluded today in the same section.

The names are fictitious. But we discovered there really IS a Mrs. Goodheart. She called us.

Mary Goodheart of Grosse Pointe Woods teaches special education at Grosse Pointe North High School. She was surprised to see her name in the paper, but said she attended many of these charity events last year.

Tickets are still available for the Grosse Pointe War Memorial's Twelfth Night celebration Saturday, Jan. 9.

It's a fundraiser for the War Memorial's many classes and programs.

Easing tension headache of togetherness

At last I understand why everybody goes to Florida in January. It isn't the weather; it's the holidays.

Naive me. I used to think people put off their winter vacations so they could spend the holidays with the kids and grandkids.

Nancy Parmenter

Now I know that the vacation is the reward, the light at the end of the tunnel, the prize for surviving the obligatory family holiday.

Yikes. Some people know in advance that the togetherness is going to be a trial. But every year, I start out bathed in the warm anticipatory glow of imagined sharing and joy — and wind up with a tension headache. The kind that requires massive doses of warm winds and golden sands and quiet.

Because, after all, the kids and grandkids (and grandparents) are only human. The little ones charge at the tree and rip the paper off random gifts without stopping to enjoy them. The grown ones always buy something no one would want. Nothing fits. Someone cries. Everyone eats too much and tries not to argue politics or religion or child discipline.

I'm not alone in this. It's been said that Grosse Pointe started out as a summer colony and has practically reverted to one, as snowbirds leave the five towns deserted, come January.

Now of course, snowbirds head south for golf and boating and swimming and beachcombing. But they're also running away, from responsibilities, from endless committee meetings and deadlines and networking and working lunches, from telephone solicitors and, just maybe, from a surfeit of family jollity.

We used to go down to Jensen Beach, a smallish place on a barrier island on Florida's Atlantic coast, a bit north of Palm Beach. So long as we stayed away from the malls and traffic jams on the mainland, it was a quiet place where we found herons and spoonbills and manatees, deserted weekday beaches, frozen yogurt. There was nothing to do from dawn to sunset (or from dusk to sunrise, for that matter). Nobody called. Nobody demanded. It was real peaceful.

By the end of a month, we were ready for the onslaught again.

This year, though, we treated ourselves to the quiet pleasures of a cabin in northern Michigan. We wade and fish and canoe and hike; we're up there immersing ourselves in the silence about a third of the time.

But, uh oh! — it snows in northern Michigan. It gets real cold. And right now, Florida looks pretty inviting. But we aren't going.

Maybe that's why I'm pee-vish. Maybe it isn't the holiday aftermath at all. Hey, not everything about the holidays was stressful — we only watched one bowl game, and that's a real plus. And the flight out of Metro on Christmas Eve morning wasn't nearly the trauma we expected.

Wait a minute — I think my headache is receding. Remember all the cute things Emily said? Gee, she's a little pistol! And this year the kids got us all the things we asked for. You know, I'm starting to look forward to next Christmas.

But only if I get to go to Florida afterward.

Is there a direct connection between quasi-religious holidays and waterpipes? This year it certainly seemed so.

Down at Mark's, it was the faucet in the bathroom. After 14 man-hours, three visits to the plumbing store, much hammering and wrenching and sweating and swearing, we gazed proudly at a shiny new faucet with glistening "crystal" handles. But it still leaked.

About that time, Mark's renter called. Plumbing emergency at the rent house. Water spewing out of the trap under the kitchen sink. More swearing.

A speech was made by the pater familias about the wisdom of hiring it done. Gnashing of teeth from the one who would have to pay the bill. But since Bob said he'd done enough plumbing for one day, Mark gave in and called a plumber. Back home, I headed to the tub for a good soak after our long and foodless flight. But it wouldn't hold water.

Downstairs, the furnace acted up, water leaking out all over the floor. Bob rigged a drainage system that equalled that of the ancient Egyptians and we rehashed the speech about hiring it done.

Three calls to heating and cooling men, all of whom were busy. The holiday, you know. Finally, on New Year's Eve, one showed up, worked for half an hour, and charged us $75 for laor and $10 for parts. Oh, and while he was there, he pointed out that the toilet trap in the basement was corroded away and leaking all over the floor, just like the furnace.

But of course, he didn't do toilet pipes. For that, we have to call a plumber.

Happy New Year. And enjoy those Florida beaches. Just don't send me a postcard. I might cry.

All right, let's get on with it

This is it guys, no more putting it off. Like it or not this is the tomorrow we talked about for the last few months and procrastinated until it finally arrived. Bag the excuses for not making resolutions and let's get on with the new as best we can with no promises except to make an honest attempt to "do the right thing" for ourselves and others.

Many in this area have had a glorious two weeks of vacation, thanks to the veritable shutdown of automobile-related jobs. Wives and husbands have had a preview of what retirement will be like and, depending on your point of view, are anxious for spouses to return to the workplace or to prolong the honeymoon.

But for a substantial number of people, business was not only conducted as usual, but at a frantic pace. Those in entertainment and restaurant-related fields operated at peak performance during the holiday season. Doctors, nurses and others in the medical community maintained heavy schedules, often complicated by accidents due to an overabundance of revelry. Lawyers, accountants and brokers hustled in their race against the clock with efforts to transfer assets, fund retirement plans, locate misplaced documents and attend tax matters in an attempt to outguess the incoming administration.

We are once again deep in the grays of Michigan winter. The lucky ones will find some warm climes in the south for an occasional respite. I'm looking forward to a little clean, white stuff to cover the yuck and a freeze that lasts long enough to kill some of these germs we all have danced with for too long. Grosse Pointe isn't that rough a deal for any of us at any time of year, but, please Mr. Weatherman, may we see some sunshine soon?

Autos

Last year, the North American International Auto Show drew 625,843 persons, according to the committee.

A number of new production vehicles from manufacturers around the world can be seen at the show. They include:

- Lincoln Mark VIII — The new 1993 Lincoln Mark VIII makes its appearance at the show only a week after it went on sale nationwide. The roomy five-passenger coupe, which went on sale the day after Christmas, Dec. 26, has been completely redesigned, inside and out. Attendees at last year's show will recognize some styling cues from the Lincoln Mark X show car.

- The Mark VIII is powered by a new aluminum 4.0-liter, four-cam V-8 engine. The 280-horsepower engine is the first all-aluminum V-8 mass produced by the Ford Motor Co. It is teamed with a new electronically-controlled, four-speed overdrive automatic transmission. A new suspension system continuously adjusts to various load levels for improved handling, stability and better fuel economy. A long list of standard safety features includes driver and passenger-side airbags, electronic anti-lock braking system and side impact beams that meet or exceed 1994 federal standards.

- Chevrolet Camaro — Chevrolet's exhibit showcases the redesigned Camaro and its Indianapolis 500 pace car version. The Camaro, which goes on sale soon, has been completely re-designed for 1993. It is available with two engines, a 3.4-liter V-6 and the very hot Corvette LT-1 5.7-liter V-8. It is equipped with standard four-wheel antilock brakes and driver and passenger-side airbags.

- The next generation Camaro Z28 coupe has been named official pace car for the 77th running of the Indianapolis 500 on May 30. Chevrolet returns as the pace car for the record ninth time; the Camaro for a fourth time, also a record.

- Chevrolet's association with the Indy 500 goes back to the days of Louis Chevrolet. In addition to its records for pacing the race, Chevrolet's Indy V-8 engine has won the race for the last five years. Chevrolet will bring to this year's race a new Indy V-8 engine as well as its pace car.

- Volvo 850 GLT — The newest product in Volvo's line, the 850 GLT, began appearing in Volvo showrooms in October. An entirely new kind of Volvo, the 850 GLT is smaller, sleeker and more aggressive than its sisters, but with unmistakable Volvo features and European flavor. The front-wheel-drive 850 GLT is powered by a five-cylinder, 20-valve engine which produces 168 horsepower. The car contains a number of new patented safety and performance features in the transmission and suspension as well as innovative side-impact protection and seatbelt systems, an energy-absorbing structure, which meets 1997 federal standards, a built-in child seat and driver and passenger-side airbags.

- Subaru Impreza — Just arrived on U.S. shores is Subaru's latest series of subcompact front- and all-wheel drive sedans and wagons. The Impreza series only recently made its worldwide debut and goes on sale in February. The cars will be sold in addition to Subaru's Justy, Loyale, Legacy and SVX lines. The Impreza borrows from Legacy's platform and the SVX's technological advancements. Impreza models are available in two trim levels and with a five-speed manual or four-speed electronic automatic transmission. All Impreza models are powered by a 1.8-liter, 110-horsepower, four-cylinder engine. Safety features include standard driver-side airbag and anti-lock brakes.

- Saab 9000 CS Aero — The Saab CS Aero goes on sale soon in the United States, a high-performance version of the recently introduced Saab CS, the next-generation 9000. The car, powered by an upgraded 2.3-liter turbocharged engine which develops 225 horsepower, is equipped with a new engine management system said to reduce emissions and minimize fuel consumption. Like all Saab 9000 cars, the Aero is free-free. For safety, the chassis has been lowered and new features, including heavier springs and anti-roll bars, have been added. Anti-lock brakes are standard.

