

Star of the Sea graduate has successful career launch

By John Minnis
Assistant Editor
Catherine Pieronek, a 1980 graduate of Our Lady Star of the Sea, is doing exactly what she has always wanted to do. As an aerospace engineer with TRW in Redondo Beach, Calif., Pieronek saw seven years' work and a dream come true when the Gamma Ray Observatory was successfully deployed from the space shuttle Atlantis April 7.

"It's doing very well," Pieronek said of the satellite she helped design. "We're really pleased with everything. It's going better than expected." Pieronek, 28, helped design communications subsystems for the 17-1/2 ton Gamma Ray Observatory, the heaviest science satellite ever deployed by NASA via the space shuttle. Pieronek's job was to integrate and test electrical hardware. She stood by at NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, Md., last week in case something went wrong during the deployment of the satellite.

Something did go awry, and it involved Pieronek's area of responsibility. When NASA sent signals to the gamma ray satellite to extend an antenna prior to being released into space by the shuttle's mechanical arm, the 16-1/2 foot-antenna boom refused to unfold. After repeated electronic signals failed to activate the antenna, Mission Control authorized emergency EVA (extravehicular activity) by astronauts Jay Apt and Jerry Ross to free the antenna boom. It was the first spacewalk in five years. Just 17 minutes after Ross exited the airlock — which had not been used since he closed it on Dec. 1, 1985 — he shouted, "It's free; it's free; I can see it move; it's free!" Fellow mission specialist and spacewalker Apt responded, "Far out, good work." If Pieronek in the launch control room at Goddard had let out a sigh of relief, it would have been understandable, but she said she was confident the problem with the antenna could be fixed. "We knew we'd be OK," she said, explaining that EVA astronauts happened to be aboard Atlantis on this flight and they could be called upon to repair the satellite. Besides launching the gamma ray satellite, the astronauts were on board to test EVA tools and transportation devices for use on the exterior of the proposed Space Station Freedom. The astronauts did get the antenna arm working when Ross gave it a good shake — making the incident the United States' first successful emergency EVA. Pieronek said the satellite

Tax bill could cost schools $5 million

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

For the second year in a row the Legislature has dealt the Grosse Pointe School System a severe financial setback.

Last year the state enacted legislation which cut $1.6 million from the Grosse Pointe schools' budget. The schools were able to absorb it through cutbacks at the central offices and by taking $1 million from the contingency fund.

This year, though, with the potential loss of nearly $5 million — nearly 10 percent of the budget — the schools are looking at some major shortfalls which could mean cuts in programming and layoffs.

It is unclear how the freeze will affect the schools during the second year.

"Last year we were able to absorb the cuts and keep them as far away from the kids as possible," Superintendent of Schools Ed Shine said. "But this year, that will be real hard."

The State Senate on Friday approved a House bill 33-0 which limits property tax increases next year and freezes assessments for the 1992 school year.

As the bill stood at press time (with amendments and changes possible by the House)

the district could not collect any more taxes in 1991 than were collected in 1990 and would have to roll its millage back accordingly.

Under the provisions of the bill, however, local taxpayers could, in a direct vote, overrule the measure and put the school millage at whatever level they deemed necessary.

In the second year of the two-year bill, property assessments would be frozen at the 1990 level, a potential loss of another $5 million for the schools.

Projecting a 10 percent increase in revenues, the district began its budgeting process with a figure of almost $60 million.

If the House passes the same bill, it would have to be approved by Gov. John Engler, who has said he'll sign it. That's when the trouble starts for the Grosse Pointe schools.

"There's no sense in speculating where the cuts will come from except to say that $5 million is a big chunk," Shine said.

Pointer of Interest Barney Mussill

By John Minnis
Assistant Editor

Turning his back on a baseball career after his only major league season with the 1944 Philadelphia Phillies was no sacrifice for Barney Mussill.

Today, the 71-year-old Grosse Pointe Woods resident has no regrets about his decision to get out of baseball and help the family business.

