

Olympic swimmer: It's about being there

By Shirley A. McShane
Staff Writer

Sometimes it takes the strength and determination of an Olympic athlete to carry the simplest message to the masses. Children and adults repeatedly hear the maxims: Be all you can be. Believe in yourself. Just do it.

But applying those phrases to life's daily ups and downs is far more challenging.

Ask Shenea Taormina. The 27-year-old

Livonia native won a gold medal in the 1996 summer Olympics in Atlanta as part of the women's 800-meter freestyle relay team.

A longtime friend and former swim team competitor of physical education teacher Greg Wolff, Taormina visited Richard Elementary School in Grosse Pointe Farms last Wednesday and talked to Wolff's students.

"You are going to have a dream in your life. You are going to have people who won't believe in you," Taormina told the gym filled with 400 first-through-fifth-grade students. "You'll get bad news. You'll miss the cut. You'll get knocked down and you may even feel like quitting a sport or school or a job. I'm living proof not to quit. Don't let rejection get you down."

While Taormina's message was at times somber, it was real-life, and the energetic Olympian's humor and spirit radiated

Winterfest

This was the scene three weeks ago along the lakefront at Grosse Pointe Farms Pier Park as Farms residents laced up their skates, dragged out their sleds and bundled up for a frigid fun day. Andrew Peleman, 5, paused to catch his breath after pulling baby brother A.J., 1, along the frozen lake surface. Whether you're a fan of winter or not, spring is a mere 21 days away.

Farms police catch man who used bogus bomb to rob bank

State bomb squad detonates device on Lewiston

By Amy Andreou Miller
Staff Writer

A 40-year-old Detroit man, toting a device he said was a bomb, robbed the National Bank of Detroit's branch on the Hill in Grosse Pointe Farms Monday, Feb. 24, around 11 a.m.

The robber temporarily got away with $3,000 cash, but was apprehended seven minutes later by Grosse Pointe Farms Public Safety officers, who spotted the suspect on Lewiston, between Ridge and Kercheval.

Police saw the suspect duck into bushes in the front yard of a Lewiston home. Police say the suspect was in the bushes changing his clothes in an attempt to thwart eye-witness descriptions of him.

One witness was a bank employee who spotted the suspect fleeing north in a silver automobile he had parked on Kercheval. The police said the woman also obtained a portion of the license plate number.

Because of this description, several responding police units spotted the vehicle on Lewiston, confronted the individual, and found the $3,000 on him, said Farms detective Michael McCarthy.

The Farms police also observed a device that appeared to be a bomb in the suspect's vehicle. The officers kept Lewiston closed through the arrival of the Michigan State Police Bomb Squad, dispatched from Sterling Heights.

The squad detonated the bomb at the scene inside a device, about the size of a refrigerator, that the squad routinely uses for such purposes. The squad members determined the bomb — a small box shaped device with wire hanging from it — to be a fake.

The suspect had presented the bogus bomb to a female teller at the bank, verbally commanded her to avoid triggering any inter-office alarms, and demanded that she quickly give him all the money she had.

The teller telephoned the police as the suspect was leaving the bank.

The suspect was detained at the Farms police department's Appeals court: Gravel killers must get life

By Amy Andreou Miller
Staff Writer

Seven years and about $200,000 in prosecution costs later, it looks like the first-degree murder convictions of Kermit Haynes and Cortez Miller for killing Gravel.

And, worse, there wasn't even a trial.

Wayne County Prosecutor John D. O'Hair announced in a ruling handed down Friday, Feb. 14, that the Michigan Court of Appeals reinstated the first-degree murder convictions of Kermit Haynes and Cortez Miller for killing Gravel.

There is still a chance the Michigan Supreme Court will agree to hear an appeal by the defendants, but many involved in the case believe the chances are slim.

In writing the opinion for the Court of Appeals, Judge Kathleen Jansen stated:

"It is apparent that the trial court's decision at this late stage in the game is nothing more than an attempt to evade the clear dictates of this court and our Supreme Court that these defendants be sentenced to the adult terms of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole."

Gravel, a Grosse Pointe resident, had just left the Bay View Yacht Club on Clairpointe in Detroit when he was confronted by Haynes, Miller and others who, in the country's first-reported carjacking, demanded that Gravel surrender his vehicle. Instead, he attempted to drive away, and was fatally shot by Haynes using a handgun furnished by Miller.

According to the Wayne County prosecutor's office and Gravel family members, it is ridiculously slow and costly process — particularly considering there wasn't even a trial.

The murder occurred seven years ago this month and took this long to litigate even though both Cortez and Miller had confessed to the crime, eliminating the need for a trial.

Both defendants were juveniles at the time of the killing.

Miller was 15 years and 10 months old at the time of the murder; Haynes was 16 years and 8 months old. Seventeen years old is considered a legal adult in criminal cases.

Both defendants were originally sentenced by Detroit Recorder's Chief Judge Dalton A. Roberson to juvenile probation, which would involve placement with the Department of Social Services until the age of 21.

After appeals by the Wayne County prosecutor's office to the Michigan Court of Appeals, the sentences of juvenile probation were reversed, and Roberson was instructed to sentence Haynes and Miller as adults to life sentences without parole.

However, Roberson then allowed Cortez and Miller to withdraw their guilty pleas.

(For a complete history of the case including the many steps and reversals, see accompanying chronology.)

The accounting office of the Wayne County prosecutor's office estimates its attorneys spent 980 hours on the Gravel case.

Although the prosecuting attorney's office doesn't bill hourly for its services, an estimate using an average private law practice's billing standards of $150 to $200 per hour, determined that the Gravel case cost the county about $200,000, said Ward, who has been the chief assistant for 11 years.

And these costs don't include those of the public defenders for Cortez and Miller, also at public expense.

"This is a high bill unnecessarily incurred by the people considering the defendants pleaded guilty, and there was no trial. It's pretty rare," Ward said.

The costs added up because of voluminous appellate work, necessitated because Judge Roberson, among many inappropriate actions, applied the

Ghesquiere Park to get second soccer field

By Jim Stickford
Staff Writer

It might have taken a couple of years, but the folks at the Grosse Pointe Soccer Association have finally been able to begin construction of a second soccer field in Ghesquiere Park.

In 1995 the Grosse Pointe Woods City Council gave the association permission to build two soccer fields in the park. Woods director of public works Thomas Whitcher said the group built the first field last year, but had to wait until now to begin construction of the second field.

"The city council approved this project in '95," Whitcher said. "That's why we haven't notified area residents. The project was already approved and the public was notified then."

The new field, said Whitcher, is 150 feet by 90 feet. It is not a regulation sized soccer field.

Its dimensions are meant for young children. The GPSA will use the fields for the six years old and younger division.

Dave Harris of the Grosse Pointe Soccer Association said that the plan was always to split construction up and build the fields at different times. The budgeted cost of building the second field is about $7,000.

"Right now the city's department of public works is removing some trees around where the field will go," said Harris. "Once that's done, people from the association will start putting down the sod. We expect, if everything goes well, to be able to play on the field during the fall season."

Whitcher said that a total of 13 trees will be removed from the park. But only 10 of the trees are being taken out for the soccer field, which will be located west of the Kenmore parking lot between the Babe

Ruth fields and the residential property lines.

"We are cutting down three trees because they are unhealthy," said Whitcher. "One is dead and the other two are hollow at the base. They have to come down no matter what."

Money for the fields, said Harris, was raised through registration fees and through association fundraising efforts.

"Compared to other communities, the Grosse Pointes really don't have a lot of land set aside for children to play," said Harris. "We've taken down a minimal number of trees, and we've been working with the city and the Babe Ruth people to create the greatest good for the greatest number of people. We've worked to disrupt the park as little as possible and I believe the council's approval of our project was the right decision."

Raid of Woods resident's home nets $750,000 in cash

By Jim Stickford
Staff Writer

Grosse Pointe Woods public safety officers helped execute a search warrant, issued by Macomb County law enforcement officials, that netted over $750,000 in cash.

holding cell pending charges from the district attorney's office.

The Farms police department will seek federal prosecution of the suspect, McCarthy said. As of press time, the suspect was slated to be charged by the district attorney's office Tuesday, Feb. 25.

Police said the suspect, who grew up in Warren, has a criminal record, according to information they obtained from the Law Enforcement Information Network (LEIN) computer.

Also, the Farms police and FBI have requested the bank's videotape, which may have recorded the suspect's actions while he was inside the bank.

Detective Sergeant Tom Podaszewski of the Woods Public Safety Department said that on Thursday, Feb. 20, officers from the Roseville and Clinton Township police departments requested help in effecting a search warrant for a home in the 900 block of North Renaud in the Woods.

Podaszewski said that the Macomb officers had information connecting Woods resident Charles John Thomas with a Macomb drug ring that sold large volumes of marijuana. The search warrant was issued by the Macomb County prosecutor's office, and the Roseville and Clinton Township officers were looking for evidence of drug dealing.

"We never had any reason to suspect Thomas of anything," said Podaszewski. "His home was in the Woods, but his business was in St. Clair Shores. It is my understanding that the drug ring that he is accused of being a member of operated in Macomb County. There is no evidence currently suggesting that he did anything in the Pointes."

The warrant was executed at about 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, Feb. 20, said Podaszewski. The actual search was conducted by the Macomb officers, with himself, Detective Robert Kwiatkowski and public safety officers James Lafer and Cpl. Andy Pazuchowski standing by to lend a hand.

Officers searching Thomas' home found the money in several duffel bags stored in different parts of the house, said Podaszewski.

"Roseville and Clinton Township officers, as I said earlier, executed the warrant," said Podaszewski. "I think they were surprised to find that much cash in the house. The warrant was just one of four issued in the investigation. It's my understanding that officers involved in the investigation also found three tons of marijuana in a warehouse in Detroit."

Thomas was not at home at the time of the search, but was already in custody, said Podaszewski. He is currently being held in Macomb County jail on two counts of possession with intent to deliver. His bond is $5 million.

from the first row of fidgety first-graders all the way to the back of the room.

As she began her presentation she casually fished her gold medal out of a pants pocket. She held the brilliant gold disk and ribbon over her head and said she'd pass it around if the students promised to hold it for no longer than five seconds and to treat it with the respect it deserves.

She pointed to a spot on the disk, a chip actually, inflicted when her 8-year-old nephew accidentally dropped it on the pavement the day after she won it. This wasn't as upsetting to her as it sounds. She wants people, children especially, to see the medal.

"I'd rather have as many kids as possible hold this than have it sit in a box for my whole life," she said.

But Taormina didn't come to the elementary school to talk about her medal. That was a nice bonus that came as a result of her conquering her fears and overcoming her insecurities to make the Olympic team last year. That's what was and is important, she said.

"An athlete should enjoy sports, should feel accomplishment in standing up against fears and gaining the mental control to do her best. Winning a medal, breaking a record. Those things are a bonus, not the focus," Taormina said.

She said the original purpose of the Olympic games was to get the whole world together, set aside differences and interact in a peaceful manner.

"Now there is too much emphasis on winning," she said. "The media focuses on that too much. I think that's why there are so many problems with drugs and other things at the Olympics."

And that emphasis on winning was what kept Taormina away from qualifying for the Olympic team the first two times she tried.

She began swimming at 6 at the Livonia YMCA and then joined the Clarenceville Swim Club, swam all through high school at Livonia Stevenson (competing against Wolff, who swam for Plymouth Salem High) and then swam for the University of Georgia on a scholarship.

She tried out for the 1988 Olympics but didn't make it past the trials. After college graduation, she began training for the 1992 Olympic trials by swimming along with a college team. She missed again.

"Most of the girls on the team were taller than me," she said, telling how she began focusing more on what she didn't have than on what special talents she did have. "I started thinking that the taller girls had longer reaches and therefore an advantage over me."

She then began focusing so much on another swimmer that she became intimidated. This person was written about extensively in the newspapers and labeled "superhuman" because of her so-called amazing levels of endurance and ability. How do you go up against someone like that, she asked.

"I started thinking she was better than me," she said. "That is not the way to think. I realized I had to change the way I was thinking. I thought that instead of focusing on how I wasn't as tall, I had to focus on my advantage. I was lighter and therefore have less weight to haul through the water."

She began preparing for the 1996 Olympics by searching for a place to train. She applied to a program in Colorado that was seeking three men and three women who ranked in the top 16 in the world. Although Taormina ranked 19th in the world, she saw that only three women had applied for the program and sent a letter of application.

She didn't make it but found a supportive school coach who let her train with his students.

Once again she was at the tryouts. Once again she was up against the "superhuman" with the amazing abilities. But this time Taormina had her head in the right place. She realized that in order to achieve success, she had to focus at the core of her being on the fact that she was going to move her lighter frame through the water faster than her taller competitor with the longer reach.

"We were head-to-head in the water. And then I beat her by this much," she said, pausing to tap-tap the microphone, describing how her hand touched the wall in something less than a second faster than her competitor. "It was that close. We both went on to make the team, though in different events."

She left the students to carry with them the simple message: You don't have to be superhuman to reach the top either in music, athletics or whatever.

wrong court rule, allowing Haynes and Miller to withdraw their guilty pleas, Ward said.

Gravel's son, also named Benjamin, said that he and his family looked forward to the closure.

The lengthy legal process has stirred him to think badly of the court system in Detroit.

He stated that he believes that it is unfair that Detroit Recorder's Court is situated such that its jury pool is only Detroit residents.

It is Detroit Recorder's Court where murder cases are assigned, whereas Wayne County Circuit Court which hears civil arguments, draws from all of Wayne County for its jury selection.

"I feel that Judge Roberson can play right to his constituency which is the city of Detroit. He originally gave those murderers nothing more than a slap of the wrist," said Gravel, who sped in his car to the scene of his dying father in 1990 and rode in the ambulance with him.

Gravel said that he owes his gratitude to the prosecutor's office for pursuing justice in his father's case.

Ward said Gravel's thoughts on the courts providing an unfair situation may be addressed by the state Legislature.

In court reform slated to be passed in October 1997, the Legislature is planning to merge Detroit Recorder's Court with the Wayne County Circuit Court, thus drawing from all of Wayne County for jury selection even in criminal cases.

Chronology of Benjamin Gravel murder case

• Feb. 8, 1990 — Kermil Eldridge Haynes (DOB 7/8/73) and Cortez Miller (DOB 4/4/74) murder Grosse Pointe Farms businessman Benjamin Gravel.

• March 27, 1990 — Haynes and Miller plead guilty to the offenses with which they were charged: first-degree murder; assault with intent to rob while armed; and felony-firearm.

• April 2, 1990 — Following six days of dispositional hearings, Detroit Recorder's Chief Judge Dalton A. Roberson issues a written opinion and sentences Haynes and Miller to juvenile probation and orders they "be committed to the custody of the Michigan Department of Social Services for confinement in a proper institution until (they) reach the age of 21 years."

• May 17, 1993 — the Court of Appeals reverses Judge Roberson's sentencing decision, sending it back to Roberson to sentence Haynes and Miller as adults.

• Aug. 13, 1993 — the Court of Appeals denies Haynes and Miller's motion for rehearing the case. Upon denial, they apply for leave to appeal with the Supreme Court.

• April 8, 1994 — the Supreme Court denies Haynes and Miller's application for leave to appeal. Upon denial, they file a motion for reconsideration with the Supreme Court, which is denied on July 22, 1994.

• June 8, 1994 — sentencing scheduled. The matter is returned to the trial court (Judge Roberson) for imposition of an adult sentence consistent with the Court of Appeals' opinion of May 17, 1993.

• June 8, 1994 — Haynes and Miller each file, through their appointed counsels, motion for relief from judgment, and a motion for a stay of sentencing pending a decision on their motions for relief from judgment.

• June 15, 1994 — sentencing is adjourned.

• June 16, 1994 — sentencing is again adjourned.

• June 27, 1994 — sentencing again adjourned. Judge

Roberson issues an order requiring the prosecutor's office to respond to Haynes and Miller's motions for relief from judgment on or before July 11, 1994.

• June 29, 1994 — the prosecutor's office files with the Court of Appeals an application for leave to file an interlocutory appeal from Judge Roberson's order requiring it to respond to Haynes and Miller's motions for relief from judgment. The prosecutor's office also files a motion for immediate consideration of above-named application.

• July 1, 1994 — Haynes and Miller files motions to withdraw their guilty pleas and for an evidentiary hearing with the trial court. Also, July 1, Haynes and Miller inform prosecutor's office that since they withdrew their motions for relief from judgment in Judge Roberson's court, it made the prosecutor's application moot.

• July 11, 1994 — The parties appeared before Judge Roberson, who directs the prosecutor's office to respond in writing to defendant's motions to withdraw their guilty pleas, and for an evidentiary hearing.

• July 13, 1994 — The Court of Appeals enters an order granting the prosecutor's motion for immediate consideration, and denies the prosecutor's application as moot.

• Aug. 24, 1994 — Judge Roberson adjourns the oral arguments on Haynes and Miller's motions to September 14, 1994.

• Aug. 1, 1994 — Prosecutor's office files an answer to Haynes and Miller's motions to withdraw guilty pleas and for an evidentiary hearing.

• Sept. 14, 1994 — Judge Roberson issues an order scheduling a Dec. 9, 1994 evidentiary hearing on Haynes and Miller's motions to withdraw their guilty pleas.

• Sept. 26, 1994 — Prosecutor's office files two pleadings: an application for leave to interlocutorily appeal Judge Roberson's Sept. 14, 1994 order; and a motion for immediate consideration of the said application.

• Nov. 21, 1994 — Court of Appeals issues an order denying the prosecutor's application for leave to appeal.

• Nov. 28, 1994 — Prosecutor's office files with the Michigan Supreme Court an application for leave to interlocutorily appeal the court of appeals order of Nov. 21, 1994.

• Dec. 7, 1994 — The state's Supreme Court issues an order vacating the trial court's order of Sept. 14, 1994, directing that there be an evidentiary hearing on Haynes and Miller's motions to withdraw their guilty pleas.

In the same order, the state Supreme Court directs that Haynes and Miller be sentenced as adults, as also directed by the Court of Appeals.

• Dec. 19, 1994 — Judge Roberson sentences Haynes and Miller as adults to life imprisonment without possibility of parole.

• May 4, 1995 — An evidentiary hearing is conducted.

• Sept. 25, 1995 — After the evidentiary hearing was transcribed, the trial court (Judge Roberson) listens to the arguments of respective counsel.

• Oct. 23, 1995 — Judge Roberson allows Haynes and Miller's motion to withdraw their guilty pleas.

Farms stockbroker sees dividends in historic restoration

By Margie Reins Smith
Assistant Editor

When Al Moran decided to lend a hand to the Grosse Pointe Historical Society's restoration project, he really meant "a hand."

Moran didn't want to sit at a desk making phone calls; he couldn't see himself peddling raffle tickets, or selecting wall paper, or posing for publicity photos.

What he did — literally — involved rolling up his sleeves and getting his hands dirty.

Moran has painted the exterior of the house; removed tree stumps from the yard; laid sod; supervised the tear-off and replacement of the roof. Moran has wielded a shovel, a broom, a wheelbarrow, assorted hammers and wrenches and levels and paintbrushes and more. He has sanded, painted, cleaned up, knocked down, picked up, shined, polished, fixed-up, repaired.

Not one to sit still for long, Moran also skis, swims and roller blades. He lives a few miles from Grosse Pointe Memorial Church (where he is a trustee). He often walks to and from church on Sunday mornings.

Moran and Tom Singelyn of Grosse Pointe Farms are co-chairmen of the Provencal-Weir House restoration project, an approximately $125,000 three-year endeavor, now nearly complete, that has restored Grosse Pointe's oldest structure to its historic glory.

Moran joined the Grosse Pointe Historical Society about six years ago.

"Somebody talked my wife, Ruth, into joining," he said. "And she turned around and volunteered me."

"I sat around for a few years, not doing much. Then Olivia Mandel, the society's president-elect, called me. She pointed out that I hadn't been to any meetings and she asked me to get more involved."

"I thought I could probably help."

Moran referred to what he called his "give-back" philosophy.

"I want to leave something

POINTER OF INTEREST

behind for a community that's been so good to me. There are takers," he said, "and givers. People can be takers and givers at different times in their lives."

Moran's family's roots are deep in old Grosse Pointe. His grandfathers lived side-by-side on Lakeshore in the early part of the 20th century. Moran Road in the Farms was named after some prominent members of his family.

"My grandfather on my mother's side, Carl E. Schmidt, was a leather tanner. He held the patent for white leather. And he was a police commissioner in Detroit."

"Next door was my father's family, Fred T. Moran, who was the fire commissioner and owned Peninsula Stove Co."

"I remember them both. I visited them both when Lakeshore was a dirt road. I also remember electric cars in Grosse Pointe. I remember the fire that destroyed the bridge to Belle Isle. I remember an amusement park near the Belle Isle bridge."

Moran was born in Detroit in 1919. He lived near Indian Village until he was 10 years old, when his family moved to Oscoda. They moved back to Grosse Pointe when he was 17 and he graduated from Grosse Pointe High School.

"I worked my way through Michigan State College," he said. Moran rolled up his sleeves and took jobs washing dishes, scrubbing floors and waiting on tables.

He was a member of the school's ROTC program and graduated in 1941 with a bachelor of arts degree and a commission as a second lieutenant in the army.

"I went to Fort Benning and became a glider pilot. I was eventually sent overseas and ended up in the Office of Strategic Services, where I helped prepare canisters to drop behind the lines in France, during the war," he said.

