A CONDEMNED KILLER was spared his life yesterday by the governor of Illinois. Paul Crump, a 32-year-old Negro convicted of slaying an unarmed guard in a Chicago holdup in 1953, had fought a legal battle with authorities ever since convicted and had managed to stay his 'execution 14 times. By his action Wednesday, Gov. Otto Kerner, of Illinois, commuted the death sentence of Crump to 199 years in prison without chance of parole. The ruling came less than 35 hours before Crump was to have died in Chicago's electric chair. The Governor's decision was based on the judgment that Crump had become "a changed man" in his nine years in prison. Crump's plea for life sentence was unprecedented as he did not deny committing the murder. The equally unprecedented commutation on grounds of a rehabilitation could have a profound effect on criminal and penal practices throughout the country.

Since entering prison in 1953 Crump has embraced Roman Catholicism, furthered his education, written a book to be published next month, and won the respect of prison doctors, chaplains, guards, and even the jail warden. When he received the news of his sparing, Crump said, "I thank God, Gov. Kerner and all the many, many people who worked to bring it to the attention of the Gov-

The Mayor's Advisory Planning Committee was granted approval to employ the firm of Geer Associates to assist in the revision of the City's Zoning Ordinance.

Approval was given to cancel the 1956 City Tax in the amount of $16.90 assessed against the personal property of Robert Looker of 44 McKinley Place. Mr. Charles R. Campbell, the Supervisor at Kerby Acting on the recommendation of the Mayor's Advisory Planning Committee, the Council authorized the making of a survey of all residences in the City to ascertain the number and locations of those not conforming to the City's Zoning Ordinance.

The first Council meeting in September—falling on September 3, 1982—Labor Day—has been postponed to September 10, 1962.

A resolution was adopted authorizing the exercising of an option on a parcel of property in Clinton Township to be used by the Clinton-Pointes Refuse Disposal Authority and to deposit the sum of $10,250.00 pending a commitment for title insurance or an abstract indicating that the owners hold a clear title to the property.

All bids received for the construction of additions and alterations to the municipal building were rejected by the Council for reason that they were well in excess of the funds available for the project.

The Architect was requested to prepare new plans and specifications with certain modifications—bids on which would be within the amount available for the construction. On proper motion made, supported and carried, the meeting adjourned at 10:15 P.M.

"50c a tablet can be cheap!"

By Fred Kopp, R. Ph.

No one likes to pay 50c for a single tablet - including us. Nevertheless, some of the newer drugs cost that much. They seem expensive-yes, only seem. Consider this: Pneumonia used to mean 4 to 6 bedridden weeks. Loss of pay. Often hospitalization. Often death. Now, a few dollars' worth of one antibiotic will generally cure pneumonia in days. And this is only one example . . . there are many others. When you consider what a few 50c pills will do for you, they seemdownright cheap.

City Club Plans Florida Party

The Women's City Club of Detroit will carry out another "first" in its forty-three year history Thursday, August 23, when the social affairs committee will give a Michigan-Florida Dinner.

The instigaters decided that the out-of-town Florida members, who cherish the City Club so much that they keep their memberships even when they live so far away, should be given some opportunity to see their friends in the Club at the time of year when they usually return "home" for visits.

Mrs. Herman P. Sattler, of Weber Place, is taking time out from her chairmanship of the City Club's Christmas Fair (Nov. 6, 7 and 8) to help with plans for the dinner.

Delicious hot hors d'oeuvres will be served at the cocktail hour at 6 o'clock in the Club's Executive Suite, giving guests a chance to mingle and chat before going to the auditorium for dinner that will feature the Club's gourmet roast beef tenderloin with mushrooms. The room will lose its formal, lecture-hall look that night with the ceiling draped in nets of glittery tropical fish, and twinkly lights beamed out from miniature jets-just a reminder of the fun of even going South on one of these fast commuters. Luckily the Floridians will find the comfort of air-conditioning here just as they are accustomed to it everywhere at home.

There'll be a follow-up after the holidays when Detroiters are taking winter vacations at a Florida-Michigan Dinner down there.

when the POINTE was growing up...

When General Charles Larned died heroically in the cholera epidemic of 1834 Detroit lost one of her most famous citizens and his eulogy was written by Charles Trowbridge. Today few remember or know about the young New Englander who came to save Detroit from the British in 1812 and remained to become an august attorney general of the Northwest Territory.

Charles Larned was the son of Revolutionary War colonel, Simeon Larned, of Berkshire county, Massachusetts. Young Charles grew up in New England and was educated at Williams College, graduating in the

Then he traveled to Lexington, Ky., to study law with Henry Clay. It was in Kentucky he heard about the British capture of Detroit. One evening at a party Larned and several young friends decided they would form a regiment to relieve the city. This was the Kentucky regiment which was massacred at River Raisin. Larned was among the young officers who escaped and after the war, during which he served as an aide to General Harrison, he remained in Detroit and became a lawyer.