"It wasn't a tough decision," he said. "I couldn't have let it happen any other way. And I'm still connected with sports."

He didn't actually get out of baseball altogether. At the time, his father and brother wanted to open a sporting goods store. With the ex-big-leaguer's influence, the Mussills were able to get some sporting goods suppliers to provide them with merchandise, and Mussill's Sport Center opened March 29, 1947.

The store is still in business at its original River Rouge location — 10847 W. Jefferson. While Mussill still works at the store a few days a week, he plans to turn the business over to a couple of friends.

When the store first opened, Mussill, his wife, Emma Jean, his father, Andrew, and brother, Edward, worked day and night to get the business going.

In 1981, Mussill's brother died, leaving the store to Mussill and his wife. His brother's death was a devastating loss, Mussill said. But his love of the business and baseball kept him going.

"It's an enjoyable business," he said. "There's a new challenge every day. Every day, I can't wait to get into the store."

Mussill's fondness for baseball began when he was a youngster in the sandlots near his Woodville, Pa., home. His father, a steelworker, played

It's really no big deal, but there are more registered voters in the Pointes than there are adults.

But before anyone gets the idea that the Pointes are turning out the cemetery vote, it should be stated that it is not unusual for registered voter lists to be inflated.

As of the last election — the Feb. 4 library bond vote — there were 40,650 registered voters in the five Pointes. But according to the 1990 census data, which was provided by Jim Thomas of the Southeast Michigan Council of Governments (SEMCOG), there are only 37,756 residents 18 or older in the Pointes.

That means there are nearly 3,000 more registered voters in the Pointes than there are adults. The Shores is the only city that had what one would expect: fewer registered voters than adults.

Michael Kenyon, Shores village manager, said employees update a computer list of registered voters as soon as they are notified of a change, and in December, inactive voters are purged according to a state-mandated procedure.

The Park had 1,353 more voters than adults; the Farms, 949; the Woods, 681; and the City, 119.

How can this be? It's quite common, according to an employee with the state Election

Commission.

Every December, the city clerks purge their voter registration lists of anyone who has not voted for five years. The clerks send letters to the inactive voters stating that they are going to be taken off the voter rolls. If the inactive voters respond to the letter, they are kept on the list.

That means a voter could have moved five years ago and still be on his old city's registration list.

And it gets more complicated.

If a Michigan resident — say a Pointe man — moves and gets his driver's license changed at a secretary of state office, he is requested to fill out a voter registration form, which also has a place for the voter to fill in his old address. The new voter registration form is then sent to the clerk in the former resident's new city.

However, no notice is sent by the state to the Pointe clerk. The clerk in the new city is supposed to send a notice to the clerk at the old city. And the system works only as well as how conscientious the clerks in the new cities are about notifying the former communities.

Furthermore, if the Pointe man moves out of state, there is no law that says the clerk in another state has to send a notice to the Michigan clerk.

For these reasons, those who move away can easily be on two or more cities' voters registration lists.

Thomas Kressbach, city manager in the City, said another reason why there are more voters than adults could be that students going away to college and those in the military may not be counted as adult residents in their hometowns, but they nevertheless remain on their hometowns' voter lists.

He said his city's voter registration list is updated every December in accordance with state laws.

Louise Warnke, Woods deputy city clerk/director of administrative services, said her voter registration lists are updated as batch work every couple of months and completely before all elections.

She explained that the Woods gets 400 new residents a year, meaning that it takes a while for an equivalent number of people leaving the city to become registered in another community and, thus, taken from the Woods voters list.

The lag time in getting former residents off the roles and the fact that there are some 268 voter registration deletions waiting to be done accounts for the difference between the Woods' voter registration list and the number of adults, Warnke said.

Richard Solak, Farms city clerk, said his lists are updated as soon as he receives documentation to warrant changes. He said that about 1-1/2 years ago, the city went through a major effort to bring the voter registration files up to date.

He pointed out that residents who have a winter home may be registered to vote in the Farms, but were counted by the census at their winter residences, thus accounting for

New panel to tackle issue of who should run libraries

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

Should the libraries be governed by the school board, or by a separate entity?

