A MEDICAL FIRST was achieved three months ago in Hayward, Calif., when a team of surgeons successfully sewed a crushed and almost severed leg back on a man injured in an industrial accident. Billy Smith, 25, had his right leg almost completely severed when he was mashed by a traveling crane, July 22. Two inches held the severed part to the rest of his leg. The team of surgeons decided to try and save the leg. Now, three months later, the right leg is two inches shorter than the left and still has no sensation. It will never be completely normal, but, "it will be better than anything he can buy in a store," said one of the surgeons.

Mr. Boutin stated that the conditions of the two streets, east of Mack avenue, have been in poor repair for a number of years now. The problem of years now. The problem of repairing these two streets has Okay Two been studied by previous Woods Councils, but no solution was ever evolved.

Bigger Than That

According to Mayor Kenneth Koppin, the problem of improving Roslyn and Hampton roads includes more than just resur-facing. In the first place, the present water mains under the two streets are considered too small. Replacing them with adequate mains would necessitate the spending of even more funds. It follows that to improve the streets now and leave the mains as they are would only mean spending an even greater sum later on when the streets would have to be torn up in order to replace the water

The problem of funds entails the fact that someone must pay for the repairs. The residents feel that since they have been assessed once already, when the streets were originally laid, that under the City's own policy not to re-assess for repairs on regular streets they should be exempt from further payment.

WPA Helped Pay Cosis

In answer to this, the Council reminded the residents that when the two streets were laid out, the work was done by the Works Projects Administration (WPA) and that the residents were not assessed a very large instead of the more modern concrete constructed streets, as are the other streets in the city.

After some discussion on the matter, and some comment from residents in the audience, Mayor Koppin asked that the City Administrator, William H. Lange, gather the needed information on the problem. This information would then be presented to the Council sitting as Committee-As-A-Whole, who will attempt to iron out a solu-

Police Chief Furton Tells

Officer Miller, the chief said, made checks of all school crossings and his survey showed there are ample gaps in the vehicular traffic which permit the children to cross at all locations.

Christmas Seals Available Now

People who are mailing early Christmas packages overseas may obtain Christmas Seals now, William E. Shane and Edward L. Baker, co-chairmen of the 1959 Christmas Seal Sale said Wednesday.

Christmas Seals will be mailed to 550,000 Detroit and Wayne County residences on November 16, in plenty of time for use on Christmas mail within the United States but the seals are available for overseas mail by calling the Tuberculosis and Health Society, WOodward 1-1697, Monday through Friday. They will be mailed immediately on request.

Tuberculosis is our number one infectious disease in the United States but in many other countries it is still the worst health problem of all, killing hundreds of thousands of people each year. In this country approximately 150,000 people are stricken with TB each year.

"Using Christmas Seals on your overseas mail will let your friends and relatives know in other countries that you are interested in making our world a more healthful one," the chairmen said,

There are no national boundaries in health problems and no matter what political beliefs a country holds its leaders are working toward better health for their peoples, they pointed out.

"We urge you to place Christmas Seals on all your mail. We must have support for our local tuberculosis programs of the TB and Health Society and the Detroit TB Sanatorium. To continue the testing projects, educational programs and the Christmas Seal Camp we must have the contributions of all residents," the chairmen said.

Unique Experiment

An interesting experiment in religious education which may set a pattern for other communities through. enthusiastic endorsement of many of the Pointe's the program to be carried out next spring.

This program will offer a Lenten Series of meetings at the War Memorial Center at which heads of various Pointe churches will give talks lasting from 30 to 40 minutes, telling the story of their respective faiths and the history, aims and beliefs of their religious organizations. Each participating church will be allotted one meeting of the Lenten Series. Parishioners will be urged in advance. to attend all of the meetings rather than just the one featuring the particular church to which they belong. Heartburn Dept.

Churches which have been asked to take part in the program and the ministers and pastors who have given the plan their wholehearted support include: Grosse Pointe Memorial, Rev. Bertram Atwood: Grosse Pointe Unitarian, Rev. William D. Hammond; Grosse Pointe Congregational, Rev. Marcus W. Johnson; Christ Episcopal, Rev. Erville B. Maynard; St. Paul's on the Lakeshore, Msgr. Frank McPhillip; St. Paul Evangelical Lutheran, Rev. Charles W. Sandrock; Grosse Pointe Methodist, Rev. Hugh White.

The idea of the Lenten Series was conceived by George R. McMullen of St. Paul avenue, a vestryman at Christ Church. He said it first came to him when he read that Pope John XXIII had called for an ecumenical council in late 1960, when leaders of the major faiths Quiz Rigs could gather and attempt to resolve their differences. This made him wonder what if any, were the local problems. He said he was also personally disturbed by same goal. He approached the various Pointe ministers and contributed ideas.

This shapes up into a unique experiment which can have immense significance. If successful it could be carried on in succeeding years, with all of the other Pointe churches having their chance to tell their own story. Such a program will afford local residents an opportunity to find the answers to many questions which arise whenever the subject of religion is discussed. It deserves the support of all of us.

Christmas Is Coming

Received a nice note from Marie Bird from London, England, yet! She is having a ball and trying not to get locked in public dressing rooms like she did last year in Germany. The purpose of the note . . . to enclose a picture from the London Daily Mail, of a gadget that would be a sensation for Christmas gifts. Marie is going to try to latch on to some of them to bring back to the Pointe. If she does and SELLS them, everyone will be giving everyone else one at Yuletide. We hope she can find only a few so we can buy them all up toot sweet. THAT'S the Christmas spirit, we alluz sez!

Pryor can now be considered the book of the century. With the "shop-early and avoid the rush" planted firmly in our mind last August, we were clearing out our Christmas cards when we ran across one we remembered we thought was most attractive and decided to ask the sender if she minded our copying it for this Christmas. Not at all said she, so on finding they came from The Dants . . . we planned on ordering same.