- Mercedes 300 CE Cabriolet — The 300CE Cabriolet is the latest addition to Mercedes' product line. The Cabriolet is a mid-sized, four-passenger convertible, the first four-passenger convertible offered by Mercedes in more than two decades. Based on the 300CE coupe, it shares the new 217-horsepower, 3.2-liter, 24-valve six-cylinder engine which also powers other 300-Class models for 1993. Based on technology used for the SL Roadsters, the Cabriolet has a sturdy roll bar integrated into the two rear-seat head restraints. The roll bar automatically pops up and locks in place behind the rear seats should the car start to roll over. The rollbar/upholstered rear head restraints can also be raised and lowered by switches on the console.

- Mercedes 600SL. The most powerful two-seater

Mercedes ever built will be showcased at the 1993 NAIAS. The 600SL went on sale in November.

All SL sports cars include the first fully automatic soft top in the auto industry. With the touch of a single button, the top automatically unlatches from the windshield and begins to fold down, the windows lower, the automatic roll bar retracts and the lid to the rear-deck storage compartment unlatches and opens. The top folds into the storage compartment, the decklid closes and latches, while the windows and roll bar return to their original position.

- Mitsubishi Diamante Wagon — The Mitsubishi Diamante station wagon, based on the wide-bodied version of the Diamante sedan, is built in Australia, where it is sold as the Magna. In addition to the United States, the wagon will be exported to New Zealand, Japan, Great Britain and other European countries. It will be the only Australian-built car to be sold in the United States other than the Mercury Capri convertible, built by Ford of Australia. Of the 19,000 wagons to be built in Australia, between 6,000 and 8,000 will be sold in the United States. The Diamante wagon is powered by a 3.0 liter V-6 engine.

- Jaguar XJRS is the creation of JaguarSport, a 50-50 joint venture formed in 1988 between Jaguar Cars Ltd. and Tom Walkinshaw's TWR Group Ltd. The XJRS features a six-liter version of the Jaguar V-12 engine.

Detroit auto show: World-class peek into the future

A world-class auto show, as the North American International Auto Show has become in a remarkably short time, is exciting because it not only features all that is new in production cars and trucks, but it also provides a peek into the future with its concept cars.

Among vehicles now in production which were first shown at the show here in Detroit are Dodge Viper, Ford Explorer, Cadillac Seville STS, Jeep Grand Cherokee, Lexus LS400, Infiniti Q45, Acura NSX, BMW 850i, the Porsche Carrera 2, the Mercedes 500E and the Toyota Paseo.

This year's show, the fifth year of the NAIAS, again features dozens of worldwide and North American introductions among the roughly 750 production cars and trucks showcased by 40 auto manufacturers from around the world.

And concept cars, indicators of future trends and the visions of auto designers for the future, again play a starring role at the Detroit show, which opens at Cobo Center on Saturday, Jan. 9, and runs through Sunday, Jan. 17.

Ford Motor Co. will offer a glimpse into the future of its popular Mustang when it presents the Mustang Mach III at the 1993 North American International Auto Show. The Mustang Mach III is a concept car that will offer strong indications of what is in store for the next-generation Mustang.

Several years ago, rumors surfaced that the Mustang would be discontinued, bolstered by the fact that a decade had gone by without a major remake. But sales began to pick up again, bolstered by the continuing appeal of the V-8 convertible, a classic American sports car. The planned debut of the new Mustang in early 1994 — the 30th anniversary of the original Mustang's unveiling — assures its survival. The 1994 remake will be the first for the Mustang since 1978. ASC Inc., Heinz Prechter's specialty vehicle company headquartered in Southgate, will display 11 concept vehicles and styling exercises at the 1993 NAIAS. Among those making their worldwide debut are the ASC Saturn Coupe + Roadster Convertible and the ASC Ford Ranger Rap Around.

Based on General Motors' very successful Saturn coupe, the ASC Saturn Coupe + Roadster Convertible is a roadster that seats four when the top is up. With the top down, the car transforms into a two-seater convertible.

The Ranger Rap Around is based on Ford's compact Ranger pickup truck, which went on sale in November. The truck features an over-sized spoiler sunroof and wraparound rear glass. The vehicle sports a low-slung ground effects package to accentuate the flairside show vehicle.

ASC is also displaying its ASC Buick Park Avenue Touring car, ASC Cadillac Seville two-door and ASC LT-1 Spyder Corvette.

In addition to its concept cars and the worldwide introduction of the Dodge Ram pickup, Chrysler will make Detroit the stage for the world premiere of its new 1994 Chrysler New Yorker. Chrysler was encouraged by the enthusiastic response from the press and public to its concept version of the New Yorker, unveiled to the world at the Detroit show last year. The 1994 New Yorker, Chrysler's flagship, is the fourth in a series of cars built on the automaker's new LH platform. The full-size New Yorker is built on an extended version of the LH platform.

Oldsmobile will introduce the Aurora, which it describes as "a sophisticated personal luxury sedan." The Aurora will be introduced as a production car in the spring of 1994 as a 1995 model. Showgoers will see a prototype, or early version, of the production Aurora. The Aurora, not to be confused with the Aurora concept car from Cadillac three years ago, will be Oldsmobile's flagship model.

It will be powered by an all-new V-8 engine unveiled in October by General Motors. The engine is a 4.0-liter, 32-valve, dual-overhead-cam engine that produces 250 horsepower. It is a member of the same family as the Northstar engine, which powers Cadillac's top models. This new engine, exclusive to Oldsmobile, represents a return to V-8 power for the division, which has a solid V-8 heritage with the Oldsmobile Rocket engines of the 1950s and 1960s.

A number of concept vehicles are destined to be the talk of the show and beyond as features of the concept cars or the concept cars in their entirety emerge as production vehicles in the future.

The Hyundai HCD-II will make its worldwide debut at the Detroit show. Its predecessor, the HCD-I roadster, had its worldwide introduction at the 1992 show. The flashy HCD-I prototype was the first vehicle designed by the Hyundai Design Studio in California specifically for the North American market. Targeted at young professionals, the HCD-I was powered by a 2.0-liter, 16-valve engine delivering 150 horsepower. The HCD-I also offered anti-lock brakes, traction control and a removable targa top with full-drop backlight. Hyundai executives promised the two-seat sports car would become a production car by 1995 and said a sport-utility vehicle, minivan and a Scoupe convertible were under consideration at the U.S. design center.

Mitsubishi Motors will show its 1994 Galant. Mitsubishi's entry in the increasingly competitive midsize segment, for the first time in North America at the Detroit show. The stylish five-passenger sedan will be built at Mitsubishi's assembly plant in Bloomington, Normal, Ill.

With a drag coefficient of 0.29, the Galant features a four-wheel, multi-link independent suspension. Styling cues are taken from Mitsubishi's award-winning Diamante luxury performance sedan.

Volkswagen will unveil its six-cylinder Jetta GLX for the first time in North America at the NAIAS. The Jetta GLX, which replaces the Jetta GLE, will be the third Volkswagen model to come equipped with the German automaker's award-winning VR6 powerplant.

American Isuzu Motors will introduce for the first time in North America its 1993 Rodeo. It features a new 3.2-liter single overhead cam engine and an upgraded base engine.

Rolls-Royce Motor Cars of Great Britain will use the 1993 Detroit show to introduce two new products in North America: the Bentley Brooklands and Corniche IV convertible. The Bentley Brooklands is a five-passenger sporting sedan, which went on sale here recently with a price tag of $138,500. Only 20 have been delivered to U.S. showrooms. Optional items include a cocktail cabinet, picnic table and voice-activated cellular phone.

The Bentley Brooklands is the first Bentley to be produced under a new manufacturing system, which required a $400 million investment by Rolls-Royce, and a team-based philosophy. The car is named after the famous British race course, the birthplace of British motor sports and the site of many Bentley racing successes. It is the third new car launched in the past 18 months by the auto company.

The Corniche IV convertible has also gone on sale, but only a couple have arrived in the U.S. showrooms. Rolls-Royce expects to deliver 50 to the United States in 1993. With a price tag of $251,000, that may be enough. In early 1993, a limited edition 25th anniversary edition goes on sale for $265,000. Only eight of the 29 to be produced will come to the United States.

Both the Bentley Brooklands and Corniche IV convertible include an advanced automatic ride control suspension, an electronically controlled four-speed transmission and a remote control anti-theft system.

The North American International Auto Show is the only sanctioned international show produced by an American dealer association rather than the country's automotive manufacturer's association. The Detroit Auto Dealers Association (DADA) has been hosting Detroit auto shows for over 80 years. Members of the NAIAS committee represent dealerships from throughout the Detroit metropolitan area.

"Our show has become one of... See AUTOS, page 17A" the great international shows because of our significant number of new car and truck introductions," said NAIAS committee co-chairman Kenneth Meade, president of Meade Group, a holding company with many Detroit area dealerships.

"Each year, NAIAS grows at an extraordinary rate," said the committee's other co-chairman, Carl Fischer, of Fischer Buick-Mazda-Sabaru-Suzuki. "It is our job to deliver a quality, one-of-a-kind international show that is a 'must-see event' for the public as well as auto analysts and journalists from around the world."

In 1989, the Detroit Auto Show became known as the North American International Auto Show. "The step-up to the international platform has had a dramatic impact on the image of Detroit and the stature, international media coverage and influence of the show," said Meade.