That is the question put before a new committee formed by the Grosse Pointe Board of Education. The board wants to know what arrangement is in the best interests of the schools, the libraries and the community.

It's a question that's been before the board several times, but most recently was put aside so the board could work together to get a new library constructed. Voters rejected the new library proposal overwhelmingly in February.

The board approved the following goals for the committee: Discuss the strengths and weaknesses of the current system of governance and any other alternatives.

In studying the issue, the committee is to look at finances, personnel, assets and costs. It is also to discuss how a possible change in governance would affect the relationships between the public and the school libraries.

Tom Whall, president of the Grosse Pointe Education Association, said the union members are concerned about where they would fit in a potential change in governance.

"Their basic concern, as with all employees, is how will it affect their jobs," Whall said.

Kalamazoo recently underwent a change in library governance from school board to a separate library board and all indications are that people are unhappy, Whall said.

Library employees had to negotiate a contract with the new board which was unwilling to pay at the same level the school board was paying, he said.

He believes any change in governance would cost a great deal; for example, a new board would have to set up a separate personnel system to handle employees who are currently being handled by the school's personnel system.

"A compromise position is possible," Whall said. "It is possible to have a library governance board which decides on library issues and then, in turn, reports to the board for final approval."

That way, those who believe the library isn't receiving enough attention from the board will be answered, Whall said.

Whall has been assured there will be some members from the Grosse Pointe Education Association serving as ex-officio members on the committee.

Director of libraries Charles Hanson will also serve as a committee member without voting rights.

"We're just looking at all the options," Hanson said. "The committee hasn't decided anything yet; we're looking at all the options with an open mind."

Trustee Gloria Konsler said the board will not make a decision until the committee submits its report and recommendation in early 1992.

"It's important to state that the decision has not been made," she said. "We want to do what is best for the community."

Farms family hopes to bridge religious divide

By Donna Walker
Staff Writer

Maureen J. Anthony of Grosse Pointe Farms hopes that the luck of the Irish and the generosity of local residents will help her bring two teenage girls here this summer from Northern Ireland.

Anthony is participating in the Children's Friendship Project for Northern Ireland, Inc. (CFPNI). In the program, two youngsters, ages 14-17, spend six weeks living with a family in the United States. One of the youngsters is Protestant, the other, Catholic.

For many years, Northern Ireland has been ripped apart by civil strife between Protestants and Catholics.

Roughly the size of Connecticut, the country has a population of approximately 1.5 million people. About two-thirds are Protestant and about one-third is Catholic. According to CFPNI literature, 2,600 people have been killed and some 20,000 have been injured in Northern Ireland since 1969, when the current civil strife broke out.

A non-profit international organization, CFPNI pairs Protestant and Catholic teenagers in American homes so that they can, as a CFPNI brochure states, "witness for themselves that people of different religious and cultural backgrounds can and do live in peace and harmony with one another... that there is an alternate way of life."

Peggy Barrett, national president of the 5-year-old organization, said by phone on Monday, "I believe the children of today are the future of tomorrow, all across this world of ours. And I truly believe that the children of Northern Ireland will be the peacemakers in their little corner of the world. I believe this program has done more in the past five years than politicians in that part of the world have accomplished in the past 300 years."

Anthony, who lives in the Farms with her husband, Mark, and children, Brian, 7, Erin, 6, and Mary Beth, 3, said she read about CFPNI in January in a local newspaper.

"I've always liked the idea of hosting a student in a foreign exchange program, but the thought of having to constantly entertain a student and having to displace one of my kids from their room has always held me back," said Anthony, who works as a visiting home nurse. "But when I read about this program, I thought it would be perfect for my family, because they (the students) would only be here for six weeks, which isn't that long, and I liked the idea that they would be paired together. I figured that way, they can entertain each other. They can go to the park and do things together, so that I won't have to feel like I have to be with them every second."