Last week, we went on a hunt for them so we could start addressing them . . . but it took two days before we found a box that looked familiar. Sure enough, when we opened it, there were some hundred Christmas cards .. but NOT the ones we ordered from Dants! THESE lovely things were GIVEN to us last Christmas by friends. Their card came to us early, so when we called out the country, will be carried out in the Pointe during to express our admiration of the card, they insisted we the next Lenten season. The idea has received the accept a whole batch with our name on them as a present . . . to be sent out this Christmas. After twisting leading clergymen and plans are being worked out for our arm, we accepted with delight and promptly put them away for safe keeping for this year . . . we also promptly forgot about it until we came across the box. NOW, what to do about finding the cards we ordered from the Dants. Call the Dants, natch. This we did and after much research on their part, we found we had NOT ordered any . . . we just called up to talk about it and said we would call back! Take our word for it, there is nothing like getting yourself organized a year

A bachelor of our acquaintance caused the tax payers a little dough last week, via the fire department. It seemed he invited a friend to his apartment for dinner to cook a steak on his outdoor grill, which sits on a second floor porch overlooking the street. When the steak was being seared the flames shot up in the air about six feet . . . so some well meaning neighbors, thinking no one was at home in the place, called the fire department. The engines came screaming up the street with about 11 firemen. When the ladder was put against his porch, he rushed down asking for an explanation. All was soon calmed down and explained. The firemen returned to the fire house and our hero and his guest ate the steak, with Tums for dessert.

The networks are sure getting cold feet in a hurry over all the rigging investigation. Since all the columnthe differences in faiths when all were aiming at the ists are getting into the act, we might as well add our two cents worth. The other day we listened to a comand found their response completely enthusiastic. All mercial done by an ex-movie star whose name escapes attended a luncheon meeting at the Grosse Pointe Club us. Anyway, he came on with a big smile and a loud "HELLO OUT THERE" . . . then said: "Well, I was supposed to start out this way, but let's face it. We've been rehearsing this for a half hour." REALLY NOW ... how "cute" can they get?

Bets incorporated

For some reason, we are always getting into discussions that require proof on our part and more often than not, a little wagering green . . . which mostly ends up in OUR pocket. A ferinstance occurred last week one evening when we made a passing remark about Baronduki fur. Everyone's mouth flew open when we insisted (after many guffaws on the part of the guests) that there was such a fur and a popular one, when we were a girl . . . a few years back of course! Three people in their forties never heard of it . . . two in their fifties said it was new to them and one veddy smart woman in her EIGHTIES never heard the word.

Not to be UNDONE by all this, we started looking in the dictionary, then the encyclopedia, then called the public library. NO SOAP. Nowhere in print was the word Baronduki. The next day (after a sleepless night of Barondukies running around our brain) we telephoned Robert's Furs. ROBERT HISSELF, (bless his heart) assured us that there was indeed a Baronduki fur that was VERY popular some thirty years ago. He even told us it looked like Chipmunk and was used purchase of the Country Day to be a room mother? Never. School property was up for Has anyone who has ventured to be a room who has ventured to be a room with Robert . . . but it's worth it. Our sage advice is if you get into one of these things, go to headquarters for the information.

Now that we have mentioned (inadvertently) everyone on the HILL . . . we'd just better say "Hi THERE"... to Roland Gray and Margaret Rice!

What Goes On Your Library

By Jean Taylor

Guest Columnist: Virginia Leonard Parlez-vous francais? Habla usted espanol. Sprechen Sie deutsch? If you do, you must already have discovered that our Library has a collection of books both juvenile and adult, in all three languages.

Inspired by my sixth grade class in beginning French at Richard School, I'm afraid my primary interest is in that language. But this new undertaking has, in turn, made me more aware of our Library holdings in these fields. In the adult collection, you will find some grammar, conversation and phrase books, short stories, poetry and dicfiction. Among the latter, you native language, or translamaison aux sept pignons' (House of seven gables) and Louis Bromfield's "Que paso con Ana Bolton?" (What happened to Anna Bolton?), If you have read Jean Dutourd's "The original: "Au bon beurre" and lastic program. 'La mer cruelle." We also have Francoise Sagan's "Bonjour have an opportunity to make tristesse" in French.

to read something like Brun-hoff's "Histoire de Babar, le visits, which are expected and petit elephant." Or perhaps you prefer "Cendrillon" (Cinder-ella) by Perrault. This latter, well-known author also appears in Spanish in a collection en-titled "Cuentos" which includes súch stories as "Barba azul" (Bluebeard) and "El gato con botas" (Puss-in-boots.)

Perhaps you would like to have your child learn French or Spanish? We do have the Berlitz Spanish and French for children, which include "The three bears" and "Little Red Riding Hood," giving, line by line, first the foreign language, then the pronunciation, and finally the English translation. So if you want La Fontaine's Fables in French, Grimm's "Die Bremer Stadtmusikanten" (The traveling musicians) Don Quixote or Ali Baba in Spanish, you will find them in our juvenile collection. In addition, there sation and phrase books, biography, travel, history, songs and dictionaries. Another aid to learning a foreign language are the Holt spoken language series records for adults in all three languages, French, Spanish and German, with accompanying texts. For the children, there is another series, again in all three languages, entitled: Spanish (French German) for children, using the formula of hear - repeat-speak; also with accompanying texts. There is one other French record for children in our collection: French

folk songs for children.

We hope you will now feel inspired enough to come and see our foreign language books. The collection is not large, but is ever growing. Let us hope that the renewed interest in foreign languages everywhere will mean that we too will need to increase our purchase of these books, both in the adult and juvenile collections.

Some people seem to feel that prescriptions are outrageously priced. The truth of the matter is this: Last year the average American bought about 3 prescriptions for a total cost of around $7.50. An average of less 57.50. An average of less than $3.00 per prescription. Sure, some drugs cost a lot. So do television tubes for the same reason. They're expensive to manufacture. New and improved production methods, however, bring prices down. Penicillin, for example costs only a small fraction of what it did when it first came out. Your pharmacist has a professional knowledge of drugs and can tell you this. They are fairly priced. You get what you pay for. We are always pleased to serve you.

Expert Diver To Give Talk

Robert Bloink, a young Grosse Pointer with a flair for the sea and all the wonders it holds in its depths will share his diving experiences and adventures with Pointers at the War Memorial Center Wednesday evening, November 11 at 8 o'clock. Everyone is invited without charge.

Besides his fine underwater shots taken while commercial diving off the Florida Keys, Bob will show some excellent Marine pictures taken at Silver Springs in central Florida in which crystal waters Mike Nelson makes all his TV films for the popular "Sea Hunt" series.