Keith Crain, publisher of Automotive News, agrees. "There are now four major auto shows in the world — Tokyo, the major European show which alternates between Frankfurt and Paris, and Detroit," Crain said. The Automotive News World Congress, co-sponsored by Automotive News and the University of Michigan Transportation Research Institute, will run concurrently with the show Jan. 10-Jan. 13 at the Westin Hotel. Speakers will include Robert Eaton, new chairman of Chrysler Corp.; William Hoggland, executive vice president of General Motors; Thomas Gale, vice president-product design and general manager of minivan operations at Chrysler Corp.; Eberhard von Kuenheim, chairman of BMW; John McTague, vice president-technical affairs at Ford Motor Co., and Owen Bieber, president of the UAW.

ISUZU TROOPER RS

The 1993 Isuzu Trooper RS will be introduced in North America at the auto show in Detroit. Isuzu's newest sport utility, a two-door model, is lighter, shorter and sportier than its four-door big brother. It is powered by a 190-horsepower, 24-valve dual overhead cam engine.

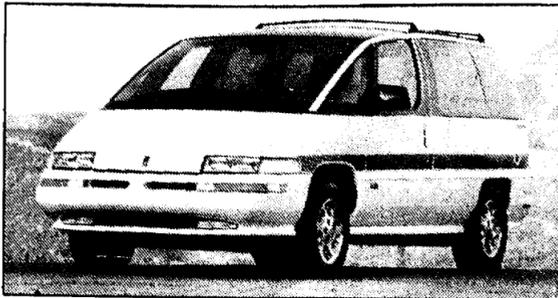

CHRYSLER LHS

A year ago, the Chrysler New Yorker concept car made its worldwide introduction at the 1992 North American International Auto Show in Detroit. The company had no intention of going into production with the concept vehicle -- that is, until Chrysler started to hear public reaction.

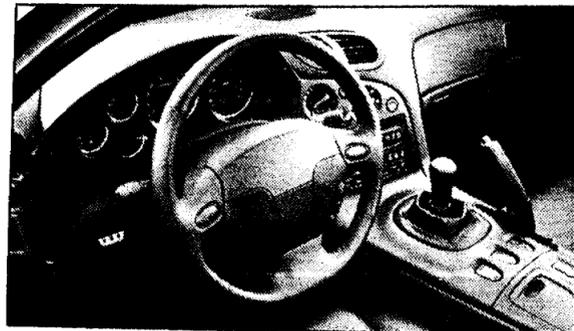

The Chrysler LHS is a direct descendant of the New Yorker concept car and will make its introduction at the 1993 auto show in Detroit as a performance sedan targeted at import intenders.

Chrysler will also introduce a production Chrysler New Yorker which is positioned for a broader, more traditional market. The vehicles are 207-inches long, built on a 113-inch wheelbase and feature Chrysler's innovative cab forward design to increase passenger space.

If we added up the price of two of the lowest priced tickets to each of these events during the second half of 1992, the total would come to more than $10,600.

Add that to the $6,500 total for the events from the first six months of 1992.

The Goodhearts could have attended more than 110 events during 1992; they would have written checks for more than $17,000 to charitable organizations ranging from local parochial schools and local government foundations to major state and national organizations dedicated to eradicating heart disease, cancer, Alzheimer's disease and more.

They could have attended more than two charity functions a week, mostly dinner dances, auctions and golf outings. There were a few imaginative fundraising events such as a millionaire's party, a mystery-solving party, a couple of local talent shows, some athletic events such as tennis matches, runs, walks and aerobics events, and a display of original artwork.

Mrs. Goodheart could have purchased a new gown (average price $250) for about half of the evening dinner dances, spending another $5,000 or so. And of course once the Goodhearts got to some of these events, they would have found dozens of other ways to spend money for the charity of the evening by purchasing raffle tickets or bidding on auction items.

The charity-minded Goodhearts could easily have been busy more than two evenings each week and could have spent more than $25,000 on good works in 1992.

MORBID OBESITY
(Weigh 100 pounds or more above the expected normal weight)
Although genes play an important role, morbid obesity is primarily a result of food addiction. To kick the habit, one must stop the addicting process such as smoking, alcoholism, etc. cold turkey as a first step. It will be extremely difficult in case of food addiction (morbid obesity).
Morbid obesity is associated with:
1. High blood pressure
2. Diabetes Mellitus
3. Coronary artery disease and blood vessel disease
4. High cholesterol
5. Shorter life span
6. Sudden death
7. Arthritis of the lower extremities
8. Carcinoma of uterus and breast
9. Phlebitis of the leg
Success rate of various dietary and exercise programs is only 5%. Loss of weight is usually followed by regain of entire weight and more.
Success rate of stomach stapling is 70% to 80%. Hospital stay is about four days and complications are few. Most insurance carriers pay for the procedure. National Institute of Health has recommended this as a reasonable alternative to dietary, exercise and medical treatment.
Anyone considering this procedure must attend at least one meeting of "Staples For Life", an organization of former patients.

A clipper cruise is a rare treat

As we boarded the tender in St. Maarten to ride back to our ship, we discovered that we were sharing passage with several crates of bananas headed for the galley.

Soon one of the crew members reached into a case, plucked out a banana and began eating it. A couple of his mates did the same. Then one of my fellow passengers called, "Send one up to me."

And soon there we all were, munching on bananas as we sped across the Philipsburg harbor.

This was typical of the atmosphere aboard the Star Clipper — very casual, very friendly, unpretentious.

Near the end of our week's sail from Antigua through the Leeward islands of the Caribbean, a woman from Toronto expressed it well: "I feel like part of this ship belongs to me. It is really a very personal experience."

She was referring to a sailing cruise on the Star Clipper, or her sister ship, the Star Flyer. These two clipper ships are, literally, the newest and tallest of the tall ships and offer a unique and quite marvelous vacation experience.

My husband Chet and I have just returned from a week on the Star Clipper. It was launched eight months ago, spent the summer sailing in the Mediterranean and has just begun its first Caribbean season. The Star Flyer has been sailing in the Caribbean since it was commissioned in 1991.

This is not the kind of cruise that features lavish entertainment, big open decks, midnight buffets, cruise directors and bingo. It is also not the other extreme — endless rum punch parties, tank tops and crab races.

Rather, on this ship the emphasis is on the sailing — real, honest-to-goodness sailing that begins as soon as we leave port. In fact, the only times that Capt. Jean-Marie Guillou used the powerful diesel engine was during docking and anchoring; otherwise, we were always under sail, usually traveling at about six to eight knots.

It was splendid. It is a very special feeling as the four main staysails fill with wind, the ship heeling slightly, and begins moving, ever so gradually, ever so quietly, out of port. We spent hours on the deck, wind in our hair, noses getting sunburned, as we soaked up that intangible feeling of being really at sea.

The Star Clipper is 360 feet long and can fly 36,000 square feet of sail — 17 different sails — on four masts. Although it can carry 180 passengers and a crew of 70, on this pre-holiday trip there were only 86 passengers, which made everything even more comfortable.

Passengers here are very involved, to the extent that they can go most anywhere on the ship that they want to, much as if they were sailing on their own private yacht. For example, one evening after dinner Chet and I stood by ourselves in the enclosed bridge going over the captain's sailing plans for the next day. No one else was even in sight. There was, however, a knock-out full moon.

The owner of these ships is Mikael Krafft of Brussels, an internationally recognized yachtsman. He conceived the idea of building these vessels — the first genuine clipper ships built since the late 1800s — and oversaw their design and construction. And he stays close: Kraft was on board the Star Clipper for the first two days of our sailing to personally supervise staff changes he was making between the two ships.

So it was a highlight when the two ships met in Anguilla on Tuesday. They sailed side by side for about an hour, offering all kinds of splendid picture opportunities and the chance for the deck crews to try to outdo each other. The ships will meet once every two weeks while they are both in the Caribbean.

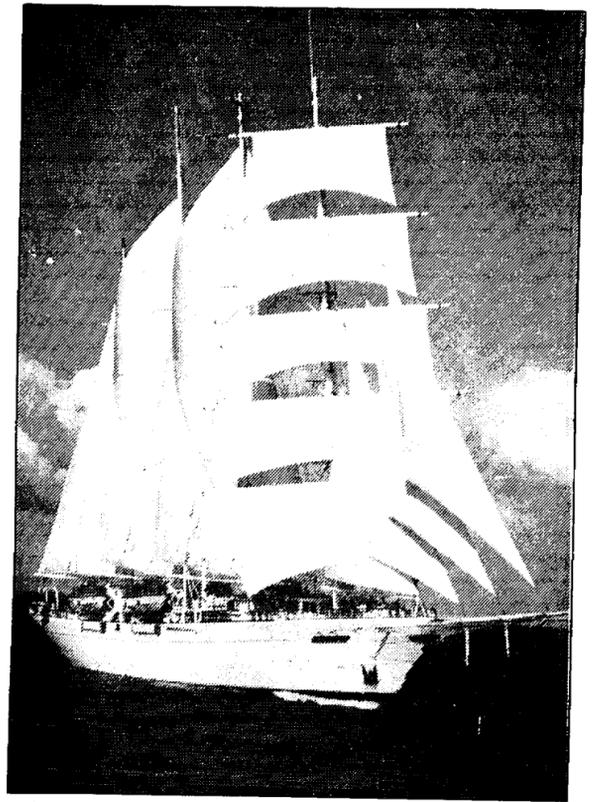

If passengers could pull themselves away from the deck activities, there was much else to do, but nothing was contrived. Most settled for a lounge chair and a good book. The ship was anchored in a different port each day for at least several hours so passengers could go ashore to tour the islands, enjoy the beaches or play with the "water toys."