Also, Anthony, 36, is of Irish descent, and she said she liked the idea of trying to bring peace to her ancestors' homeland.

In February, she called the CFPNI director in Michigan, Ruth Olson, to volunteer to be a host.

However, when Anthony found out that she would have to pay for the students' round trip airfare, which would amount to $1,900, she decided to drop the idea.

Then she received a call from Barrett.

"She was so enthusiastic about the program," Anthony recalled, "and she said I could raise the money by selling raffle tickets and other things, and before I knew it, she had me signed up."

Since the end of February, Anthony has been selling tickets for a national CFPNI drawing and cookbooks that contain recipes from cooks in the United States and Northern Ireland.

The cookbooks are $8 each, and the raffle tickets are $2 each or three for $5. The top prize in the drawing is two round-trip tickets to Ireland from Kennedy airport.

So far, Anthony has raised $1,200, and she needs to raise $700 more by May 1, CFPNI's deadline for payment of airfare.

"I can't believe how well we've done, especially since we started (fundraising) less than two months ago," Anthony said.

She said she has received a lot of help from the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick in Detroit, the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and her church, St. Philomena in Detroit, among others.

Anthony's is one of only two CFPNI host families in Michigan this year. The other family lives in Sterling Heights.

Anthony said she expects to find out in the next few weeks who her guests will be. All she knows is that they are girls, between the ages of 14 and 17, and that they will arrive July 6.

"My greatest fear is that they won't get along. But I've heard that that rarely happens," Anthony said. "By the time they come here, they will have met each other a few times at CFPNI get-togethers in Northern Ireland."

Anthony is Catholic, but she said that shouldn't affect her guests, one way or another.

For the six weeks the girls are here, she said her family will take turns going to a Catholic church and either a Presbyterian or Methodist church.

"I think it will be good for the girls to see that I can walk into a Protestant church and be welcomed and accepted by the people there, and that Protestants can do the same at a Catholic church," Anthony said. "We also have good friends and neighbors who live around the corner who are Protestant, so the girls can see that it is possible for people of different faiths to be friends and to even live on the same block."

Anthony said that she and her family plan to take the girls on several small trips this summer, possibly including a visit to Niagara Falls.

And Anthony and her husband plan to visit Northern Ireland in November.

"We planned to go to Ireland

Maureen J. Anthony can't wait to welcome the two girls from Northern Ireland that she will host this summer.

this spring, but we decided to hold off on it until after the girls came here," Anthony said. "That way, we'll hopefully have some friends in Ireland when we go, and they have a reunion for host families and the kids who participated in the program in November, and we'd like to go to that."

Anyone who would like to buy a ticket or cookbook or otherwise contribute to the airfare for the two girls from Northern Ireland can call Anthony at 886-6401.

Barrett said that people who are interested in being CFPNI host parents this summer would have to raise the airfare ($1,900) by May 1. Applications are also being taken for next year.

Those who are interested in helping CFPNI but do not want to host students can serve on various volunteer committees within the organization. For more information, call Ruth Olson, Michigan coordinator, at 751-5413, or Peggy Barrett, national president, in Pennsylvania, at (717) 665-6559.

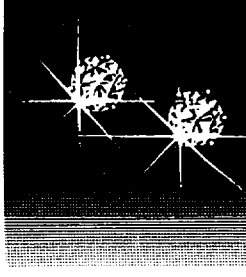

Park foundation donates to park

The Grosse Pointe Park Foundation has contributed $30,000 for entrance and parking improvements under way at Windmill Pointe Park.

Planned for the park are a new gateway and fencing, a gatehouse and 48 additional parking spaces. The project cost is $218,557 and must be substantially completed by May 15 and completely done by May 31. Memorial Day is May 27.

Proposed tax freeze worries small cities

By Donna Walker
Staff Writer
and John Minnis
Assistant Editor

City administrators in the Pointes may be seeing red over the tax freeze legislation pending in Lansing — red as in budget deficits.