After World War II, Moran went to Washington, D.C., to work in a brokerage firm. He came to Detroit to work at a firm called Watling, Lerchen & Co.

"I started out marking the board and working in the back office," he said.

Al and Ruth Moran married in 1952. They lived in Indian Village for a while, where Al renovated a garage apartment. They moved to Grosse Pointe and bought a four-family flat on Neff.

"We lived in one apartment and I renovated the rest. When we moved in," he said, "rent was $25 a month. Two and a half years later, after I fixed the place up, rent was $125 a month."

The brokerage firm where Moran worked was eventually sold to A.G. Edwards & Sons Inc. Today, he is vice president of the company.

The Morans have two children, Sara and Jeffrey. They have six grandchildren.

Moran has always been interested in history and in his family's heritage.

"My grandfather had a log cabin full of Indian artifacts. He was a tanner. He had Chief Pontiac's signature on animal skins. He had old fishing hooks; tomahawks; guns; buckskin clothing; weapons. It was all sold during the Depression," he said.

"The most fun I've had recently, was helping the Historical Society for the last two years with its springtime benefit, the 'Upscale Garage Sale.'"

His involvement with the historical society will continue, he said, even though the Provencal-Weir House project is nearly complete.

"This is not something that's owned by a small group of people. This house — this history — is owned by the whole community. We need to give younger generations a view of the past. When we (members of the Historical Society) pass away, we will leave this legacy to the community."

Al Moran of Grosse Pointe Farms is proud of the Grosse Pointe Historical Society's recently completed restoration project, the Provencal-Weir House. The oldest building in Grosse Pointe was built around 1823 by Pierre Provencal, an early French settler.

Park mayor notes importance of maintaining Fox Creek

By Jim Stickford
Staff Writer

Calling the city of Detroit's maintenance of Fox Creek "pathetic," Grosse Pointe Park mayor Palmer Heenan said that it's up to Grosse Pointe Park to take care of its interests should Lake St. Clair reach dangerous water levels.

Grosse Pointe Park resident Fred Olds, during the public comment portion of Monday's meeting, asked the city council what, if any, were the city's plans in case of a flood along Fox Creek in Detroit.

Heenan responded to Olds' question, saying that when it came to maintaining Fox Creek, the city of Detroit's efforts were pathetic. Heenan went on to say that the city seems to have money for stadiums and other projects, but when it comes to maintaining infrastructure in neighborhoods, there's nothing done.

"We're a victim of bad public relations," said Heenan. "When we discharge our unprocessed sewage into Fox Creek, the creek is supposed to be able to handle up to 4,000 cubic feet of water, but Detroit has not dredged the creek in over 25 years, so I doubt it can handle 1,000 cubic feet of water. If Detroit took better care of Fox Creek, perhaps Detroit residents wouldn't have the problems they're having. Detroit has promised to maintain the creek as required in contracts with the Park, but it hasn't kept its end of the deal."

City manager Dale Krajniak said that in the past, the western wall of the creek has reportedly been breached. Detroit residents who live by the creek maintain that sewage has spilled onto their property as a result of this breach.

This has resulted in a lawsuit by Fox Creek residents against the Park and Detroit. Heenan pointed out that the Park is in the middle of a $20 million construction that will end discharges into Fox Creek.

Krajniak, in response to Olds' question, said that during the lake's highest recorded water levels in 1986, there was no flooding of Fox Creek. He also said the creek is a couple of blocks from the Grosse Pointe Park border, and for lake water to spill over to the city from the creek, it would have to cover considerable ground in Detroit.

New speeds posted on Michigan's freeways

On-time installation of new signs mark Gov. John Engler's commitment to boosting maximum speed limits on most Michigan freeways, from 65 to 70 mph.

When Engler announced increased speed limits in December, he noted that signs would be posted over the next few months. The Michigan Department of Transportation (M-DOT) road crews that plow snow would be posting the 1,500 new speed limit signs as the weather permitted.

"Safety continues to drive transportation considerations," said Engler, citing the results of a three month study which established five 70 mph freeway test zones and showed no significant increase in speeds. The governor also noted the partnerships between state agencies and private sector investing in the three E's of traffic safety — education, enforcement and engineering.

State Transportation Director Robert Welke confirmed that M-DOT will have 1,592 miles of freeway posted at 70 mph by the March 1 commitment to the public. However, Welke reminds motorists that for the next week, motorists must follow the posted speed limits.

The governor's December decision to raise Michigan speed limits results in 1,592 miles of freeway posted at 70 mph, 108 miles of freeway at 65 mph, 20 miles of freeway at 60 mph, and 141 miles at 55 mph, with the Mackinac Bridge maximum speed remaining at 45 mph. In addition, motorists can expect to pay double fines for moving violations at emergency scenes, school zones and in construction zones.

OTT ROBINSON

Life terms for Gravel killers again affirmed

After seven years of litigation, the Michigan Court of Appeals last week reinstated the first-degree murder convictions of Kermit Haynes and Cortez Miller for the February 1990 killing of a Grosse Pointe resident, Benjamin Gravel.

It is possible that the defendants still could find grounds for a further appeal, but it was the diligence of Wayne County Prosecutor John D. O'Hair and his assistants that is finally bringing these two killers to justice.

In fact, the county prosecutor twice had to appeal to higher courts from the sentencing imposed by Detroit Recorder's Chief Judge Dalton R. Roberson, who, after accepting both defendants' pleas of guilty, first sentenced them to juvenile probation.

Without the successful appeal by the prosecutor, that sentence would have placed both defendants under the jurisdiction of the state Department of Social Services until they had reached the age of 21.

Opinion

Then, in a later appeal, just now overturned by the court of appeals, Roberson had permitted both to withdraw their pleas of guilty to their murderous participation in Detroit's first carjacking episode.

Up to this point, both have been serving time in the Wayne County Jail but unless further appeals are lodged, they will be transferred to a state prison for life terms without parole.

Earlier, the appellate court also had instructed Roberson to sentence both defendants as adults to life sentences without parole.

That order, too, was appealed to the Supreme Court which affirmed the life sentences, but did so without "prejudice to subsequent consideration of motions to withdraw the pleas of guilty."

With that invitation, the defendants once more appealed and Roberson granted their pleas to withdraw their pleas of guilty. This, judgment, too, was appealed to the Court of Appeals which just last week again reversed Roberson.

In effect giving Roberson a strong slap on the wrist, the appellate court, after carefully reviewing the records of the first proceedings in March 1990, found that Roberson had applied the wrong court rule.

It added that the applicable court rule permits withdrawal of guilty pleas only if "there is an error in the plea proceeding that would entitle the defendant to have the plea set aside."

In this case, however, the court found no error in the plea proceeding to justify setting aside the defendants' guilty pleas. It added that "the trial court clearly abused its discretion in granting the defendants' motion to withdraw their guilty pleas."

After reversing the trial court's orders, the appellate court emphasized that "defendants' convictions and sentences to life imprisonment without the possibility of parole as adult offenders are hereby affirmed."

In this brutal killing, Gravel, a Grosse Pointe businessman, had just driven away from the Bayview Yacht Club when he was confronted by Haynes, Miller and several others who demanded that Gravel surrender his car to them.

When Gravel tried to drive away after the gang had hauled a tree into his path, Haynes shot and killed him with a handgun furnished by Miller. Neither of the young men showed any remorse at their hearings and trials, but insisted it was Gravel's fault for not giving up his car to them.

We believe we are expressing the majority opinion of the Grosse Pointe community that justice is long overdue in this case, and that Pointers would join us in hoping that the recent reversal will be the final action to put these young killers behind bars for life.

Even that incarceration cannot restore the human life taken by these young men but it ought to serve as a warning to youthful gangs that when a prosecutor and his staff stick to the law and the facts, they can force conviction, even on a reluctant judge.

But justice obviously should not be so long delayed.

GOP governors claim credit

Nine Republican governors issued their own individual comments on President Clinton's State of the Union speech, and most of them, including Gov. John Engler of Michigan, practically broke their right arms patting themselves on the back.

Of the nine, the only one who gave the president at least an even break was Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Almond, who also offered the shortest commentary of the group:

"I certainly welcome the president's focus on education as I work to build a better education system in Rhode Island. Having the federal government as a partner is something I welcome."

At the other extreme, Engler offered the longest and most self-serving of the criticisms in his partial text which follows:

"Knowing that it is the states, and not the federal government, that are primarily responsible for education, I hope we can count on the president's assistance in improving the quality offered to our kids."

"Since Michigan is a national leader in the charter school movement, the president's words were very encouraging. In the past, he has been very supportive of our efforts and I intend to take full advantage of the new money the president has pledged to help the charter school movement."

Michigan's state government no doubt made its contribution to the rise in the state's employment, which the governor bragged about, but private enterprise did more and the federal government probably did as much as the state did.

In addition, Engler once more cited his 21 cuts in government costs, without, of course, mentioning the 50 percent increase in the sales tax, perhaps the most regressive tax on the books in this state.

The other seven governors also tended to claim credit for their states for first developing Clinton's ideas, and perhaps some of them did make some contribution.

But we think it might have been more courteous and even better politics for all the governors to have expressed appreciation for the friendly cooperation Clinton offered than to seek to claim the credit for most of his new ideas on education.

Starr decides to stay in his job

Kenneth Starr, admitting he had made a serious error earlier, announced last week that he had revised his schedule and now would continue on the job to complete his work.

As the special prosecutor in the Whitewater case that involved the Clintons, Starr had been widely criticized after announcing he would quit Aug. 1 to accept a top position at Pepperdine University.

The criticism came from Republicans as well as Democrats, but apparently Starr was convinced by the anger of his own staffers at being left without their leader in their arduous assignment to wind up the Whitewater investigations.

Newspaper editorial writers also offered negative assessments of Starr's original action. The New York Times, for example, felt that Starr's decision to leave his post "reflects a selfish indifference to his important civic obligations."

The Times has been one of the newspapers that claimed to have begun the Watergate investigation by its reporting, although several papers contest that claim or insist the case still doesn't amount to much.

The White House staff, at first jubilant over Starr's leaving, suddenly was silenced, and so were most of the critics of his decision to quit.

It is no secret that Starr has continued to practice law privately during the course of the investigation, with the result that he has become one of the best-paid lawyers in the land.

That private practice, and especially his work for the tobacco industry, already had drawn criticism, as have his continuing contributions to GOP candidates for public office.

We think, however, he now has made the right decision. He now apparently believes he has an obligation to the public as well as to his staff to stick with Whitewater until the basic investigatory work is completed, no matter how long it takes.

Public questions school plans

Gov. John Engler's recently announced plans for the state to take over school districts that have low test scores and high dropout rates do not rate very well with the Michigan public.

A recent poll commissioned by the Detroit Free Press and taken by EPIC MRA, a Lansing polling firm, reported that 53 percent of the respondents thought Engler's proposal was a bad idea and 32 percent favored it.

John Truscott, an Engler spokesperson, contended, however, that he viewed the numbers as "tremendously positive" in view of the "revolutionary aspects" of the takeover idea.

When asked who is to blame for the poor performance in the ailing school districts, most respondents cited a lack of parental involvement, while only 9 percent blamed poor teachers.

Basically, however, the survey showed that it is true that many Michiganders dislike the governor's proposals, although Truscott may also be on track in saying the governor's ideas are running ahead of those of the general public.

Test story failed

To the Editor:

I find it ironic that writing the article in your Feb. 20 edition "Second round of high school proficiency tests taxing to students," proved overly taxing for your staff reporter.

I refer to the quote "The whole intent of the test is to improve instruction for kids, based on very high principals (sic)." Perhaps if, in high school, your staff writer had had a principal with very high, or just medium high, principles, she would have used the word "principles" instead of "principals." In this context we were always taught to think "a" for "adjective," and that "principal," with an "a," was either an adjective or a surrogate for an adjective, as in "principal" for the principal teacher in a school; and that principle was, and still is, always a noun.

Now, with just about every high school student in Grosse Pointe reading the page one article, a whole generation of students will, unless we enlighten them, misuse these words and, not so incidentally, give the wrong answer if the question comes up in a future testing situation.

I trust that neither your principles nor your principals will prevent the publication of this letter.

Thank you

To the Editor:

To paraphrase an old slogan: "If you read the Grosse Pointe News, you'll know."

Recently we placed an ad in the Grosse Pointe News classifieds, detailing our last Wednesday of the month "bag day" at the clearance corner of the Grosse Pointe Unitarian church.

The response was phenomenal. Customers were lined up, on a bitterly cold day, well before the 10 a.m. opening.

We questioned the new customers on how they heard about the sale. We heard the same response over and over. They saw the ad in the Grosse Pointe News.

Thank you for making bag day an outstanding success.

Thank you for helping

To the Editor:

My husband and I were taking a walk on Lincoln Road on the morning of Valentine's Day. I slipped and fell on ice, that was covered by snow, and broke my wrist. The pain was excruciating and because of it I was weak and wobbly.

I could barely stand and knew it was impossible for me to walk back to my home. About this time, a woman in a passing car stopped and asked if she could help. She was a goddess. She drove us home. I don't know how we would have gotten home without her help. I will always be extremely grateful to this kind lady and want to say thank you very much for helping us through a tough time.

Making things even

I remember an old TV commercial that featured a graying grandfatherly type sitting on the front steps of his ocean-front home, enjoying a bowl of Raisin Bran and milk.

He's happy. He's contentedly spooning up crisp little flakes and plump pieces of fruit.

The camera circles and birds chirp and waves crash on the shore and the sun glints off grandfather's spoon.

Then his brow wrinkles. He frowns. He pushes his cereal around inside his bowl. He tips the bowl. He scrapes the sides. He sips some milk, ever so delicately. He picks at the remaining raisins with thumb and forefinger.

He grows more and more concerned and begins to show signs of stress. He gets crabby.

He's trying to make the raisins and the bran and the milk come out even. He wants his first and last spoonfuls of breakfast to contain the same proportions of bran flakes, raisins and milk.

This is not just a commercial. It's a metaphor for life.

Manipulating things so they come out even is an never-ending task.

I generally run out of money before I run out of month. My spaghetti sauce gets eaten before the pasta is gone.

Many are left with milk after the granola has been eaten; dressing pooled in the bottom of the salad bowl after the lettuce is gone; a bowl of chips after the dip has been dipped; remaining muffin long after the butter has been spread.

Remember the last time you ate a piece of birthday cake and ice cream? Or apple pie a la mode? Did you end up even?

Of course not. I'll bet your popcorn is gone before the movie is over. Before the previews are finished, even.

Margie Reins Smith

would address this situation. But no. They make it worse. I think, perhaps, deliberately.

The makers of hair products put shampoo and conditioner in the same size bottles. Everybody knows shampoo will get used up weeks before the conditioner is gone.

Buns and hot dogs are packaged in different numbers. Don't most of us put one dog at a time on one bun?

I take two aspirin at a time, right? Why is there always one aspirin left in the bottom of the bottle?

Suits with two pairs of pants? For sure, one who purchases these will outgrow the pants but not the jacket; or spill red wine on one pair of pants and catch the pocket of the other pair on the door handle of a parked car.

Envelopes and stationery never come out even. Usually two or three envelopes are left over. The leftovers are always an odd size, too, and no other stationery will ever fit neatly inside them.

The washcloths are ragged and unusable long before the matching towels get threadbare.

When I make a layered casserole like lasagna, the sauce and the noodles and two kinds of cheese never come out even.

Salt and pepper never come out right. Neither do invitations; address labels; stamps; shots on a roll of film; shopping days until Christmas; clean clothes at the end of a vacation; jars of peanut butter and jelly.

The worst, however, is what happens to something known as "an outfit" or what fashion mavens call "an ensemble." The pieces of clothing that make up an ensemble never — never — mature at the same rate.

You buy a suit — a skirt and belt with a matching jacket. You find a blouse with the perfect collar to complement the jacket. You buy a scarf that picks up the exact shades of hunter green and burgundy in the tweed of the skirt. You find a lapel pin, perhaps. You purchase hose in a shade that works with a new pair of leather pumps.

You look mah-ve-lous. You feel terrific. Once. Maybe twice.

Then, a few months later, you leave home decked out in this perfectly coordinated ensemble, except . . . uh, the heels are a little too high to wear that day because you'll be walking a lot, so you substitute a pair of black flats.

You notice the pantyhose have a run. You change into the only available clean pair — which are beige.

Then you notice a little spot of salad dressing on the collar of the blouse, so you take it off and substitute a turtleneck sweater.

You can't find the scarf. You've already lost one earring. The jacket has a button hanging by a thread.

So you wear the skirt (which is still in perfect shape) with a red blazer. Tan hose. Black flat shoes. No scarf. The wrong purse. A wrinkled trench coat.

Resplendent in this mismatched, hit-and-miss, last-minute collection of the cleanest and most available ensemble substitutes, you're sure to run into a prospective employer or an old boyfriend or somebody you desperately want to impress.

It's a metaphor for life.

No, it IS life.

Signs of the times

Always on the lookout for what's new, sharp-eyed Mike Mengden, of the Farms, reports the latest addition to the Village shopping strip:

The signs welcoming people to the three-block district now also announce the Village Association's Internet web page at www.thevillagegp.com.

"It's in big type — you can't miss it," Mike says.

On the other hand, the signboards that used to mark the beginning of the City's limits on Jefferson and Mack have been stripped of any message and have stood blank for many months, except for a polite little "Face Lift in Progress" note. "Only in Grosse Pointe would they bother to do that," says Mike, chuckling.

Bug in the web: If you follow the sign, you may have a little trouble getting on that Village web page. According to Village Association president Jerry Valente, "The person setting it up thought the 'the' wasn't part of the name." Until it's fixed, the web-enabled can access it at <http://www.villagegp.com>. It should be "thevillagegp.com" any day, now.

Designed to acquaint newcomers and outsiders with the strip, the Internet site features color photos, a hot-linked directory of businesses, a map of "where to find us," a description of the Village and a schedule of annual events, such as the Santa Claus Parade, Grosse Pointe's Greatest Garage Sale, Music on the Plaza and A Taste of Grosse Pointe.

Encyclopedia Pointe-annica

When a friend dropped the tip that Grosse Pointe is mentioned in the current Encyclopedia Britannica, FYI had to check it out.

Sure enough, in the main library's copy, Vol. 5, Page 512, a total of 23 lines immortalizing all five Pointes by name with such well-deserved praise as, "five exclusive northeastern residential communities of Detroit . . . known as the Gold Coast . . . developed by wealthy Detroiters . . . later, notable Michigan industrialists built large lakeshore homes there."

Any mention of G.P.'s northern rival, Birmingham, in the encyclopedia? Only the ones in England and Alabama. Sorry about that, B'ham.

Piano bar on the block

Something's missing — Sparky Herbert's piano bar.

Rescued from the about-to-be-demolished Old Place, the famous showpiece held a key position on the minitstage at Sparky's last year but finally had to make way for more seating at the popular GP watering hole.

Where now? Look no farther than DuMouchelle's Art Gallery downtown, where it's due to be sold to whatever Pointe nostalgia buff bids the highest.

Play this one right and you might get it for a song.

What's in? — A name!

You've got to love those special Pointe places to live that have their own names, like:

- The Buck-Wardwell House, at Jefferson and Three Mile.
- The Isidore Cadieux Farmhouse, on Jefferson and Notre Dame.
- Dodge Place (formerly Rose Terrace), across Jefferson from Fisher.
- Grosse Pointe Manor, condo at 616 to 646 Cadieux.
- Grosse Pointe Terraces, St. Paul between Cadieux and Notre Dame.
- The Murray W. Sales House, at 251 Lincoln in the City.

The William and Mary Chase Perry Stratton House, on Three Mile in the Park.

The Sycamores, A Private Community, off Jefferson across from Bon Secours.

Twin Gates, estate on Lakeshore near the Art Van house.

Village Condominium, 687-711 St. Clair.

The Voight-Kreit House, on Jefferson at Bedford.

Winwood Manor, the old Georgian colonial house at 570 Cadieux.

Femail

I go into the little post office in back of Cavanagh's in the Village to mail a package and the clerk tells me the postage will be 78 cents, then reaches into a drawer, pulls out one 78-cent stamp and puts it on the package.

"I didn't know there was a 78 cent stamp," I exclaim, impressed. "Who's on it?" "Alice Paul," answers the clerk.

"Alice Paul?" I ask, puzzled. "Alice Paul," pipes up the little lady in the blue rain hat, waiting in line behind me. "She's an old feminist."

Why change what's working?

By Brian Baker

Few people would quarrel with a promise of "improved health benefits." Which is what the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is counting on with its proposed changes in certain national air quality standards.

As a responsible participant in continuing efforts to reduce air pollution, we are concerned that the case for changing the current rules isn't as compelling as the EPA would have us believe.

For one, there's considerable scientific uncertainty over the supposed improvements in health.

There's also a curious lack of focus on changes in daily routines the public may have to make as states struggle to meet tougher new federal air standards.

And finally, little credit has been given to current rules which have improved air quality considerably, and will continue to in the future.

Let's examine where we are today. Later, we'll look at the science.

Briefly, the Clean Air Act requires EPA to review national standards every five years. While the law says cost shouldn't be a factor in establishing health-related standards, it also says nothing about unnecessarily changing standards that are working.

Ozone

Ozone is a major constituent of the smog normally found in urban areas. Current ozone rules are tough; areas exceeding the standards for just several hours over a three-year period are deemed to be in "nonattainment."

The goal of the standards is to reduce pollution — and they're working.

