Those making a donation received a Guinness glass with the etching, "I Supported a Local Hero." Donations go to the charity of Harris' choice, K9 Partners. Razor theft

Two unknown male shoplifters, appearing to work in tandem, got away at 1:06 p.m. Monday, Sept. 8, with an undetermined number of razors stolen from CVS Pharmacy in the Village.

"Both subjects went east on Kercheval, then south on Neff," a witness reportedly told police.

A store manager obtained images of both suspects on security video.

One suspect, a thin, balding man and estimated to be 30 years old, allegedly stuffed razors in a cloth bag while a roughly 20-year-old accomplice brought up the rear.

Four days later, Friday, Sept. 12, police arrested a Detroit man for stealing $577 worth of razors from the store.

He confessed, intending to sell them to buy illegal drugs, police said.

Arson across Mack

Grosse Pointe Farms police caught five youths three blocks from a suspected arson fire behind Village Ace Hardware, in the 18200 block of Mack, Detroit, near the intersection of Moran, a few minutes after 6 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 14.

A City of Grosse Pointe man reported the fire, in a storage area and parking garage, at 5:48 p.m.

"Detroit police advised that four or five youths were seen running from the scene," said one of five officers responding from the Farms.

The witness described the suspects as black males, 11 to 14 years old. Two wore hoodies. One wore a yellow neon shirt.

Two Farms patrolmen detained them near the intersection of Anatole and Frankfort, across from Balduck Park.

"(We) located cigarette lighters the suspects were attempting to destroy (or) discard," said one of them. Back at the fire, a Farms officer advised employees of neighboring McDonald's restaurant to shut off the ventilation system due to heavy smoke encompassing the area.

GUEST OPINION By James

Were 275,000 jobs created?

here can be no question the Michigan economy is recovering — only questions about the magnitude of the growth. The level of growth depends on where you look. As we get closer to the November general election, more people will question the degree of growth and whether the Snyder administration and Legislature has helped or hindered the state recovery.

Gov. Rick Snyder and his campaign team claim he has helped create "more than 275,000 jobs." Let's take a deeper look at that number.

There have been substantial job gains in the payroll survey during Snyder's first term. The survey goes out monthly to a sample of employers to find out how many jobs are in Michian businesses and in what industries. Its releases are frequently in the news. Since December 2010 — the last month prior to the Snyder administration — Michigan added 269,700 jobs. This is a 7 percent increase in the number of jobs in Michigan businesses.

The largest gains were in manufacturing industries and professional and business services, which includes consultants, temporary employment groups and employee leasing agencies among others. The transportation equipment manufacturing sector accounts for roughly 40 percent of the growth in the manufacturing field.

A different look comes from the household survey. This samples a number of Michigan residents and finds out how many people are employed and unemployed. This is a similar measure of employment but it looks at the number of people in Michigan who are employed rather than the number of jobs in Michigan businesses.

The household survey shows a substantial but more mitigated recovery. Employment increased by 217,115 jobs — a 5.2 percent gain.

A separate measure covering information from all employers that participate in the unemployment insurnce system also gives a look at the employment pic ture. This is the quarterly census of employment and wages and gives the most detailed look at employment by sector. Unlike the two monthly surveys, information from this project lags by two quarters. From December 2010 to December 2013, this source showed an increase of 251,835 in jobs — a 6.5 percent gain.

The recovery began prior to the beginning of the Snyder administration in these three data sources.

These two are monthly snapshots of the economic picture. As such, they hide some of the changes in the economy. Businesses are constantly being created, others adding jobs, more losing jobs and some closing. While on net there are more jobs in Michigan, there's been a lot more creation and loss.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics Employment Dynamics data, Michigan added 2,520,816 jobs and lost 2,271,762 jobs since 2011 began, showing a net gain of 249,054 jobs.

But the rates of both job growth and job loss fell

Even though these trends are down, there is a substantial amount of job turnover suggesting the best way to improve the economy is to enact broad-based improvements to the business climate.