On Monday night, Chester Petersen, Woods city administrator/clerk, said the proposed legislation, if passed, would force the city to cut about half a million dollars from its proposed 1991-92 budget.

The legislation as passed by the Senate last week (and which could have been approved as early as last Tuesday after the Grosse Pointe News went to press) would freeze tax revenues for local governments and school districts for 1991 and 1992.

The school district reports it would lose $5 million for each of the two years during the freeze.

"It would hurt school districts worse than cities," Petersen said, "but we would still

Lake level

Lake St. Clair at the end of March was elevation 574.18 feet above the mean water level at Father Point, Quebec, or 30 inches above chart datum.

This was about 5 inches above what it was a year ago, and about 2 inches above the level one month ago.

The March monthly mean level of 574.15 feet was about 14 inches above the long-term average for March.

The forecast shows that at the end of April, the level of Lake St. Clair will be about 3 inches above what it was at the end of March. The level of the lake is expected to continue its seasonal rise into June.

The water level in September 1991 is expected to be about 6 inches above the long-term average for that month, or about 1 inch above what it was at the same time in 1990.

have to delete about $500,000 out of our upcoming budget or put it to a vote of the people."

Also on Monday night, Thomas Kressbach, Grosse Pointe City manager, told his city council that the proposed legislation would have "serious repercussions on the revenue side of the budget."

He pointed out that his council, and those of the other Pointes, have not taken advantage of assessment increases and any resulting windfall tax revenues. The city's budget growth has increased only at the rate of inflation.

While the legislation calls for a freeze on the millage rate this year, it allows the rate to be increased by a vote of the people. Kressbach pointed out that there is not enough time to go to voters before the budgets are due.

Furthermore, school districts are more geared to running millage vote campaigns than small cities are, he said.

"You wouldn't have time between now and June 1 to have an election," Kressbach told the council, "even if you should want one."

Petersen said that if the legislation is adopted, residents will probably have to pay user fees for some of the services they now enjoy.

"You'd probably see user taxes for the use of the swimming pool, street lights, etc.," Petersen said.

Flowers

Flowers are their own small miracles. They are rewards for patient guardians who nurture with love,

And they return the kindness with astonishing fragrances and wondrous mysteries unfolding hour by hour, day by day, Revealing new beauty in carefully orchestrated stages Until they finally expose their hearts.

Small wonder we are in awe of the miracle presented to us, Slowly and certainly in order that we may understand and accept

The gift. Flowers are not fully ours to possess. We are their custodians and they are our tutors, Teaching us that with gentle care they will bloom and thrive.

Ultimately they will fade and gradually lose their Aromas. Colors will dull and eventually they will lie dormant. Like flowers, some of us can survive storms and bring great Joy to others, but when our stories are finally told, we too Will succumb to nature's laws.

In the act of dying, it is possible for new seeds to be sown. Evolution and resurrection are all around us, validating continuity.

Engler, Bush have reason for worries

New developments often threaten popular politicians, even those emerging from victory celebrations.

That truth was borne out again when recent events cast enough depressing shadows on two Republican leaders, the president of the United States and the governor of Michigan, to prompt concern in both camps about their public images.

Despite the acclaim for his Persian Gulf War leadership, President Bush has become the center of a controversy over whether his administration has done enough to help the Kurds and the other Iraqis who revolted against Saddam Hussein, presumably at the president's suggestion.

Under international as well as domestic pressure, the president has begun an airlift of relief supplies but the action was not greeted with universal acclaim after at least nine people reportedly were crushed by falling packages and when Kurds insisted on military aid as well as relief supplies.

Over the weekend, the president again insisted he would not permit U.S. troops to become involved in a civil war in Iraq but did step up emergency relief to the Kurds whose plight grew increasingly precarious.

In Michigan, Engler, an upset winner in November, is under some criticism for domestic proposals to downsize state government and cut state spending, especially in welfare and human services departments.

Engler regards his narrow victory as a mandate to push his conservative views that call for less government responsibility and more individual initiative to get the state's economy moving again.