The ship carries four large Zodiacs with powerful outboard engines which enable the water sports staff to offer water skiing, scuba diving, snorkeling, wind-surfing and sailing. A favorite water activity was riding on the big yellow inflated "banana" (maybe you had to be there).

The ship is very efficiently designed. The rooms were adequate, with twin beds which pushed together to form a queen and bathrooms with showers that actually did not drain the room.

On deck, there are two shallow sunning pools. The main gathering area is the Tropical Bar where information meetings, nightly cocktail parties and late-night dancing are offered.

The dining room of the ship is quite lovely and everyone appreciated the open seating, flexible mealtimes and casually elegant attire (Chet's sportcoat never came out of the closet). Breakfasts and lunches were buffet-style while most dinners were served off a menu. The food, while not gourmet fare, was tasty, fresh and plentiful. We didn't miss midnight buffets, ice cream sundae bars and other such calorie-laden indulgences.

Although we did have a 3-month old baby aboard as well as an 80-year-old couple who became engaged during the trip (it must have been that moonlight), most of the passengers were about 35-65 and a fairly well-traveled group.

Additionally, over half the passengers were European, and it appears that this will be typical for the Star Clipper as Kraft has an agreement with a German tour operator to fill 50 slots on each sailing. We rather enjoyed the mix, which included folks from Holland, England, Spain and Germany (all announcements were translated into German). The Star Flyer carries mostly American passengers.

Rates are quite reasonable: A standard cabin ranges from $1,545 to $1,945 per person, not including airfare. The ships offer three different weekly itineraries in the Caribbean, and many passengers on our ship had opted to put two weeks to gether.

The Clipper will sail year around from Antigua; the Flyer will return to the Mediterranean in May for her summer season and return to the Caribbean next fall. For more information, contact your travel agent or call (800) 442-0551.

The healthy way is the 'Right' way

The news is good. "Cooking Right for Life," a unique cookbook by the MCG Foundation and Mount Clemens General Hospital, has just come out.

Kathryn Davis, executive director of the foundation which provides financial support to Mount Clemens General and affiliated health care services, said that "Cooking Right for Life" has been an ambitious project aimed at creating a cookbook to meet many different requirements. All recipes are hospital-tested, low in saturated fat and cholesterol.

It's filled with heart-healthy recipes, exchanges, and special nutritional information that add up to an excellent and attractive collection which is sure to please people who take pride in cooking.

Most recipes are low in sodium. Those higher in sodium (more than 400 milligrams per serving) are designated by a salt shaker symbol, recipes higher in fiber (3 grams per serving) are designated by a high fiber symbol — a wheat stalk.

The cookbook is designed to be physically easy to use. It has an easel stand with a splash guard that doubles as a memory jogger. The design is part of a totally new concept. Every recipe is written with one-step commands and in simple language.

"Cooking Right for Life" proves that you and your family can eat heartily and well, and still stay within the recommended nutritional guidelines.

The cookbook is available by mailing $12.95 plus $2 for postage and handling to MCG Foundation, 21563 Harrington Blvd., Mount Clemens, 48043. Telephone orders will be accepted via Visa and MasterCard, by telephoning (313) 466-8541. All proceeds benefit Mount Clemens General Hospital.

Taut, tense and tough, 'Trespass' treads on heavy ground

By Marian Trainor
Special Writer

Taut, tense and riveting, "Trespass" is an urban-siege suspense thriller in which desperate men resort to horrific acts.

It begins when a crazed old man begging for God's mercy stuffs some papers into Vince's (Bill Paxton) hands, and then runs back into the blazing building from which Vince has just rescued him.

When Vince examines the papers he finds a map that contains clues to a hidden cache of gold church relics. Vince wants to turn the map over to the

A puppet's in your wastebasket

Puppeteer Nancy Henk will perform a puppet show on Saturday, Jan. 16, from 1 to 2:30 p.m. at the War Memorial — and then explain how children can produce one of their own.

First, out of the magic wastebasket come cardboard tubes, plastic bottles, cans and more that are instantly transformed into caterpillars, dancers, animals and other fanciful characters with a lively message about recycling.

Then the children participate by impromptu performances with already-made puppets of recycled materials. And finally the children make their own puppets with the materials provided and perform with them. The cost is $13 a child. Registration in advance is recommended.

For more information, call 881-7511.

proper authorities but when he shows it to his partner Don (William Sadler) he convinces him that they should track down the relics and keep them for themselves. He rationalizes that the church probably has collected the insurance on them and that this is their chance to become rich.

From the start, Vince is not sold on the idea. If Don has any moral qualms about the venture, his lust for the gold outweighs them. Following the map, they pull up to an abandoned warehouse in a blighted industrial park surrounded by a chain-link fence with a "No Trespassing" sign prominently displayed.

Gaining forced entry, they make their way through an eerie series of hallways, but soon they discover that they are not alone. A squatter, Bradlee (Art Evans), arrives to protest their breaking up the floors of his home. They tie him up and gag him.

The search is interrupted again when a car pulls up and they spot a group of inner-city members of a crime syndicate getting out led by King James (Ice T) and his right-hand man Savon (Ice Cube). Their mission is murder.

Don sees the victim thrown off the roof and Vince sees him hit bottom. When the treasure hunters are spotted by King James, a confrontation erupts during which Don grabs King James' younger brother Lucky (Devorguy White) as a hostage. They escape with him to the room where Bradlee is still tied up. They are safe from their pursuers for the moment, but they are also prisoners. The enemy waits without.

There are problems inside, too. Vince wants to give up on the treasure and concentrate on getting out of the mausoleum where they are holed up. Don will not leave without the gold. Bradlee sits by in his rocker laughing as Don and Vince go at each other. And Lucky begins to suffer from drug withdrawal.

In a well-crafted script by Robert Zameckis and Bob Hill everyone has his reasons for his actions. Mostly bad ones. In the course of the story there are a number of violent acts committed in the matter-of-fact manner of hardened hoods.

Ice Tea and Ice Cube fit the image of leaders of a high-energy group of hoods. The movie capitalizes on their bad boy reputation. Paxton and Sadler are convincing in their roles. Sadler makes the hard-as-nails, no-holds-barred predatory Don a sharp contrast to Paxton's moralistic and human approach.

But it is Evans as Bradlee who gives the film a lift with his black humor and his wily maneuvers that make him the only winner in a film that has no heroes.

For thrills, excitement and terror, "Trespass" stands at the

Learn to think trim, be trim

Would you like a slimmer and trimmer you in 1993?

If so, the "Think Trim" workshop at the War Memorial on Monday, Jan. 25, from 7 to 9 p.m. with Lorraine Stefano will help.

Learn that it is not your lack of will power, self-control or motivation that is causing those unwanted pounds, but simply your relationship to food. Find ways to reduce self-defeating behaviors and conquer those food battles.

Stefano is founder and director of Think Trim. She struggled with losing and regaining the same 40 pounds for several years and finally conquered it with her own methods. The class is $14 a person. For more information, call 881-7511.

What was the price of 1992's balls, benefits?

By Margie Reins Smith
Feature Editor

Last week we took a fictitious Grosse Pointe couple, Mr. and Mrs. Goodheart, on a half-year spree to attend every fundraiser mentioned on the feature pages of the Grosse Pointe News. This week we'll let them finish the year.

From June to December, the Goodhearts could have purchased tickets to 55 or more fundraising events that were named on pages 1B and 3B (Faces & Places). The lion's share of fundraising ideas involved dinner dances, auctions, golf outings, antiques shows and tours of houses/gardens/kitchens. Some of the more imaginative ideas included musical performances of "Forbidden Christmas," "Phantom of the Opera" and "The Nutcracker Ballet" as well as a Fourth of July fireworks party, an auto show, several fun run/walks, a tennis match and a display of mailboxes decorated by well-known artists.

The Goodhearts would have spent $6,500 on tickets to benefits from January through May and another $10,000 for the second half of 1992.

The Grosse Pointe Shores Improvement Foundation held a series of parties throughout the summer at private homes. The first one, a Gatsby-style cocktail party, was June 6.

A kickoff party for the June 7 Grand Prix at the Detroit Yacht Club was a benefit for the American Red Cross.

Bon Secours Hospital held its annual golf classic June 8 at the Country Club of Detroit. Tickets for golf, lunch, cocktails and dinner were $250 each.

The Detroit Symphony Orchestra Hall Volunteer Council held its 11th annual Ball in the Hall June 13 at Orchestra Hall. Tickets were $200 each.

The ninth annual Art On The Pointe, a two-day juried art festival on the grounds of the Edsel & Eleanor Ford estate, was sponsored by the Assistance League to the Northeast Guidance Center. Admission to the June 13-14 art show was $2; tickets to a dinner after the event were $40 each.

The Friends of Belle Isle held a "Jazz in the Park" fundraiser June 14 downtown, with hors d'oeuvres, jazz and a five-course sit-down dinner at the Normandie. Tickets were $22.50.