Bob will show how diving can be enjoyed by everyone. The whole Bloink family have been avid explorers of the Marine Wonderland off Florida for the past dozen winters. Bob has excellent shots of 17 year old Rozella Moffett who is acknowledged as one of Florida's foremost underwater guides and Bob's own 14-year-old sister is an expert, too.

To the Center Bob will bring his underwater cameras, aqua lung, depth gauges, and cold weather protection suit which warms the diver like a hot water bottle. Bob will also give information on their use, tell the cost of the items, and list where diving lessons can be obtained and where clubs exist with which to affiliate.

Bob has had a world of fun and found his avocation profit able as will be proved by his pictures. They were assembled while he "batched" it in the Keys with six other young divers. Daily they put out in their 32-foot diving boat loaded with helmet rig and equipment. They found ready market for the fascinating underwater objects which they brought up. Unusual lamp ornaments and decorations are made by hundreds of concerns from them.

Skin diving has become most popular sport and other forms of diving are equally interesting and challenging. Grosse Pointers derful opportunity to see the beauty that can be observed underwater and learn how they can engage in this fun pursuit by coming to the Center next Wednesday night.

St. Ambrose Cavaliers Take East Side Parochial Title

For the third time in four years the St. Ambrose Cavaliers locked up the East Side Parochial League championship when they defeated previously undefeated St. Anthony in the "MUST" game last Saturday, October 31, on a muddy Mack Park gridiron.

The Cavaliers wasted little time in putting the "blue chip" game in the bag. A short St. Anthony punt was returned to the Teuton 8 yard line from where the Cavaliers pushed to the one. Bill Fournier smashed over for the first of three touchdowns. Larry Lantzy collected the extra point to put St. Ambrose out in front with the game less than three minutes old.

St. Ambrose had two touch downs called back in the second quarter as the result of penalties on the scoring plays and was forced to settle for a narrow 7-0 margain at halftime.

Halfback Joe D'Angelo put the Cavaliers in scoring position when he took the kickoff and raced back to the Teuton's 33. Three plays later he raced around right end 34 yards for the score. The extra point was Another weak Teuton punt gave St. Ambrose the ball on the St. Anthony 39 from where D'Angelo crashed over center and went all the way to climax the Cavalier scoring. Mike Curadded the extra point.

St. Antony collected its touchdown in the final quarter on a 45-yard sustained drive which climaxed when Al Korytowski bulled over from the six-yard line. The extra point try was no good but it really didn't matte as time was running out.

Spectorsky Gives Thanks

"A brilliant day, the first snow, a gentle and misty rain, . . . there is much that I am missing," says the author of The Exurbanites and the blistering "Destination Sickness," who, till now, has been one of suburbia's most bitter critics. As Thanksgiving approaches, he contrasts for us several aspects of city vs. suburban life, and tells about some of the blessings that suburbanites should be particularly grateful for.

For Sale

It's hard to part with a house that you and your family have lived in for any length of time—even though you may be going on to an even better one. But if you have to sell, here are some suggestions that will help you do it quickly, with a minimum of effort and anguish, and that will insure you the best price possible for your property.

Sashaying Suburbia

Lately, on some nights, almost any town can be mistaken for the Old West, what with men in boots and fancy shirts, and women in petticoated, ruffled dresses, all headed for the local "dance hall" (the school gym, or the Community Center, most likely). Here, on page 4, is a reminder of early Americana—the booming revival of square dancing.

Paradise Regained

The week of November 1-7 marks Children's Book Week, whose theme this year is "Go Exploring in Books." We present a beautiful word picture drawn for us by that venerable schoolmaster T. Morris Longstreth, in which he tells what it was like between boys and books when he was twelve years old—and what he thinks books can do for all the twelve-year-olds yet to come.

Sam Ciccone

Our cover artist has always lived in the heart of the city, but tells us that he's soon moving out to the suburbs, "... the best place for the children while they're growing up." Once they're settled, he adds. he also plans to take up square dancing.

Promenade Your Honey

It's good exercise,
great fun,
and a wonderful way
to meet the neighbors

BY BETTY GRAY

Three MILLION AMERICANS are square dancing. In every part of the country, from Dedham, Massachusetts, to Parkrose, Oregon, callers, who from nine to five are missile technicians, milkmen, teachers, or clerks, trade their blue or white collars for Western clothes in the evening to instruct sashaying couples. Calling to a combo—usually a fiddle, banjo, and piano—or to recorded music, these nimble-throated instructors sing their hearts out to such tunes as "Bully of the Town," "Black Mountain Rag," "Honey Bee," or any of the other hundreds of bright, light, foot-tapping numbers.

And who are these three million Americans? Young marrieds, single adults, teen-agers, and young-at-heart senior citizens, they are drawn from all age levels and from every walk of life. Looking like pictures out of the Old West, the men in their high-heeled boots, slim trousers and bright shirts and the women in full-skirted dresses puffed out with billowing petticoats, the dancers all have a common goal—to "swing your partner." It's all teamwork. Each dancer is dependent upon the other seven members of the unit to form a pattern, obey the calls, and execute a good dance. And it's all part of the fun.

The first time a person goes to a square dance, his head is likely to spin faster than his feet, when he is introduced to the strange new language. For example, "Allemande left, allemande thar, go right and left and form a star," can be rather upsetting news the first time he hears it—especially when he is expected to act upon the information, and in a hurry! Square dance jargon demands alertness, above all. Patiently, the caller explains each new step, demonstrates, and repeats. By the end of the first "tip" (two dances before a short intermission), the novice's head is buzzing. Beginners usually just look on during the first tip. But when the caller sings out, "take eight and recuperate," the newcomer is ready to join a group and start dancing.

Everyone performs better when he is at ease. One of the ways that some square dance groups have found to relax a newcomer and make him feel at home is by the use of name tags. When everyone is wearing a name tag, no one is a stranger. The caller tactfully eases the doubtful male and his partner into a square with three other couples. The music starts and the call to "square 'em up" rings out.

"Bow to your partner, corner there, and introduce yourself around the square." For the beginner, this usually means hopping, instead of shuffling, and running around the square trying to keep pace with the caller. He begins to wonder if he'll ever learn.

But the newcomer rarely stays discouraged. By the end of the first session, he is footsore but certain—certain that he's coming back next week because, well, if all these other people can learn what "box a gnat" is, so can he.

By the end of the third session, the new recruit is probably bragging about what a good dancer he is.