He returned east to marry his childhood sweetheart, Sylvia Colt, of Pittsfield, Mass., and he and his bride made the long carriage journey to Detroit with another newly married couple, the Austin Wings. Here they were royally entertained by Gov. and Mrs. Lewis Cass. When they had mixed a great, big, potent brew, they handed it to David so that he might add the finishing touches. Instead, David drank it. The first thing Mrs. Robinson Ort did was to call the local Poison Control Center for the antidote, which she administered while waiting for the police to come totake David to the hospital. Young David survived because of Mrs. Ort's quick thinking. Incidentally, there are now Poison Control Centers in or near almost every community in the country. It's their job to cata-. logue and list the antidotes for every substance that can poison you. Some will answer your doctor's questions only, and some will answer yours as well. If the Center nearest you will give information to the layman, why not get its number and keep it handy inside your medicine chest?

No Labor Day Traffic for Him!

The MAN LALLYGAGP G in the rolling bathtub in the photograph has the road to himself, as you can see. Even though it was Labor Day, traffic snarls didn't bother him. But he wasn't the only one free of such worries; the crowd along his route—some 30,000 or more of the populations of Kettering, Oakwood, and Washington Township in Ohio—also enjoyed a traffic-less holiday. Come September, while most of the rest of us are out on the highways, creeping along bumper-to-bumper, these suburbanites will again be celebrating their Holiday at Home, the fourth annual one they've had, each more popular than the year before.

A parade, with bands and floats and clowns like the one in the bathtub, takes at least an hour and a half to pass through Kettering during the morning. Last year 200 units marched. Later there are events like free amusement rides for the children, a talent contest, an antique-automobile display, hobby show, and races and games for the youngsters. A queen—Miss Holiday—is crowned. And in the evening there's a gaint fireworks display and dancing in the streets until midnight The Kettering-Oakwood Times publishes a program the Thursday before Labor Day so no one will miss any of the fun.

The purpose? Robert Eichenlaub, the telephone company official who thought up Holiday at Home, says the didea was 'to help build community spirit and keep our residents off the roads." Ketteringites are getting to be a bunch of old-fashioned stay-at-homes on Labor Day and they love it!

The Boom in Adult Education

BY EDWARD H. LITCHFIELD

Chancellor, University of Pittsburgh

Moore's "night out." After dinner she kisses her two children good-bye, says a few parting words to her husband, and leaves home—in a pleasant suburb near Pittsburgh—with her books and papers under her arm.

A few hours earlier, when Bryan H. Arveson finished up the day as a sales executive of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, he packed his brief case, took his hat, and—riding across town instead of to his home in Allison Park, outside Pittsburgh—tried to recall a passage from a textbook he read at lunch.

Diane Finan of suburban Brentwood works for the U.S. Steel Corporation. At 20, she is a private secretary to an industrial engineer, who describes her as "bright and attractive." Local judges for the "Miss Universe" pageant will have an opportunity to pass on her attractiveness when she appears before them as a candidate for the title later this year, but on Wednesday night—as she completes some last-minute typing and puts away a file—she's more concerned about being bright.

Millions of suburban men and women will be going back to school again next month, better students than ever. Will you be among them?

What is it a young mother, a businessman, and a secretary have in common on an average Wednesday evening? The answer is: for this one day of the week at least, all are college students. Mrs. Moore is studying education; Mr. Arveson, business administration; and Miss Finan, English, at the University of Pittsburgh.

They are typical of literally millions of people beyond what we normally think of as school age who are devoting one, two, or three evenings a week to going back to school.

As never before in our history, adults today are delving into the spectrum of education on a spare-time basis—from Karl Marx to quantum mechanics, from Herman Melville to home nursing.

Adult education has become, in fact, the largest and fastest-growing segment of American education. Recent estimates by the U.S. Department of Education place the total number who are involved in some form of spare-time academic improvement at 8,000,060.

One and one half million adults actually are enrolled in college-level courses at the 146 institutions that offer part-time programs. Some colleges have more adult part-time students than they have full-time undergraduates.

What has caused this rush of adults back to the campus and classroom?

In general, it's the fundamental pressure of our jet-age society. As a nation, we have long recognized that a person never stops learning. But the need to keep on learning has become ever more imperative, difficult, and in need of structure when there is so much more to know about and when the world around us is changing so rapidly.

Higher education today is no longer something that is undertaken in a formal way between the ages of 17 and 21 and never again. It is a continuous experience involving young adults, people long out of school, and those who are looking for a new career or preparing to retire from an old one.