The fifth annual Eyes on the Classics auto show, a benefit for the Detroit Institute of Ophthalmology, was June 28 on the grounds of the Eleanor & Edsel Ford Estate. Admission was $10 for the show itself; more for an awards banquet and/or a brunch.

Sigma Gamma Association held a family fireworks picnic at the Ford estate July 2, with profits going to the Detroit Institute for Children. The evening included fireworks, food and a silent auction. Tickets were $100 for two adults and two children.

Six Grosse Pointe gardens were the stars of the Grosse Pointe Garden Center's annual tour July 10-12. Money from the $9 tickets was used for the center's educational programs and beautification projects.

A dinner at the Roostertail July 16 was a benefit for the Restaurant Servers' Academy, a school that trains qualified homeless people to become waiters and waitresses. Tickets were $25 each.

The Souper Summer Celebration XI, a fundraiser for the Capuchin Community Center, featured a Southwest theme on July 24 at the Roostertail, as well as raffle tickets for prizes. Admission was free.

On Aug. 4, the Detroit Institute of Arts' Founders Junior Council presented its famous annual Fash Bash at the Fox Theatre. The fashion and entertainment extravaganza raised funds to keep all the DIA galleries open on Sundays, beginning in the fall. Medium-priced tickets were $35 each.

Neiman Marcus celebrated the opening of its spanking new Troy store with a black-tie gala Aug. 6. The event was a benefit for the Cranbrook Educational Community, the Michigan Cancer Foundation and the Michigan Opera Theatre.

The Assistance League to the Northeast Guidance Center held a golf outing Aug. 15. Players paid $110 for golf and dinner.

On Aug. 22, a bunch of DSO musicians held a concert on the lawn of the Georgian East Nursing Home in Grosse Pointe Woods. It was a benefit for Habitat for Humanity, an organization dedicated to ending homelessness through the construction and renovation of houses and housing projects. Tickets were $10.

The Mariners Inn, a shelter for homeless, ill and chemically dependent men, was the beneficiary of an Aug. 28 fundraiser, "River Rhythm," at the Roostertail. Tickets, at $150 each, included a cruise, cocktails, hors d'oeuvres, dinner and dancing.

The next day, Aug. 29, a golf outing held by the Matthew M. West Foundation Inc. raised funds for the ALS (amyotrophic lateral sclerosis) clinic at Henry Ford Hospital. Golf and dinner cost $100.

An opening night benefit for Detroit Symphony Orchestra Hall on Sept. 12 cost $150.

A decorated birdhouse (below, right) was found in one of the six local gardens that was open for the Grosse Pointe Garden Center's annual tour July 10-12.

The Pastor's Corner The orphan's gift

By the Rev. Fred Harms
St. Paul Lutheran Church

There is a very moving folk story which comes to us from Europe. It is about an orphan's special gift given at Christmas time. In a certain European village, it was the custom for the villagers to put gifts under a great tree standing in the village square.

On Christmas morning, everyone in the town gathered around the tree to sing carols and give the gifts under the tree to those people who were very poor.

One special Christmas, a boy who was an orphan wanted to leave a gift under the tree, but he didn't have much that he could give. The only things the small boy owned were a wagon, a red scarf and a copper penny.

The boy thought very hard. "I know," he said to himself, "I will leave my wagon under the tree. Even though it is a small wagon, someone can find a use for it."

But as the boy pulled his wagon over to the tree, another child put a shiny, new wagon there. The orphan boy thought to himself, "My wagon is old and dented, with rust spots and scratches on it. I can't give my wagon as a gift." And he sadly pulled his wagon away from the tree.

Then he thought, "Maybe someone could use my scarf. Even though it is faded, it still keeps me warm."

However, just as he bent down to place it under the tree, another child put a brand-new, soft scarf there. So he sadly put the scarf back around his neck and walked away.

When he put his hands in his pocket, his fingers closed around the copper penny. Surely someone could use his penny.

But just as he was putting it under the tree, another person placed a chest of gold there. The boy was very sad. "What good is one copper penny next to a chest of gold?" he thought.

As the boy walked slowly home, he heard a choir practicing at a nearby church and their singing gave him an idea. The next morning, all the people in the village hurried to the great tree to see the gifts which were beneath it. Everyone noticed the new wagon, the soft scarf and the chest of gold. But then they noticed something else — one small orphan boy, curled up in a ball under the tree, fast asleep. For you see, the boy had given the best gift of all. He had given of himself.

May the spirit of the season continue in our hearts and in our lives. No matter what religion we happen to be, one of the best gifts we can give is the gift of service. Perhaps in this new year, you will continue with some rewarding volunteer work or find a new way to be of help in this community and beyond. There are many local agencies, food pantries, service groups and churches that need gifts of time, talents and treasures to keep vital ministries going. Thank you for your help.

Remember the orphan's gift.

Bridge

HAVE A PLEASANT TRY AT PERFECTION
BRIDGE BY WOODY BOYD ♠♥♦♣

"There are toys for all ages and duplicate bridge is certainly one of them." English Proverb

I am reminded by those who have had the task that the planning and supervision of a successful major tournament is an extremely demanding stint. In recent years, the Vincent Remy Motor City Regional has been just such a task because the slippage in attendance has been dramatic at its past location. This prompted the M.B.A. board, led by President Art Golumbia of Farmington, to select a new site for Michigan's traditionally most prodigious red and gold point extravaganza. The Hyatt Regency in Dearborn was the scene. It is one of the glamorous posh spots in Mid-West America. This year's six day playing affair from the first to the sixth of December was most successful and well attended. We were most fortunate to have world master Robert Hamman in attendance leading the out of town expert contingency.

Good bridge is on occasion a spectacular bid or play, but more often than not it's superior judgment and excellent technique. Art's lovely wife Linda gave me today's wonder which the President recently played at Farmington's new club, "The Bridge Connection." Test yourself with the advantage of seeing four hands. Then decide whether you as declarer would have done as well with only the dummy and your thirteen to work with.

Unquestionably six no trump by Linda was a wee bit risky, but she loved her middle card texture and felt her partner could put them to use to conquer what she had required of him.

West led the heart ace which was favorable, but he was a devotee of playing aces against slams at his first opportunity. (Against suits it is a consideration, but not against no trump slams. ed. note) The lead did offer Arthur a modicum of hope, but not much more. Without it even the great Zia Mahmood might not have unraveled the only out card possibility and even that would have necessitated defensive cooperation.

When East dropped the heart queen Art went into confinement to consider the situation. Would West lead the heart ace if he held the jack in back of it? Not likely! At trick two West continued the suit playing the seven. After a perplexing twenty seconds, Art reached his decision. He needed two heart entries to dummy to successfully execute his plan so he played the king and was rewarded. Again, he paused, but decided he was on the right track. West had four hearts and probably wouldn't have played the ace unless he had a potential setting trick like the diamond queen. If that premise was correct, he couldn't hold both black jacks protected and maybe neither. So be it! At trick (3) dummy's small spade and successfully finessing East's jack. Trick (4) a further protection against the other minor queen singleton he played the diamond ace. (5) and (6) The space ace queen. (7) His last heart to dummy's ten. (8) The spade king pitching his diamond five. (9)-(12) Dummy's club queen. A small club to his ten and the ace-king of that suit. His diamond king at trick (13) totaled a dozen. Lucky? Sort of, but also exceptional technique.

Chinese sculptor shows his first U.S. collection

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

This is one of an occasional series of articles about exhibits in Grosse Pointe art galleries.

The works of Chinese sculptor Yiqiao Xia (pronounced EE-shao sha) represent strong people, legendary survivors like Scarlett O'Hara who triumph over impossible odds.

People like Xia.

When he lived in China he struggled against a totalitarian government that held back his creativity; now in America, he says he struggles to keep his head above water. Speaking through an interpreter, Xia discussed his life in China and his artwork. Born in Nanking, China's former capital, Xia is the son of a painter. He discovered early on that he wanted to be an artist.

Communists took over China in 1949 and Xia applied and was chosen for inclusion in the first official fine arts program under Communist rule. At the Chinese Central College of Fine Arts, he was taught the way artists in Communist Russia were taught — emphasis was on the French classical style and classes included drawing, art history, design and Communist theory. Traditional Chinese arts were not included.

Upon graduation, he went to work for a government-run design institute which turned out artwork according to Communist guidelines.

"We could do some work for ourselves, but most of the work had to be what they said," Xia said. "They told us how to think, what to say and how to do the artwork."

In 1956 Xia was punished for saying that artists should not be restricted to depicting official subjects, such as the glorification of the peasant, but instead should be allowed to present what they wanted.

For speaking out, and because officials believed he was anti-Communist, he was sent to a labor camp.

"Everybody had to do hard labor everyday. I was lucky, I was in charge of taking care of the pigs," Xia said.

He also was subjected to "political reform" while at the camp. After three years, he was allowed to return to the institute and produce artwork, but with a cut in salary.

He said his style was forged during those three years at the farm.

"I chose to present strong people because that's what I saw in the labor camp," Xia said.

His sculptures in bronze, clay and hydrostone — a type of cement — show people who blazed trails. People like Amelia Earhart, Calamity Jane and Scarlett.

And his series of five statues, collectively called "The Salem Witch Trials," has a special meaning to him.