He has a few surprises left, however. Just as he begins to consider himself a full-fledged promenader, some caller invariably dreams up a new way to tangle and untangle dancers in a square. In Grandmother's day, square dancing could be mastered in a few hours. Today it takes weeks of practice to learn even the basics of the modern version, with its emphasis on styling and smoothness.

As he glides from beginner to intermediary to advance status. the tempo is stepped up. Not only to the tune of the music, but most likely to the number of nights he wants to devote to dancing. As enthusiasm grows, he is likely to start wanting to bring his children around or try to get his parents interested in learning to dance, since age is no barrier in a square dance, or try to get the boys from the car-pool and their wives to go to the next dance with him. Here, truly, the seeds of friendship fall on fertile ground.

When the eighth annual square dance convention converged on Denver last May, ten thousand dancers from all over the world whirled into the city. All agreed that the future of square dancing was secure as long as this feeling of friendship kept their hearts in tune. The bank of friendship cannot exist without deposits, and square dancers throughout the world have growing accounts, all labeled "do-si-do."

Perhaps the best summary of reasons why so many people are suddenly square dancing was contained in a recent sermon by a minister, who is a square dancer and caller in some of his spare moments. He said that square dancing answered the need for play, one of the essentials of successful living. Beyond that, he said, it satisfies the basic needs for rhythm and expression that all people have. It overcomes self-consciousness and helps bring people together. Final reason for promenading, a "call" which will be echoed loudly by all concerned, is simply, "... because I like it."

Today's square dance is a far cry from the early-American and frontier celebration after a barn-raising, but it is still a symbol of warmth and neighborliness all over the country.

to go out, he pauses to pity the poor suburbanite denied ready access to all the city's goodies), the same impulse, oddly enough, will have motivated thousands of his fellow urbanites at exactly the same time, wherefor the waiting in crowds and the standing in line. The commuting suburbanite may experience this misery thrice daily: morning and evening on the train platform or the parkway, if he drives, and at lunch hour. It is the city man's constant environment.

Third among suburban blessings for which I would offer thanks is inefficiency. It is among man's great gifts and has fallen sadly into disrepute. I like wasted room in a house. I like a place to keep things for which I have no use. I like to rummage. I want every member of my family to be able to engage in a different pursuit at the same time-without collisions of body or temperament-and it takes a pretty inefficient house to accommodate that. I like to ramble aimlessly, to sit in a slightly busted chair with a vacant look on my face for an hour or more, to nibble at odd hours on week ends, to have a garage in which impossible projects of carpentry or home mechanics are started but never quite finished, while the car sits outside in the driveway.

I like to dabble. I like, now and then, to look like a slob. I like to tinker and fuss, to waste time and motion, to daydream about adding a room and not get around to changing a light bulb. I like, in the middle of the night, to put on a sou'wester over my PJs and put my bare feet into rubber boots and walk around under dripping trees, while I look at the lighted windows of the room I should have stayed in bed in. These thingsthis wonderful life-renewing inefficiency-are there for the suburbanite. I stress the word "there" because I mean it as a potential, a constant and unobtrusive invitation. For the city man it does not exist: most of the trivia I've just named are simply unavailable to him; others he indulges with a built-in degree of difficulty and inconvenience to himself and to others-which puts on him the burden of pursuing inefficiency efficiently, an unnatural posture which robs the random act of its restfulness, since it's no longer random.

Speaking of the unnatural, I would like to put forth this proposition which, if you can accept it, should assure you that fervent thanks are due from all who have escaped the urban, life: Man, the city builder, the tamer of nature and creator of metropolises (Or is it metropoli?) has not adapted himself to the city. It is not his, he is its. To the degree that the suburbanite has escaped this adaptation, he should offer up his gratitude as he inefficiently samples the unbought pleasures of his own home on Thanksgiving.

Wonderful life-renewing inefficiency exists only for the suburbanite.

BY FREDERICK J. ADLER, attorney, as told to Rollie Hochstein

You are off to a good start if you have a house outside the city to sell, but even in today's market it still pays to apply a little commercial know-how SELLING A HOUSE is big business. I'm always surprised at the people who go into this venture in a catch-as-catch-can manner, contrary to all business principles.

These are house-buying days. In the past five years values have gone up generally from ten to twenty percent. In some areas, new developments, shopping centers, highways, bus routes have more than doubled prices. Rising population, rising incomes, rising communities are all on the seller's side, and few people need take a loss on a house sale. Yet I know of menmen who don't miss a trick in business—who have sold themselves thousands of dollars short by failing to apply commercial know-how to the sale of their homes.

Selling a product for the highest price possible is a business problem. I'm going to list eight business procedures that a person would do well to adopt if he wants to sell his house.

Brokers Can Save Time and Trouble

The first decision is whether or not to employ a real-estate agent. A broker, of course, will bring more people to see your house than you can interest on your own. Ordinarily, he will screen viewers and bring in only those who can afford your price and are interested in your type of house. He will take over details of showing the house and answering questions. Just as a product benefits from the good reputation of a store that displays it, so will your house benefit from a client's trust in his broker.

Familiar with your location, the broker is in a position to advise you on a price to ask and features to emphasize. In short, you have professional help.

A broker takes his commission from you-generally about five percent of the money you get for your house. In some areas, the commission may be slightly higher or lower, or may be scaled according to selling price. You can choose between exclusive or multiple listing. An agent who thinks your house is "hot" may request an "exclusive," for which privilege he will concentrate on selling your house fast. He will run special newspaper ads, go through his files for good prospects, give your house priority over properties that he is competing with other agents to sell.

It's not a bad idea to let just one leading broker handle your house for a while. But as soon as activity slows, toss it out to as many others as you can. The wider your exposure, the better your chance to sell at top price.

Do It Big and Do It Right

If you decide to "do-it-yourself" and save the commission, then do it big and do it right.

1. Sensible pricing. It's easy to price your house right off the market. Don't ask for much above the price you expect to get. Expect to sell for about the price a neighbor has recently been paid for a similar house—adding on for improvements you've made or major appliances you're leaving behind. Naturally, you can base your price on a recent appraisal that's been made; but hiring a good appraiser just to find a selling price is expensive and unnecessary.