What are some of the satisfactions and benefits you will obtain if you decide to join this growing throng? Here are a few:

YOU WILL BE A BETTER STUDENT. Not brighter, necessarily, but better.

A university professor says: "The range of abilities of the adult evening student is about the same as that of the daytime student, but his educational experience is much richer. After all, he has perhaps 10 or 15 years of living under the belt."

"What the evening student lacks by having been away from school," another professor adds, "he compensates for with maturity and dedication."

One adult evening school student who received his baccalaureate degree this year had, in the course of 11 years study, logged more than 100,000 miles of travel between the campus and his home town some 72 miles away. Nor was he alone in this: at one time or another, he shared rides with 46 other adults from his community who also attended classes at the same university.

ADULT EDUCATION HAS CHANGED. Anyone who has had no contact with it for the past few years wouldn't recognize it today.

The part-time curriculum is no longer an after-thought at American universities. They recognize it as a necessary and desirable part of their educational service to the community, and outstanding teachers appear almost as often in the adult program as they do in the regular, day-time schedule. Evening classes tend to be more easygoing and relaxed for both the pupil and the professor. The atmosphere often is that of a friendly discussion among equals. I know one man who has completely eliminated any inhibitions that may be caused by the formal student-teacher relationship: He holds his nighttime seminar in his own living room.

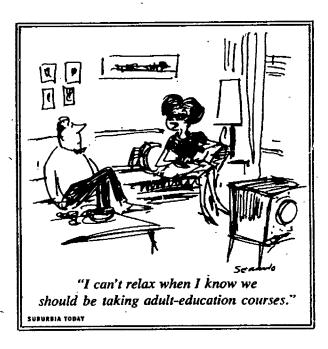

Several universities arrange to send teachers to classes collected in suburban students' houses. This arrangement is not only informal but it saves the students the bother of commuting. And, of course, many school systems offer adult classes in the local high school.

Part-time education offers a variety of intellectual fare these days: The student may want to earn a bachelor of arts or a bachelor of science degree. Many graduate programs are offered in their entirety at night. Special certificate courses have been established in everything from hotel management to insurance. And there are general courses in art, literature, great religious questions, current political problems, and significant trends in contemporary society.

Another point: Part-time doesn't necessarily mean nighttime. Although the bulk of the adult programs are still given at night, colleges today are accustomed to having older students in their day classes, and many schedule some adult programs in the early afternoon.

YOU CAN FIND A NEW CAREER. It is a paradox that, despite widespread industrial unemployment, there is a crying need for teachers, for technically trained and scientifically oriented workers, and for other skilled personnel in our society; and there is an insufficient supply of younger graduates to meet this demand. The situation calls for the tapping of other resources—the older student, for one.

Consider the potential contribution of the American woman. What with early marriages and early families, the suburban housewife frequently finds herself in her mid-40's with more than three decades of useful life ahead of her and fewer family responsibilities than she has had in years. Often she received some or all of her college training before she was married, but her intellectual talents have not since been fully used.

The American woman today has many opportunities to embark on a satisfying new career. In Washington, D.C., there is an experiment under way to educate former housewives as psychiatric social workers. Pittsburgh has an evening program to train executive secretaries and a daytime series of courses for potential dental assistants. Most universities with schools of nursing offer R.N. and practical nursing curricula on a part-time basis. Courses leading to teachers' certificates are offered abundantly in the adult program, as are courses in librarianship—another specialty in heavy demand. And nobody, particularly in an adult or evening school program, is particularly surprised to see women studying physics or engineering.

YOU CAN GET AHEAD IN YOUR OWN FIELD. Ask the average man in engineering, science, technology, or industry what the toughest part of his job is these days and he's likely to answer: "Keeping up with what's new."

Almost everyone has seen this with missiles, aircraft, and ships, and in medicine, law, and business where findings are out of date almost before they are launched or announced.

American industry is moving into new world markets in the emerging nations of Asia and Africa and facing up to problems created by new economic blocs in Europe. This fact has necessitated the retraining of businessmen and the rethinking of business problems.

Often it requires more than private study to make sense out of a vast amount of unassimilated data. The stimulus of the classroom and experimentation in the laboratory are needed, and contact with men whose sole job is to think these problems through. Thus, a principal motive for going back to school is not necessarily making up for missed formal education but rather to keep up or get ahead in one's field.

YOU CAN MAKE UP FOR "MISSED" EDUCA-TION. Always at the core of adult education are the people who, either because of lack of finances or lack of motivation at the time, missed getting a formal education at the conventional time.

Fortunately, more colleges now offer complete undergraduate and graduate programs for adults than ever before. And the student has a wider choice of fields. In addition to the B.A., B.S., and law degree, he may be able to get a diploma in business administration, social work, public affairs, urban renewal, education, and many other subjects.