The Snyder administration has many accomplishments on this front — for instance, a right-to-work law, replacing the Michigan Business Tax with a smaller and less burdensome corporate income tax and creating new exemptions to the personal property tax, among others. And there's perhaps a chance his efforts to get employers connected with job seekers can help.

The impact of these policies on the scope and direction of the state's recovery is a good question. In 2012, University of Michigan economist Don Grimes found the state's job growth cannot be fully explained by its industrial mix. The size of the gains, however, was much less than the total increase in job growth. That is to say that policy may be playing a role in the state's job growth, but the general economic recovery does as well.

There is much to be optimistic about Michigan, especially since this recovery is the first sustained increase in employment since 2000. There have been millions of jobs created and lost, mostly without direct permission or encouragement by policymakers. Governors have some ability to change policies to create growth and Michigan performed stronger than can be expected.

Hohman is assistant director of fiscal policy at the Mackinac Center for Public Policy.

Grosse Pointe Public School System Board of

School millage vote

To the Editor:

The issue of the two Nov. 4 school millage votes was one of the subjects of the Sept. 15 Grosse Pointe Public School System Board of Education meeting as well as the prior board meeting a few weeks ago.

At both meetings, I have gone to the microphone and appealed to the board they become much more aggressive in reaching the 80 percent of our community who do not have students in our schools and explain, in terms they can relate to, what our school system would look like if these sory council to get a Mr. Fenton and his millages fail to be

The gravity of a loss on these millage votes requires door-to-door visits be done to all residents without children in our schools.

In my opinion, trust in our school board and administration and the poor packaging and presentation were the major factors in the defeat of the tech bond. The stakes are far too great to take the board's, "the community has always supported these millages" attitude to these upcoming votes.

This is one of those rare situations where I hope I am wrong about the human behavior pattern that has been adopted by so many of our residents as a result of the 70 percent tech bond loss debacle.

In my opinion, the public's trust issues with our school board and our administration are a far bigger issue our school board and administration believe. And its inaction in the proper marketing of these millages is risking the future of our entire school system.

According to the Center of Juvenile and Criminal Justice, statistical data reveals that nationwide African Americans represent 26% of the juvenile arrests, 44% of youth who are detained and 58% of youth incarcerated in state prisons throughout the United States. Social and economic isolation are factors which contribute to the alarming incarceration statistics cited above. Equally alarming are discipline numbers for African American children in grades 7-12. The Center of Juvenile and Criminal Justice also reports that 35% of students in grades 7-12 have been suspended or expelled at some point in their school tenure. This statistic is especially alarming when considered in comparison to other populations. Only 20% of Hispanic students and 15% of white students are suspended or expelled during their academic careers. As discouraging as these statistics are, they do not deter the efforts of one of Detroit's oldest human service agencies; Franklin Wright Settlements Inc. An organization established in 1881 on Detroit's Eastside, Franklin Wright Settlements paints a different mosaic for the children who enter the doors of the agency. The risks presented to children by an area suffering from intense poverty and neglect are countered by the impactful programs offered every day at Franklin Wright Settlements Inc.

The services offered by the agency include youth enrichment, recreation, mentoring, therapeutic counseling, basic needs services, and supplemental academic services. The cornerstone of the academic supports in place is The Success Academy which is a year round program that prepares students by providing life skills training, ACT, SAT and NCAA eligibility counseling for athletes. For younger students there is homework assistance, internships and college and financial aid application assistance.

Another key aspect of the academic support services offered to youth by Franklin Wright Settlements Inc. is an annual college tour. Implemented in 2003, the tour now in its 11th year, takes on average 45 students ages 12-19 on a yearly 8-10 day tour of colleges and universities across the nation. Over 500 students, primarily from Detroit, have participated in the tour. Every student who has attended the Franklin Wright Settlements annual college tour enrolled in a two or four year college following the tour.