2. Judicious advertising. The businessman pinpoints his market and proclaims his product. Effective advertising is your best way to find a buyer. Pass the word around through everyone you know. Put up a sign. And advertise in newspapers. Advertise in your local newspaper to let the whole town know-its contacts are wide. And don't forget the city people who want to move out. A week-end ad in a nearby city newspaper makes sense. Word it so you arouse interest, but don't exaggerate. There is no sense in bringing people out to be disappointed. You'll need a description of your house—lot, size, age, style, number of rooms, location, and any especially attractive features. If you don't say two baths, for instance, it will be assumed you have only one bath. Schools, shopping, transportation nearby are good selling points. Always state the price. A phrase like "asking price" is as silly as "owner transferred" or "sickness in family." It is an invitation to bargain-seekers who have no intention of approaching your price.

3. Attractive packuging. Manufacturers spend millions to make their products look appealing. Don't hesitate to invest some time and money to see that your house puts its best face forward. An exterior paint job—if it's needed—a lawn coiffure and elimination of all clutter will make a big difference to buyers. A man I know put up his house for twenty thousand dollars "as is." No prospect was able to visualize the possibilities of that shabby, cluttered house. Few went beyond the front door. A speculator finally bought it for sixteen thousand, made a few surface repairs, polished it up and sold it for twenty-one.

Some homeowners redecorate to boost their price. I advise this measure only if the house is in terrible shape. Even neutral colors may not appeal to future owners, who, in most cases, include redecorating costs in their budgets and want to do it their own way. Naturally, such eyesores as cracked plaster, broken bannisters and loose moldings ought to be fixed before a house is shown.

Be Friendly and Make a Few Repairs

4. Offer a sound product. An old gentleman once told me, "Never lie to the man who buys your house unless you're going to move a thousand miles away."

I'd modify that. Never in any case misrepresent. We needn't go into a discussion of honesty. But we will say that few buyers will fail to check up on the workings of your house. Once you've said your boiler is perfect, you may be embarrassed to have a professional look in and find that it is not.

A buyer expects to make minor repairs. But if your house needs a new roof, basement waterproofing, or major plumbing repairs, it is best to have those jobs done beforehand. The amount you'd have to cut your price would be more than repair costs. A buyer tends to overestimate these costs and will either be scared off or want a disproportionate compensation.

5. Label accurately. The label on your suit states the fabric content and instructions for upkeep. Have your house facts just as clearly at your fingertips. Upkeep is one of the buyer's major concerns. Be prepared to answer all his questions on maintenancetaxes, insurance, water, and heating costs. While he may not ask how many electrical circuits you have, he will certainly want to know if he can run his washing machine and air conditioner at the same time. Often, it is an inducement for the newcomer to take over your mortgage at a lower rate of interest than he would have to pay on a new mortgage, and at a saving of the cost of taking out a new mortgage. Though this transfer can reduce his maintenance and push your sale, check first whether your bank will . arrange a clean substitution that discharges you from any liability in case the new owner fails on payments.

6. Salesmanship. Your friendliness, good judgment, courtesy, and persuasiveness are your sales techniques. Aggressive selling might suggest that if you are so eager to get rid of your house it cannot be a good buy. Indifference might just as easily discourage prospects. Yet, you are selling and it is to your advantage to point up the strong features of your home, so keep your "showroom" as attractive as possible and set hours to customer convenience.

7. Keep files. Take names and telephone numbers of interested customers. If you get an offer below your minimum, keep a record of it in case your price has to go down. If an offer comes within a few hundred dollars of the price you want, take it. The convenience of a quick sale—particularly if you have another home waiting for you—is worth the difference.

See a Lawyer

8. Lean on your legal department. A man selling his first house should talk to his lawyer before he puts the house on the market. The lawyer would be able to advise him on getting his papers in order and working out the mortgage transfer I mentioned before, and could help him, too, in figuring out his house's assets and the accessories to include in the sale. But the time an attorney must be consulted is as soon as an offer has been made and accepted-before any papers are signed, before any money is accepted. A seller must be protected from being evicted before he is ready to leave, from continuing liabilities after he has left, from liens on properties he takes with him, from unfair commission claims, and from contractual fine print that works to his disadvantage. I would not advise a seller to use the buyer's lawyer in an offered arrangement to save closing costs.

It's a seller's market these days. Take advantage of it-make your offer as attractive as you can.

are the magic ingredients of "dinner at eight." After your guests have gone, you'll bask in the glow of a successful party. But perhaps more important to you, the hostess, will be the pride of your. husband and the enthusiasm of your guests.

GIANNI SCHICCHI-Puccini's short comic

Ken-L-Biskit!

Why is Ken-L-Biskit the daily diet at America's top kennels? Why is it the official food at more American Kennel Club dog shows than all other dog foods combined?

Economy? Yes! Cup for cup kibble-sized Ken-L-Biskit provides more nutrition than most other dry dog foods—so you can feed less because this food does more.

Goodness? That's important too. Dogs get more out of Ken-L-Biskit. Rich in meat protein. More digestible because it's baked. There's less waste.

But the real appeal is the fact that dogs eat it up. They like it. They love it! An empty feeding bowl is all the proof you need.

The Andrew Ferendinos' Veranda House

Pleasing, hospitable, easy to runthe owners say this house outside Miami proved itself in the first three months

WHEN THE FERENDINOS built, they had three special aims: 1) to get a feeling of spaciousness and freedom with a minimum of square footage, 2) to make the most of the oaks and pines and the view of Finger Lake on their acre-and-ahalf lot, 3) to have a house that would "work" willingly for all four members of a gay and busy family, Mr. and Mrs. Ferendino, daughter Claire, who is a senior at Coral Gables High School, and son John, aged 10.

Andrew Ferendino is an architect. While building his own house, he worked closely, from the beginning, with Frederic Stresau, landscape architect, and George Schwartz, decorator. You see the results photographed here. The rooms, which are not large, do seem spacious because they all open wide on verandas planted with palmettos and aralias and glossy ficus, with views of the lake beyond. In fair weather, big doors slide back to let the breeze off the lake blow freely through the house. At all times, an eight-foot overhang-and this is a fine point-gives protection from the glare of the Florida sun. The outdoor effect is increased by the use of natural. untreated materials - natural redwood, masonry blocks of Chattahoochee riverbottom gravel, and large expanses of floor paved with brick which continues onto the terraces and walks.