According to the EPA's Air Quality Trends, nationwide ozone levels declined by 6 percent from 1986 to 1995. Since 1990, when 98 areas were identified as "problems," there's been good progress.

About half now meet the ozone standards, and the remaining areas are taking steps to move into attainment.

Particulate matter

ticulate matter — including road dust, soot, wood smoke and other smaller particles.

The goal of the current standard (PM 10) is to reduce the amount of particulate matter measuring 10 microns or less in diameter.

For reference, human hair measures between 50 and 70 microns. Like ozone, particulate matter is decreasing — by 22 percent between 1988 and 1995 — and the number of areas meeting current standards is growing.

Under EPA's new guidelines, many areas that now meet current air quality standards won't pass muster; they'll be reclassified as nonattainment areas.

As a result, many states will be forced to develop aggressive and far-reaching plans to bring their counties and cities into compliance with the new rules. Certainly, businesses will be affected, but so, too, will the public.

Some of these steps will be beneficial, some will be a burden and some will be downright meddlesome.

Annual vehicle inspection and maintenance programs, for example, are probably a good idea.

But big changes like carpooling and greater use of mass transportation may be more difficult to accommodate.

Bans on backyard charcoal grilling, wood-burning fireplaces and power lawn mowers will certainly raise hackles.

The evidence is clear. Current standards work; they have reduced pollution, and reductions will continue.

EPA, we believe, needs to demonstrate handily that new controls are needed and that they would provide significant health benefits.

Unfortunately, the weight of science doesn't seem to be on their side.

VA offers aid to victims

By Jesse Brown

Secretary of Veterans Affairs

No one who has heard or read about incidents of sexual assault against women in the military can feel anything but deep regret, sorrow and perhaps anger, that such an incident could have occurred to someone while in service to our country. It is wrong for any woman to undergo such a devastating experience.

But in the military, where trust and camaraderie are such an integral part of military life, a profound sense of betrayal compounds the other devastating effects sexual trauma can have on a person's physical and emotional health.

VA has a cadre of dedicated, compassionate professionals who can provide confidential priority counseling and treatment for the victims of sexual assault, battery or harassment while on active duty.

Since 1992, when legislation authorized VA to provide sexual trauma counseling, more than 15,000 women veterans have been treated in Vet Centers and medical centers.

We have been able to help them regain their self-confidence and self-esteem, and improve the quality of their lives.

To reach us, women veterans can call our national toll-free telephone number — (800) 827-1000 — and be put in touch with a women veterans' coordinator at a VA regional office.

All in a month's work

To begin, let me say how grateful I was to be home when the disaster occurred. Three ladies just happened to be hanging wallpaper in a bedroom and I was sitting at the computer in an upstairs room. My thoughts were interrupted by an unfamiliar noise which I followed down the hall and discovered it was coming from under the sink in a recently renovated bathroom. To say it took the form of a geiser is an understatement.

Having had my hair done in the morning, my instinctive move, that only a woman could understand, was to grab the shower cap from the back of the bathroom door. After screaming an unprintable expletive, the wallpaper girls flew to my side and were able to turn off the valve under the sink while I put my finger in the dike. Eight beach towels didn't seem to begin to blot the flooded floor, but we finally controlled the onslaught and filled the tub with wet towels. I then headed for the mud room and garage under the bathroom where I viewed Niagara Falls in motion. It was truly one of the wonders of the world. I was speechless with shock and then started to laugh. There was no choice, as the situation was ridiculous. My help cometh from the Lord and an incredibly fast response from the contractor and plumbers. The fact that we were painting the basement and had emptied the contents of the store-room made negotiating the basement in search of pipes and faucets particularly challenging.

Long story short, my husband finally had the skating rink he had always wanted and conveniently it formed in our unheated, but attached garage. The fact that ceiling tiles and various rugs, hoses and garbage cans were being fast frozen on the surface added more interest to the situation. It also made navigating back and forth from the repair trucks to the house a little tricky. These kind men stayed long enough to turn off the water and clear a passage for us to our car.

When the water was turned back on the pipes immediately froze again. I was scheduled to leave town in two days and was assured that I could keep my plans and cope with the mess upon my return. After notifying our insurance company and photographing the chaos and various items one would find in a mudroom and garage, hats, coats, chests of drawers, cleaning supplies, golf clubs, carpeting, pictures, rolls of paper goods etc., I left town.

I have returned and it is time to adjust to reality.

I thought the avalanche of water was horrendous, but it was nothing compared to the paper work. Those of you who have never had to file an insurance claim, thank your lucky stars. Talk about red tape! The company with which we dealt was/is terrific in their response and communication. The adjuster who was sent was superb, no complaints. She did everything possible to assist me with the information I would have to document before a settlement could be made.

However, no one but the homeowner can provide accurate details as to purchases, dates, descriptions and approximate values. Estimates sometimes have to be guesstimates when receipts and warranties cannot be located. Considerable leg-work is involved and telephone time too while we locate catalogs, framing costs, refinishing prices, etc. To be honest, my filing system is less than perfect. I keep two file cabinets and jam receipts, warranties, etc. in folders that have grown to humongous proportions. Somewhere in time someone told me to keep things for seven years and I have erred in the extreme. When my parents died I found receipts dating to 1928 in their files. Must be a gene thing. We hang on to things, all of our family is guilty. The puzzle is figuring where the one you are searching for is in the maze.

Gratefully the water is flowing in the proper pipes and I can hear the plasters at work, repairing the damage. The rooms will be repainted and someday, when the thaw comes and the sun shines and the check arrives I'll go shopping for replacement items and laugh at the memory. Sure I will!

'Schindler's List' on prime-time television

By Victor Bloom, M.D.,
Special Writer

Stephen Spielberg's classic film on the Holocaust during World War II came to the attention of more people in one night than all those who saw the film in movie theaters a few years ago. Experts wondered what would be the impact of this unprecedented historical event when it comes into a person's home. Perhaps it comes more directly and personally than in a large theater with lots of people and a big silver screen. One wonders how much, at this late date, the impact of this attempt at genocide is felt.

Spielberg himself advised parents at the beginning of the presentation that this was no film for small children. His own small children had not seen it. But he would want them to see it when they were of high school age. He would want them to know what happened.

What happened was that the leaders of Nazi Germany, the Third Reich, decided on a plan. It was called, "The Final Solution." The final solution to what? The Jewish question. What was the Jewish question? The question seemed to be to those in power, should the Jewish race be allowed to exist? The Nazi propaganda machine, in the wake of the Versailles treaty after World War I, in which Germany was defeated and rendered hopelessly abject, whipped up a fury of anti-Semitism, in which the Jew was stereotyped as genetically corrupt and in league with the devil. It was considered a defective race, in comparison with the Aryan race, which built on the German myth of the "folk", wholesome and handsome blonde-haired men and women who were going to save the world and be the hope of the future.

The Nazis fomented racial theories built on fantastic stereotypes. The Aryans were the "Master Race" and the Jews were consigned as defec-tives for elimination, extermination, like vermin, along with gypsies, mental defectives, homosexuals, communists and intellectuals that were considered a threat to The New Order. These included clergy who spoke against the Nazi regime and Slavs who were also considered inferior. Synagogues and books were burned.

The movie showed Jews being kicked out of their homes while Nazi party officials and friends occupied them. They were herded with their meager possessions and marched to ghettos, where they were housed in crowded and unsanitary conditions. They were not allowed to do business and their children were not allowed to go to school. German Jews who had considered themselves German citizens and valued members of the community were no exception.

The movie showed these forced marches and mass migrations and also individuals and how they reacted. Mostly they reacted in stunned disbelief. They were completely uprooted and at the mercy of the authorities. They did not know what would happen to them. They could not imagine that they would be herded into slave labor camps or exterminated in the death camps. Such outcomes were unimaginable, unthinkable, and yet the unthinkable happened.

Six million Jews were systematically slaughtered. The Germans kept good records, so there is little argument about the numbers, except by a few mad revisionists who said the whole thing didn't happen, that the Holocaust was a trumped up non-event by cunning and powerful Jewish propagandists. There are those who want to believe it never happened.

The movie showed the degrees to which some Nazis exploited the situation to party and make money. It also showed random acts of violence and sadism. It showed many Nazi officers who were seemingly without guilt, utterly cold and remorseless, without feeling for their fellow man. Anyone could be shot or beaten at any time for any reason. This included old men and women as well as children. It is a wonder that the Nazi high command could have gay, drunken parties and orgies and celebrate holidays and birthdays. It is a wonder that so many human beings could have been so inhumane.

The movie played for 3 1/2 hours with no commercial interruption. The Ford Motor Co. is to be commended for enabling this presentation in so sensitive and tactful a way. One is impressed, however, that in spite of everything, it was a story of humanity and hope, of survival and creativity. This interesting fact emerged at the end.

There were now 6,000 survivors of "Schindler's Jews" from the original 1,100 at the end of the war. This is 2,000 more than all the Jews now living in Poland.

This fact of survival in the face of the darkest horror of human history shows the truth of the Talmudic saying, that whosoever saves the life of one human being, saves the entire world.

With long-term care, we consider duty to others and to one's self

Try as we may to take good care of ourselves, it is possible that at some point in our lives, we may need long-term care.

It is not a cheerful prospect but is a distinct possibility, particularly if we live to an advanced age.

Not that progress in geriatric medicine has not been made. People once crippled by arthritis are now able to move about because of hip and knee replacements. Physical, speech and language therapy help stroke victims regain muscular coordination. Cardiac rehabilitation and preventive health programs for heart attack victims not only enable them to enjoy more normal lives but to reduce the chances of a second heart attack.

Newspapers, magazines and journals report on drugs that are almost ready for distribution. These drugs will alleviate the more common conditions that accompany the later years, including senility.

Even so, people age in different ways and react to treatment in accordance with their body chemistry.

There is no doubt that people will be active longer and will live longer because of the miracles brought by medical science. There is also the possibility that three-generation families — grandparents, parents and grandchildren — will extend into four-generation families which will include great-grandparents. It is likely that these grandparents will need long-term care.

It is expedient then, that the best possible provisions are made for our new social groups, our fourth generation senior citizens. This should be a real concern for those who may be entrusted with their care.

People who are senior citizens will be responsible for the care of their elderly parents. If the care-givers are not in the best of health, or if they have plans for retirement that do not include custodial care for an elderly relative, this can be a problem. They have worked hard, they have raised a family, they have postponed doing things together. It is only right that they should enjoy their leisure time and whatever luxuries they have earned.

There are no easy answers to the problem of duty to others, versus duty to self. Parental love dictates that we make the years of those who nurtured and cared for us as comfortable and happy as possible.

But this does not have to be achieved at the expense of setting aside all that we have looked forward to in our own later years.

What we owe them and ourselves, since it is possible that we will reach the same stage, is the assurance of good medical care and some provisions for social welfare.

Just keeping a person alive is not enough. Attention must be given to seeing that all the things that made their lives happy and fulfilled in their younger years are provided — contact with others, good nutritious food and pleasurable leisure activities.

In the United States, the answer to this problem has been the nursing home. Medicare and Medicaid legislation has encouraged the growth of both private and voluntary nursing homes. However, these efforts to find a solution to the problem of the elderly have not always been effective either in terms of human considerations or cost-containment.

The solution may lie in developing better nursing homes by imposing stricter quality controls. But there are arguments that substantiate the need to develop different approaches to the care of the elderly.

In this context it is necessary to realize that the elderly do not comprise a monolithic group. Unlike adolescence, a stage of life that is relatively limited, the period of retirement could stretch to 30 years, or more. This time span indicates that there is not one solution because the needs could vary at intervals in advancing years.

Policy priorities may need to shift that emphasis for different age groups and offer a range of services. For instance, if the goal becomes one of keeping elderly persons functioning within the community, then the need will be for the development of a range of housing, home-health and social services but there will also remain the need for institutional services for the infirm.

The question is what the term "good care" encompasses. Certainly, it means that health deficiencies are remedied. But it also has to take into consideration social aspects. Many health problems result from failure to provide the amenities beyond just keeping the body functioning.

There is one aspect of extended care about which all factions agree. The nursing home which has come to include everything from residential or personal care through nursing or extended care, is not the answer to meeting the needs of the elderly as individuals.

Pressure for the kind of care we want for our elderly and for our own later years, should come from younger people who are most often responsible for formulation policies that affect the elderly, but also from those who are approaching those later years.

Old age, after all, is a land of its own, with a language that can only be understood by those who share it.

G. P. Park naval officer helps fight war on drugs

By Chad McKimson
Special Writer

The Navy spends its time defending U.S. interests, often on the other side of the world. However, for the crew of the guided-missile cruiser USS Princeton, protecting America's interests on their current deployment will keep them a little closer to home. Instead of keeping peace in the Arabian Gulf, the crew will be in the southeastern Pacific and Caribbean Sea waging war on what many people feel is an even larger threat to the United States — illegal narcotics.

Lt. Cmdr. Jeffrey T. Griffin, the 32-year-old son of Joseph and Barbara Griffin of Grosse Pointe Park, and the rest of the crew of the Ticonderoga-class cruiser, departed their homeport of San Diego in mid-January for a counter-narcotics mission off the coasts of Central and South America.

Griffin feels it's important for the Navy to help protect the United States from more illegal drug smuggling.

"To combat the drug lords, a tremendously well-organized and well-financed adversary, requires the resources of more than the country's law enforcement agencies alone. They are not adequately equipped or trained for blue water search operations on the high seas. That's where we come in and bring our expertise in this medium to the fight," says Griffin, a 1982 graduate of Grosse Pointe South.

Griffin, the combat systems officer on the Princeton, supervises the ship's combat systems personnel.

The Princeton is equipped with powerful engines and a state-of-the-art Aegis combat system, a computer operated command and control system.

Aegis is an integrated system designed to simultaneously collect, evaluate and display combat information, launch and guide missiles to their targets and share tactical information with other ships and aircraft. It possesses a variety of air, surface and land-attack missiles, torpedoes and rapid fire guns.

The versatility of the 9,500-ton cruiser enables it to build a defensive shield around a naval battle group; conduct offensive strikes against land targets; undertake surveillance, search and rescue and counter-narcotic operations.

Because of the Princeton's capabilities, the Pacific Fleet is able to maintain a constant involvement in monitoring international waterways for drug trafficking.

"The last several months of training have prepared me very well. The ship's primary focus remained on training and preparing for the types of operations we can expect to encounter while deployed overseas," says Griffin.

The deployment will be hard work for Griffin and will require some long hours, but he still has some goals he wants to accomplish.

"What I hope for on this deployment is for the ship to have a positive impact in the war on drugs, specifically to help stem the flow from Central America into the United States. Personally, I hope this deployment prepares me for my next at-sea assignment as an executive officer of a naval warship," says Griffin.

While living and serving on a warship like the Princeton can be a difficult lifestyle, Griffin still values the experience.

"The most rewarding aspect for me is contributing to the national security and the defense of the United States by ensuring that the ship's combat systems are ready for conflict if called upon," says Griffin.

COTT ROBINSON

Grandson looks to immortalize 'father of the modern car'

"Nobody else has affected the look of the American automobile world in the 20th century as much as Harley Earl," said the intense young man about General Motors' first stylist.

"It is fitting that the man who first shaped, molded and invented the modern car as we know it today would also be the father of the Corvette."

The speaker was Richard Earl, grandson of Harley Earl, who did indeed change the course of the auto industry. With his design of the 1927

Cadillac LaSalle and 1928 Cadillac, he brought the concept of styling to the auto industry.

Richard Earl is a man with a mission, to assure that history does not forget Harley J. Earl, whom he describes as "the father of the modern car."

Actually, Earl credits Fox TV-2 reporter Mike Collins for the phrase "father of the modern car." Collins coined the phrase in regard to Harley Earl during a North American International Auto Show interview.

Autos

By Richard Wright

Earl is planning to write a book about his legendary grandfather and moved from New York City to the Detroit area to pursue this project. Here he found that history is often controversy in this industry of high rollers, giant egos and big money.

Most cars were utilitarian in design before Harley Earl hit Detroit in 1927. Little attention was paid to styling by the auto makers, although there were custom body houses which built special bodies for the wealthy on high-priced automobile chassis. One of these custom houses was Earl Automotive Works in Los Angeles.

Harley Earl began studies at Stanford University, but decided instead to leave the university and study design with his father at Earl Automotive Works, which designed custom cars for the biggest movie stars of the 1920s.

Legend has it that while his father was away on a trip, Harley converted part of the facility into a kind of hotrod shop and built special cars for such stars as Fatty Arbuckle and Tom Mix.

After World War I, Earl Automotive Works was sold to Don Lee's organization, Cadillac's West Coast distributor, and Harley Earl was put in charge of customizing and coach-building.

Some of his creations captured the eye of Lawrence Fisher, of Fisher Body fame and general manager of Cadillac Division. They were the best-looking Cadillacs at the New York Auto Show, Fisher reported to GM top management. Cadillac was developing the LaSalle at that time, which was to be smaller and less conservative than the Cadillac.

Fisher visited Earl's facility on the West Coast and was impressed to see the use of modeling clay to develop complete automobiles as single entities rather than a collection of unrelated components. Fisher contracted with Earl to work as a consultant in creation of the 1927 LaSalle.

Earl had an appreciation of European car design and particularly liked the Hispano-Suiza. He sketched a proposed LaSalle which had the elegant and fashionable look of the Hispano-Suiza. He made a clay model of the car, which was shown to and approved by top GM brass, including Chairman Alfred P. Sloan Jr.

The result was the first production car designed by a stylist. Earl was invited to stay on to work on the 1928 Cadillac, then he returned to California. Sloan called Earl after a few weeks and asked him to meet him in New York to discuss a permanent position with GM heading a newly created styling operation. On June 14, 1927, Harley Earl became head of a new GM Art and Colour Section.

The Art and Colour Section was the first department of its kind in the automotive world.

Within a year, Earl gained Sloan's respect and admiration — and friendship — and "Art and Colour" displaced engineering and manufacturing as the dominant driver in the GM approach to auto making and marketing.

Earl took nearly 10 years establishing the outlines of an automobile designer. In 1937, Earl changed his Art and Colour Section name to Style Section, reflecting the new general focus on design — including creating and modeling.

One of the ways Earl helped innovate models and creations was by introducing two types of design methods. One was a two-dimensional rough sketch and the other was three-dimensional clay models which were presented to management as realistic mock-ups.

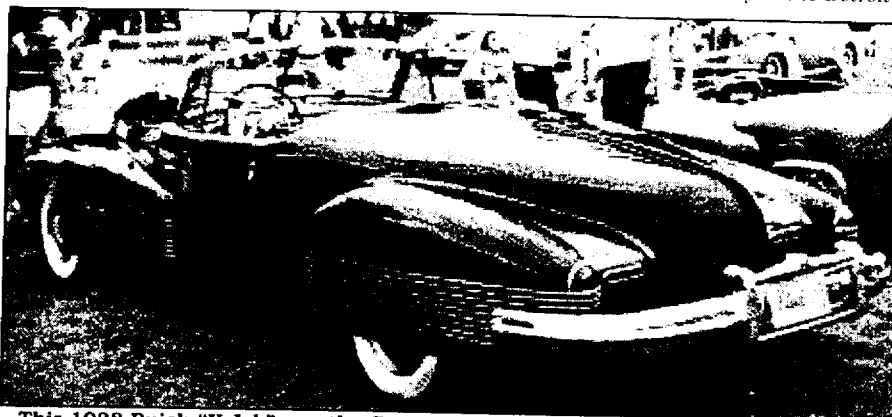

Earl helped formalize the process of car design. When he retired from GM in 1959, he left a design legacy of chrome, two-tone paint, tailfins, hardtops, wraparound windshields and the Corvette.

After proving himself as an effective and valuable designer, Harley Earl was able to begin working on dream cars which tested new ideas on the public. Earl's first project was the "Y Job" in 1938. The "Y Job" was a convertible sports car built on a Buick chassis.

Earl and his team were experimenting with visual style features which would attract consumers. His team took ideas from Chrysler's unsuccessful Airflow and turned them into design innovations which became the popular style fads of the 1950s.

In addition to creative style, the "Y Job" also featured electric windows, power-operated concealed headlights and a power-operated convertible roof.

The car got the name "Y Job" apparently because GM people got tired of calling experimental cars "X" — for experimental.

In 1950, Earl unveiled what became the most famous concept car of all time, the LeSabre. The LeSabre had a jet-like intake in the front, a new wraparound "panoramic" windshield which became standard on American cars in the '50s and tailfins, which Earl had actually introduced on the 1948 production Cadillac.

The flamboyant LeSabre was truly an expression of Harley Earl's vision. In fact he drove the million-dollar car as his personal vehicle for several years.

But the car that Earl is most remembered for and most identified with is the Corvette. And the '53 Chevrolet Corvette was one of his most successful inside selling jobs, an activity he was uncommonly good at.

Earl had his stylists create a prototype with a white body and red interior and reserved a room at the GM Proving Grounds at Milford. He had the Corvette display room draped in black — black carpets, walls, etc. He had lighting installed that displayed the Corvette like a jewel against black velvet.

When a board of directors meeting broke up, he approached Albert Bradley, then an executive vice president and chairman of the board's finance committee, put his arm around him and said: "Got a minute? I've got something I want to show you."

He took Bradley into the darkened room. They stood in the dark briefly, then Earl snapped on the lights. Bradley was impressed, called other board members in to see the Corvette. They were all impressed.