Although he was able to work from 1961-66, the Cultural Revolution came and Xia was again declared an enemy of the people.

"The story of the Salem witch trials bears a very strong resemblance to the cultural revolution," he said. "People were accused without evidence. People were hung or stoned to death. I connect very strongly with those people."

Xia and his wife — also a sculptor whom he had married in 1955 — were assigned to a small town where he mass-produced jade carvings for commercial sale. He spent 10 years there. He and his wife were separated when she was sent to prison for criticizing Chinese leader Mao Tse-Tung.

In 1976 he and his wife returned to the design institute because the government now declared all "enemies of the people" "friends of the people." He worked for several years, but his background stood in the way of any advancement.

His daughter, who had immigrated to the United States, asked him to live with her in Detroit. He balked for several years, but then agreed to come after the Tianamen Square massacre in 1989. He had two small sculptures and the clothes on his back. His wife is still in China.

"I came to be a baby sitter for my grandchild," he said. The daughter and her family recently moved to Kansas City, but Xia chose to stay behind. He lives in an old house in Detroit's Cultural Center, donated by someone who likes his work. Although he does some instruction of students at the Center for Creative Studies, he is looking for more permanent employment, or perhaps commissions, to support himself.

He has a manager of sorts who is helping Xia get his name and work known. His first exhibition in the United States will be at Impact Art, 15110 Kercheval, in Grosse Pointe Park. The month-long show opens with a reception from 6 to 8:30 p.m. on Saturday, Jan. 9. For more information, call the gallery at 331-ARTS.

Two companion one-act comedies open at the Golden Lion Theatre

"Laundry and Bourbon" and "Lone Star," two companion one-act comedies by James McClure, are the third offering of the season by Dennis Wickline Productions Inc. at the Golden Lion Dinner Theatre.

Opening on Friday, Jan. 15, and running Friday and Saturday evenings through Saturday, Feb. 20, these two comedies show life in Maynard, Texas, a small rural community, several years after the Vietnam War.

The two comedies have been prominently featured in theatrical festivals throughout the country. In 1987, a production of "Lone Star" was ranked the best in the United States and went on to be featured in the International Competition in Monaco.

McClure intended his two comedies to be played together, and has subtitled the works "1959 Pink Thunderbird." Since they are companion pieces, the storyline of "Laundry and Bourbon" provides insight into the characters and actions of "Lone Star." The resulting comedy is fun, bold, and at times, downright hilarious.

"Laundry" takes place on the back porch of the rural home of Elizabeth and Roy Caulder. Elizabeth has been waiting for her wandering husband to return for two days. She is visited by two longtime friends, Hatie Dealing and Amy Lee Fullerton. Friends since school and living in a small town, everyone knows everyone else's business. The ladies drink bourbon and coke, fold Roy's underwear, and reminisce about his 1959 pink Thunderbird.

In "Lone Star," we see what has become of Roy. He sits at Angel's bar, drinking Lone Star beer with his brother Ray and reminisces about his memories of Vietnam and the romantic triumphs he's had with his pink Thunderbird. In "Lone Star" we meet Amy Lee's husband, Cletis "Skeeter" Fullernoy, the nerdy appliance store owner she has married for money. Cletis always wanted to be like Roy, and Roy can't stand him for it.

Maureen Bruce plays Elizabeth Caulder. She has portrayed many roles at the Golden Lion, including Kate in "Brighton Beach Memoirs" and "Broadway Bound." Olivia Wickline will appear as Hatie; she appeared as Olive Madison in the female version of "The Odd Couple" at the Golden Lion several seasons ago. Judy Giesecking will play Amy Lee; Giesecking appeared as Audrey in "Little Shop of Horrors" for Dennis Wickline Productions in 1990.

Norman Colborne plays Roy; Colborne is a veteran local actor, and was seen as Arthur in "Camelot" at both Stagecrafters and Grosse Pointe Theatre. Dan Setchell will appear as Ray; he was seen last season as the king in "The King and I"

Judy Giesecking, Olivia Wickline and Maureen Bruce star in a one-act play "Laundry and Bourbon" at the Golden Lion Dinner Theatre.

at the Golden Lion during the holidays. Completing the cast is Peter Walilko as Cletis. Walilko was last seen as Dr. Einstein in "Arsenic and Old Lace" at the Golden Lion in 1984. The Golden Lion production is under the direction of Suzanne Marie Hillman, who directed last season's "The King and I" and portrayed Sally Bowles in the holiday production of "Cabaret." Stage manager for the production is Molly Johnson Dodge.

Price for the evening is $25.95 a person which includes dinner, show, tax and gratuity. Cocktails begin at 7 p.m. Dinner at 7:30 p.m. with the show following dessert at approximately 8:30 p.m. Gift tickets and special group performances are available. Group rates are also available as well as special senior citizen group rates for Friday performances only.

popular scriptwriting group, "How to Complete Your Movie Script in Six Months."

Before moving to the east side, Ovshinsky conducted more than a dozen successful writing and production seminars and workshops as part of the Cranbrook PM program in Bloomfield Hills.

The goal is for each member to complete at least a rough draft by the end of June. As an incentive, Ovshinsky will also evaluate and critique any script completed during the six-month process.

Ovshinsky has been described as one of the country's finest storytellers. His Movie-of-the-Week script "PJ and the Dragon" has been represented by Creative Artists Agency (CAA) and optioned to Longbow Productions. Ovshinsky recently completed work on his latest screenplay, "The Pride of Detroit."

Architect called in to design with 'deaf eyes'

By Stephanie Smith
AIA News Service

The American School for the Deaf, founded in 1817, is the oldest permanent school for the deaf in the Western Hemisphere. Using a "total communication" system of education (i.e., all forms of communication, including different types of signing and speech reading, are encouraged), the West Hartford, Conn., school provides services to residential and day students in all elementary and high school grades, as well as vocational training and a number of community services.

The school population consists of 250 students and its 52-acre campus supports 338,000 square feet in several residences and 13 major buildings, which range in age from 17 to 71 years old. The school had received little maintenance since the 1970s and was getting a little run down when The Mead Group, also of West Hartford, was hired by the state's department of public works as infrastructure architects for the school's campus.

The firm set about performing such tasks as replacing a set of wooden columns on the main building, solving some roofing problems, and designing a bus turnaround. Then came a request for a new computer building to house the state's TDD system, which at the time was located in a temporary structure on campus.

The location the state had chosen for the new buildings seemed not quite fitting to firm principal William R.L. Mead, AIA, who started asking questions.

"First we asked if there was any available space in one of the existing buildings, and they said no," he recalls. "We asked to see the master plan for the campus to see if we could find some space. They didn't have a master plan, and they asked our firm to write a proposal to create one."

The Mead Group accepted the challenge and in April 1991 was awarded a contract to prepare a master plan for the school campus. Just 14 months later, Mead had devised a money- and time-saving plan for the entire campus and its infrastructure. The pivotal idea catalyzed during a three-day visit by Dr. Harvey Corson, the provost of Gallaudet University (Washington, D.C.'s renowned university for the deaf) and the project consultant.

"Harvey is deaf, and he's brilliant," says Mead. "His insight made us realize that we were looking at the project with 'hearing eyes' instead of with 'deaf eyes.'"

"There's no special code for designing good buildings for deaf people — our research has showed us that," Mead continues.

The architect has recommended the addition of two residential-scale dormitories (with roofs at the same pitch as the main building) and playing fields to give the campus a friendlier feeling and a stronger tie to the community.

The main building would be transformed into an updated high school for the deaf as well as a "Deafness Center," which would include a library, an auditorium, and a sky-lighted interior pedestrian street system. A pond would be cleaned up to become a nature area with trails and picnic areas and perhaps the home of a future residence for seniors, developed in partnership with a private developer.

The plan is up for consideration by the state Legislature in the form of a $22 million bond for phase one of the project, and Mead reports a ground swell of community support. If all goes well, the six- to eight-month construction documentation and planning would begin this year, and construction could start in the spring of 1994.

Third-quarter home resales rise in 35 states

With interest rates at a historic low point, consumer confidence in the economy was evident during 1992's third quarter as home resale activity grew in 35 states compared to a year ago, the National Association of Realtors reported.

According to the association's latest quarterly state-by-state survey of sales of previously owned homes, the increases ranged from 3.1 percent in South Carolina to 31.2 percent in Rhode Island. While figures for Alaska and Maine were not available, a total of 22 states registered double-digit increases.

NAR president Dorcas T. Helfant said the figures prove that the long-term economic outlook is positive.

"Even with a stagnant economy, the big picture for the market is defined by growth. Now, if only legislation were passed allowing consumers to overcome down payment barriers, housing could lift the economy and bring positive change to many related industries," Helfant said.

Nationwide, the NAR survey of sales of existing single-family detached homes, town houses, apartment condominiums and co-operatives showed a seasonally adjusted annual resale rate of 3.35 million units during July, August and September of this year, compared to 3.53 million for the same time period last year, a decrease of 5 percent. Although most states saw improvements, weakness in populous states such as California, Florida and New Jersey affected the national pace.

For the third quarter of 1992, interest rates for a conventional, 30-year fixed rate mortgage averaged 8.01 percent, the lowest since the second quarter of 1973, when rates were 7.64 percent, according to the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp.