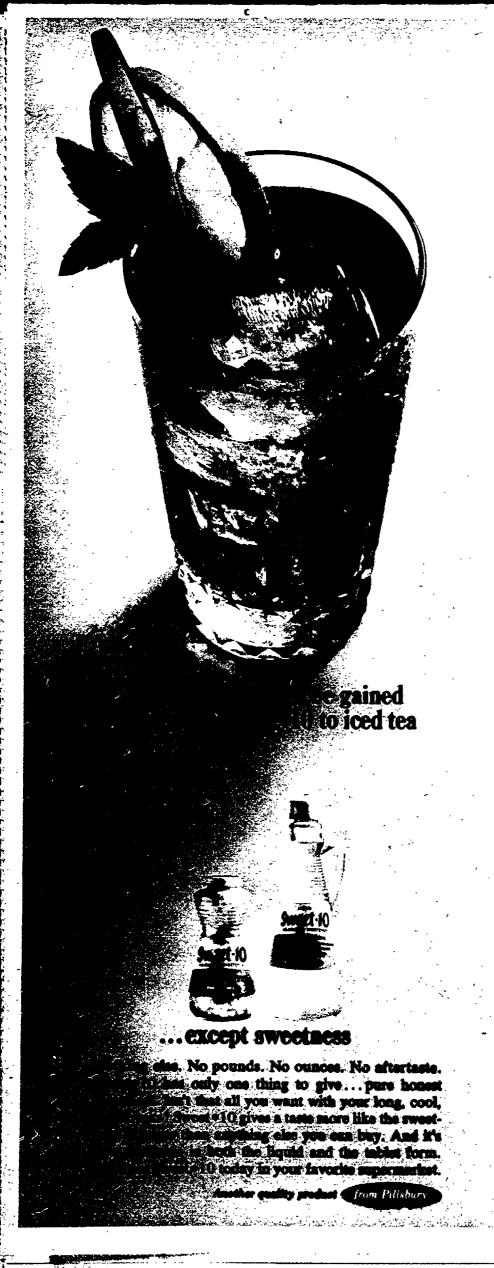

You'll BE A BETTER CITIZEN. The distinguished journalist James Reston said recently: "The intelligent individual American feels overwhelmed by contemporary events... It is as if the thoughtful citizen regarded himself today as a mere spectator in a bewildering world of higher mathematics, complicated technology, and mysterious economies.... The need is for widespread study."

Viet Nam, Laos, Ruanda and Burundi—some of the names that pepper the headlines didn't even exist as political entities, much less as political crises, just a short time ago.

One can find out what is happening in the world on a day-to-day basis through news reports and broadcasts. However, truly to understand current problems—to learn what has gone before, and to weigh issues in the light of history, sociology, psychology, public affairs, economics and politics—requires an added effort.

Education can help you become the informed, interesting person all of us want to be. What 8, 000,000 Americans now are discovering is that it can do it as well later on in life as it can in youth.

Will you be one of them—going back to school next month?

A MOTHER-AND-TEACHER
FRANKLY REVEALS
Why Bright Children
Sometimes Get Poor
Grades in School

by FRIEDA E. VAN ATTA

Mother of two, a practicing teacher for 17 years, Mrs. Van Atta has taught all grades and taken courses in education at several universities.

YOU DON'T have to be a "School Marm," as I am, to know that many bright children get poor grades in school. This is something that puzzled me when I began teaching over 17 years ago. "Why," I wondered, "do some of the brightest youngsters in this class turn in homework assignments and test papers that show less familiarity with the subject than those of pupils with much lower I.Q.'s?"

The Key To Better Crades

Then I made a startling discovery. In practically all cases where bright children were getting poor marks, most of their trouble stemmed directly from a lack of understanding of the old-fashioned "3 R's"—Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic.

The result is what I believe to be a very valuable handbook for every parent who is worried about his child's schoolwork. I have called it, simply, How To Help Your Child in Reading, Writing & Arithmetic. In 384 pages, clearly illustrated, the three basic subjects are explained, step by step, from kindergarten through 8th grade. With my book at hand, you can pick out exactly the subject and grade of work in which your child is weak—and help him by means of tested teaching methods.

Worksheets For All Grades

At the end of each section in my book you'll find special WORKSHEETS for practice and review. You and your youngster can sit down together and work out these problems, discussing any points on which the child may not be clear. By using the WORKSHEETS you will be able to see exactly where your child's difficulty lies—and help him correct it on the spot. Here are some of the WORKSHEETS you'll find:

- PICTURE GAMES for children in kindergarten, to make them aware of familiar things around them.
- READING GAMES to help children in 1st grade learn new words and phrases.
- ADDITION, SUBTRACTION, MULTIPLICATION and DIVISION EXAMPLES for youngsters in 2nd, 3rd and 4th grades.
- FRACTIONS to practice in 5th grade.
- PUNCTUATION EXERCISES for 6th graders to help them master the principles of English.
- SENTENCE DIAGRAMS for 7th graders to fill in, so they can better understand grammar.
- DECIMALS and PERCENTAGES for 8th grade students of this tricky phase of mathematics.