Earl nonchalantly told the directors that the little sports car was made of standard Chevrolet parts and would be easy to put into production. They were sold. It was ordered into production.

In fact, it was the Corvette that drew Richard Earl into his project. In 1995, Zora Arkus-Duntov, "godfather" of the Corvette, invited Earl to sit with him at the Malcolm Konner Corvette Show.

"I was impressed by how much Zora respected Harley Earl," Earl said. "I attended many Corvette shows during the rest of the summer months. Once Zora had properly introduced me to this phenomenon, I had no choice but to become thoroughly immersed."

Earl said his grandfather was responsible for many other designs. "He was the first to use chrome on cars," he said. This boosted the used-car market because the cars retained their good looks longer.

"He introduced the hardtop and the pillarless coupe," Earl said. "He invented the first concept car and was the first American to truly understand how sex, glamour and showmanship would sell cars."

And cars weren't his only area of creativity, Earl said.

"He designed the first aerodynamic Fig Newton," Earl said. "He suggested putting food in spray-on aerosol cans. He first designed roll-on deodorant. He recommended corrugated potato chips as an engineering advance over unruffled ones."

Shores police get a drunk driver

Grosse Pointe Shores police arrested an Ann Arbor man for operating a car under the influence of liquor after they witnessed him driving north on Lakeshore at speeds in excess of 60 mph Sunday, Feb. 23 around 2:30 a.m.

After the police stopped the man in the 900 block of Lakeshore, he failed field sobriety tests, and refused to participate in a preliminary breath test.

The police discovered a fugitive arrest warrant for the man for disorderly conduct from 36th District Court in Detroit.

He was released from Grosse Pointe Shores custody after posting bond for both incidents.

Three strikes

A Fairhaven man was arrested and charged with three offenses after Grosse Pointe Shores police witnessed him driving north on Lakeshore in the southbound lanes Thursday, Feb. 20 around 3:20 a.m.

The man was first charged with operating a car under the influence of liquor. His preliminary breath test registered 0.188 — 0.1 is legally intoxicated. Upon searching the man, police found a substance appearing to be cocaine.

In addition to being charged with possession of a controlled substance, it was discovered the man also had an expired and restricted license.

He was released from custody around noon the same day, after posting bond, and given a date to appear in court.

You're not in Dearborn

Grosse Pointe Shores police charged a 66-year-old Detroit man with operating a car under the influence of liquor Monday, Feb. 17 around midnight.

When they stopped the man on Lakeshore, he declined to participate in field sobriety tests, stated he believed he was in Dearborn, and further said, "Take me to jail, I've been drinking all day and all night."

Because of his combative and non-cooperative nature, police officers say they sought a warrant to obtain a blood sample from the man. The man was transported to Bon Secours hospital where a blood sample was taken.

He was released around 1 p.m. after posting bond.

PUBLIC SAFETY REPORTS

Hill reported to Grosse Pointe Farms police that figurines valued at $3,998 were stolen from one of her stores on Tuesday, Feb. 18 around noon.

The owner gave a description of the possible suspect as a white female, around 35 to 40 years old, with dark shoulder-length hair, and wearing blue plastic glasses.

In the can

An employee of Pepsi reported to Woods police that while making a delivery to a drug store in the 20400 block of Mack on Tuesday, Feb. 18, at about 12:15 p.m., he saw two men grab two bags of empty bottles and cans from his truck.

They fled the scene in a 1986 Ford Mercury and were last seen heading north on Sunningdale. The empties were worth about $24.

Garage fire

Grosse Pointe Park public safety officers were called to a home in the 1300 block of Wayburn at about 4:45 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 23, to put out a garage fire. When they arrived on the scene the garage was completely engulfed in flames. Firefighters couldn't save the garage, but were able to prevent the fire from spreading. An investigation revealed that the blaze started when the homeowner was working on his motorcycle and attempted to fill the bike with gasoline while a kerosene space heater was in operation in the garage.

This action resulted in an explosion. The homeowner and a friend who was also in the garage had their clothing ignited, but were able to put out the flames themselves. The homeowner suffered burns to his hands.

NO BARGAIN AT ANY PRICE

Car owners who go in search of bargain-priced brake jobs should be wary of having too little work done to ensure that their cars will stop safely. A disc brake job that amounts to no more than a replacement of the disc brake pads, for instance, may not be enough. Consumers leaving a shop with a small bill should not allow themselves to be lulled into a false sense of security. Here are some of the things that might be omitted by a less-than-comprehensive brake job which may compromise brake safety: replacement of cracked flexible brake hoses; replacement of cracked or blue-spotted discs; replacement of discs machined below manufacturer's tolerances; draining the brake fluid and flushing the hydraulic brake lines; and cleaning of the sliding caliper support brackets. Doing less at any price is no bargain.

Brakes are definitely one area in which you want to make sure you get the job done properly — your safety depends upon it. However, you can save money over time by turning down your calipers to extend the life of your brakes. At RINKE TOYOTA 758-2000, we have served this community for over 28 years! We can accurately determine your car's problem fast. We are happy to help with your financing questions. Find out a proven shop to work with by calling us today! Visit us at 25420 Van Dyke today!

HINT: Dark blue spots on the surface of a disc brake indicate areas where the metal has overheated and hardened due to severe brake use.

Michigan: Everything you need to know

Did you know that Michigan is the number one producer of cranberry beans, black turtle beans, tart cherries, navy beans, blueberries?

Perhaps you already knew that Michigan has the fourth largest number of inventors in the United States, that the state's population is projected to increase by more than 400,000 by the year 2005, or that only Japan, Germany and France produce more vehicles than the state of Michigan.

If you didn't know these facts, you could find them in the 1996 edition of the "Michigan Statistical Abstract," recently released by the University of Michigan Press.

The 664-page Abstract is available in cloth binding from the U-M Press for $49.50 by calling (313) 764-4392, by faxing an order to (800) 876-1922 or by mail through Order Department, University of Michigan Press, P.O. Box 1104, Ann Arbor, Mich., 48106-1104.

Wanted: A few good teenagers

The Internet Public Library (IPL), based at the University of Michigan's School of Information, is looking for teens to join its Teen Division's Advisory Board.

As board members, teens between the ages of 13 and 19 will have an opportunity to influence the work of the IPL. Potential board members need not live in the United States, but should be fluent in English. Board members will have the opportunity to evaluate web sites, contribute graphics and design ideas, and participate in the development of new projects for the division.

Another benefit to serving on the board is the opportunity to include such service and experience on a college or university admission application. Details about serving on the board and an application form are available at <http://www.ipl.org/teen/board-form.html>.

This special area of the IPL devoted to teenagers is available at <http://www.ipl.org/teen/> and features topics ranging from issues and conflicts to sports and politics. The site also offers subdivisions in math and science with links to other sites such as "Cells Alive," "Ask Dr. Math,"

"Anyday in History" and "Youth Conventions" through the Politics and History subdivision.

The subdivision on sports offers links to the official NBA site as well as sites on rollerblading and skateboarding. Through the subdivision on health, a teen can reach sites dealing with body image and eating disorders, nutrition, sex, and substance abuse. Teens can use the Career and College subdivision to reach sites pertaining to financial aid, test preparation and guides to colleges and universities. From "Arts and Entertainment" to "Clubs and Organizations," and "Books and Writing" where teens can get writing instruction or read the writings of other teens as well as contribute their own, the IPL offers easily accessible sites and links for teens to find the quality information resources they need.

Begun in 1995 as a graduate student project, the IPL, which is partially supported by a grant from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, is now staffed by professional librarians with assistance from students and volunteer librarians from around the world.

The IPL maintains a collection of network-based ready reference works; responds to reference queries; creates resources for children and young adults; evaluates and categorizes resources on the Internet; and provides a space for exhibitions. The IPL strives to be a source of innovation in the networked environment, seeking partnerships with organizations with compatible goals.

Merit project helps

The Merit dial-in project has provided dial-in equipment prioritized for use by people in K-12 schools, community colleges and public libraries in 130 locations in Michigan.

Project funds have been set aside to cover the ongoing costs of supporting that equipment until Aug. 31.

Any K-12 school organization, community college or public library group may participate in MichNet dial-in by committing to pay a portion of the recurring costs of their

Mrs. Lungershausen, 90, was born on a farm in Webster Township near Ann Arbor. She spent most of her childhood in Ann Arbor, where her mother moved the family after the death of her father.

She received a bachelor of music degree from the University of Michigan in 1926, and her first musical job was playing a piano to accompany silent films at a movie house.

In 1929, she traveled to Vienna for advanced piano studies.

Mrs. Lungershausen also earned a master's degree at the University of Michigan in music, as well as a master's in library science and moved to Grinnell College in Iowa to work in the library.

After the death of her mother in 1937, she returned to Ann Arbor to work at a U-M library.

In 1941, she married Arnold W. Lungershausen, an attorney, and in 1943 they moved to Grosse Pointe Park.

Dow Industrials top record 7,000 — then back down again

By Joseph Mengden

The stock market, as measured by the Dow Jones Industrials Index, broke 7,000 on Feb. 13. This 1,000-point gain, a 16.7 percent rise, took only four months from last Oct. 14, when it first closed above 6,000.

Mengden

The accompanying table shows the arithmetic relationship between each 1,000-point level in the DJI. Note that as prices rise, the percentage gain decreases. This means that it takes less buying momentum for the market to increase 1,000 points to the 8,000 level than it did to increase from the 4,000 to 5,000 level back in November 1995, only 15 months ago.

This week's Barron's (Feb. 24) has a cover story by Andrew Bary, which explains it all. Bary interviewed Laszlo Birinyi, president of Birinyi Associates, a Greenwich, Conn., advisory firm. A former stock trader and quantitative market analyst at Salomon Brothers on Wall Street, Birinyi developed the statistics underlying "money flows" to determine if there's more buying or selling pressure on the market and/or individual stocks.

In the old days, brokerage sequence time-wise, listing the stock symbol, number of shares traded, price of trade, and the price change from the last trade, if any. Later, back-lighted display machines were developed to hang on a wall so that all in the office could "read" the tape, as it moved from right to left.

"Tape-watchers," often "day-traders" (in and out the same day), would sit and watch the tape for hours. Some branch managers claimed that some of the tape-watchers never traded any stock and were probably "street people" who came inside during the winter months. The real good tape-watchers would mentally count the "up-ticks" (which trade at a price 1/8 or more above the last trade) and the "down-ticks" (vice versa). If the total volume of shares traded at up-ticks exceeded the down-ticks, there were more buyers than sellers — or, more accurately, the buying pressure exceeded the selling pressure (and the closing price was probably up from the prior day's close).

Nowadays, there are few Trans-Lux tape displays in branch offices. With today's volumes, "tape-watching" is a lost art. In fact, Birinyi has computerized it. His computers sum up each day's "money flow," using both block trades of 10,000-plus shares, and smaller trades. When the price changes are multiplied by the number of shares traded, the result is an indication of the volume of money flowing in and out of that stock.

No problem for the super-computer to track the stocks of an index, which is 30 for the DJI and 500 for the S&P 500. This shows what the overall market is doing. And to think that back in 1975, LTS told his children: "The market went up today because there were more buyers than sellers!"

Are you a trader?

Does your IRS Form 1040, Schedule D, show three or more short-term capital gains or losses? Then you probably like to trade stocks. LTS recently met a friend who said, "I like your LTS newspaper articles, but you haven't given us any 'hot-tips' yet!"

Here's our best tip to traders: Invest in a copy of today's Investor's Business Daily (IBD), which is in the newsstand next to the Wall Street Journal (WSJ). The IBD is owned and published by William O'Neill, a former top-producing retail stock broker, now CEO of his well-regarded institutional research NYSE brokerage firm.

Over the past 10 years,

O'Neill has developed many sophisticated stock-market-related computer programs, which calculate three technical market indicators for IBD, not available in any other stock table, not even the WSJ.

1) is earnings per share (EPS) rank, which measures a company's EPS growth in the last five years, and the stability of that growth, compared to all other companies in that stock table, ranked on a scale of 1 to 99, with 99 the highest.

2) is relative price strength, which measures daily relative price change over the past 12 months compared to all other stocks in that table. Results are again ranked 1 to 99, with 99 the highest.

3) is volume percent change, which shows the trading volume for yesterday in terms of percent change above or below its average trading for the last 50 trading days.

Next week, we'll show you how relevant these three previously unavailable items are, and how you can use them to improve your trading profits.

Joseph Mengden is a City of Grosse Pointe resident, and a former chairman of the board of First of Michigan.

Farms and City Beautification award winners dazzled judges

By Amy Andreou Miller
Staff Writer

Spring is just around the corner, and for some people, that means planning the beautification of their yard.

And some people, don't just plan to create something beautiful, they actually do it — so much so that it gets the attention of neighbors, friends, even judges.

It's only about six weeks away from when the 1997 applications will be available for submitting either your own home, business, or that of your neighbor in order to try to win a beautification award.

All five Grosse Pointes honor their various residents and some businessowners in their respective communities. Applications will become available at each community's city hall or in each community's newsletter.

Each community's beautification commission may use slightly different criteria from the next community's criteria.

In general, such aspects are examined such as landscape layout, proportion of beds and trees to the house, and variety and color of planting material.

The grounds must be exemplary with regard to lawn care, beds, shrubs and trees. Building maintenance is a necessary part of the judging.

Facade, entrance way, walkways and driveways are considered. In the interest of privacy, only the front of the property is judged except on street corners.

Also, for example, the various Farms Beautification Commission members walk or bike every four weeks around a section of the Farms that is "assigned" to him or her, reviewing properties that have been submitted for a beautification award. A submitted property is repeatedly checked out from approximately May through September.

The Farms Beautification Commission held its sixth annual awards reception at the Pier Park honoring its 1996 recipients.

"It is a big deal to win one of these awards; these people have worked very hard to enhance their property, and thus the community," said Vicki Fuger, a member of the Farms Beautification Commission.

Regarding the winners from the Farms last year, Fuger said the lengthy list of nominations was whittled down to 17 winners. Some received plaques, others received certificates.

G.P. Farms Winners

The following Farms residents were 1996 Beautification plaque winners:

Jane and Ray Cracchiolo; Andrea and Thomas Conin; Helen and Leland Lindberg; Cynthia and Michael Roika; Mary and Frederick Ruffner; Michael Zahron, and Richard McPherson.

The Farms residents who won Beautification certificates for 1996 are: Mary Anderson, Leland and Tracy Blatt, Michael and Susan Connolly, Patsy and Leet Denton; Brian Garves; Cathy and Kevin Grady; Susan Herchock and Paul Boehmer; Gail and Craig Janutol; Mary and Kenneth Michaux.

Barbara Freidberg of The Greenhouse salon at 117 Kercheval Ave. was awarded a commercial beautification certificate.

FREE "LIVING TRUST" SEMINAR

"What You Ought to Know About Living Trusts"
(What you don't know could cost your family thousands of dollars!)

If you own a home, or you have assets worth at least $100,000...you owe it to yourself and your family to get the facts on living trusts. If you think you're protected with a simple Will...think again...A Will guarantees that your estate will go through probate, which means that your family may not be able to take possession of your estate for many months, or even years!

Plus, if your estate is over $600,000, your family may owe estate taxes which could amount to 37-55% of the value of your estate. This means that your family may have to sell some assets just to pay the estate taxes!

A living trust avoids all this by avoiding probate and minimizing estate taxes. Plus, a living trust will protect your estate if you become incapacitated during your lifetime by avoiding a conservatorship. This means your estate will be managed as you see fit, not as a court-appointed guardian sees fit.

To find out more about the benefits of living trusts, attend one of these free seminars.

Preschools: How to choose the right one

By Margaret Fitzgerald
Special Writer

Important considerations for parents who are choosing a preschool for their child are what kind of facility will fit the child's needs as well as their own philosophy of education.

Several kinds of preschool programs are available in Grosse Pointe.

Cooperative preschools

The distinguishing feature of cooperative preschools is that the school is run completely by the parents. A board of trustees consisting of an elected subgroup of parents usually meets every month to discuss administrative issues. Traditional cooperative preschools require each parent to volunteer his or her time on the board or serve on a committee.

In addition, parents are usually asked to work periodically in their child's classrooms, as well as assist in room and equipment clean-ups.

The Michigan Council of Cooperative Nursery Schools is a non-profit organization established in 1951. Through local chapters, it provides service and support to more than 230 Michigan cooperatives, covering issues like OSHA requirements, board policies, teacher contracts and co-op philosophy.

Proponents of cooperative preschools will tell you that the biggest benefit was the direct participation they shared in their child's first school experience.

Preschoolers usually love having mom or dad in the classroom.

"Co-ops are a lot of work, and it's fair to say that they are not for everyone," said Mary Ellen Kelly, director and teacher at the Cooperative Nursery at Christ Church. "But the rewards are huge. For those who like it, it's a win-win situation."

Private preschools

Private schools of many types make up another sector of preschools in Grosse Pointe. Generally, the parents function more in the background, with the director and staff making decisions regarding school policy and curriculum.

If you feel that your child would benefit from a preschool where the separation between school and parent is more distinct, private schools may be the way to go.

Parents can choose a privately owned school, a church-affiliated school, or one which subscribes to a specific methodology, such as Montessori or Waldorf. Private schools which don't subscribe to any particular methodology should offer programs which are developmentally appropriate for young children. Many of these schools are accredited.

Connie Hine, a nationally known consultant, teacher, and trainer for school districts, writes that the basic elements of a developmentally appropriate program are sensitive to, among other things, the age appropriateness and the individual appropriateness of the curriculum. The uniqueness of the individual child must be respected and protected, she says.

Religious preschools

Religious preschools are a good choice if you want to be sure that your child is guided in an environment where God is the overall frame of reference. Donna Vannick, director at Christ the King Lutheran Preschool, said that parents in her program are looking for "a moral structure" in addition to the benefits of socialization.

However, she pointed out that in her Christian program, "We have children from a host of different backgrounds enrolled and religious doctrine is not covered."

Like many teachers in the profession, she echoed the belief that a flexible preschool program — one which develops social, sharing, and listening skills — is a good investment. If parents are comfortable with the methods used to encourage the development of these abilities, the child will likely be comfortable as well.

Montessori schools

Montessori-based programs emphasize the independence and individuality of the child as well, but those schools affiliated with the American Montessori Society go a step further by adhering to the methodology.

Accreditation is strongly encouraged. The society's "Position Statement" defines key concepts as well as areas of expertise for Montessori-educated teachers. It is believed that diverse materials and activities demonstrate the interconnection of knowledge.

Traditional Montessori schools pay close attention to every detail of the child's activity. A premium is placed on the use of a wide range of manipulatives in the study of math, languages and science, and it is felt that the use of such materials is self-didactic.

Children are encouraged to inherent strengths of this method.

"Never lose sight of the child," DeMario said. "Respect their accomplishments. The preschool years are the most important, absorbent period in childhood, and we are laying the foundation for their future education."

Waldorf schools

Waldorf schools are based on the belief that the creativity of the child is of paramount importance. Premature intellectual demands are thought to be detrimental to a child's development. The curriculum is art-based, with music, painting and classic literature playing a central role.

It is thought that a child's imagination is the key to his or her ability to assimilate knowledge with experience, and that individual achievement is important to the health of the community at large.

While it is important that the child is happy, it is equally important that the parents be comfortable with their school of choice. These programs vary widely in their philosophy and implementation, but share the same goal: to serve as a bridge for the child between home and community. When children bridge that gap successfully, we have helped them begin to evolve into lifelong learners.

This article is the second of a two-part series. The first, "How to choose the perfect preschool for your child," was on page 1B of the Feb. 20, 1997 Grosse Pointe News.

Christ Church Cooperative Nursery teacher Louise Blake leads the class at "circle time" with a little help from 4-year-old Justin Schoenherr.

War Memorial offers course about mid-life journey

"Mid-life Directions," an eight-week workshop designed to help individuals develop inner resources to successfully meet the challenges of aging, will be offered from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesdays, March 4 through April, at the Grosse Pointe War Memorial.

Taught by Fern Pantano, the course leads to a deeper understanding of the emotional and physical changes that emerge between the ages of 35 and 65-plus. It makes use of what Pantano describes as "inner work" or self-inventory. Participants will learn to use this to uncover their untapped potential and to develop parts of themselves they have previously unconsciously ignored.

Discussion will focus on the cycles of life, the Jungian personality theory, the chapters of mid-life, myths and symbols and second journey, or futuring.

HAVE A PLEASANT TRY AT PERFECTION BRIDGE BY WOODY BOYD

We the unable,
Who've sat around the table;
For so long with so little,
Will tomorrow again attempt Victory, veneration and contentment.
For that's the decoration we get for effort.

I am quite certain I was well past 40 before I finally cottoned on to what was intended when reference was made to double dummy play. It seemed to me before that disclosure, the experts and egocentrics were making fun of us dolts and dimwits who had made a double boo-hoo in the play of the dummy.

Now that I know that's not so, I have become a student of such challenging hands and the skills required to achieve a positive result are mountaintops. To do so you must recognize that the talent employed by both sides comes close to perfection—something less than exact or almost as good would be a variation and therefore the solver's solution of the double dummy problem must account for that possibility too. Crossword puzzles are easier.

Obviously one's judgment must be superb, but of even greater significance is the player's calculations and that has to be based upon the knowledge of probabilities and they are many and involved.

Take the probability of outcards, which has in its fundamental form something like 35 variations. I wouldn't suggest to my students they remember such a table, but the simplification is easy and well worth understanding.