However, more objective observers suggest that Engler won, not so much because of his program as because he was an alternative to a political loser who had been given his chance and had blown it.

Bush backers seek to minimize the criticism by contending it is confined to the Beltway, meaning Washington and the national columnists, and that the people are just happy to have the Gulf war at an end and most of the service men and women coming back home.

Public opinion polls tend to support that view. But Bush is being buffeted

Democratic liberals urge more humanitarian aid for the Iraqi dissidents as well as stronger leadership by the administration. At the same time, some headline conservatives urge Bush to renew the war, depose Hussein and settle the embarrassing issue of Iraq's leadership once and for all.

In response to criticism, the Bush administration is taking a tough line against anyone who differs from the party line, whether from within or outside of the administration. Bush himself is also taking to the stump to welcome returning veterans and to bask in the afterglow of their victory as long as possible.

In exhibiting the hard line, the administration reportedly ordered the ouster of a Commerce Department undersecretary who told Congress that before the invasion of Kuwait, the administration had ignored his warnings to limit key exports of U.S. technology to Iraq.

That comment came after the U.S. ambassador to Iraq was left spinning in the wind and not permitted to testify before Congress until the dust had settled over the war. Why? because she reportedly had expressed a softer U.S. line to Hussein in the pre-invasion days than now looks good on the public record.

In Michigan, Engler's campaign to win public and legislative support of his conservative agenda has run afoul of strong Democratic and other liberal criticism that has given the new governor an image problem of his own.

His administration is being pictured as "mean-spirited," devoid of concern for the poor and unfortunate, and with little or no appreciation of culture and the arts in view of the governor's proposed budget cuts in those areas of state support.

Democratic House Speaker Lewis Dodak characterized Engler's first 100 days as a "reckless approach to downsizing state government that has created chaos in Michigan's human services," and as an "obstructionist approach to the Legislature (that) has led to a stalemate on budget negotiations."

To fend off his critics, Engler is mounting a road show to sell the specifics of his program to restore Michigan's place in the sun by cutting taxes both to enable homeowners to keep more of their income and to speed business and industrial recovery in Michigan.

However, the dim economic outlook for the state and the nation is an additional burden for both chief executives.

So nationally and in Michigan, Democrats seem to be finding campaign issues, if not candidates to oppose the president in 1992 and the governor in 1994.

Tax freeze would hit Pointes

Whatever anyone may think of the two-year tax freeze voted by the state Senate last week, it seems to us to be better than a major tax cut — but still not a good idea for the Pointes.

The Senate bill, if enacted, would cost the Grosse Pointe School District almost $5 million a year for each of the two years. Under the new legislation, the district would be required to roll back its property tax rate to the 1990-91 level for both years.

These revenue cutbacks would require layoffs and other economies that would come on top of the $3.2 million loss in state aid the district suffered in the last two years. Those cuts were required by legislative action that deprived Grosse Pointe and other out-of-formula districts of reimbursement for FICA (federal income withholding) taxes paid on their employees.

Both parties seem to be bidding for public support by offering property tax cut plans. Even the Republican-sponsored Senate plan has some support in the Democratic House, although the Democrats may wish to exact some concessions from the GOP leadership if they back the freeze measure.

However, even a freeze would apparently save business and residential property taxpayers $382 million in 1991 because it would prevent 1991 assessed valuations that already have been reported from going into effect. In the second year of the legislation, the freeze would be imposed on assessments themselves and save taxpayers $414 million.

Overall, however, Senate sources predict property tax revenue will rise, despite the freeze, because of new construction, property improvements and new personal property.

In both freeze years, local communities could still vote to increase taxes, just as they now can to approve taxes higher than those permitted by the Headlee limitation.

Aside from the schools, local units of government are likely to resist the legislation since it apparently contains no reimbursement for the funds they would lose. Most school districts, however, are expected to be reimbursed under the state school aid law but it won't help the out-of-formula districts such as Grosse Pointe.

With respect to this proposed legislation, Pointers can oppose it as causing a possible $5 million annual loss of funding for their public schools or they can support it to gain the benefits of a small property tax cut.