Special features make the house easy to run with the help of a once-a-week cleaning woman. Fabrics are rugged and washable. Venezuelan glass tile that never needs polishing is used for the kitchen floor. Throughout the house, storage areas are built in, as they are on shipboard, and big pieces are designed to come straight down to the floor, so there is no problem of cleaning underneath.

"It would be unusual," says Mr. Ferendino, "for an architect not to find some things he would do differently, if he were building again."

But, so far, he would make only one change-he would like to install more sliding screens to open his house even wider to the four winds of heaven.

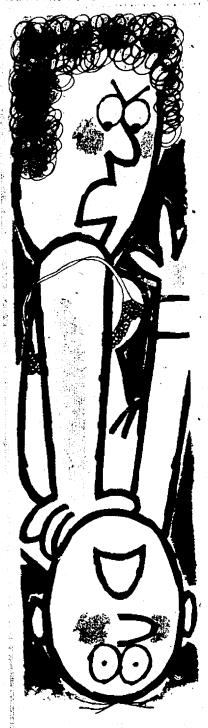

Above: Spreading philodendrons and a slender aralia are the first things you would see from this bedroom when you woke in the morning. When the door is closed, redwood jalousies regulate temperature and ventilation.

Left: view from the kitchen stove out to the veranda with indoor planting of tropical foliage, and beyond, the outdoor garden and view of the lake. A Hi-Fi speaker is installed in this bay which is used for dancing when the Ferendinos entertain. Bamboo fish traps from Jamaica cover outdoor lights, throwing a latticed pattern of light and shade over the exotic shrubs of terrace and garden.

Above: View of entrance, showing typical features of the veranda house-the sheltering eight-foot overhang, the brick flooring, which continues inside, and the tropical planting.

Fire—flood—choking child—and the rescue truck of the local fire department in Santa Monica,
Cal., roars into action

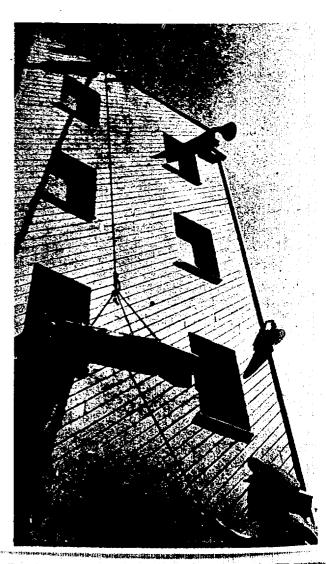

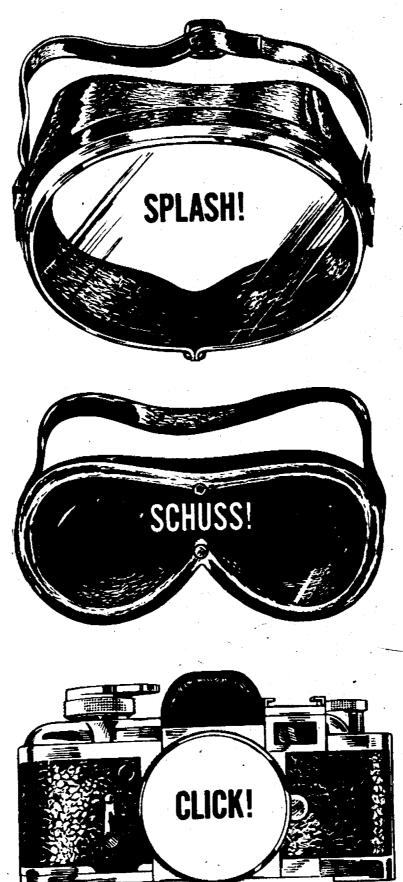

Manned by specialists trained in the arts of saving life, the rescue truck goes out with the hook-and-ladder companies on every fire, and also races off unaccompanied, red lights flashing and sirens screaming, on sudden-illness and accident calls. When Red Skelton, the comedian, was stricken with a coughing spasm, for instance, it was the fire department's rescue truck which got him from his home outside Los Angeles to the big city hospital-in time. On one call a crew may have to deal with a boy, cold and unconscious, who has nearly drowned-another time they will be cutting a driver out of his smashed car with acetylene torches. No one, of course, knows what's going to happen next-but day and night in local fire departments all around the country, the rescue trucks and their crews stand by, ready to go.

Firemen practice operations like this till they have complete mastery of rescue technique.

Rescue truck is fitted with tools and equipment to cope with every conceivable emergency.

THE STATE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF TH

A child, a book, a quiet afternoon—the sublime waste of time that is the conspiracy of childhood

Regained

BY T. MORRIS LONGSTRETH

The libraries I lost myself in still retained a quiet now gathered with an unrecoverable past. Shelves of books rose from floor to ceiling. They offered vast reaches of comfortable exploration, from the Arctic to the Amazon, yet only two minutes from the dinner table. Our climate abetted the use of this cavern of delight. In the Sahara-like summer, the library was cool, and our winters, compounded of slush and gales, made the library a warm, beckoning retreat. People chose chairs for comfort rather than decor, lighted a room softly, knew how to be quiet.

When we took our civilization away from the humanists and the poets and handed it over to militarists and inventors, we had to abandon the library in the home. Wars cost too much to dedicate a whole room to learning. The living room was given the privilege of cherishing culture—and chose fashion instead.

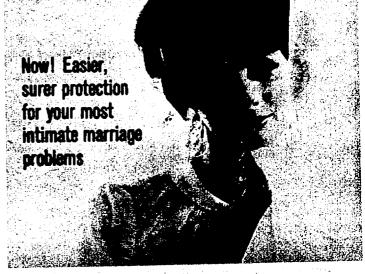

Then attics succumbed to costs. We had more wars, more inventions, larger debts, and less time. It took time to read, and bookcases dwindled to shelves and shelves were sacrificed to interior decoration. After all, a table could hold the magazines and did, until television superseded everything, including reverie and silence.

Yet the book, like the dandelion, the sparrow, and the rabbit, is hardy and adaptable, and I had a pleasant surprise the other day in the dormitory at my old boarding school. I was visiting an up-country boy and noticed a row of paperbacks. There were a score or more best sellers, a few Westerns and mysteries, but mainly longtimers-Dostoevski, Faulkner, Stendhal, plays by Shaw, criticism by Eliot and Trilling. My surprise was doubled when I learned that my host was headed for M.I.T., and read these books for pleasure. It was like finding an oasis complete with palms and the Pierian spring in the great American desert. When I commented on this exhibit of common sense, I was told that most of the boys in the dorm had similar collections.