The Franklin Wright Settlements Inc. college tour is sponsored annually by DTE Energy, Molina Health Inc., and a host of generous individual sponsors. College tour students also raise funds for the college tour through a series of fundraisers to supplement costs for students with economic challenges. Students, and parents of college tour students consistently offer praise to Franklin Wright Settlements Inc. for the caring and nurturing atmosphere they create for college tour students.

Monique Marks, President and CEO of Franklin Wright Settlements Inc. stated, "For most children, a college degree is their passport out of poverty. We know that an educated adult has greater chances of breaking generational cycles of poverty. We encourage post secondary education as a way of life with our children. By doing so we are able to create a sustainable, meaningful, life style change in the lives of children who often lack the guidance and support needed to gain entry into a college or university. The college tour is a key ingredient to our strategy of changing attitudes of young people about college. Once young people are exposed to a college campus and have an opportunity to speak with the faculty, staff and students of a school, the fact they can be a college student becomes very real to them for the first time in their lives. Show a child a college campus and you show them the key to success. Many well known names were once patrons or recipients of the great services offered by Franklin Wright Settlements Inc. The list includes former First Lady of the United States Eleanor Roosevelt, former Mayor Coleman A. Young, Joe Louis, Wayne County Sheriff Benny Napoleon, and Thomas "Hitman" Hearns.

This year, Franklin Wright Settlements will celebrate 133 years of continued service to the community at the annual Spirit of Giving Gala. The theme this year is "An Evening of Elegance" and will feature the nationally acclaimed children's choir from the Detroit Academy of Arts and Sciences (DAAS). The event will be held on December 13, 2014 at the Charles H. Wright Museum of African American History.

Franklin Wright Settlements appeals to the greater Detroit area to continue "Helping the Child, Preserving the Family, and Strengthening the Community." All proceeds from the gala will support the various programs at Franklin Wright Settlements Inc. For more information contact Ahmad Nassar at 313 579-1000 ext. 241 or

Suspicious activity

A resident was on his way to work at 3 a.m. Monday, Sept. 15, when he noticed four men walking down Bournemouth. He then noticed a car with interior lights on and called police. When police responded, the four men ran and the police gave chase, but police were unable to apprehend any of the suspects. Further investigation indicated that at least three cars were entered, including a car on Newcastle where luggage had been removed and set on the front lawn. All three car owners reported that while the cars had been rummaged through, nothing was missing and nothing was missing from the luggage.

Retelling yesteryears' tales

By Ann L. Fouty Features Editor

Tales of discovery, lost love, personal trials and solutions are retold under the stars at the Provencal-Weir house Friday, Sept. 26.

For more than 300 years, stories of this region bordering the Detroit River and Lake St. Clair have been collected These stories, based on oral traditions, retell a history revealing not only events, but the character of the people who first settled here.

"Legends of le Detroit" bring these tales to listeners through the magic of storytelling, for one evening. The legends begin unfolding at 7 p.m. on the Provencal-Weir House's side porch. Cider and doughnuts can be purchased at 6:30 p.m.

"The theme is keeping history alive," said Isabelle Donnelly, co-producer and Grosse Pointe Historical Society's education director. "Those stories happened where they (guests) are sitting. We make history really hip.'

Knowing Grosse Pointe history should make people stand taller and get them excited, she added.

Tales selected for this evening's events begin with one first told in 1701. "The Nain Rouge" relates the founding of Detroit by Cadillac and his party and is read by Gina Telford.

Matt Becker tells an early 18th century story of St. Anne's Church, "The Phantom Priest." The 1705 story retells how an Italian aristocrat whose family and friends died of the Black Plague joined the priesthood and became part of Cadillac's group.

"Francois and Barbe," a tale from 1710, is about the habitants, French farmers, and told by Kay Burt-Wilson. A stormy night, a husband lost, a ghost Donnelly.

and a brave woman form this story.