When you and the dummy have an even number of cards in a given suit, the missing in the other two unknown hands tend to break evenly.

Known 2 hands	Unknown 2 hands	Division	%
8 cards	5 cards	3-2	68%
		4-1	28%
		5-0	4%

When you and the dummy have an odd number the missing tend to break unevenly.

9 cards	4 cards	3-1	50%
		4-0	9%

That's enough of a lesson to be of meaningful help in your play and not difficult to keep in mind.

Here is a recent tournament hand that is a fine double dummy difficulty.

Most N/S partnerships got to a small slam, but while the play of six clubs is easier, six of trump was the optimum match point result and the subject of this critique.

What is west's best opening lead is a poser? The bidding gives few clues. A small spade gives south a good-sized puzzler, but not insurmountable. A heart makes it easy for declarer by ducking in dummy, as I know of no player on earth sitting east who would also duck. Yet that is a possibility which would now give south some kind of complication.

Either minor forces declarer to work out his own problems so west leads the top of his club sequence and declarer rattles off eight minor suit winners ending in dummy. At trick 9 this is the five card ending.

West has pitched two spades and east two hearts. Where are the major suit kings is the conundrum? After much contemplation south works out that his best line of play is to lead a small spade to his ace and back to dummy's 10 planning to invoke the obligatory finesse. This gives declarer 12 winners in every out-card probability, but either defender holding three spades to the king and east the heart king guarded. The defender's discards make that possibility unlikely.

So declarer plays dummy's spade seven, and genius east, seeing the end play in hearts coming, dislodges his king which must now be won with the ace. Now that east has foiled the end play and alternative contrivance is required. At trick 10 a spade to dummy's 10 finessing west's jack and 12 winners are scored—three spades, one heart, four diamonds and four clubs. Certainly east's spade king play was brilliant, but declarer had a well-conceived alternative, even if east had held spade king, jack doubleton.

Going to the dentist shouldn't be a 'pain'

By Kevin Prush, DDS
Special Writer

We've all seen the commercials admonishing us not to be six months late for our six-month dental checkup. While many people may have the best of intentions, going to the dentist is not something that you'll generally find at the top of their "to-do" list. Perhaps it's because many people still remember what going to the dentist was like 20 or 30 years ago.

Dentistry has come a long way over the years. With more advanced training for dentists, hygienists and support staff, and with advances in anesthesia, going to the dentist doesn't have to be a pain anymore.

Some of the familiar forms of dental anesthesia include: local anesthesia; sedation; general anesthesia; and the less commonly used but effective needle-less anesthesia.

Each type of anesthesia serves a particular purpose. Knowing what your options are can help to ease any anxiety you may be having about going to the dentist and make you less likely to miss your next six-month checkup.

Local anesthesia — This is the most commonly used form of anesthesia for dental procedures such as fillings. Using a needle, an anesthetic is injected into the gum near the area that is being worked on. If the area is too inflamed, the anesthetic can be administered into or around a nerve in the general area. If needed, topical anesthetics (similar to what babies get to ease teething pain) can be administered to ease the pain of a local anesthetic.

Sedation — If a patient is extremely nervous or anxious, sedation such as nitrous oxide or Valium may be used in conjunction with local anesthesia. Many people refer to nitrous oxide as laughing gas because of the feeling of euphoria that it can produce.

General anesthesia — General anesthesia is most often reserved for cases where extensive surgery, like periodontal (gum) work or multiple tooth extractions, are being performed. In some rare cases, it may be used for young children who require extensive dental work, for people who are allergic to local anesthetics or who have extremely sensitive teeth, or for patients with severe mental or physical handicaps.

General anesthesia is administered through an injection into an arm vein and includes a mixture of barbiturate, nitrous oxide and oxygen. The potency of the injection is determined by the patient's medical history, age, weight and the length and type of surgery involved.

By now, if you're like most people, you might be thinking, "All of this talk about anesthesia is one of the reasons I don't like going to the dentist."

If you fall into this category of dental procrastinators, then needle-less anesthesia may be for you.

Needle-less anesthesia — Needle-less anesthesia uses a small hand-held device that looks like a WalkMan.

Connected to this power source are two wires with patches at the ends, which are placed on the outside of a patient's lips or cheeks. The tiny electrical impulses that come from the device numb the nerves. As the dentist begins to work on a tooth, the patient can turn the degree of numbness up or down. When the procedure is finished, patches are removed and the numbness disappears immediately.

The use of needle-less anesthesia is limited to use by adults for routine procedures such as small fillings that involve the front and side of the mouth or as a prelude to anesthesia administered with a needle.

Needle-less anesthesia is ideal for the nervous patient who fears needles and for the patient who has work or a speaking engagement on the agenda after the appointment and doesn't want that lingering "frozen" feeling.

Your dentist can help determine which anesthetic best matches your needs. If you don't already have a dentist but would like to find one who is right for you, begin by asking friends and family members for their personal recommendations. Then, do your homework. Talk to several dentist's offices before you make your decision. The more you learn about your dentist before your first appointment, the more comfortable you'll be with your choice.

Don't be six months late for your six-month checkup.

CarePlus computer program speeds access to patient data

Health care providers at Henry Ford Cottage Hospital and Henry Ford Medical Center-Pierson Clinic have complete patient information at the touch of a button, thanks to a new computer software program called CarePlus.

The program offers speedier, easier access to patient information than the traditional paper patient record. CarePlus was developed by researchers at Henry Ford Health System.

"CarePlus gives physicians a way to immediately review key documents," said Dr. Gary Ansaldi of Grosse Pointe Farms, an internist at the Pierson Clinic. "This instant access to a patient's history saves time, is cost-effective and prevents unnecessary repetition of medical tests. Ultimately, this translates into better patient care."

Cottage Hospital and the Pierson Clinic have computers equipped with CarePlus in physicians' offices and patient exam rooms. By using a mouse, physicians and nurses with security clearance can obtain patient information by clicking the cursor on designated icons.

For example, CarePlus allows a physician to track the blood-sugar level of a patient over time, and the doctor is able to visually show the patient a chart to illustrate the results, Ansaldi said.

Other CarePlus advantages include:

- Less training and retraining for users;
- Support for graphical data such as electrocardiograms (EKG's); and
- Multiple simultaneous views of different types of data.

"CarePlus is a win-win opportunity," said Geoff Walton of Grosse Pointe Park, administrative manager of the Pierson Clinic. "It provides some immediate benefits to physicians and nurses and serves as a platform for exciting future capabilities as we move toward full-featured clinical work stations."

Other hospitals and medical centers of the Henry Ford Health System are expected to receive CarePlus as they become wired into the Enterprise Network, a fiber-optic network that allows high-speed transmission of data, X-ray images and other complex medical information within Henry Ford.

Atwood re-tells tale of 19th century double murder

"Alias Grace"

By Margaret Atwood
Doubleday. 468 pages.
$24.95.

Once again we have another outstanding North American writer to dominate our best fiction list — Margaret Atwood of Toronto.

She joins her distinguished compatriot, Alice Munro, both in fame and acclaim for their arts of storytelling, and, therefore, we should recognize our neighbor, Canada, as a fertile field of literary richness. As the author of more than 25 books, Atwood has won a number of literary prizes, including the Canadian Governor General's Award.

"Alias Grace" is an unusual novel. The author has seized upon a true story of a grisly double murder committed in the 1850s which is full of gaping holes in fact.

With her magical novelist's talent, she has deftly and imaginatively re-created the scene and action as it might have happened. Grace Marks is a serving-maid in the household of employer Thomas Kinnear, the master of a farm in rural Ontario, and she has been accused of murdering him along with his housekeeper and mistress, Nancy Montgomery.

Although she claims innocence, Grace has been confined for life, first in a lunatic asylum and then in prison.

According to an early chronicler, Susanna Moodie, Grace is described as "a middle-sized woman, with a slight, graceful figure. There is an air of hopelessness in her face which is very painful to contemplate. Her complexion is how the extreme poverty of her family compelled them to board ship for a new life in the New Land across the ocean.

In chilling detail, Grace tells of their miserable journey.

"After the gale it grew colder. We began to meet fog, and then icebergs, which were said to be more numerous than usual for the season; and we went more slowly for fear of running into them; for the sailors said that the biggest part of them was under the water, and invisible, and it was lucky there was not a high wind, or we might be driven onto one, and the boat crushed; but I was never tired of looking at them. Great mountains of ice they were, with peaks and turrets, white and sparkling when the sun lit on them, with blue lights in the centres of them; and I thought, this must be what the walls of Heaven are made of, only not so cold."

This ill-fated family lost the mother aboard ship after she fell ill. Upon landing in Canada, the drunken father soon abandoned his children, leaving them in the care of the eldest, Grace, herself barely 13.

Eventually, Grace finds employment as a servant in various well-to-do households, and finally, after several years, finds employment with Thomas Kinnear. There Grace makes the acquaintance of James McDermott, a dark visaged and disgruntled young man who resents his lowly station in life as a stableman; and young Jamie Walsh, a neighbor who often entertains her with his musical flute.

Grace senses the evil aura of McDermott, and she tries to distance herself from his advances. With Jamie, she feels like he is the younger brother she once had. When the double murders of Kinnear and Nancy Montgomery are discovered, Grace is immediately suspected, along with McDermott. At first, Grace is declared insane and then incarcerated in the lunatic asylum. She describes the asylum.

"This room has only a little window high up with bars on the inside, and a straw-filled mattress. There's a crust of bread on a tin plate, and a stone crock of water, and a wooden bucket with nothing in it which is there for a chamber pot. I was put in a room like this before they sent me away to the asylum. I told them I wasn't mad, that I wasn't the one, but they wouldn't listen."

Simon Jordan, a young American doctor who specializes in psychological problems, regularly visits Grace in an attempt to unlock the secrets buried within her psyche. They have their discourses while "a gust of rain patters against the windowpane; low tattered clouds are scudding above the lake. The lake itself heaves and surges; waves are pulled in against the shore, recoil, are pulled in again, and the willow trees below him toss themselves like heads of long green hair, and bend and thrash. Something pale blows past: it looks like a woman's white scarf or veil, but then he sees it is only a gull fighting the wind. The mindless turmoil of Nature, he thinks; Tennyson's teeth and claws."

For the most part, Grace enjoys her interrogations with Jordan.

"Here Dr. Jordan asks me to pause a little so he can catch up with his writing, for he says he is much interested in what I have just related. I am glad of this, as I have enjoyed telling about those days, and if I had my own wish I would stay in them as long as I could. So I wait, and watch his hand moving over the paper, and think it must be pleasant to have the knack of writing so quickly, which can only be done by practice, like playing the piano. And I wonder if he has a good singing voice, and sings duets with young ladies in the evenings, when I am shut up alone in my cell. Most likely he does, as he is handsome enough and friendly, and unmarried."

notism on Grace, although with her reluctant permission, to try to extract the truth of the Kinnear-Montgomery murders from the deepest recesses of her memory.

After sinking into a trance, Grace startles the doctors with answers to their questions; she responds in a lascivious manner in an unknown voice. She giggles and swears like another personality altogether different than her own. After the experiment, she returns to her normal self with no memory of what has occurred during the episode, so full of blasphemies. This is, indeed, a scientific mystery completely dumbfounding.

Through the strenuous efforts of assorted doctors and clergymen, their petition to the government to release Grace is eventually successful. From that point on, history has absolutely no record of Grace Marks. She has utterly disappeared. Presumably she was freed on United States soil, but there is no evidence of where she went or what became of her.

Into this historical void, Atwood steps forth with a novelist's creativity and ingenuity to construct what might have happened. Her scenario is logical and plausible. But the mystery of Grace Marks remains as tantalizing and elusive as ever, and readers are left with her enigmatic smile.

Goodwill's job skills training helped hundreds join work force last year

More than 400 job placements for people with disabilities and special needs last year paved the way for those individuals to become independent, employed, tax-paying members of the community.

How did they do it? With the help of job training they received at Goodwill Industries of Greater Detroit. This figure represents a 7 percent increase in competitive job placements over 1995, according to Felicia Hunter, chief operating officer of the 76-year-old organization.

Goodwill Industries also provided rehabilitation services to more than 400 people with developmental disabilities or mental illness during 1996.

"Goodwill is helping to reduce welfare rolls by providing the skills people with disabilities and other barriers to employment need in order to join the work force," Hunter said. "The contributions these people are capable of making are truly amazing."

In addition to reducing the costs of welfare and other subsidy programs, Goodwill's vocational training and placement services result in increased local, state and federal taxes paid by Goodwill clients. Nearly 230 cooperating employers made this possible by hiring Goodwill "graduates" in a variety of positions, including sales, janitorial work, food service, packaging and material handling.

A business careers skill training program prepared 24 people for careers in clerical and data processing positions last year.

A new retail training program will offer additional opportunities to Goodwill clients when it is implemented this fall.

"Our newest Goodwill Store is scheduled to open in April and will house extensive facilities for both classroom and on-the-job training in the retail field," Hunter explained.

The Telegraph and Schoolcraft location in Redford, at 20,000 square feet, is nearly twice the size of Goodwill's largest store on Elizabeth Lake Road in Waterford.

"Sales at our retail stores help support our vocational training programs, and it makes sense for us to use that resource as a training tool for our clients," Hunter added.

"Our long history of success in placing Goodwill-trained workers reinforces the changing attitude of businesses toward people with disabilities," Hunter explained. "During these times of downsizing, our permanent placement figures are a testament to the effectiveness of Goodwill Industries' job training programs."

Goodwill Industries of Greater Detroit is Michigan's oldest and largest vocational training agency for the disabled and disadvantaged. To find out more about Goodwill and its services call (313) 964-3900.

North, South gymnasts finish 1-2 in league

By Chuck Klonke
Sports Editor

Grosse Pointe North's gymnastics team doubled its pleasure last week in the Great Lakes Eight Conference.

The Norsemen, who posted a 5-0 record in league dual meets, won the conference meet last Saturday at Clarenceville, scoring 130.65 points.

"I've been here for 13 years and that's the first time we've scored 130 points," said North coach Bruce Bentley. "I'm really proud of the team because it takes everyone contributing to have a score like that."

It was a good day for both Grosse Pointe schools because South was second with 126.9 points, followed by Dearborn Edsel Ford 125.7, Fraser 123.9, Trenton 114.525 and Clarenceville 111.8.

"That's the first time the two Grosse Pointe schools finished first and second," said South coach Jill Mattes, who was an assistant at North last year. "It was a great day for both of us."

North junior Robbie Langlois was the all-around champion with a score of 36.25.

"She also competes with the Olympia Gymnastics Academy, so she's a very accomplished gymnast," Bentley said.

Langlois won three of the four events she competed in to win the all-around by 1.20 points. She won the vault with a score of 9.1, had a winning score of 9.2 on the uneven bars and was first in balance beam with a 9.15.

"Robbie did a very difficult tuck suke on the vault," Bentley said. "She was the only girls to do that. Second place in vault was 8.4."

"I think her best event is bars and she did a couple of giants, which only one or two others were able to do. And her beam performance was very clean."

Langlois was also third in floor exercise with an 8.8 score. North also got good efforts from its other two tri-captains, Jennifer Spindler and Cathy Conger.

"Cathy had a broken finger, but still competed in three events and scored evenly," Bentley said. "And Jennifer had a 7.95 in floor exercise."

North had the highest team scores in vault (33.7), bars (33.2) and beam (31.15).

"We have a lot of depth," Bentley said. "All six of our vaulters had regional qualifying scores. We didn't have one of our best scores on beam, but we had our highest team score on vault and we did very well on the bars. Second place on bars was 31.95."

Two South gymnasts were among the top eight in all-around. Jocelyn Lorenger was fifth with a score of 33.1 and Lindsey White was sixth with 32.35. North freshman Sarah Linebaugh was eighth with 31.55.

"Sarah is our second-best scorer," Bentley said.

Conger tied for fifth in vault with an 8.3 and Andrea O'Boyle was seventh (8.25). South's Lorenger tied for third with 8.35.

Lorenger tied for fourth on bars (8.45), O'Boyle was sixth (8.35) and South's White was seventh (8.3).

White was sixth on the balance beam (7.85) and North's Colleen Bryzik was seventh (7.75).

Lorenger finished sixth in floor exercise with an 8.65.

Bentley said the championship didn't surprise him.

"I thought if we performed the way we were capable of, we'd win the league, but the other teams were also improved," he said. "I just can't stress enough how important everybody on the team was to our success."

South had several other fine performances, too.

Captain Jamie Lowden scored 8.2 on floor exercise, 8.0 on bars, 7.95 on vault and 7.1 on beam. Courtney Schafer helped the Blue Devils with an 8.0 on vault and 6.8 on beam. Kate Kraft had a personal best 7.2 score on bars.

Kristen Schulte scored 6.85 on beam and 5.65 on bars. Kim Smale had a 6.45 on bars, while Julie Champion had a 6.8 on beam. Catharine Lenard had a 7.85 on vault and 7.3 in floor exercise. Andrea Formolo had 7.35 on vault and Allie Schmitt had 7.4 on floor exercise.

"Our competitors received support from Emily Mabley, Emily Strachan and Corrine Camaro," Mattes said. "The girls worked very hard this year and it was nice to see their efforts rewarded. I'm very proud of them."

Jocelyn Lorenger of Grosse Pointe South goes through her balance beam routine at the Great Lakes Eight conference gymnastics meet. Lorenger finished fifth in the all-around competition.

Strong finish carries South to league title

By Chuck Klonke
Sports Editor

Slow starts don't worry Grosse Pointe South's hockey team.

They just make the Blue Devils work harder to improve. "It was the same as last year," said coach Bob Ropp after South won the Michigan Metro Hockey League East Division championship last week with victories over Dearborn Divine Child (2-0) and Riverview Gabriel Richard (7-4).

"We got off to a slow start both years, but played real well in January and February. Our goal this year was to not lose in January and we only lost once."

Solidifying the defense was one of the keys to the late season success that vaulted the Blue Devils from a 1-3 start in league play to a final record of 9-4-3.

"The turnaround was the defense after Christmas," Bopp said. "We cut down on our mistakes. The defensemen concentrated on getting the puck out of our end and let the forwards do the scoring. Earlier, they might have been too worried about scoring because we weren't getting a lot of goals."

The return of Justin Lariscny, who missed time because of illness, and Matt Moran, who had a serious shoulder injury, bolstered a defense corps that included Dave Bilbrey, Ben Weaver, sophomore Jeff Maxwell and three-year veteran Nick Linn. South began its "championship" week with a 2-0 shutout of Divine Child.

Adam Whitehead scored both goals for the Blue Devils. He opened the scoring at 1:17 of the first period on a power play.

"He just walked in from the corner," Bopp said. "On the second one, Terry Brennan won a faceoff and got the puck to Whitehead, who got off a good shot."

"Adam is having a fine year. He doubled his point totals from last year, when he had a good season as a 10th grader."

Whitehead finished the regular season with 12 goals and 12 assists.

Whitehead got South's second goal at 1:49 of the second period. After that, it was up to senior goalie Clint Carpenter to preserve the lead and he turned back all 18 shots to record his second shutout of the season.

Brennan had two assists and Pat Manion one for the Blue Devils.

South had trouble putting Gabriel Richard away until the Blue Devils got three straight goals at the end of the second period and beginning of the third.

Richard's Justin Gray tied the game at 3-3 at 11:31 of the second period, but 20 seconds later Jordan Damm broke the deadlock with a slap shot from just over the blue line.

"I don't think any goalie in the league would have stopped that shot," Bopp said. "Jordan is a talented player who's had some trouble scoring this year."

Brennan picked up his second goal of the game with 47 seconds remaining in the second period to give South a 5-3 lead. Andy Klein made it 6-3 at the 25-second mark of the third period.

The Pioneers scored at 8:07 of the third period, but Klein answered with his second goal of the game at 13:58.

"Klein has been our best player for the last three games," Bopp said.

The coach also praised the season-long contributions of Brennan.

"He's one of the best players in the league," Bopp said. "He does so many things for us. We look to him for a lot and he gets a lot of ice time. He's been very good defensively, too."

South jumped out to a 2-0 lead against Richard on goals by Manion and Brennan. Richard scored late in the first period.

Moran made it 3-1 at 8:44 of the second period, but the Pioneers tallied twice to tie the score.

Bilbrey had three assists for South and Whitehead had two. R.J. Wolney, Brennan and Weaver collected one assist apiece.

South's season came to an end Monday when the Blue Devils dropped their regional opener 4-0 to Redford Catholic Central, which finished the season ranked No. 1 in Class A.

Halftime speech spurs South success

By Chuck Klonke
Sports Editor

When George Petrouleas gives a halftime speech to his Grosse Pointe South basketball team it's like E.F. Hutton talking.

The Blue Devils listen.

"I've had to express myself to them a few times during halftime, and to the credit of the kids, they've responded," Petrouleas said after South remained tied for the lead in the Macomb Area Conference Red Division after victories over Romeo (61-47) and Stevenson (62-53) last week.

Petrouleas had to use one of his halftime speeches in the Romeo game when the Blue Devils fell behind 27-24 at the intermission.

"We did some things on the defensive end that I wasn't happy with," Petrouleas said. "We had to shore up the defense and execute a little better offensively. Once we did that, we took control of the game."

"We took some things away that Romeo had been successful doing in the first half."

Adjustments came easier to South than they do to a lot of high school basketball teams.

Tennis team has a good three years

The eighth-grade members of the Grosse Pointe Academy girls tennis team compiled an impressive record during their three years on the squad.