John A. Tuccillo, NAR's chief economist, said the survey results reveal that most areas of the country are primed for economic recovery.

"The spurt of home resales has certainly been helped by the lowest interest rates in almost two decades, but home buyers and owners won't make a significant move into the market until further incentives are provided by the government," Tuccillo said.

NAR advocates legislative changes, such as allowing consumers to apply funds from Individual Retirement Accounts and 401(k) programs toward a home down payment, and points to recently enacted legislation expanding mortgage programs of the Federal Housing Administration and Veterans Administration as examples of positive reform.

On a regional basis, home resales for the third quarter of 1992 rose in one of four areas in the nation, compared to the same time period last year.

In the Midwest, third quarter resales were up 2.6 percent compared to 1991's third quarter, with 10 out of 12 states registering improvements. North Dakota recorded the largest increase of 21.1 percent in the region, and Kansas followed with an increase of 18.9 percent.

In the South, 11 of 17 states experienced increases in home resale activity, although an overall decrease of 4.5 percent was recorded for the region compared to last year's third quarter. Kentucky led the South with a 16.7 percent rise, while Mississippi saw home resales grow by 16.5 percent.

The Northeast home resale rate dropped 5.5 percent, compared to the same time period one year ago, yet six of eight states recorded growth. Rhode Island came out first in the region and the nation, as home resales climbed 31.2 percent. New Hampshire also experienced substantial growth with a 25.8 percent rise.

Eight out of 12 states in the West recorded growth in home resales, compared to the third quarter of 1991, yet the region registered a 14.8 percent decrease. Oregon registered an improvement of 27.7 percent while Wyoming was second in the region with an 18.1 percent growth rate.

Household Help by John Amantea

Q. I just purchased a starter house which is also a "handyman" special type of dwelling. There is a significant amount of repairing and replacing to accomplish, but I want to concentrate on all of my windows first. Aside from not being able to afford replacing some of the windows, I need some inexpensive advice. I would like to replace two windows in a basement that I don't use for living purposes. The size of the glass is very odd and would be too exorbitant to change. Are there any other means of replacement and also winterizing against the season's harsh elements?

A. I have had the experience of pricing the replacement cost of glass and storm windows, and they can be quite expensive. Anyhow, there is a cheaper route you can take to avoid the high cost of replacing your windows.

You will need to purchase acrylic plastic material at your lumber or home decorating store. This product usually comes in various size sheets, and you can cut the exact piece or pieces you need.

Start by removing the glass you are changing and expelling any broken material from the frame. Provided the frame is solidly intact, you can now begin your job. Once you have the acrylic plastic cut, you can proceed to apply a thin bead of a good silicone compound to the metal frame's perimeter. Place the acrylic to the frame and you can drill four holes and install small size screws to each corner, for extra measure.

This is one method of replacing your old windows inexpensively, if you're not particularly fussy. However, you cannot do this if you have double-hung or casement type windows.

Q. The grout on our bathroom tiles on the wall and floors are dark from age. How can we lighten them or clean them? Do you have any solutions?

A. There are a good many commercial preparations on the market to combat this problem. I am not in the habit of recommending a particular product, so I suggest you take the advice of your local hardware dealer. I believe you will find the results of your labors quite satisfactory. I regret that I could not be more specific.

Home Tips

Storage tip — I came up with these ideas after getting tired of sugar and flour spilling out of their bags in my cupboards.

I put the sugar in a clean and dry 1/2-gallon plastic (with the lid) milk container. My flour goes into a paper milk carton (after clean and dry). They both pour easier, eliminate spills and stale sugar and flour.

Diana S., Auburn, Calif.

Stuffed animals — I found I can clean all of my son's stuffed animals by putting one or two in a pillow case. I then wash them on the regular cycle just as I would a shirt. Of course, make sure there are no holes or tears in the animals. Also, be sure to tie a knot to close the pillow case.

Barbara T., Sinton, Texas

Handy glove — I use a rubber glove to help loosen a tight-fitting jar lid. The gloves also come in handy when handling cold surfaces for an extended period, such as when I'm slicing meat that is not completely thawed, or when I'm defrosting a refrigerator that is not frost-free.

Christine H. New Windsor, N.Y.

Perfect hair — When you need help telling your hair stylist exactly what you want done, take a picture at a photo booth in a mall when your hair is exactly the way you like it. Your stylist will always know exactly what you like — on you!

Harriet T., Augusta, Maine

Pin it down — I keep a pin cushion in my laundry room, and when my husband places his socks on top of the washing machine, I pin the toes together with a small safety pin. I haven't had a lost sock or had to hunt for a mate since I started this practice.

Victoria S., Eddyville, Ky.

Recipe swap — When I request a copy of a recipe from a friend, I send a plain, self-addressed, stamped postcard on which to write the recipe and then mail it.

This way I'm sure to get the recipe. I also don't have to recopy it since the postcard is the same size as most recipe-card boxes.

Kate R., Birmingham, Ala.

Scrubless cleaning — Liquid automatic dishwasher detergent removes burned-on grease and food from barbecue grills, pots and stove reflector pans.

I soak the dirty item overnight in a strong solution of dishwasher detergent and water. The grease and food just floats off! To remove any dirt that may remain, I scrub with nylon net.

Linda P., Sikeston, Mo.

Shoeshine tip — If you need a quick shoe shine, use petroleum jelly. Rub in on patent-leather shoes and buff.

Patricia V., Beaumont, Calif.

Easy to serve — Here's an easy way to remove jellied cranberry sauce ('tis the season!) from a can with ease and perfection. Simply open both ends of the can, and the contents will come out easily.

Winter celebrations point to spring

Garden Shed

By Ellen Probert

wreaths on the table, which was covered with the best damask and lit with candles, and mistletoe was wound around the chandeliers. An elaborate buffet and eggnog and punch were available all day and many guests went from house to house for a whole day of partying.

December is always a dark, low, despairing sort of month with almost no sunlight, long nights and short days and usually cold, stormy weather. For a long time people weren't even sure that the sun could make it back again without help from human encouragement.

Bonfires and torches were used to counteract the darkness and cold. Throughout the Northern Hemisphere, the feast of lights — the feast of the undying sun — has been celebrated by many cultures.

It is no coincidence that Hanukkah, the feast of lights in the Jewish tradition, is celebrated at this time.

Holly, the flower for the winter season in the Occidental flower calendar, is the symbol for foresight, optimism and defense, and has long been used, with ivy and other evergreens, to brighten and decorate homes and public buildings during the festive season.

In Victorian times, holly and ivy garlands were strung all around the picture moldings of rooms and often encircled doors and windows as well. Holiday dinner tables frequently were ornamented with swags of greenery looped around the table and strewn among the place settings.

In the Scandinavian countries, branches of lilac or other shrubs are brought indoors in January and forced into leaf and are then enhanced with little bunches of flowers made of dyed feathers tied to the branches among the leaves.

How important flowers are! They seem to symbolize so many things — light and spring, optimism and hope, happiness and summer. And in late December and January, this seems especially important.

The greatest festival of ancient times was the Saturnalia, or Feast of the Winter Solstice. Originally celebrated on a single day, in time it was extended to a seven-day period. Schools were closed, slaves were permitted to ridicule their masters, friends exchanged presents and trees were decorated to encourage them to bear more fruit. And people gave each other evergreen wreaths to bring good luck in the coming year.

Mid-winter celebrations long predate our observance of Christmas and the theory is that the early Christians chose this time to celebrate the birth of Christ because it could be blended in with the feast of the Saturnalia without attracting undesirable attention.

One remarkable fact about using green boughs to decorate at holiday time is that in past centuries it was thought that Christmas greens were set apart from other plants and when the holidays were over they must be disposed of in special ways and not just thrown out.

Holly was given to the cattle because bovines were thought to have been present at Christ's birth. Other evergreens were burned with the Yule log. But mistletoe was carefully saved from year to year when new mistletoe could replace it. Rosemary was made into pot-pourri and kept in a jar to continue to scent the house, and it was promised that whoever sniffed at it would not grow old.

The turn of the year is when the world changes and you can be transformed. That is what the Cree Indians say: "You are the center fire. You are the flowering tree. Look forward to spring."

In the Chinese flower calendar, the flower for the winter season is the plum blossom, which is the symbol for beauty and longevity, and in the Japanese flower calendar, the pine is the flower, or plant, for January.

In ancient tradition, the mistletoe is the symbol for affection and love. It was the magic plant of the Druids and was a good-luck gift for a woman. In the Victorian language of flowers, the mistletoe says, "I shall surmount all difficulties" — a worthy thought as we look forward to a new year.

In early Victorian New England, Christmas was a time given to church-going and feasting, but New Year's Day was the time for gift-giving. And while Christmas was a family time, New Year's Day was a time for open house.

Hostesses would send out invitations weeks in advance and would be dressed in their most elaborate gowns to welcome their guests. The house would be lavish with Christmas decorations to which would be added fresh flowers and ferns. Punch bowls would be set in holly

Survey finds 7 of 10 renters look forward to home-buying

If you are living in a rented property, chances are seven in 10 that you plan to buy a home someday. If you own your home, chances are one in four that you expect to trade up to a bigger or better home at some time.

These were among disclosures of a recent survey of renters and homeowners conducted by the National Association of Realtors.