"The Sibyl's Prophecy," an 1806 story from the Hurons, is told by Peter DiSante. From the setting of a village festival, a young girl learns her lover is dead. Yet, the tale has a happy ending. Would a Chippewa, who was a murderer, be barred from entering the happy hunting grounds of his ancestors? Sal DeMercurio tells the 1815 Chippewa story, "Kishkaukou," and how he solved his problem.

The stories' research comes from the archives of the Grosse Pointe Historical Society and was conducted by

The stories are presented by the historical society in partnership with the Grosse Pointe Theatre, the Theatre Arts Club of Detroit and the Fine Arts Club of Detroit. The evening's stories are from a collected work by Marie Carolyn Watson Hamlin. Published in 1884, the stories reflect Detroit's French, Canadian and Native American heritage. "Timing was an issue," Donnelly added. There are 10 minutes and audience friendly stories."

The collaboration of the four local organizations was accomplished because, Donnelly noted, many of those involved are members of at least two, if not all four.

"We know each other," Donnelly said. "It's just a wonderful collaboration to perform for the community."

Added Emmajean Evans, "It is great to have the historical information and costumes to offer the public a sample of Legend of le Detroit in a relaxed and comfortable setting and where else but at GPHS." She is a co-producer of the event and member of Grosse Pointe Theatre.

Grosse Pointe Theatre's Gina Telford, Emmajean Evans and Ric Selke provide the period costumes for the readers of the five stories dated from 1701 to 1815.

Coaching the storytellers are Donnelly, DiSante and DeMercurio. Guests should bring a chair and dress for the weather. The rain date is

Teaching Your Children About Saving and Investing

Suzanne Antonelli, CFP® Senior Portfolio Manager

As an investment advisor and wealth planner, I represent many clients who have already accumulated substantial savings through hard work, responsible spending habits, and sound financial decisions. However, to many parents' dismay, their children are give your child an allownot following their example. Compounding the problem, many parents have a natural tendency to help their kids financially. Yet, in doing so, these young adults fail to learn valuable life lessons and the parents' retirement plan may also be impaired. Thus, it is sometimes a balancing act between supporting one's children without squandering one's retirement plan in the process.

The best way to avoid raising financially irresponsible adults is to educate children early about saving and investing. Good financial habits start early. If you ance, make them earn it! Encourage them to save a percentage of every dollar received whether earned or received as a gift. Discuss a percentage that should be set aside for some future goal. Building these habits early can build a lifetime of financial security.

Once children learn how to save, they need to be taught about investing. One method is engaging kids in a stock picking game, an assignment often found in high schools and colleges (in fact, this assignment

led me down my career path). Typically, students are given a hypothetical dollar amount to invest in a stock portfolio after doing their own research. At the end of the semester, whoever has the highest portfolio value wins. Although this project is valuable, a semester is hardly enough time to measure the quality of a stock portfolio and it is important to teach the long-term nature of stock investing.

Better yet, I encourage clients to actively engage in a similar exercise from the time their children are in elementary or middle school. Typically, children will pick a stock or two that they can relate to, such as Disney, Apple, Mattel, etc. Family discussions may include reviewing these companies' products, recent news reports, share price performance, etc. If given enough time, the share price will appreciate in value and the kids can see first-hand the power of compounding. They may also learn patience and the importance of tolerating market volatility.

With a foundation set, it becomes much more natural that when these children enter the workforce, there is an inclination to immediately set aside a small portion of their wages into a savings account, 401(k), IRA, etc., knowing that these funds are being set aside for some important future goal. All questions and comments are welcome.

Road crossing

hy did Jesus, Moses, the Buddha and Mohammed Cross the Road?' This is the title of a wonderfully insightful book written by Brian D. McLaren, theologian and pastor. Of course, the title recalls the old (1847) riddle about a chicken crossing the road.