The Academy's teams over those three seasons posted a combined 26-3-1 record.

Sarah Washabaugh had the best individual record, winning 31 of her 35 matches. Other top records among the eighth graders were Casey McFeely, 26-4, Keisha Bahadu 16-3, Elizabeth Mason 24-7, Kirsten Winfield 23-7, Kelly Gotfredson 23-8 and Brody Dawson 29-18.

This year, eight of the 10 Academy entries reached the finals in the Independent School tournament. They were Washabaugh and Bahadu at first doubles, Winfield and McFeely at second doubles, Maria Lewis and Julie Keersmaekers at third doubles and Mason and Martha Snyder at fourth doubles.

GPA closed out the 7-2 season with an 8-2 win over Ann Arbor Greenhills.

Other members of the squad were Betsy Conway, Katherine Ball, Vicki Weiss, Freddie Schroeder, Annie DiLorato, Kristin Zouras, Claire Urbiel, Kelly Bayer, Lauren Kirchner, Allison McFeely, Erin Wickens, Maureen Mecke and Lauren Williamson.

The team was coached by Mike Fultz.

"We have a very intelligent group," Petrouleas said. "Our overall grade-point is a 3.5, so the kids understand what we're trying to say. And they've bought into our system. They know what we're telling them is accurate."

Adam Hess led the Blue Devils with 14 points, six assists and five rebounds. Mike Gotfredson collected 12 points, five assists and three rebounds.

South also got solid performances from Steve Howson, Mark Conrad, Karl Freimuth, Brian Hodgman, Matt Rudnick and Jeff See.

"We had a lot of kids contribute," Petrouleas said. "Nine different players scored. We used a lot of people and we used them in game-type situations."

While it took South a while to take control of the Romeo game, the Blue Devils never felt threatened by Stevenson, which was one of the pre-season favorites in the MAC Red but has been a disappointment.

"Everybody thought they'd be a contender because of their size, but they had six or seven kids that played football and they never seemed to come around like people thought they would," Petrouleas said.

South led by nine points at halftime and the Blue Devils maintained a comfortable lead throughout the second half.

"We were in total control of the game," Petrouleas said.

Howson led the Blue Devils with 17 points, while Gotfredson scored 13. Hess had 11 points and seven rebounds.

"Once again we distributed the points among a lot of people," Petrouleas said.

South closes out the regular season Friday when it hosts Fraser in a MAC crossover.

The Blue Devils begin district tournament play Monday at 6 p.m. against Detroit Public School League champion Denby. The district will be played at South.

Norsemen qualify five for state mat meet

By Chuck Klonke
Sports Editor

There's no need to look further than the individual records to see what kind of season Grosse Pointe North's wrestling team has had this year.

"We have 12 kids with 20 or more wins," said coach Art Roberts. "Until this season, a good year was seven or eight kids with 20 wins."

The Norsemen finished the dual meet season with a 14-1-1 record after losing a heart-breaking 34-30 decision to Warren Lincoln in the Division II regional semifinal at Highland Park.

Last Saturday, North qualified a record five wrestlers for the individual state meet in Battle Creek on March 7 and 8.

"This is the first time we've qualified five," Roberts said. "The last two years we took four."

Roberts also received an honor when he was named regional coach of the year in a vote of the coaches.

"I'm honored because it came from my peers," he said. "But it's easy to be a good coach when you have good kids."

senior Kevin Brandon (125), sophomore Rick Pesta (130) and junior Eddie Wright (140) each took third.

Phillips improved his season record to 48-1 with three lopsided decisions at the individual regional. He beat Monroe Jefferson's Joe Herter 19-2, posted a 9-1 decision over Luke Raspbery of Gibraltar Carlson and beat Notre Dame's Tommy Harris 18-2 in the championship match.

"Derek just dominated his matches," Roberts said. "The kid he beat in the semis (Raspbery) had only one loss coming into the regional."

Phillips' career victory total is 139.

Bordato got the Norsemen's only pin of the tournament when he disposed of Jefferson's Sean Polonkey in 41 seconds in his first match of the tournament. Bordato then beat Mike Halfeld of Romulus 8-5 and posted a 13-9 decision over Kevin Scott of Trenton in the title match.

"Gary was leading Scott, who was second in the state last year, 13-4, when he got five points at the end of the match," Roberts said. "Gary is really wrestling well."

Brandon, who has a career total of 143 victories and a season-mark of 46-6, finished third when he beat Trenton's Nick Benskey 8-4 in the consolation final. Brandon opened his competition with an 8-4 win over Benskey.

"It looked like we were watching the same match twice," Roberts said.

Brandon dropped a 6-4 decision to Tim Busen of Carleton Airport, a former state place winner, before coming back with a 13-1 decision over Raed Abukoff of Willow Run.

Pesta continued his steady improvement with a third-place finish at 130. He opened with a 7-6 win over Jason Saineghi of Trenton, lost 9-1 to two-time state qualifier Brian Nadeau of Monroe Jefferson and beat Saineghi 7-3 in the consolation final.

"Ricky has wrestled great for about a month," Roberts said. "We had a little talk after he lost a match in the Center Line meet and since then he's turned it around. He's going to be a good one. He works hard every day and never complains."

Pesta is 29-19 and has a 13-6 record since his turnaround.

Wright improved to 42-10 with his third place at 140. He opened with a 16-0 decision over Alex Hance of Romulus, then dropped a tough 1-0 decision to Jeremy Otter of Carleton Airport. Wright bounced back with a 3-2 decision over Trenton's Mark Straub and won the consolation final when Otter defaulted because of an injury.

North's other 28 match winners were Jeff Kalkhoff 32, Ryan Stevenson 27, Mike Benedettini 26, Joe Brennan 23, Ed Ball 22, Chad Cooper 21 and David Hirt 20.

"We had a total of 225 wins this year. That's an increase of 80 over last season," Roberts said. "And we wrestled a tougher dual-meet schedule. In my first year here we won 104 matches."

North's loss to Lincoln, which was ranked third in the state coaches' poll, was a heart-breaker because the Norsemen led 30-18 with four matches to go.

"Our kids wrestled well," Roberts said. "We had them but it just wasn't meant to be. We still have the state (individual) meet and that's our focus now, but we're looking forward to next year. We have nine of our 11 regional qualifiers returning."

Lincoln's Tim Pabst at 112, but Phillips pinned Steve Lockard in 48 seconds.

Brandon was pinned by Lincoln's Todd Costello at 125 and Pesta dropped a 6-2 decision to the Abes' Aaron Mazurek, a Macomb County champion, at 130.

Hirt got a key win for the Norsemen at 135 when he came back from a 7-2 first-period deficit to beat Mike Stedler 9-7 in overtime.

"He came off his back to beat a state qualifier," Roberts said. "It was a great match, just like Koscinski's."

Wright pinned Steve Nielson in 2:41 at 140. Kalkhoff wrestled well at 145 but lost 8-5 to Tom Baker. Bordato then pinned Chris Graham in 1:40 and Brennan got a fall in 5:37 against Augie Battisti at 160 to give North its 30-18 lead.

Lincoln beat Algonac in the regional final to advance to the dual meet quarterfinals this week.

South's Meyers earns trip to state finals

By Chuck Klonke
Sports Editor

Zach Meyers' 2-0 victory over Dearborn Edsel Ford's Mike Lawson wasn't the best win of a fine wrestling career at Grosse Pointe South, but it might have been his most important.

Meyers' match with Lawson came immediately after a 5-2 loss to Redford Catholic Central's Casey Rogowski at 189 pounds in the Division I regional at Hazel Park last Saturday.

More important, it sent him into the consolation final where he beat Stevenson's Clint Davis 9-1 to earn a third-place regional medal and a trip to the state individual championships in Battle Creek on March 7 and 8.

"Zach wrestled Lawson in his first match of the year and beat him badly," said South coach Larry Carr. "When Zach lost in the regional last year it was to a kid he'd beaten twice before so he was a little nervous."

Meyers got an early takedown for the only two points of the match.

"He rode (Lawson) for the rest of the first period and most of the third," Carr said. "He just didn't want to take any unnecessary chances."

Once Meyers got to Davis, the wrestler he beat for the league championship, he was more relaxed and dominated the match.

"He wrestled OK, he just didn't finish his takedowns," Carr said.

South's other regional qualifier, Joe Dwaihy, lost a couple of close matches at 130 pounds.

Devils beat Cranbrook twice

Grosse Pointe South's girls hockey team ended its first season on a high note with back-to-back victories over Cranbrook Kingswood.

It was a positive ending to a season that saw the team made outstanding progress under coaches Bill Fox and Tanya Brewer.

The first of the two games with the Cranes — a 4-3 victory — was one of the most exciting of the season for South. The Blue Devils' Christina Bakalis broke a 3-3 with 28 seconds remaining in the third period.

Sophomore Courtney Lytle had a hat trick for South. Bakalis and Molly Weaver each had two assists for the Blue Devils and Kelly Birg and Elizabeth Wagner collected one apiece.

The second of the two contests was just as exciting as the first. South won 5-3 to finish with a 3-6-1 record.

Bakalis continued her excellent play with two goals and two assists. Weaver had two goals and an assist, while Lytle had three assists. Deanna Raab, Christin Petty and Andrea Elich each had one assist.

South baseball team hosts camp

Grosse Pointe South's baseball team will host its sixth annual indoor baseball instructional camp on Saturday, March 22.

There will be two sessions — from 9 a.m. until noon and from 1 to 4 p.m. The camp is open to fourth through eighth graders.

All campers must pre-register by Thursday, March 20. There will be no registration at the door. The fee is $35 per player.

"They can observe, take notes, even videotape the drills," said South baseball coach Dan Griesbaum, the camp director.

"We'll have instruction in hitting, pitching, infield and outfield play, catching and other specialty phases of the game."

Any players who didn't pick up registration forms at their Little League or Babe Ruth sign-up, can pick up forms at the main office at South or they can call Griesbaum at 884-7834.

"It's important that players sign up early because we close off registration," Griesbaum said. "We want to keep the instruction as individualized as possible. The morning session, especially, fills up early every year."

Instructors are the coaches, varsity and junior varsity players at South.

All proceeds from the camp go to the Blue Devils' baseball program.

Swing into Spring.

Ford swims to third straight MAC Red title

By Chuck Klonke
Sports Editor

Swimmers from Grosse Pointe North and Grosse Pointe South are hoping Ford II's domination of the Macomb Area Conference Red Division meet is coming to an end.

The host Falcons won their third straight conference meet championship last Saturday when coach Dennis Schrieber's squad finished with 338 points. South was second with 303 and dual-meet champion North was third with 281.

The Norsemen's Mike O'Connor Jr. won the 200-yard individual medley and the 100 backstroke, achieving state qualifying times in each, and was named the meet's outstanding swimmer in a vote of the division coaches.

"I expected it to be close among the three teams, but our kids rose to the occasion," Schrieber said. "They really got excited about this meet. And we had some pleasant surprises."

The Falcons relied heavily on their senior class, which provided future hope for the Norsemen and Blue Devils.

"Dennis has had an outstanding group of kids for the last three years," said North coach Mike O'Connor. "We're returning 96 points and South is returning 94. Ford had only 14 points from its underclassmen."

But even though seniors picked up most of the Falcons' points, they aren't going to relinquish their title without a battle.

"We'll miss those guys, but we have a pretty good group of freshmen," Schrieber said.

South coach Bill Thompson was pleased with the Blue Devils' runner-up finish.

"It was a total team effort, just like I've been preaching to them all year," he said. "We got points from everyone, from the freshmen to the seniors. And it's a strong senior class. We're losing seven seniors, so it was good to see our young guys swim as well as they did."

South also picked up several points in diving as C.J. Hurd and Tom Leto finished first and second, respectively, and Clay Vanderpool finished sixth. All three Blue Devils divers have qualified for the state Class A regional next week.

Hurd's winning point total was 408.05, while Leto's runner-up total of 362.65 was nearly 50 points ahead of the third place diver.

"The divers helped us a lot," Thompson said. "That's just another example of the team effort we got today."

Sophomore John McLellan nipped Ford's Steve Paruszkiewicz in the 100 freestyle with a time of 49.27. McLellan was a close second to Paruszkiewicz in the 50 freestyle. McLellan and Paruszkiewicz each posted state cuts in both events.

Another key event for South was the 100 butterfly where Rob Latta, Tim Kimmel and Cory Winger all finished in the top six. The Blue Devils also had three of the top six places in the 200 IM with Justin Bosley, Latta and Kimmel.

"It was great for the younger guys to see some success in this meet," Thompson said. "To work as hard as they have and see results should give them incentive to swim year-round. They're already talking about next year."

"Coach Michalik (former South coach Fred Michalik) used to tell us success was simple. If you work hard, you'll swim fast."

Michalik retired after last season and Thompson and Jim Bellanca took over. Both are former South swimmers.

"All we know we owe to him," Thompson said. "Jim and I really respect him and we're just an extension of what he taught us about swimming and coaching."

"Jim's been a big help," Thompson said. "He's a great motivator."

Coach O'Connor was delighted with his son's performance in the meet, but he was also happy with the rest of his squad.

"We swam well," he said. "We were happy to win the dual meet championship, but we didn't have the depth for the conference. Mikey, Adam (Ziegler), Jason (Knost) and David (Nielubowicz) could handle the duals, but we didn't have enough points down low in this meet. We didn't fill two events."

"Nick Rennpage, Joe Ogilvy and Dan Leehr swam well for us and Andy Blazaitis had a great meet. David and Brent Nielubowicz did a good job, too. Most of the kids swam real well. We just didn't have enough of them."

In addition to O'Connor's two firsts, Knost won the 100 breaststroke in 1:03.98 and Ziegler was first in the 500 freestyle in 4:59.49.

Ford's Schrieber said two key events were the 100 breaststroke where Chris Barber finished a surprising third behind North's Jason Knost and Brent Nielubowicz. Knost had a winning time of 1:03.98.

"Chris' best time coming into this weekend was a 1:10.6 and both days he swam a 1:06," Schrieber said. "That's a huge drop."

"Winning the medley relay was also a big boost for us. We knew we'd have to come from behind because North had Mike (O'Connor) leading off and he's an outstanding backstroke. That got us off to a good start."

Ford swept the three relays. "We have good depth," Schrieber said. "It was an outstanding team effort. That's what it takes to win this meet."

Ford's Dan Miarka won the 200 freestyle, nipping Ziegler in a photo finish, and Chris Hall was first in the 100 butterfly.

Following are the complete team standings, along with the winners in each event and the North and South swimmers who placed in the top 12.

Knights win a pair of Metro Conference thrillers

By Chuck Klonke
Sports Editor

If the NBA wants to get its fans back with higher scoring games, it should take a look at last Friday's contest between University Liggett School and Clarenceville.

"I had a lot of people tell me that was the best high school basketball game they've seen," said ULS coach Bruce Peltó after the Knights came away with a 94-91 Metro Conference victory in double overtime. "It was racehorse basketball all the way."

But even with both teams scoring at a high rate, it wasn't a sloppy contest. ULS made only 13 turnovers, while Clarenceville had 17.

"This win could be the biggest stepping stone we've had this year," Peltó said. "This will prepare us for the state tournament."

"We had opportunities to win this game and we had opportunities to lose it. We made some great defensive stops down the stretch and we hit some key free throws."

The Knights led 33-31 at halftime and ULS was still clinging to a 51-47 advantage after three quarters. Then the Trojans' Albert Dejanovich caught fire. The sophomore standout, who had six points through three quarters, scored 23 in the fourth quarter and overtimes to finish with a game-high 29.

Dejanovich sent the game into the first extra period with a basket in the final minute. Clarenceville had a chance to win the game at the buzzer, but a 15-foot attempt missed the mark and regulation ended in a 78-78 tie.

Kevin Espy was the Knights' hero in the first overtime. He hit seven free throws. Espy, who finished with 24 points, was 9-for-12 from the line in the two overtime periods.

ULS jumped ahead in the second overtime on a three-point basket by Joel Parrott, who also had 24 points. After the lead changed hands a couple of times, the Knights maintained their lead at the foul line. Espy and Parrott each hit two free throws and Brian Bruenton, who led ULS with 26 points, added one.

In addition to his season-high point total, Espy collected six assists and four steals. Will Watson and Parrott each had four assists and Bruenton picked up three.

ULS' post players, Charlie Strong and C.R. Moultry, combined for 10 points, 13 rebounds and five steals. Kyle Denham played a strong game defensively for ULS.

Earlier, ULS nipped Lutheran Westland 55-53 in a game reminiscent of the first meeting between the two Metro Conference rivals.

"It was deja vu," Peltó said. "It was so much like the other game it was scary. They had the same player take the final shot and once again it went in and came back out."

The only difference was that there were a couple of seconds left when the Warriors took the final shot. The rebound came to Watson, who tipped it down court where it was run down by Parrott as time expired.

"That was a real heads-up play by Will," Peltó said. "By tipping the ball, it let time run out."

Bruenton led ULS with 23 points, including 14 in the first half. Espy had 10 and Parrott finished with nine.

Strong missed the game because of a sore back and Moultry had a strong performance with eight points and six rebounds. Denham grabbed five rebounds.

Justin Young, who started at point guard, and Espy both played well.

"I went back to a 10-man rotation and we had some excellent performances off the bench," Peltó said. "Kevin Espy, Justin Macksoud, Bryan Wisk, Will Watson and Renard Morey-Greer all made key contributions. And fatigue wasn't a factor at the end."

ULS led 34-26 at halftime, but Westland pulled into a 39-39 tie after three quarters. The Knights won the game at the free throw line with Young hitting one and Bruenton adding a pair of foul shots.

"We had to play better defense and in the fourth quarter we just gutted it out," Peltó said. "It was a good win. The kids felt good about themselves after it was over."

ULS improved its Metro Conference record to 10-5. The Knights are 11-8 overall.

Norsemen are primed for a run to a championship

By Chuck Klonke
Sports Editor

This is the week Grosse Pointe North's basketball team has been waiting for.

"This is what high school basketball is all about — going into the last week with a chance to win a championship," coach Dave Stavale said after the Norsemen kept pace with Fraser in the Macomb Area Conference White Division with victories over Utica (53-31) and Roseville (49-33).

Fraser went into the week leading North by a game in the loss column. The Norsemen hosted the Ramblers on Tuesday. North plays a make-up game at home against Port Huron Northern tonight, Feb. 27, and closes out the regular season with a home game against L'Anse Creuse Friday.

"This is a pressure-packed week, but it's fun," Stavale said. "This is what we've been building toward for five years." The game with Roseville was close for a half, but then the Norsemen turned in a stifling defensive effort in the second half.

"We played terrific defense in the second half and it all started with Nick Aubrey," Stavale said. "We started picking Roseville up border-to-border and we forced them into mistakes. We got some easy baskets and it all started with the defensive effort."

While Aubrey was the triggerman for the defense, Steve Champagne, Dave Stavale Jr. and Leonard Harris were also major contributors.

The Panthers led 22-18 at halftime, but the Norsemen held Roseville to only 11 points in the second half. North also cut its turnovers from 10 in the first half to two in the second. "We had some trouble scoring," coach Stavale said. "They played a zone and it bothered us some. We played the game on Thursday, so we didn't have quite as much time to prepare for them."

"Our shooting was off. We shot 30 percent. When you're not hitting your shots, you have to make things happen. You do that by going after them on defense and creating opportunities off the defense."

Champine led North with 18 points and five steals. Stavale finished with 16 points — the sixth time in seven games he has scored in double figures. Aubrey added nine points. Harris had seven rebounds and Dave Hermann pulled down five.

The Norsemen jumped out to a 7-0 lead and never trailed in the victory over Utica. North led 14-6 after one quarter and held a 23-13 halftime lead.

North kept adding to the margin in the second half and with about a minute and a half left the Norsemen had a 25-point lead.

"We played very well in that game," coach Stavale said. "The game at Utica was a very physical game and some of the things that happened were still fresh in our minds so we were fired up."

"That was the game that got our run for the championship back on track."

Champine led North with 14 points, while Stavale scored 12. Harris had eight points and a team-high seven rebounds. Champagne grabbed five rebounds.

John Bertich led Utica, which lost by three points in the earlier meeting with North, with 10 points.

The Norsemen begin Class A district play at Grosse Pointe South Monday when they meet Detroit Public School League semifinalist Finney at 7:30 p.m.

Advantages, disadvantages of home ownership

If you are thinking of buying a home be sure you are ready for the responsibilities of home ownership. Some people are better off renting and should not buy a home. Others should postpone buying a home until they are more established, according to Cheryl Krysiak of the Michigan State University extension service.

For example, if you have just graduated, started a new job or moved into a new area you may not be ready for your own home. If you travel extensively, dislike yard work and house maintenance, you may never want to buy a home. On the other hand, if you plan to stay in the area for more than a few years, buying a house may be a good idea.

The advantages of home ownership

- You will have a place of your own. A permanent place to raise your family and become a part of the community.
- You can hang pictures, take down walls and do other renovations that meet your needs.
- A house is a good financial investment. Houses usually increase in value if they are properly maintained and the local economy remains stable.
- A portion of your mortgage payment pays back the loan and every month you own more of your home. You can look at your monthly payment as a scheduled savings plan. You will get your money back when you sell.

- You have to live somewhere, so why not a place you will own someday? It's better to pay yourself than a landlord.

- Your housing costs will remain the same if you have a fixed rate mortgage. Rent payments increase each year. Some parts of your mortgage payment, taxes and insurance, may increase, causing your monthly payment to go up.