Of course, these are only a small sampling of the WORKSHEETS in this oversize  $(8\frac{1}{2} \times 11\frac{1}{4})$ , hardbound volume.

Want to perform like a professional? little theater companies what he has learned

The author and costar Helen Hayes rehearse the American Shakespeare Festival's "Shakespeare Revisited." Now in Stratford, Connecticut, they'll tour the country in the fall.

ALONG WITH THE BARBECUE, the twist, the discount store, and pizza, America has contributed the community theater, and in suburban towns all over the country neighbors have joined forces to offer their skills in devotion to Thespis. A worshiper myself, I applaud all the theatrically inclined but especially those who work with bare essentials and limited funds. Suburban stalwarts, take heart in the knowledge that we professionals are often similarly plagued by bun-glers and bound by budgets, too!

My comments, however, concern the actor whose struggles are particularly companion to mine. Young, old, fledgling or veteran, every actor is trying to give delight and excitement. If he cares to be guided by some other soul's trials and errors, let him dine on these fruits of my labors:

BY MAURICE EVANS

ret into

Preparing to Act

- 1. Make the most of your voice for long speeches and projection into the auditorium. A simple exercise to build the diaphragm muscle is to take deep breaths, letting the air out slowly. Another is to sing! It doesn't matter how badly or where you do it, but sing! This builds control and sends the voice over the vocal chords and into the head cavity, so that you may avoid throat irritation and achieve resonance.
- 2. Simple sit-up exercises at home or swimming or tennis will loosen up your body. You may want to add ballet for posture and attenuation as well.
- 3. Study people, their facial expressions, their gestures, their stance. The more you know and understand human behavior, the better equipped you are for your job.

A famous actor tells members of about putting a part across

4. Good diction is elementary in your acting equipment. If you are unable to take diction classes, do it yourself at home by listening to radio and television announcers over and over again. Study their vowels and consonants and diphthongs. These are the fellows to emulate because they are devoid of any regional accent.

5. Keep your body as flexible as possible. If you find it difficult to move easily and naturally on the stage, try this: In the privacy of your room, stand at some distance from a chair. Look at that chair steadfastly until it says to you, "Come and sit in me." Once you have succeeded in making that chair "talk" to you, you're halfway to solving all your movement problems.

6. Learn to audition by doing so as often as possible. Here, experience reigns the supreme instructor. The more you fail, the less the fear of failure, thereby reducing the possibility of failure—if you know what I mean.

7. Try to do as many varied roles as possible. Don't get type-cast. Nothing grows in this kind of rut but your limitations and your temper.

How to Learn Your Part

- 8. No part is so small that is not worth taking pains. When I saw "I Remember Mama," good friends of mine were playing leading roles. Nevertheless, it was the small part of the young son that caught my attention. His name—Marlon Brando.
- 9. Don't trust your memory. Treat it as a foe. Learn your lines well. Here, rehearsals help in that lines become second nature, and you may concentrate on emotion.
- 10. For the beginner, self-consciousness is the biggest hurdle. It can be overcome only when you realize your job as an actor is to interpret. Get under the skin of the character you are playing, forget entirely your own physical appearance, and believe fiercely that you are Willie Loman or Sadie Thompson or Blanche Dubois.
- 11. Work with your director. If a line does not feel right, tell him. Take him into your confidence and have confidence in him. He wants you to be comfortable, but he also knows what is best for the scene. Remember that he is staging a play, not a solo recital.
- 12. Experiment with make up so that you may learn its complexities. It is an art—not an adornment. It doesn't have to be elaborate to be effective. Your local five-and-dime store has everything you need.

When You're On-stage

- 13. Don't upstage your fellow actor. Remember how you'll feel when he reciprocates in kind—and he will! He may plant crab grass on your lawn, or, even worse, sneeze on-stage in the middle of your big moment.
- 14. Opening-night nerves are a form of egotism. Remind yourself that you are only one of a team and the jitters will take care of themselves. Broadway stars feel the same apprehension. You can't be a pro without a little of it, but modesty about your own self-importance is the best antidote—if taken with aspirin.
- 15. Just because your neighbors are your audience, don't treat them as casually as you might in your living room. Be as disciplined and professional as possible.
- 16. It will give you self-assurance if you will reason that your audiences came to enjoy themselves, not deliberately to criticize you.
- 17. Have a good time. Theater can, and should, be fun. If it is for you, it will almost certainly be so for all.