McLaren begins by asking the reader to picture the scene: four of the greatest religious leaders walking together - no fighting, no arguing, no damning or condemning one another — just walking together, moving together, leading together.

The author then goes on to ask, "Doesn't that reversal expose our unspoken expectation that different religions are inherently and unchangeably incompatible, disharmonious, fractious and hostile toward one another?"

Why are these four crossing the road together? One possible answer suggested by the author is "they are escaping their angry, hypercritical, hypocritical followers", or, because they hoped we would follow them in "reaching out to one another in friendship rather than hostility, fear, isolation, misinformation, exclusion or demonization.'

It has been said if humans are given a common enemy, they have been given a common identity; when deprived of an enemy, humans are deprived of the crutch of their identity: with the crutch there is the enemy, the outsider, the "other," us versus them. There are no gray areas, no compromise, no maybes.

Not only do we see this scenario played out in the world of religion, but in the world of politics

I must win, at any cost, and you must lose. I am right and you are wrong. My tribe is the only tribe that has value. This partisan mindset tears apart communities, our nation and the larger world. Better to bring down the whole rather than compromise with "the evil other."

Let us remember when there is poison in the air, all who breathe it die.

McLaren ends his book with these words: "So imagine, then, Jesus, Moses, the Buddha and Mohammed crossing the road to encounter one another. Imagine us following them.

What will we discover in that crossing? Surely, it will be holy and humbling in that sacred space.

Surely there will be joy, grace and peace. OSurely justice, truth and love. We will find hospitality there, not hostility, and friendship, not fear, and it will be good good for our own well-being, good for the poor and forgotten, good for our grandchildren's grandchildren..."

Let each in our faith tradition pray it may be SO

Steven E. Zack 1951 -- 2011

Community and business leaders have been "teeingit-up" for kids for the past seven years and their efforts have generated nearly $350,000 to support life-changing programs at Boys & Girls Clubs of Southeastern Michigan.

Steven E. Zack served as a board member for Boys & Girls Clubs of Southeastern Michigan for several years and Steve was widely known among insurance industry leaders. Sadly, Steve passed away in 2011. Steve's legacy is honored annually through this event, and with the presentation of the Steven E. Zack Cup to the winning foursome.

Boys & Girls Clubs of Southeastern Michigan serves 14,000 youth annually at 10 Clubs in Macomb, Wayne, Oakland and Washtenaw counties. The Clubs are open after school, on Saturdays and during school holidays and breaks - when kids are in greatest need of a safe haven. At the Club, youth development professionals lead members, ages 6-18 in life-enhancing programs and character development experiences. The Club helps kids use their after-school free time to grow into responsible, self-reliant, caring adults.

Dot Day

International Dot Day was Monday, Sept. 15, and this year, 1,795,672 people participated in 81 countries. Locally, Trombly Elementary School took part in the celebration. The story began with a book written by Peter H. Reynolds called The Dot, a story about a teacher who challenges a student to trust in her own abilities to 'make her mark' and that mark begins with a dot on a piece of paper that transforms her confidence into a self discovery journey that inspires children around the world. Above, Hannah Piccolo, Kaelyn Hermann and Parker Kinsley each hold the section of the dot they created. Below, a circle is divided into three parts, each part given to Hermann, Kinsley and Piccolo to create their own unique section of what will become a complete dot. At right, Seely Troffkin, with painted dots on her face, holds the book, 'The Dot.'

9-11: Never Forget project

Grosse Pointe North and South high school students marked the anniversary of 9/11, reminding us to honor our strength, courage and patriotism. With the help of the national Young America's Foundation, 2,977 American Flags were planted on the grounds of both schools. The flags represented the 2,977 people tragically killed in the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001. The foundation began the 9-11: Never Forget Project in 2003. Each year the foundation helps students across the country properly remember the anniversary of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks through their project. The foundation's goal is to ensure increasing numbers of young Americans understand and are inspired by the ideas of individual freedom, a strong national defense, free enterprise and traditional values.