- You may be eligible for tax savings on your federal income tax returns that are not available to renters. The interest paid on your mortgage and your property taxes may be deductible if you itemize.

- Once you have purchased a home you cannot move easily. Be sure you are ready to settle down in a particular area before you buy. Selling a house is as complex a process as buying one.

- You are responsible for all repair and maintenance tasks. You cannot call the landlord. You must continually repair and maintain your house to protect your investment. When deciding if you should buy, consider that your yearly maintenance costs will be about 3 percent of the home's price.

- You must make your mortgage payments in full and on time. If you do not do so you may lose your home and any money you have invested in it.

Home ownership is a part of the American dream. If you do your homework when you are deciding if owning a home is for you, you may prevent the dream from turning into a nightmare.

3-steps to sell your home

By James S. Mackintosh
Realtor, Grosse Pointe

Here's the formula to get the most money in the least time with the fewest problems — when you sell your home:

Price the house right

This is critical. If you underprice the house, you will lose money — but the biggest problem is overpricing. Overpricing is self-defeating. If you overprice a house, the people who should buy it won't see it and the people who see it won't buy it!

The way to arrive at the right price is to look at what similar houses in a similar neighborhood have sold for recently. That's what people are willing to pay for a house like yours. Also, you should look at similar houses that are currently on the market. That's the competition. Something else to consider is that the interest and excitement is generated in the first few weeks a house is on the market. If it's priced right, enough serious traffic is generated to result in offers. Another reason to price it right is that both the buyer and the house must qualify for the mortgage. The house has to appraise at the selling price or the lender won't approve the mortgage.

Get home ready to show

Make a good first impression from the curb. The front of the house, including the front door and the landscape, should look great. Clean windows, fresh paint, trimmed lawn and shrubbery can make a big difference.

Then make a good lasting impression with the inside of the house. It should be clean, neat and uncluttered. Paint, new flooring and fixtures can do wonders.

Most people want to "just move in" with little or nothing to do. However, you only want to spend money where you will get the right payback.

You will have to get a "Certificate of Occupancy" (not in Grosse Pointe Shores) and then bring the house up to code. After your final inspection, your certificate should go on your kitchen table where everyone can see it.

New Michigan law requires that you fill out a "Seller's Disclosure Statement" by checking yes, no or not applicable in each category. Potential buyers need to see this.

Get right exposure

You want everyone who may be interested in your house to know about and have a chance to see it.

The first thing your agent will do is discuss the features of your home in his office meeting. His associates will be answering the phone and want to have a good feeling for all of your selling points. And, of course, they may have a customer for your house.

Referral companies will give you access to a large number of executives and other qualified buyers moving into the area.

The most important exposure your house will get is the Multi-List System (MLS), where all available houses are listed. This is the Realtor's basic tool and those Realtors control the buyers. Anyone seriously wanting to buy a house calls a Realtor and makes a date to go through the MLS to see which houses may fit into their plans. The Multi List System is absolutely the key to buying and selling a house.

The disadvantages of home ownership

- Owning a home may cost more than renting. Property taxes and insurance may cost more each year. Plus you will also have additional maintenance and repair

This "sleeper" is on a dead-end street in the Farms. There is almost 4000 square feet under the new roof in this Cape Cod. Featuring two first floor bedrooms, each with a bath. There are two more bedrooms with private baths on the second floor.

Getting ready to look for a house? Here're some tips

Once you have decided that home ownership is for you, there are many things you have to consider as you prepare to look for a house, according to Cheryl Krysiak of the Michigan State University Extension service.

The first thing you have to do is decide what you want in a house and how much you can afford to pay for a house. Sharing this information with your real estate agent will help that person understand what you are looking for.

First-time home buyers usually want a lot in their first house. All those special features will add to the cost of housing. Time spent distinguishing between what you really need to live vs. what you want, can help you focus on realistic options.

For example, if your family wants a living room and a family room, you might settle for a house with a living room and a basement that could eventually be remodeled to include a family room. Your family's lifestyle patterns will play an important role in determining needs vs. wants.

You may also want to go to a local bank and pre-apply for a mortgage. After the bank tells you how big a mortgage you qualify for, you can then only look at houses in that price range. This will ensure that you don't find your dream house and then discover you cannot afford it.

Economic vs. aesthetic value is another important factor to consider. Many things add to the economic value of a home — land, size of house and number of rooms, sizes of rooms, number of bathrooms, size and design of kitchen, storage space, quality of construction, plumbing, heating and cooling systems, and energy-saving features.

Other features add to eye appeal and may actually cover-up defects. Cosmetic features include carpeting or fancy wallpaper, the current owner's furnishings or appliances — which may not stay with the home — fancy lights and bathroom fixtures.

If you do not take time to analyze the difference between the two, you might be dazzled by the new paint job and designer wallpaper rather than considering things such as the condition of the roof and windows. Hiring a home inspector before you buy will ensure you are not making a mistake.

Location is one of the most important considerations. If you are not sure you want to live in a city, the country or a suburb, look in all three places and consider the pluses and minuses of living in each.

For example, in the city you would have city water and sewer. In the country you could have a well and a septic system which have added upkeep costs. Different costs are incurred — monthly water/sewer bills vs. maintenance or replacement of a water pump and a septic tank.

The value of the home you buy will be affected by the value of other houses in the neighborhood. The value of these houses is reflected by their general appearance and the general appearance of the neighborhood.

Look around the neighborhood to see how the owners take care of their homes and yards. Litter, piles of junk, abandoned cars and vacant houses with boarded doors and windows are a sign of potential trouble.

Do not hesitate to approach people living in the neighborhood and ask questions that will help you get a feel for the quality of life in the neighborhood. The availability of sports and recreational activities, and a culture where people relax on their porches or garden in the back yard will all influence your decision.

Two other important issues to consider are the quality of the schools and safety of children.

During your first trip through a house you get a general impression of the dwelling, its cosmetic condition and the potential of the space and layout to satisfy your family. If the house appeals to you, second and third visits may occur. During these visits you will want to focus on particular items, including the home's interior and exterior structure, heating, plumbing and electrical systems, insulation, etc.

When you decide to make an offer on a house you need to have it inspected by a professional inspector. Make your offer-to-buy contingent on a satisfactory inspection report or resolution of any problem areas.

Buying a house is usually the biggest investment people ever make. When getting ready to buy a house be sure to analyze what you need, know what you can afford by pre-applying for a mortgage and never offer to buy a house unless it passes a home inspection. For information call (810) 469-6430.

THE LAST WALTZ

The moving van has just pulled away, leaving you with years of dust bunnies and grime that you didn't know was there. You are tired, and the last thing you feel like doing is scrubbing your house for the new owners. Leaving your home impeccably clean is one of the most important things you can do to ensure a smooth closing.

Your buyers will do their "walk-through" before the closing to make sure that the systems are in working order and that the agreed-upon repairs were made. They will feel better about the whole process if they walk into a spotless house. This will be their last opportunity to experience an attack of buyers' remorse, and your efforts can minimize any second thoughts they may be having or any crankiness about issues that must be resolved at the closing. If you are too tired to do the cleaning yourself, calling a professional cleaner will be worth the investment.

Laura resides and works in Grosse Pointe as a top realtor for Coldwell Banker Schweitzer covering the Grosse Pointes, St. Clair Shores and Harper Woods.

For professional advice on all aspects of buying or selling, call her at (313) 886-4200 or (313) 201-8070.

"What's it?" items are favorites with collectors. At many shows and shops there are strange objects that were made to be used for some unrecognized project.

At a recent bottle show, dealers were showing all sorts of unusual items. What looked like a pair of opera glasses turned out to be a milk-glass candy container with two screw-on tin lids. A blue glass "pipe" was really a match holder to be hung near a Victorian fireplace. A small glass shoe had been made to hold perfume. A strange square "bottle" was really made to hold the acid for a battery.

One odd bottle had everyone stumped. It was an oval item embossed with the words, "Patented May 30, 1916." Research has shown that it was not a bottle at all, but a commercial glass toilet float.

Collectors can learn something new at every show.

Q. My mother gave me a pin that belonged to her mother. It's in the shape of the letter V with wings at the bottom. A bar at the end of the V has three round rhinestones and a rectangular rhinestone. What were they supposed to represent?

A. You have a Victory pin, a popular item during World War II. The rhinestones represent three dots and a dash — Morse code for the letter V.

Collectors pay $25 to $50 for a "V for Victory" rhinestone pin.

Q. Do you have any information on the Flow Blue pattern Agra?

A. It was made about 1891. Agra pieces have a pattern of asters and other large blossoms. The center scene shows a Swiss lake, chalet and church with a tower.

Agra actually is a city in India. F. Winkle & Co. Colonial Pottery of Stoke, Staffordshire, England, made the pattern. The pottery was in business from 1890 through 1931.

Q. I have started a collection of Currier and Ives plates by Royal China Co. Can you tell me who else made Currier and Ives items?

A. Currier and Ives plates by the Royal China Co. of Sebring, Ohio, are probably the most well-known. Royal's blue-and-white plates decorated with scenes taken from the old Currier and Ives prints were popular 1950s dinnerware.

Other Currier and Ives plates were made by the Crooksville

China Co., Harker Pottery and Scio Pottery, all of Ohio; Taylor, Smith & Taylor of West Virginia; and Canonsburg Pottery of Pennsylvania.

Q. I have a lady's compact with engraved gold stripes and black enamel stripes. It has a scalloped edge. The engraved bottom says "Stratton-England." Is it old? Is it valuable?

A. Stratton compacts are still being made. Early models, circa 1930, are marked with a hand holding a partially-open compact. That design shows the patented Stratton automatic powder door opener.

Early Strattons sell for $50 to $80.

Q. I've been collecting cone-shaped ice-cream scoops topped with a turning device. The device moves two prongs inside the scoop that scrape the sides to loosen the ice cream. How old are the scoops?

A. The scoops you describe are one of the earliest designs, made between 1876 and 1900. The cone-shaped servers, invented by William Clewell in Reading, Pa., were made by several companies.

Q. My bread plate is clear around the edges, with a milk-glass center. Around the edges are the words, "Give us this day our daily bread." In the center is the figure of a cross with two women at the foot and the words, "Simply to Thy cross I cling" and "Rock of Ages." It also is marked "Patented Nov. 23, 1875." Is it valuable?

A. Your bread plate was made to honor the hymn "Rock of Ages."

The plate is usually found in completely clear or deep-blue glass. A plate with the opaque glass center sold at auction for $165 last year.

TIP: Clean diamonds or rubies in a mixture of equal parts Wisk and water. Quickly swish dirty pearls, opals or coral in a mixture made from a teaspoon of liquid Ivory soap and a quart of lukewarm water. Rinse and pat dry.

Q. Somebody told me old beanbag chairs are hot items. How can you tell if they are old?

Beanbag chairs are becoming popular once again. But the only truly valuable ones are the original Sacco versions, made in 1968 by Italian designers Gatti, Palini & Teodoro.

Paneling updates without changing house's character

Older homes can be an excellent investment, but often require extensive remodeling. If you have a few skills in your tool belt you can do some of the work yourself.

Old lath and plaster walls that are cracked, bulging or out of plumb are a special problem. Yet many people are finding remedies that require a minimum of money and effort by installing a new wall surface of solid wood paneling.

The job is relatively simple and is not beyond the means of the average do-it-yourselfer. Paneling patterns and finishes can be chosen to suit any interior.

A popular choice is tongue and groove/V-joint paneling with a trim molding and wainscoting, topped by a chair rail.

Cornice moldings and base shoes are removed before the paneling is installed. These are replaced when the work is done or a new pattern may be chosen.

For vertical paneling, three furring strips, usually 1x2-inch pieces, are mounted over the existing wall — one at the top, one centered and one just above the base shoe.

The furring strips are screwed through the plaster and into the wall studs. Use wood shims to level any areas that are bowed or bulging.

A booklet called "The Western Wood Products Association Guide to Real Wood Interiors" explains the selection and installation of solid wood paneling in more detail. To receive the booklet send $1.50 to: WWPA, Dept. AL, 522 SW Fifth Ave., Suite 400, Portland, Ore. 97204.

Home Depot sponsors Cobo show

Singled out as one of the nation's most successful home shows, the 79th annual International Builders Home, Flower and Furniture Show will be part of the National Home and Garden Show series sponsored by House Beautiful. The Home Depot is the presenting sponsor of the series.

"We are thrilled to have the additional support and exposure that this national sponsorship brings to our show. The unique sponsorship program is the first consumer product sponsorship of its kind bringing together two names known to every American homeowner," says Scott Jacobson, president of the Building Industry

Association of southeastern Michigan (BIA) and of S. R. Jacobson Development Corp. in Bingham Farms.

The show runs from March 15 - 23 at Detroit's Cobo Conference/Exhibition Center.

House Beautiful is celebrating its centennial anniversary of publishing. The Home Depot is the leading home improvement retailer, with 483 stores in the United States and Canada.

Other cities included in the series are Minneapolis, Portland, Boston, Atlanta, Jacksonville, St. Louis, Dallas, Washington D.C., Pittsburgh, New Orleans, Phoenix, Philadelphia, Miami, Anaheim and Houston.

Mix, match for original wood paneling styles

Nothing beats the natural look and easy upkeep of natural solid-wood paneling. Homeowners used to panel just the basement or rec room. At that time, ordinary pine boards were the popular choice.

Today, with the many patterns and species available, homeowners are finding they can easily mix and match to suit their own style in most any room.

Western woods such as hemlock, Douglas fir, cedar and pine are easy to work with and take finishes well. These and other species are available in various patterns such as tongue and groove.

In addition to pattern, the number of knots and type of grain also help determine style. Paneling comes in either clear pieces or pieces that contain knots. If you choose the knotty look, make sure the knots are firm.

Wood grain can be either vertical or flat. Vertical grain wood has vertical bands running the length of the piece. Flat grain appears in wavy lines.

Paneling boards may be rough or smooth textured depending on the desired mood for the room. Smooth textured wood can glow with a silky sheen. Rough textured on the other hand, gives a more rugged appearance, such as the western look.

Another option is saw-textured, in which the circular motion of the saw blade is shown on the board.

The choice of wood finishes is also widely varied. Clear varnish or furniture oil highlight the wood's natural grain and color. Or, to change the wood tone, a penetrating stain can be used. A washed effect can be made by painting with a thinned, white, oil-based paint that is wiped back before drying.

For additional information on natural wood paneling "Real Wood Interiors, A Design Workbook" on solid wood paneling color, texture, patterns and finishes is available. To receive the booklet send $2.50 and a written request to: Western Wood Products Association, Dept. AK, 522 SW Fifth Ave., Suite 400, Portland, Ore. 97204.

Home Tips

TO THE RESCUE — For Sara P. who has black gunk on her wood floor, try softening it with a strong cleaning agent, then scrape it up with a putty knife.

I just used Soilax to clean old cupboard doors and used the corner of my putty knife to scrape off the old grease that the former owner of my house had left. Be sure to have rags or paper towels handy to wipe the gunk off the knife.

I'm bragging, my cupboards look new. I took down the cupboard doors and pulled out the drawers, and cleaned as above. I put on the first coat of BIN, two coats of flat, washable latex, and finished with semi-gloss.

I installed new knobs and it looks like a wood-mode kitchen in white.

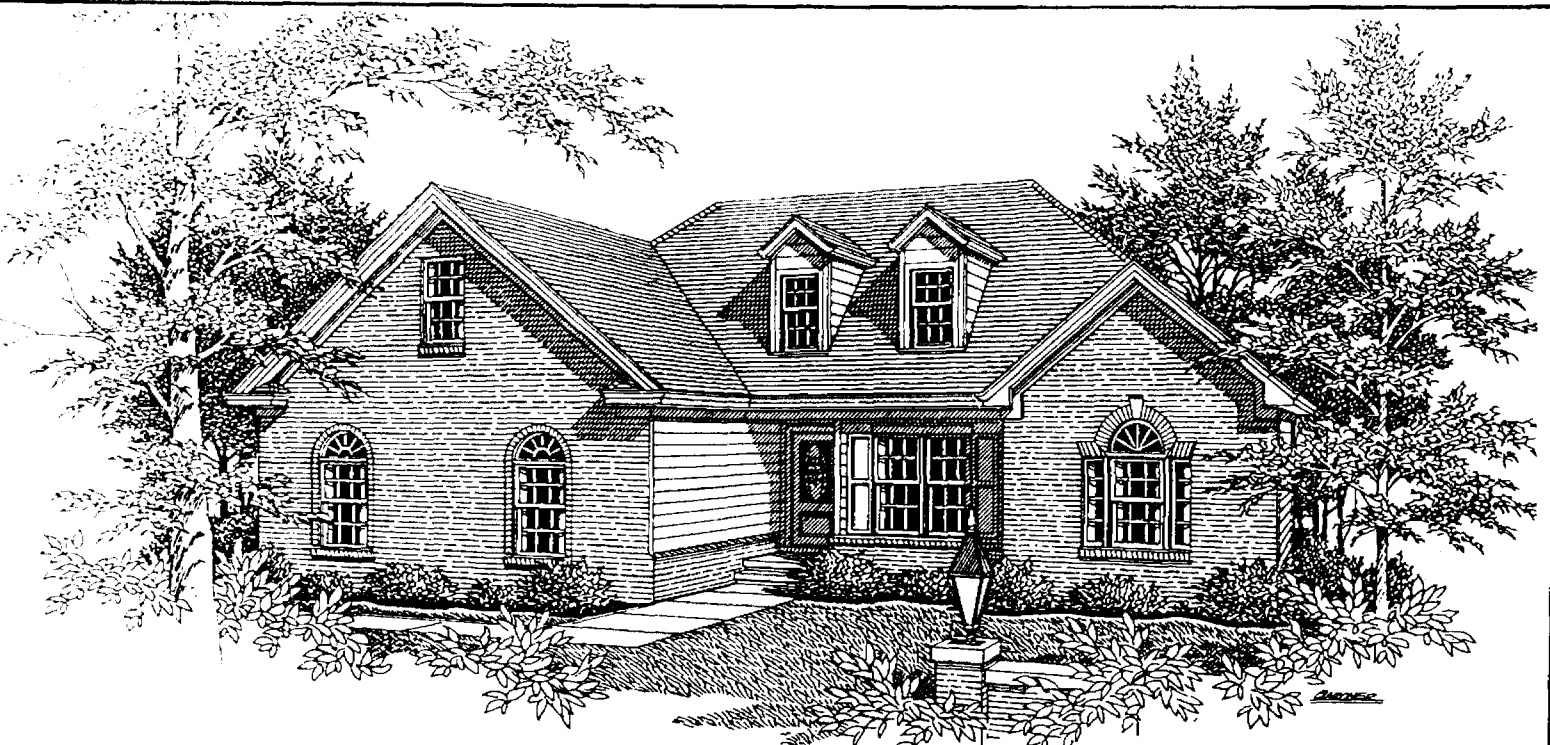

If you do this, remove all hardware first. I cleaned the hinges and discarded the old pulls and installed new ceramic knobs. Remember, the most important aspect of painting or refinishing is preparation.

Paint will not adhere well on a dirty, bumpy or greasy surface. Also, sand if necessary to smooth.

I did cheat. I had my handyman put the doors back up, but he's very reasonable. Sara will not have the expense I had. She only needs the cleaning agent and putty knife.

I filled in the extra holes in the doors with spackling compound because that's all I had. Wood glue would have been the product of choice. Elaine S., Elbridge, N.Y.

Four keys to build wealth and achieve your financial goals (NAPS)-Everyone needs to build financial security for their family. In reality, however, many people are doing little or nothing to reach their financial goals. According to statistics, Americans save less than virtually any major country in the world.

Almost everyone understands they need to take control of their money, but many don't understand some of the basic keys to building financial security. Here are four from the experts at Primerica Financial Services that will help you achieve your financial goals:

1. Pay Yourself First — This is good common sense. Before anyone else gets a claim to your money, pay yourself by putting a set amount aside in a savings or investment account. A standard rule of thumb is to save 10 percent of your income. Each time you get a raise, adjust your savings amount up to 10 percent of that amount. If you can save more, that's even better, but 10 percent will get you going in the right direction.

2. The Power Of Time — When it comes to achieving financial security, time is, without a doubt, the most important tool you have. It overcomes a million shortcomings: a modest income and even some poor habits. Time, combined with two other important elements, rate of return and consistency, is a powerful key to achieving financial security.

3. The Power Of Compounding — Compounding is one of the most important keys to wealth you will ever learn. With the power of compound interest at work for you, you'll be amazed at how quickly a few hundred dollars becomes a thousand.

4. The Importance Of Rate Of Return — The impact of rate of return when combined with time is significant. If $1,000 were deposited for a child at 6 percent for 65 years, the amount at the end of that time would be $44,000. If the same $1,000 was deposited at 9 percent for the same length of time, the amount the child would receive would be $270,000. The difference would be $226,000. Now you see why the rate of return you receive on your savings or investment account is so important.

While there are many other "fine points" of money management, these four keys will get you started on the path to financial success.

Generation X, it's time to think about retirement

(NAPS)-If you're like most people, you've been told to save your money since you were a child. Now, it's more important than ever to heed such advice. Fewer employer pension plans and likely cuts in Social Security and Medicare mean the sooner you plan and prepare for your retirement, the better off you're likely to be when you're no longer quite so young.