A Remarkable New Eating Experience

"One of the finest things we've ever tasted!" was the way one American newspaper hailed a group of the world's legendary banquet dishes as they appeared in grocery stores in ready to heat and serve form. But the St. Louis Globe-Democrat writer was only one of many critics, homemakers and husbands who were heaping praise on these Famous Foods of the World in cans.

In describing Swedish Köttbullar the Oakland Tribune raved, "Each can serves three generously and is crowded to the brim with plump, tender meatballs—drenched in sour cream sauce, seasoned in dill." And the Washington, D.C., Evening Star recommended the "elegant little meat balls" as a main course with parsley potatoes and red cabbage, or as appetizers on cocktail picks.

Indulge three people gloriously for less than a dollar with Köttbullar, fabled Beef Stroganoff or Italy's succulent Chicken Cacciatore. And try the two noble soups as well... authentic French Onion or hearty Spanish Garbanzo. Wonderful!

So plan with care when you landscape with these hardy trees

BY JOHN BRIMER

Evergreens are universally loved, and they can make an enormous contribution to the American garden—or, in the wrong spot, they can make more trouble with every year of growth.

People who take their time about buying a car—a machine they'll turn in in a year or so—often rush out to buy an evergreen for a lifetime with no forethought at all. Of course, it is hard to suspect that an innocent two-foot tree might in 10 to 15 years become a monster that blocks out windows and even scrapes shingles off the roof. Evergreens can be kept small by pruning, but it's hard and boring work; besides, it's unnecessary, if you plan your needs in advance.

The choice among heights and habits of growth is astonishing. Although forest evergreens often top a hundred feet or more at maturity, some dwarf types will grow only two feet. Before you buy, it is vital to consider what your evergreen will look like in 10 years, 20 years—or a lifetime. Most species are reliably hardy even out of their native climates and will tolerate extremes of sun and shade. Choose the right ones for your space, and their color and beauty will be a year-round delight.

YOUR NURSERYMAN can tell you which evergreen will play Jack and the Beanstalk and which will resemble Tom Thumb. You need not wait until spring to plant, because late summer to early autumn is a good growing season. If evergreens are kept moist and given a little winter protection, they will be ahead on growth in the spring.

For foundation plantings, concentrate two or three kinds of trees in a simple well-grouped arrangement—and visualize, before you make up your mind, how house and planting will combine in years to come. Taller evergreens may accent a doorway or grace a corner, but make certain that they will never-go above the line of the eaves. Pointed evergreens are exclamation points in the landscape and should be used sparingly, if at all. Most of the spruces, firs, pines, and hemlocks are forest trees that are unsuitable for small home gardens. Nearly all evergreens have smaller editions, or dwarf varieties, however, and your nurseryman may have them in stock or can order them for you. Question him about winter color, too, because some varieties "winterburn" or change color and look drab in cold weather. Your nurseryman is also your best source for what varieties will grow best in your region and for your purpose.

To plant your evergreen, dig a hole at least 50 per cent larger than the root ball of your tree, being sure it is far enough away from buildings or other permanent plants so that future development won't be hampered. Dig at least 18 inches (two feet is better), break up all clods, and remove rocks and debris. Mix a handful of plant food with the soil for each hole. If the earth is sandy or gravelly, include up to 50 per cent peat moss with the soil you fill in, to aid in moisture retention. One part peat moss to three parts of garden soil will help to improve the structure of most soils.

Fill in the hole with enough earth to support the root ball at the same level it grew before—you'll see the soil line on the trunk—and turn down the burlap wrappings. Then fill in around the roots with soil, firming it lightly with your hands until the hole is half-filled. Soak it well with water, and when it has settled fill with soil to the top of the hole and soak again. Finally, fill up the earth to soil level and firm it gently. Build a low dam to make a "saucer" to hold water around the evergreen.

Apply a three-inch mulch of pine needles, salt hay, wood chips, or other coarse material that will allow water and rain to penetrate easily. Peat moss may pack down and prevent penetration. Soak the plant once or more weekly, keeping the soil moist right up to the time it freezes. In warmer climates, continue to water through the winter, tapering off as nature provides moisture.

E ARLY NEXT SPRING, give a double handful of plant food to your evergreen so that when growth starts the food will be in place. A 10-6-4 formula is excellent for most evergreens, but some other high nitrogen fertilizer will suffice if this is not available. Support summer growth with another application and give one more in late autumn so that the needles will take up the food, stay greener, and resist wind and sunburn during the winter.