Only a superficial civilization thinks it can do without the riches of the world's thought and experience, permanently available. Pictures whisked before the eye are not enough. A masterpiece of fiction, history, biography, drama, poetry, must be held in the hand, pondered, reread. Only by love, which refuses to be hurried, do we get outside ourselves and discover what our fellow beings have made of the mysteries of daily living.

In the labyrinth of the last hundred years, the world has taken the wrong turning time and again, until now the consequences are night-mare plain. Yet guides have been plentiful. There are the wiser boys and girls, with the paperbacks of greatness in their rooms, who may lead us out of the labyrinth yet. They may not be content with our comfortable, sterile, bookless habitats and may build their own sanctuaries, with libraries for the books cherished as they grew. It might even be they whose example could induce us to keep at hand the great, the wise, the humorous, the helpful writers to cheer and divert and point the way.

Some underprivileged savant has said that the true paradise is always the paradise we have lost. And Edens never are regained. But the still possible paradise is the environment of timeless moments when, busy in congenial action, we are lifted into our true being. This I know, for I was once a root-beer-drinking boy behind a lawn mower, who knew the way there and have never forgotten it.

A parking attendant will be on hand to park cars of those attending the tea. Proceeds from the donation tea this year are to be used for seating and furnishings for the new conference room on the third floor of Cottage Hospital.

The setting of the tea is the historic and gracious old home at 205 Lakeshore road which was built by the Scherers in 1899 and served as a summer home only for the family until 1915 when its interior was remodeled into a year round residence.

The estate provided its own poultry and dairy products at that time and was supplied with groceries shipped by boat from Detroit to the private docks along Lakeshore road. Meats were always delivered by horse-drawn butcher wagons which ran along Mack avenue.

A boathouse on the shore of the estate housed a motorboat, canoes, and rowboats while a sand beach provided good swimming in Lake St. Clair.

The impressive facade of this white-columned house boasts tremendous climbing wisteria, lending an aura of southern charm to the shores of southern Michigan, Polished and mellow paneled rooms have been the scene of many memorable parties in this mansion, most recent of which was the Christmas dance given by Mrs. Scherer's four grandchildreh during the holiday season of 1958.

The Scherers former residence is still standing on East Jefferson avenue between Chene and DuBois.

One daughter, Mrs. Harley Higbie, was born in this residence and both daughters' weddings (Mrs. Higbie and Mrs. Livingstone) were held here.

The house contains many lovely paintings and a tapestry brought from Europe by Mrs.

A ballroom on the third floor, one of the many interesting features, was used last at the time of the four grandchildren's holiday party in 1958.

One of Detroit's most important fortunes was founded on a hat factory. In the 1830's two brothers, Christian Henry and Frederick Buhl, came to this frontier town from Pittsburgh where they had learned the hatter's trade.

They set up a business downtown with a store to outfit customers divided from the factory by a glass window. A contemporary account tells of the dandies of the day coming to buy their white kid gloves for evening festivities from the Buhl brothers, who would often be bending over a ledger in their shirt sleeves while the hat forms boiled merrily in big kettles.

From hats the brothers branched into men's furnishings and ran a successful business until 1852 when Henry left to go into hardware. Frederick continued the business which flourished during the Civil War. Buhl and Newland Co. outfitted eleven volunteer Michigan Infantry regiments for the conflict. The company formed an alliance with the American Fur Co., and did very well. One of Frederick's sons, another Frederick, died of wounds received after Gettysburg but another, Walter Buhl, continued the business. The founder died in 1890.

Meanwhile his brother, C. Henry, had expanded from the hardware trade after forming Buhl and Du-Charme, which finally became Buhl and Sons. He went in for railroads with Albert and Henry Stevens. One venture to build a road in the Upper Peninsula came to disaster and Mr. Buhl lost $600,000, from which he recovered quickly, for on his death he left six million.

In 1887 he was president of the Detroit National Bank, on the boards of several trusts and railroads. It was during C. Henry Buhl's tenure as mayor of Détroit, 1860-62, that the present city hall was built. (City fathers are now considering demolishing this Victorian structure). He died in 1893 leaving a son, Theodore who had been born in Detroit in 1844 and worked as a clerk in the family hardware store.

Theodore built up the family fortune, was president of the Peninsula Car Company. He married Elizabeth Walker, daughter of Hiram Walker, the Canadian distillery king. The couple had three children, Willis, Arthur and Lawrence. It is through these three sons that the various Buhls who now make the Pointe their home are descended.

Willis was the father of T. D. Buhl, his only child; Arthur H.'s children were Arthur, Jr., C. Henry and Julie (now Mrs. J. Stewart Hudson), and Lawrence's heirs are Lawrence Jr., Mary (Mrs. Robert Surdam), Cora (Mrs. Thomas E. Barbour) and Anne (Mrs. Sherman Mitchell).

The original Theodore Buhl died while on a visit to New York in 1907 when he had a stroke and fell on the sidewalk, leaving his three sons a considerable fortune.

who, where and whatnot

When actor Vincent Price arrives at the Detroit Institute of Arts on November 17 under the auspices of the Fifth Anniversary Committee of the Archives of American Art he will be greeting a host of relatives.

The popular actor and art expert is related to such noted Detroit names as Desnoyer, Van Dyke, Willcox, Cole and Brownson. In the audience will be Mrs. Alfred J. Mayer, Jr., of University place, who visited her famous cousin at the family home in St. Louis and remembers the excellent portraits Price painted of his parents during his Paris days. Since the actor is also a Yale alumnus the old Eli crowd will doubtless turn out for "An Evening with Vincent Price."

Another note on the theatrical board concerns Chris Lena, now appearing at the Cass with Hans Conreid in "Tall Story." Ten-year-old Chris has been starring for several seasons with the Grosse Pointe Children's Theater, in industrial movies and on television. He won this part when he auditioned with 200 others. The whole Children's Theater went in a body for a matinee and naturally thrilled to the visit they made their fellow thespian backstage.