If you're in your 20s or 30s, it's imperative that you start saving for retirement now. Even if Social Security continues at current levels, which experts say is unlikely, the maximum payment to retirees is just $14,976 a year. And if Medicare is cut, which is even more likely, retirees will have to use their savings to pay at least a portion of their medical expenses. Bluntly stated, if you don't start saving now you may literally be facing poverty in your old age. But don't fret, by starting early and regularly putting aside a minimal amount, the power of compounding can leave you with quite a tidy sum by retirement.

Unfortunately, few young people realize this and many don't get the retirement investment information they need. According to a recent survey, younger workers are not sufficiently targeted by the investment education programs of companies with defined contribution retirement plans. They are thus less likely to participate and, when they do, contribute lesser amounts.

The solution to this impending retirement crisis is obvious: better education and an earlier beginning to saving for retirement. For a start, here are some tips from financial experts at Diversified Investment Advisors, an investment advisory firm, located in Purchase, NY, that services $9 billion of retirement plan assets:

- Take advantage of defined contribution accounts (such as 401(k), 403(b) and 457) as they're tax deferred and many employers will match some percentage of your contribution.

- Studies show that employees who start to invest as little as $1,600 a year-$30 a week-in a defined contribution plan can accumulate as much as $183,000 over 30 years.

- Finding ways to save may be easier than you think. One way is to "pay yourself first." Make your contribution to your own future first.

TAUGHT BY CERTIFIED INSTRUCTORS • WE'RE THE FITNESS PROFESSIONALS

CHAMP athletic trainer Joe Cimino instructs student trainers Kelly O'Hara, Kim Quasarano and Carrie Walker in the proper ankle taping technique to use on Grosse Pointe South High School basketball player Steve Howson.

Athletic medicine team is CHAMP on east side

At Grosse Pointe South High School sports competitions, Joe Cimino never gets to play. But he's still considered one of the most important members of the team.

As a certified athletic trainer and coordinator of the Cottage Hospital Athletic Program (CHAMP), Cimino works behind the scenes and on the playfields and courts to keep the athletes in top condition.

CHAMP brings together the resources of Henry Ford Cottage Hospital, its Athletic Medicine and Physical Therapy Center, and Henry Ford Medical Center — Pierson Clinic. The CHAMP team includes orthopedic specialists associated with some of Detroit's major sports teams, athletic trainers and physical therapists. The program is supported by medical specialists available 24 hours a day in the Henry Ford Cottage Hospital Emergency department.

"The purpose of CHAMP trainers in the schools is to promote proper conditioning and injury prevention, and provide immediate evaluation, referral and follow-up when injuries occur," explained Cimino. "We work with the coaches, athletic directors and students and their parents to help ensure that these young athletes continue to enjoy sports safely."

At South High, CHAMP athletic trainers work on-site during practices and home games, and they also travel to away games with the teams. They advise, and instruct students on proper conditioning and padding to avoid injury, taping to support weak or heavily-used joints, and modifying activities and training while recovering from injuries. They are right on the spot if an injury should occur.

"Assessing an injury immediately can sometimes mean the difference between a long-term or short-term recovery," says Cimino. "When the injuries are treated right away, recovery is usually faster and there's less potential for permanent problems."

Most often, only basic first aid is needed, like heat packs, ice packs or compression wraps. In fact, coaches report the number of minor injuries, like pulled muscles and strains, is reduced because the athletes are more aware of how to warm up. If a serious injury occurs, the athlete is referred to the Emergency Center or the CHAMP Injury Clinic for further diagnostic evaluation, including x-rays, or prescription medication.

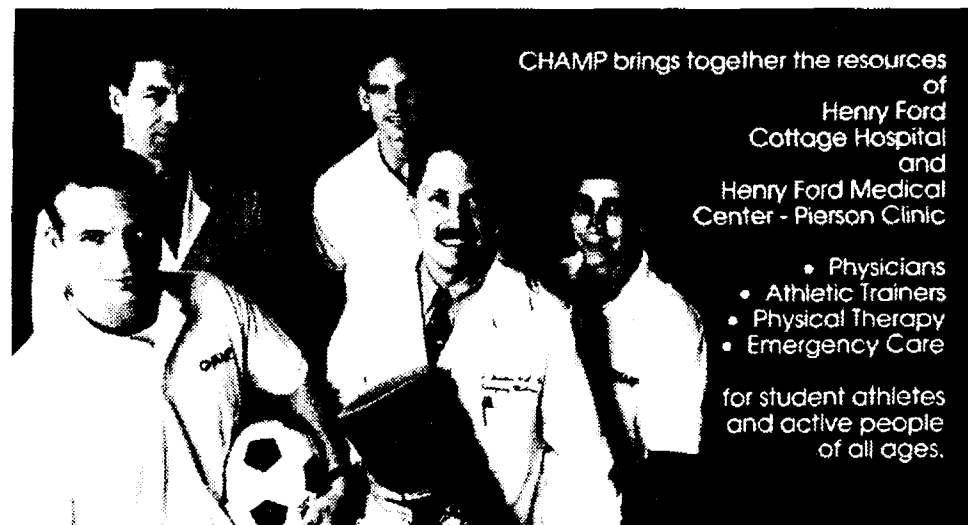

Athletes and their parents can be referred to specialists at Henry Ford Medical Center — Pierson Clinic including Terrence Lock, MD, an orthopedic surgeon and team physician to the Detroit Tigers.

CHAMP's association with several colleges and universities provides a stimulating environment for learning and continuous improvements in technique and technology. Every so often, one of the high school students is inspired to further his or her education in athletic medicine. "One of my student trainers at South has just been accepted into the sports medicine program at Purdue University," says Cimino. "And it's a tough program to get

Cottage cardiac rehab leads to healthier lives

"The category is anatomy and physiology for 300," Pat calls out loudly. "The answer is: 'A myocardial infarction is the medical term for this.'"

"What is a heart attack?" Booms John from his treadmill, without hesitation.

It's "cardiac jeopardy" time in the exercise room of the Henry Ford Cottage Hospital cardiac pulmonary rehabilitation program (CPRP). The staff is playing games with their patients.

"It's a fun way to reinforce what we are trying to teach our patients about diet, exercise, medication, risk factors and behavior that can improve their heart and lung health," says Pat Coppola, RN, coordinator for cardiopulmonary rehabilitation.

Education and monitored exercise are the principal components of the CPRP at Henry Ford Cottage Hospital. "Almost anyone who has a heart problem, such as a heart attack, angina, congestive heart failure, coronary artery bypass graft or other special heart procedures, can benefit from cardiac rehab," explains Coppola.

"Our pulmonary rehab patients have diagnoses including asthma, emphysema, bronchitis or other respiratory disease." Patients waiting for heart or lung transplants or lung reduction surgery also are involved in the program to help them gain strength and improve function in preparation for surgery.

The benefits of the program are many:

- Cardiopulmonary rehab patients develop a more positive outlook with the understanding that they have the ability to improve their quality of life.
- They are able to lower their cholesterol and blood pressure and maintain a healthier diet with simple modifications.
- They feel more energetic through proper diet, exercise and stress reduction.
- Fear of cardiac and pulmonary diseases is eliminated by increasing personal knowledge and control of the disease process.
- Smokers find the power to rid themselves of the habit.
- Participants build and develop meaningful friendships with others going through similar situations.

The CPRPs usually are initiated while the participant is still an inpatient at Henry Ford Cottage or another hospital. The patient and family are informed about the programs, how they work and what results can be expected. The primary care physician evaluates his or her patient's specific needs in preparation for this individualized, outpatient program.

Cardiac rehab clients come to the program, located in the lower level of the hospital, three times a week for an hour and a half, over four to eight weeks. Pulmonary rehab clients meet for two hours, twice a week, over 12 weeks. The two programs often intertwine since many patients have problems in both areas. Both programs include monitored exercise as well as education sessions on topics including diet and nutrition, stress reduction and relaxation, medications, anatomy and physiology and tips for living well with breathing or heart problems.

A typical rehab session begins with a blood pressure reading. Blood sugar levels also are taken if the person is diabetic. Then, with an EKG monitor attached, the patient works through a series of stretches and other warm-up exercises prior to 30 minutes rotating at a comfortable pace among the stationary bikes, rowing machine, step, treadmill and armicycle. Pulmonary rehab participants are also checked routinely for oxygen saturation levels and, if needed, they receive oxygen during exercise.

Throughout the exercise routine, patients are closely monitored and asked to call out their difficulty factor based on the Rating of Perceived Exertion (RPE) chart. "The objective is for all of our patients to build heart and lung strength and endurance," explains Coppola. "Through the exercise, they learn their abilities and limitations. They gain confidence by knowing what they can and cannot do safely, and they learn to realize that they can return to many of their favorite activities."

Coppola adds, "If a client wants to be able to play golf again, we work toward that goal. If he or she is happy being able to wash the car or tend a garden, that's the level we try to achieve."

"For me, the Cottage rehab program has been a lifesaver," attests Grosse Pointe Farms resident, Jo Walworth. "I've been able to lose excess weight and maintain healthy eating habits. My exercise routine has been especially helpful in my being able to continue with good health habits."

Once participants complete their formal four, eight or twelve-

While the Cottage Hospital Athletic Medicine Program has provided the best in comprehensive athletic medicine for high school athletes for over a decade, CHAMP services also extend to active people of all ages.

"Our goal is to provide fast, efficient and complete care to anyone in the community who is at risk of a sports or activity-related injury," says Cimino. "Whether they are corporate joggers, mall walkers, aerobic exercisers, weekend duffers or heavy-duty gardeners, we can help them to safely enjoy the excitement and physical benefit of an active lifestyle by a direct referral link to injury evaluation, medical and surgical treatment, counseling and rehabilitation."

CHAMP services in the community also include:

- The CHAMP Injury Clinic — A physician assistant who also is a certified athletic trainer is available in the Henry Ford Cottage Hospital Emergency Center to assess activity-related injuries, prescribe treatment and make referrals to an orthopedic surgeon when appropriate. No appointment is necessary. CHAMP Injury Clinic hours are Tuesday and Thursday, 2 to 7 p.m.

- Educational programs — The CHAMP team hosts workshops and educational programs on athletic medicine and fitness for community groups, coaches, students and various organizations. CHAMP also sponsors the annual Henry Ford Cottage Hospital 5-kilometer Fun Run and Walk being held this year on Sunday, May 18.

- Physical therapy — CHAMP has available high quality physical therapy with state-of-the-art rehabilitative and evaluative equipment. General outpatient orthopedics, including post-surgical and geriatrics, are available at Henry Ford Rehabilitation sites in Warren and Sterling Heights, as well as the Cottage Hospital Athletic Medicine and Physical Therapy Center in Grosse Pointe Farms.

- Physical examinations — Multi-station physical examinations, required for students who plan to be involved in fall sports programs at most area schools, are offered in May at Grosse Pointe South High School. The low-cost physicals are conducted by a team of athletic trainers who assist local physicians and physical therapists.

Dementia, Alzheimer's: Erasing the book of life

The chances are good that most people know someone with some degree of dementia — a memory-erasing disease. And as life expectancies increase, so will the number of people who are afflicted with this complex disorder.

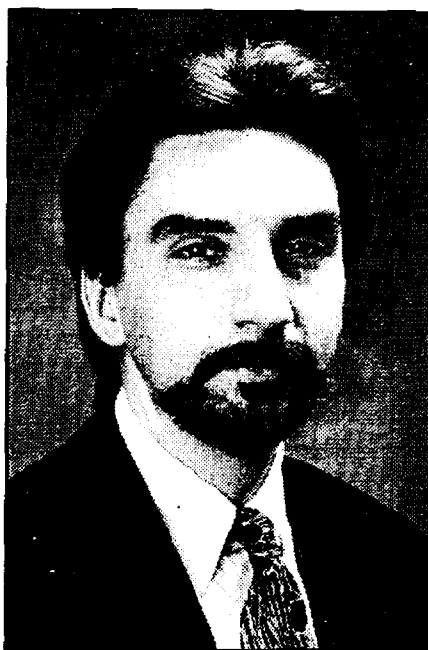

"As many as 50 percent of all people above age 80 will develop Alzheimer's disease or some other form of dementia," says Bon Secours neurologist Boris Leheta, MD.

"The care of persons with dementia is a great burden on society. That's why so much time and money is being spent to slow down the illness."

Dementia not only is memory loss but also is associated with loss of skills that have been acquired throughout life. As we age, we all forget things. But a person isn't considered to have dementia unless significant memory loss is combined with a deterioration of the ability to function within their normal environment. Alzheimer's disease is one of many illnesses that can cause dementia.

How do Alzheimer's and dementia differ?

"The key with Alzheimer's is that currently we don't have a cure," says Dr. Leheta. "So before saying that a patient has Alzheimer's, the goal of a neurologist is to rule out any treatable medical causes for the memory loss. Conditions such as thyroid disorders, brain infections or brain tumors can cause varying degrees of dementia. Once treated, the memory usually returns."

There is no one test that can diagnose true dementia, says Dr. Leheta. So physicians order a battery of tests to exclude treatable illnesses. A typical exam might include an electroencephalogram (an electronic tracing of the brain waves), plus a CAT scan or MRI of the brain to look for a mass. Blood work and a spinal tap may be done to rule out infections or other treatable illnesses. Patients showing early signs of dementia may benefit from a psychological evaluation to rule out depression, which can mimic dementia.

"Early Alzheimer's may be difficult to diagnose," says Dr. Leheta. "However, with the assistance of a battery of neuropsychological and memory tests we can verify our suspicions and obtain a diagnosis in a more objective fashion."

New medications can slow memory loss

There are several new medications on the market that can slow down the memory loss in patients with dementia, according to Dr. Leheta. But the key to the medications' success is that they are started in the mild to moderate week program, they can continue on a maintenance level if they choose. Realizing how much better they feel and function, some people continue on the program indefinitely. "It gets to be something like a social club," says Coppola. "We have one gentleman who has been involved in the program for more than five years."

Art Chabott, a resident of Harper Woods, would agree. "Cardiac rehab has become a central part of my personal agenda. I find myself looking forward to the sessions," says Chabott. "In addition to proving valuable physical benefits, such as exercise and monitoring vital signs, they are psychologically uplifting. The staff is extremely capable, cheerful and encouraging, while other patient/members are not only friendly, but also are excellent company."

"The best part," concludes Coppola, "is seeing patients continually improve and look great years later. It's a good feeling to know that their lives have improved with our program."

Protect heart, decrease risk of cardiovascular disease

By Fredric D. Frigoletto Jr., M.D.,

Heart disease was once considered a "man's problem," but no longer. This No.1 killer of women affects one in five women over age 65. Women are 10 times more likely to die of heart disease than breast cancer.

Despite these chilling statistics, women can take steps to decrease their risk of cardiovascular disease, or diseases of the heart and blood vessels. With some lifestyle and dietary changes, you can reduce your vulnerability. Here are some tips:

- Don't smoke. Many smokers know that smoking significantly increases the risk of heart disease and other conditions, but they find it difficult to break this highly addictive habit. If you are trying to quit, seek support. It is possible to quit, and to restore your risk of heart disease to that of a nonsmoker. Talk to your doctor, or call the American Lung Association or American Cancer Society chapter near you to find a support group.

- Control high blood pressure. More than half of all women over 55 are said to suffer from hypertension, or high blood pressure, a significant contributor to heart disease and stroke. Have routine blood pressure checks. If your blood pressure is high, ask your doctor how to lower it. Weight loss, dietary changes (less sodium and salt) and regular exercise are usually recommended. Medication may also be prescribed, but this will not replace the need for dietary and lifestyle changes.

- Control cholesterol levels. Cholesterol is an important natural substance in the body, but too much cholesterol can increase the risk of heart attack and stroke. Have your cholesterol levels checked (with a blood test) at least every five years until age 65, then every three to five years thereafter.

To combat high cholesterol levels, doctors usually recommend diet and lifestyle changes. Overweight women are at greater risk for both hypertension and elevated cholesterol. A diet that is low in fat, particularly saturated fat, is generally advised. Regular exercise — such as walking, aerobics or swimming — is also crucial and helps with weight loss.

For some women, cholesterol-lowering medication also may be prescribed. Estrogen replacement therapy, which can significantly reduce both cholesterol levels and the risk of cardiovascular disease, may be suggested for postmenopausal women at high risk for heart disease. Talk to your doctor about whether such therapy may be right for you.

Visiting Nurses: Get the most from home health care

Following sound advice about nutrition, exercise, quitting smoking and stress alleviation will help to keep most Michiganders fit and healthy for many years. Unfortunately, genes, the environment and the toll taken by the passing years cannot be avoided forever. Many Michiganders will eventually have to cope with a chronic and potentially serious health problem.

Thankfully, excellent treatment in the home exists for many health problems. Patients can achieve an excellent recovery with the help of physicians, nurses and other health care professionals such as nurses, nutritionists, occupational, physical and speech therapists and from such agencies as Visiting Nurse Association

(VNA) of Southeast Michigan.

Today's health problems can be dealt with so that they are a part of one's life but not the focus. In dealing with health problems, the goal should be getting the most out of your health care professional so that the best possible recovery can be achieved.

The following are some general hints:

- Know your rights. The home care agency requested by the patient must be provided.

- Medicare and private insurers cover the cost of home health care by a skilled nurse and other health care professionals under specific conditions.

- Tell the health care professional of any problems, or anything unusual. Don't play your problems down.

- Write down, or have a family member write down, problems or questions as they occur so that they can be addressed.

- Appropriate friends, family or others should be available for health care professionals' visits.

- Pay attention to advice and instructions. Listen, and with a health professional's help, try to adapt suggestions to individual needs and preferences.

- Make sure the treatment given is understood: ask questions and request written information and directions that can readily be followed.

- Keep the notes the worker requests because it will help to assess individual needs to develop the best plan for recovery.

- Get help from experts. When singular problems occur, ask to consult with a nurse, registered dietitian and/or therapist.

- Be ready for the home care visit. The visit will be arranged at mutual convenience. Make sure you don't schedule a doctor's appointment at the same time as the home care visit.

- Recognize that needs may not be limited to health care professionals. They may be simpler, such as help with bathing, washing hair, or time to permit the family to relax. A certified home health aide is available up to four times a week for this type of assistance.

Dementia

stages of the disease. Patients with advanced dementia will not benefit from these drugs.

"Patients shouldn't wait and hope things won't get worse," says Dr. Leheta. "If someone is a candidate, the medications certainly won't cure them or restore their memory back to age 20, but they may stabilize memory loss for two to three years, or possibly longer."

The causes of Alzheimer's are still undetermined, says Dr. Leheta. Researchers do know that multiple factors play a role. Genetics may be one factor, and environmental exposures may be another. Plus, there are different types of Alzheimer's, one of which tends to run in families. But if your father has Alzheimer's, it doesn't necessarily mean you will get it.

"If we knew the one thing that causes dementia, we could alter it," Dr. Leheta explained. "That's what makes it so difficult to treat."

Are there any preventive measures we can take to stave off dementia as we age? Researchers say maybe. Studies suggest that people who challenge their minds through reading and doing memory tasks actually create more "connections" in their brains.

"The brain is like a muscle," explained Dr. Leheta. "The more we exercise it, the more reserve connections we create for later in life."

(NAPS)-Dedicated coupon clip-pers who scour their mailboxes for money-saving surprises are discovering a new way to clip coupons: Through the Internet.

These same consumers are finding that coupon clipping on the Internet saves time and money—they don't have to wait for the coupons to arrive by mail, and they can print and use the coupon offer more than once. One of the easiest ways to clip cyber-coupons is through H.O.T. Coupons™, the world's newest and largest electronic coupon web site. Located at <http://www.hotcoupons.com>, the site provides customers with free, easy, convenient and immediate access to more than 30,000 online advertisers for saving on home, office and travel products and services (thus the acronym H.O.T.).

"Coupon-clipping has entered the cyber-age," said Kris Friedrich, president and CEO of Money Mailer, Inc., H.O.T. Coupon's affiliated company. "Now consumers can get 'one-stop-savings' on dry cleaning, car service, local restaurants and more than 200 other categories of products and services. The coupons are free, easy and immediate—our customers can just 'click, print and go.'"

- Use your Internet browser to

- go to <http://www.hotcoupons.com>
- Enter your desired zip code or geographical location
- Enter your category—restaurants, car service, etc.
- Click "Search for Coupons" to get local advertisers and "Get Coupons" for national advertisers
- Find the name and offer then click the advertiser's name
- Print the coupon and go!

Many of the advertisers on the H.O.T. coupons site are clients of Money Mailer, Inc.'s 500+ franchises. H.O.T. Coupons' affiliated company, Money Mailer, Inc., has been rated the number one direct mail advertising franchise by Entrepreneur Magazine for the past 11 years. Money Mailer mails over three billion coupons to 110 million households each year. To find out about becoming a Money Mailer franchise, call 1-800-MAILER-1.

Electronic shopping made easy

Shopping via television and ordering directly over the phone allows consumers to make purchasing decisions in the quiet of their homes at a time convenient for them. Last year 46 million American consumers purchased $4 billion in products and services advertised through infomercials, short form direct response commercials, and television shopping programs, according to NIMA International, the trade association for electronic retailing (formerly the National Infomercial Marketing Association).

And now, a new world of interactive shopping is opening up to consumers who purchase online via computers over the Internet and the World Wide Web. Industry sources estimate that $500 million will be spent on on-line purchases this year. This figure will soar to almost $7 billion by the year 2000 as 50 percent of the population is expected to embrace on-line technology.

So avoid the traffic today and hit the electronic malls through your TV's and computers.