Should the position be exposed to drying winds, you may need to give your evergreens a windbreak of burlap or snow fence the first year. Better still (or in addition), use one of the antidesiccant sprays that give a light coating of rubbery material to prevent moisture loss all winter but disintegrate and disappear when spring comes and new growth starts. Professional nurserymen swear by these sprays, and many now transplant at practically any time during the season. The cost and effort of application are negligible compared with the benefits gained.

So there you have the keys to success in choosing and planting the evergreens that will give you a lifetime of genuine pleasure.

Ten times faster than raking

The old "rake and basket" way of getting up fall leaves is tiring and time-consuming. Treat your lawn and yourself to a Parker Sweeper. It's ten times faster than raking! And in spring and summer, your Parker's the ideal way to get up grass clippings, clumps, twigs, other debris. It gives you a cleaner, healthier, more beautiful lawn all year 'round. Your lawn needs a lift. Pick it up with a Parker. 12 models: manual, motorized and trailer.

Parker Sweeper ECTORAL* tablets, given regularly to your dog or cat, can rid your pet of fleas, lice, and even ticks. # BY QUENTIN REYNOLDS

As a one-time permanent and always semipermanent inhabitant of Suburbia, I have been not only an observer of, but a participant in, the tribal customs of Westchester, suburban Chicago, suburban Los Angeles and suburban Washington, and during the past three years I have noticed a change in suburban habits. Know what they do now? They sit around the dinner table and talk, talk, talk.

Conversation at the American table being in what might be called its infancy, it might help the Lady of the House to learn the ground rules, for traditionally it is she who must start the conversational ball rolling. It is not a responsibility to be taken lightly, and often one must ignore obvious temptations. Suppose your husband is in the ball-bearing business and he invites his boss to dinner. Naturally, you'll ask a few of your most presentable neighbors to join you. You don't have to worry while the main part of the dinner is being served you know your guests will be discussing your fine food. Food can be an interesting topic, but it usually exhausts itself by dessert, and then you're on your own, girl.

The obvious gambit would be to get the Boss to open up on the subject of ball bearings, but the charces are that he will be as bored talking about them as your guests will be hearing about them. After all, when you've seen one ball bearing, you've seen them all. You-must remember that in addition to his business, every man has. some outside interest or hobby he'd much rather talk about. Your ever-lovin' husband can do some research to find out what the Boss does when he leaves the office. He might, for instance, be a chess fiend, and you might knock him on his ball bearings should you ask innocently, "Do you think Bobby Fischer's explosive temperament will prevent him from defeating Russians like Botvinnik in future world championship tournaments?" (You don't have to know any more about chess than that. It's a question all chess fans are discussing.)

You have another responsibility. That is to see that your husband occasionally has a chance to get to bat. But keep him in reserve the way Ralph Houk of the Yankees keeps Luis Arroyo in the bull pen (your husband will explain who these people are).

If you don't mind a bit of name dropping, let me tell how Mrs. Winston Churchill passes the ball to her husband after dinner. Once during the war I was asked to Chequers (traditional home of Britain's Prime Ministers) for dinner. Harry Hopkins, Robert E. Sherwood, the writer, Averell Harriman, and two British generals were the other guests. It was early in 1942, and things hadn't been going well for our side. Winston Churchill was not in a very happy mood. He glowered at and grumbled about the food until his lovely wife said gently, "Remember, Winston, there's a war on:" It seems almost sacrilegious to say, but dinner with Winston Churchill was a rather dull event. That is, until the hostess thought of something to take her husband's mind off the sinking of Atlantic convoys and bad news from the Libyan Desert.

"Winston," she finally said, "I forgot to tell you that they sent one of your favorite films to show tonight. It is the Marx Brothers' 'Night at the Opera.'"

"Have you seen it, Hopkins?" When Harry Hopkins shook his head, Churchill went on, "I've seen it five times and always find something new in it to laugh at. I don't often agree with George Bernard Shaw, but I agree with him on acting. Someone once asked him who he thought the world's four best actors were and he answered, "The Marx Brothers."

Now, primed by his wife (although he wasn't conscious of it), he discussed films that he liked and some he didn't like with hearty gusto. He drew Sherwood out on Hollywood personalities, and the conversation became an animated free-for-all with everyone having a good time. Somewhere out in the darkness a hideous war was being fought, but for an hour we all forgot

Talking

And making sense

the well-known author notes the

comeback of conversation

it. We were living Hollywood experiences with witty Bob Sherwood and reliving films of the past through the eyes of Winston Churchill. It was an unforgettable hour. Throughout it, Mrs. Churchill remained quiet, just smiling gently, as though to say, "Now, you're talking, Winston."