The most prevalent reasons for home ownership for both groups were as an investment and pride, followed by a dislike of paying rent and the ability of controlling features in their residences. Nearly half of renters and 56 percent of owners also cited tax advantages stemming from ownership.

Of the 32 percent of renter respondents who said they expected to always rent, nearly half said affordability was the major barrier against owning.

"We think a lot of people who feel this way underestimate their ability to successfully pursue home ownership," said Ruth Clevers, president of the Western Wayne Oakland County Association of Realtors. "Our annual free seminars on homebuying show many attendees unaware of how to take advantage of existing programs designed to assist them and how to formulate a buying plan."

She said studies indicate typical first-time homebuyers save three years or less to make a downpayment.

The Realtor survey also questioned what sacrifice renters were willing to make to save for a downpayment on a home. More than 70 percent listed vacations and nearly that number cited a new car and daily non-essentials. More than half said they would sacrifice entertainment, but were more reluctant to forego appliances, jewelry, new clothes and home furnishings.

"It is interesting to note in the survey results that a third of renters considered buying in the last three years (1988-91), but changed their minds because of inability to come up with the needed down payment or lack of income to meet monthly mortgage payments," Clevers said.

"To us, this signals potential for strong growth in the market as the overall economy improves. While the local market has remained relatively strong, we know there is still unfulfilled demand being built up"

Frank began the tradition of attending Michigan "because I always wanted to go there."

John said it was his first choice and Nick said he "just followed the trend."

Although the three older brothers have a lot of common interests, they're following three different courses of study.

Frank was a pre-law major. John is majoring in English and theater and Nick is taking a pre-med curriculum. John is also interested in photography and takes pictures for the school yearbook. He has won several awards with his pictures.

"All our different interests make for great dinner conversation," Nick said.

Soccer and the University of Michigan are a common bond for the Karabetsos brothers. From left, are John, Frank and Nick. Nick and Frank played on the Wolverines' soccer club this season, while John, who had to give up the sport because of an illness, cheered them on and coached a youth team in Ann Arbor. All three were outstanding players in high school. Frank played for University Liggett School, while John and Nick graduated from Grosse Pointe North.

North grad repeats as All-American runner

By Chuck Klonke
Sports Editor

Scott Collins was excited when he learned that this year's national junior college cross country meet was going to be held in Tempe, Ariz.

"I worked real hard to get the mileage in during the summer because I wanted to stay healthy and qualify for the nationals," said the two-time All-American at Macomb Community College and Grosse Pointe North grad. "Last year's national meet (in Wichita, Kan.) was such a bad experience."

Collins ran well enough to finish 15th in Division II and grabbed the last All-American berth, but the weather conditions were horrible.

"It was pouring when we got off the bus and it never stopped," he said. "The water was over our ankles in spots on the course and when the race started it was like a monsoon. I think everybody ran fast just to get it over with."

That wouldn't be a concern this year however, with the meet in Arizona.

But by mid-season, Collins was wondering whether he'd get to make the trip.

"I was really bummed," he said. "I ran a 26:49 the second week of the season and then didn't improve. My legs felt tired after every race. I don't need as much mileage as some runners, so the extra training I did during the summer wasn't helping."

Collins ran a stronger race in the regional and qualified for the national meet, but he still wasn't sure of his chances.

"I just decided to run to have fun and I wound up having a great race," said Collins, who finished seventh overall in 26:33 and helped the Monarchs to a second-place in Division II.

"At first glance the course didn't seem real tough, but it's more hilly than you'd think. There are about 100 moguls, and in the heat, that can take a toll. By the time the race started, I was pretty pumped because Billy Mills (a former Olympic gold medal distance runner) spoke to us the night before and gave a real inspirational talk."

Temperatures at the nationals Nov. 21, were in the 60s, which was a far cry from the 34 degrees and two inches of snow at the regional a week before.

"I decided to go out slowly and pick up my pace," Collins said. "The national meet was the first time that I felt at the end of the race that I could have gone even farther. I guess I peaked at the right time."

Two of Collins' MCC teammates, Chris Rudolph and Jim Neumann, finished 1-2 in the national meet, but the Monarchs couldn't beat Lansing Community College, which had five runners in the top 12.

Collins, who was All-State in cross country as a junior at North and missed by two places the following year, said that it took some adjusting when he had to run the longer collegiate distance.

"It's a huge mental adjustment to go from 3.1 to five miles," he said. "It wasn't until the last two meets with Macomb that I really felt comfortable. I remember running my first college meet at Eastern and I wanted to know where the mile marks were because I didn't know how to pace myself."

Collins' got started in running by accident.

He played football for the Norsemen until his sophomore year, but suffered a broken shoulder that put a crimp in a lot of his plans.

"Baseball was my favorite, but when I broke my shoulder I couldn't play that spring so I went out for track," Collins said. "I enjoyed running and my coach (Pat Wilson) suggested that I try cross country in the fall. I ran my first cross country race as a junior."

The late start probably cost Collins a second straight berth on the All-State team.

"There were a lot of expectations for me at the state meet my senior year because I had made All-State the year before," Collins said. "It was a hot day and I went out real fast. With less than 110 yards to go, I dehydrated and my legs gave out. I couldn't see the finish line when I came over the last hill. I'm lucky I even finished the race. I just didn't have the experience to deal with a situation like that. I was afraid I'd cramp up if I drank water before the race, so I didn't. That's why I dehydrated."

Collins would like to continue running in college, but if he doesn't he won't have any regrets.

"I've talked to the coach at Oakland and I'd really like to run for them," he said. "If not, it's been fun. I'm glad I decided to go to Macomb. It was a great experience to run in the national meet for two years. That probably wouldn't have happened if I'd gone to a four-year school right away."

Brothers get kicks from U-M soccer

By Chuck Klonke
Sports Editor

Soccer and the University of Michigan are common bonds that tie the Karabetsos brothers together.

"Our father (Evan, a professor at Oakland Community College) always emphasized sports as being good for the mind, body and soul, so it was natural we'd take an interest in them," said Frank, the oldest of five brothers and a recent U-M graduate.

This year Frank, who plans to attend law school in the fall, and Nick, a freshman, played for Michigan's club soccer team. They were cheered on by brother John, a junior at the school.

Younger brothers Dimitri, who is in the eighth grade, and Aris, a third-grader, are also soccer players.

John probably would have been playing, too, except his career was cut short by a case of pericarditis, an inflammation of the muscles around the heart. He keeps his hand in by coaching an 8-and-under team in Ann Arbor.

"I came down with (pericarditis) my junior year in high school (at Grosse Pointe North) and I thought after a couple months of recuperation I'd be able to play my senior year," John said. "I played three games and then it flared up again so I had to quit. I'm grateful I got to play on the same team with Nick the year before."

That's why Frank took an extra semester to complete his studies at Michigan. He wanted to be around to play with Nick.

"Then I had knee surgery in August, so I had to do some pretty quick rehabilitation so I'd be ready for the season," Frank said.

Frank and John played together on travel teams when they were growing up and were members of a team that toured Europe while both were in high school. Frank attended University Liggett School, while John graduated from North, so they also have memories of playing against each other.

In one instance, North was protecting a one-goal lead against ULS when Frank had a free kick. John was lined up along the goal line and deflected the shot out of danger.

"It was a sure goal, but I just got enough of it to deflect it," John recalled. "That was one of my soccer highlights."

He also remembers his brother scoring a breakaway goal to tie the London Cup champion during the trip to Europe.

"We were down by a couple goals at halftime and we saw this rainbow," John said. "We all said, 'That rainbow is going to be good luck for us. We'll have a pot of gold at the end.' And we came back to tie. It was fun playing with Frank because we fed off each other. We always knew where the other one was going to be."

Frank and Nick played side-by-side in Michigan's midfield this season and the squad had a successful year, although not quite as good as two of Frank's earlier years on the team.

"When I was a freshman we tied Indiana 2-2 and we were 15-6 my junior year," Frank said. "Although we're a club team, we play a lot of varsity teams."

Last year Frank made a strong pitch to university officials to make soccer a varsity sport, but it was turned down.

Lady Knights beat Howellettes

Michele Kryszak and Nikki Metcalfe scored and goalie Heather Heidel blanked the Howell Howling Howellettes until the third period last week to lead University Liggett School's girls hockey team to a 2-1 victory.

Kryszak opened the scoring late in the first period with assists from Sara Mitchell and Becky Simpson. Beth Mozena and Katie Frederick drew assists on Metcalfe's winner.

Heidel was named the game's first star and teammate Shera Teitge was the No. 2 star. Defenseman Allison Rider and left wing Jenny Lewis also played well for the Lady Knights, who are 2-0.

500 ANIMALS ADOPT A PET PLEASE DON'T DELAY! SPAY OR NEUTER YOUR PET TODAY!

An altered pet is a healthier and happier companion. Also, it spares you the grief and pain of having puppies and kittens destroyed when no homes can be found. Countless numbers of sweet, innocent little ones are euthanized every day in shelters across the country because a pet wasn't spayed or neutered. If we cut down on the numbers of unwanted litters being born, we will also cut down on the number of abandoned, lost and unwanted animals to destroy.

WE WILL BE HAPPY TO PROVIDE ADVICE as well as a LIST OF ECONOMICAL SERVICE SOURCES