Not only the tots and teens masqueraded for Halloween this year . . . there were several grown up parties too. Among the cleverest costumes were those of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Zur Schmiede, Jr. who captured a scene from "Bridge on the River Kwai" . . . Mrs. Zur Schmiede looked quite fetching in jodhpurs and riding boots with tropical headgear decorated in the symbol of the rising sun . . . her role was that of the Japanese colonel . . . in the Alec Guiness disguise was her husband, his very British swagger stick a mop handle.

So many clever ladies are designing exquisite Christmas decorations this fall . . . Mrs. Emil Voelker's nimble fingers have created some unusual fleur de lis in the holiday spirit, and so thrilled was she by her friends' response she is going into the business, with her company to be called "Designing Women."

When former Vice President Alben Barkley was elected to the House of Representatives for the first time he was puzzled by congressional nomenclature. In talking to one of his colleagues he raised the question of why a House of Representatives committee was called Foreign Affairs, while in the Senate it was known as Foreign Relations.

The reply was "It's very simple, Alben. Most Senators are too old to have affairs. They only have

MRS. PHELPS NEWBERRY, OF CLOVERLY ROAD

By Patricia Talbot

As a small girl in her grandmother's, Mrs. William K. Muir's home in mansion row in East Jefferson in Detroit, Mrs. Phelps Newberry taught herself to sew. She made her own doll clothes, then learned those tiny French stitches and sewed her own lingerie.

For 22 years she has been sewing for Grosse Pointe Memorial Church Fairs and other luxurious linens which this season heads the House her committee have lovingly Beautiful booth, for the November 12 bazaar.

Mrs. Newberry, whose husband's family were leaders in the early move from Detroit to Grosse Pointe when it was a summer colony, is the only woman to twice be chairman of the church fair.

In 1937 she was approached to organize this famous fair, which is given biennially with Christ Church, That first year the church women raised $7,000, now the profit runs in five figures. Recover Purse Stolen in June

A purse stolen from the home of the Keith Tantlingres, 581 Shelden, last June 25, was recovered on the property of a Shores resident on Thursday, October 29.

Mrs. Charlotte Keys of 605 Lake Shore road, discovered the purse while raking leaves in her back yard, and notified Shores police.

Authorities said that the contents of the purse, except for $17.50 was untouched. The thief apparently removed the money and discarded the bag, which because of exposure to the weather was too moist to retain any fingerprints. The purse was returned to Mrs. Tantlinger.

The purse was stolen by a burglar who broke into the Tantlinger home, while the Tantlingers were asleep. The thief took time out to peel and eat six bananas from a refrigerator in the kitchen.

The robber then broke into the garage of Albert A. Le-Clerc, who lives at 645 Lake Shore, and stole LeClerc's car to make his getaway. The vehicle was later abandoned on Hampton road, near Mack, where it was recovered by Woods police.

The burglar is believed to be the same one who broke into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Winning S. Pendergast, 277 Kerby road, between June 30 and July 7, while the Pendergasts were absent from home. The thief took several items of jewelry and $17 in cash.

Three Thoughts For Thanksgiving

BY A. C. SPECTORSKY

Author of "The Exurbanites"

Out of bitter experience and fond recall, suburbia's sharpest critic counts suburbia's blessings

As a Man who has done his fair share of putting down the suburban way of life, I've been accused of just about everything from malicious mechet in malevolent maybem. This hurts me because, among other things, I yield to no man in my love for the country. The fact that I once wrote a critique of commuter life has been interpreted as my seeng nothing good about it and everything good about urban living.

So I'm glad for this opportunity to clear the ar about me, figuratively speaking. (Literalls, speaking, that's impossible, since I'm somewhere near the hear of a city which recognizes few peers in the amount it has in its atmosphere of amog, pollen, dust, coal smoke-and those little bits of black grit for which human eye seems to have a magnetic attraction.) I will tell your-out of bitter experience and fond re-call-some of the things for which I think the sub-urbanite may fervently offer his gratitude to a kind providence on Thanksgiving Day.

First among these blessings I would put the home itself. Be it boxy bungalow or junior estate, it is a home. At this time of year it's apt to be at its homisest, a sung haven that is a permanent part of the personality of its occupants, a warming reflection of themselves which nutrures and contents the ego and makes one, therefore, more outgoing and, in the best and broadest sense, a more human, human being.

By contrast, the majority of urbanites are living in warrens of stone and steel in which they have no equity, but for the use of which they pay mightily indeed.

The functional impersonality of this way of life seems to require on amounting of the soul. The prosimity of hundreds of strangers generates social insulation bordering on furnive or hostles suspicion and seclusiveness. Tim not speaking now of the often-noted loneliness so many people feel in cities. I refer something much more stulltying: the belief, voiced by the majority of urbanites, that this isolation, this encapsulating of one's self in a shell dubbed privacy, is just peachy-dandy, and that anonymity in the faceless crowd is preferable to human community.

S Econo, I would put the unbought pleasures, everything from the view of bare black trees against a blue sky to the sparkle of first frost at dawn. Everything from the smell of wood smoke to the almost animally grailfying, symbolic aer of hanging the storm door. Everything from Orion at night to the midday sound of a boy, b iscycle both.

I love the expectant excitement of a big city at this holiday time, with the spirit of Christmas in full swing. Let me tell you, though, some of the things I don't like about it.

I don't like competing with hundreds of hurrying strangers for sidewalk space, for a cab, for a sets strangers for sidewalk space, for a cab, for a set on a bus, for standing room in a subway. I don't like the continuous, surfly squawk and forar of bumper traffic. I don't like the way the first fine anowquickly turns to black slush, against which city of wear offers all the protection of a piece of cleansing itsue. I don't like standing in line-for everything transportation, tunch, dinner out, theater, movies, the morning paper, the office elevator, everything.

And how did I get to this point when I started out talking about the unbought pleasures? Like this: by contrast with the city, the unbought pleasures abound out of town and may usually be relished at home or close to it, with or without friends or neighbors. Whereas the city dweller feels almost a compulsion to buy something in his leisure hours-perhaps as proof to himself that he's having fun-whether it's dining out, going to the theater, going to a night club. sitting around a cocktail lounge, or going to the movies (in which case, it's supposed to be more fun to go to the big, first-run movie houses downtown). The point I want to make is that this city chap, so pleased with his urban independence, may be a little less the free spirit than he deems-as is quickly evidenced by the fact that wherever in the big, glamourous city his impulse may take him (and as he puts on his hat Continued on page 9