RLENE FRANCIS is married to Martin A Gabel, a brilliant actor-director-producer, and one of the most gifted conversationalists I've ever known. He has a vast store of knowledge, an awe-inspiring memory, and he reads almost every book that is published. When Arlene can get away from her radio and television chores, and Martin away from Broadway, they run for their Mt. Kisco (Westchester) home, where they entertain a great deal. A member of England's House of Lords was spending a week with neighbors of the Gabels. The neighbor asked if Martin and Arlene would give a dinner party for Lord Trelawven, a wealthy manufacturer of cheap furniture as well as a peer. They lied pleasantly and said they would be delighted. Dinner was heavy going. No one could find a topic that seemed to interest the walrus-mustached, seventyyear-old guest of honor. Lord Trelawven had a rather heavy brogue—he was an Irish peer. Finally, Arlene threw her husband a desperate look and said, "Dear, did you know there were Irishmen in the House of Lords?"

"As a matter of fact, there are 70 Irish peers," Martin answered calmly. "Am I not correct, Lord Trelawven?"

"Bless my soul," the delighted peer roared happily. "You're the only man outside of Dublin who would know that. Great fun it is too for us Irish to sit there making laws for the English."

And in fascinating detail he told a hundred anecdotes of the House of Lords including some ancient but interesting ones about Disraeli, Queen Victoria's favorite. Whenever he appeared to be slowing down, Martin would toss him a deft question.

One more example of a wife who knows how to keep dinner guests from nodding over their coffee-Bennett and Phyllis Cerf are veteran suburbanites, known for their amusing dinner parties, but even Phyllis Cerf occasionally has to think of something to stimulate conversation. One evening her guest of honor was Benny Goodman, and of course, she asked several of the neighbors to meet the Maestro. Benny is a quiet chap at best, and when he meets strangers he is apt to crawl into a shell. It was like that this evening. Several of the guests had tried to draw him out on musical subjects, but Benny only gave noncommittal answers. The dinner party might have died before the dessert arrived if it hadn't been for the resourcefulness of Phyllis Cerf.

"We'll hurry through dessert, Benny," she said innocently, "because I know you and Bennett want to watch the Yankees."

"The EALLY, PHYLLIS," Benny said. "The Yanks don't play tonight. They played this afternoon and I was at the Stadium. Whitey Ford threw a two-hitter and beat Cleveland 2 to 1."

Bennett Cerf, knowing just why his wife had brought up the subject, did his part. "Are any of the men in your band baseball fans, Benny?" he asked.

"We had a recording date this afternoon. I made the date myself, forgetting that the Yanks were back in New York today." Goodman chuckled. "Yesterday three of my men said they wouldn't show up to play. They were going to the ball game. I wanted to go, too, so I cancelled our recording."

The men at the table were enthusiastic. This was a Benny Goodman they hadn't known about—the dedicated baseball fan. Even the women present became interested as Benny told stories of past and present ballplayers he'd known. He was very proud that four of the Yankee players were taking their wives to his Carnegie Hall concert the following week. Throughout, Phyllis Cerf, as Mrs. Churchill had done, sat quietly, and smiled gently as though saying to herself, "Now you're talking, kiddies."

Thank You, Dr. Seuss!

For Giving Us Books That Even Beginners
Can Read All By Themselves

Must books written simply enough for first, second and third graders necessarily be dull? It was always assumed so ... until the beloved DR. SEUSS created "The Cat in the Hat." The kids loved it, and parents and teachers were thrilled to see their children reading joyously and unaided. This led to a whole series of BEGINNER BOOKS by other talented writers and artists. Now Dr. Seuss and others have scored a new triumph — delightful books for beginning beginners, using a vocabulary of just 50, 75, or 100 words your child already knows, or can learn right away.

WITH TRIAL ENROLLMENT

You'll know something special is happening the first time your youngster turns, wide-eyed, from the zany cartoon creatures and their hilarious antics to the words that tell the story. Word by word, phrase by phrase, he will follow the print. Excitement grows and grows until the secret cannot be kept a second longer. "Mommy! Daddy! Come and listen. I can read it myself!" And so the great adventure begins, moving from page to page, book to book — until the words that were once hard to read become easy—understanding comes more quickly—and vocabulary grows by leaps and bounds. All because he has discovered reading is fun, when he can do it himself.

BOOKS OF ADVENTURE, HUMOR, KNOWLEDGE-WRITTEN IN WORDS HE ALREADY KNOWS OR CAN QUICKLY LEARN

The importance of the BEGINNING READERS' PROGRAM goes far beyond the glorious illustrations and fascinating stories. Each book makes reading more fun, and easier than ever, because it is written in about 200 or fewer basic words your child has already learned, or can quickly pick up. All are written and illustrated by gifted writers and artists who know where a child's heart is. There's a story on whales, the tale of a city boy who becomes a cowboy, a little girl who flew an airplane...even a trip to the moon. No wonder TV and comic books soon step aside!