If the issue comes down to that choice, we'd be opposed to the tax freeze.

A View from the sidelines

by Wilbur Elston

The era of vigorous personal journalism is long gone in the United States but I think a return to a bit of it could be helpful to journalists and the public.

To illustrate my point, I cite three examples of what I regard as less than glowing performances by the daily media.

The first culprit is the New York Times which gave Page 1 display to a story about the gossip-laden book about Nancy Reagan. News people usually try to make a distinction between "gossip" and "news." The Times unfortunately forgot the distinction — and so did too many other papers.

I was no great admirer of Ronald Reagan's presidency but an evaluation by historians, who last week put him 28th among 37 presidents rated, surely deserved more attention than the gossip about the president's wife.

A second instance of a less than sterling performance was the coverage of the Masters golf tournament at Augusta last week by Detroit Free Press columnist Mitch Albom.

I have no quarrel with most of his diatribe against the Augusta National for its discriminatory policies but he went too far when he said, "This is a club for bigots." That's all-encompassing on rather skimpy evidence.

He also showed his ignorance by reporting that Dwight Eisenhower "wasn't much of a golfer," apparently not knowing that Ike was one of the best of the golfing presidents.

Further, Albom hinted that Tom Watson was less than fair to his former caddy at Augusta without reporting Watson's views or commenting on Watson's own record in fighting discrimination in his former Kansas City club.

The third case involved a passing comment by Detroit News editorial page editor Thomas Bray about some media's use of the term "mean-spirited" to describe GOP Gov. John Engler's budget cuts.

His comment was: "Democrats in Lansing, and their shills in the press, wove the term about as if brandishing a crucifix to ward off Dracula."

As an editorial writer and columnist, Bray is free to express his views about any subject and any person, as he often does. But when he uses the word "shills" to describe other media with Democratic views, he loses his effectiveness with readers who know of his own newspaper's consistent support of the GOP.

Personal journalism can be beneficial to both the press and the public if it can shed more light on the subjects discussed. That's my reason for indulging in a bit of it to express my disappointment with the press performances I've cited.

Rewards

To the Editor:

We wish to commend Donna Walker for her fine article on sheltering the homeless at St. Clare Church. Her sensitive reporting dispelled some of the myths of homelessness in our cities.

A program such as this involved the hard work and creative efforts of so many people. The Planning Committee began work last fall and this committee was composed of people who made a significant commitment of their time and energies. The members of this committee were:

Trinna Bresser, Jim Chopp, Gerry Crowley, Jan Elston, Paul Garvey, Carol Jacklyn, Denise Long, Patricia McMahon-Eichenlaub, Elaine Miller, Jo Ann Morandini, Dave Munch, Carol Muerantz, Sister Jane Pryzocki, Ann Purengho, Tom Scallen, Maria Elena Slusser, Mary Ann Solomon, Deanna Van Antwerp, Pat Wyllie and Mary and Ed Wolking.

This program involved the participation of persons of varied ages and interests. We found a way to reach out to those in need and in doing so, found new friendships within our parish family and experienced the rewards of committing our time and talents to serving the homeless.

Congratulations

To the Editor:

To the 7th and 8th grade Honors Choir students and parents:

Congratulations on your outstanding performance in the Grosse Pointe school's Choirs In Review concert. In 11 rehearsals, one meeting once a week, you accomplished a level of excellence that you can be truly proud of. Your performance of the three-part harmony in Kodaly's "Dance Song" was superb. I was proud of all the work every single one of you did.

I also wish to thank the parents and administrators who have supported the Grosse Pointe Honors Choir program. Without your personal and financial support, these programs cannot develop.

With the wonderful abilities of our young people in the Grosse Pointe community, we must not settle for anything less than excellence in performing arts. I congratulate these young men and women of Grosse Pointe middle schools for achieving excellence in choral music.

I wish to thank all of you for giving me the opportunity to work with your talented sons and daughters.

Director of Choral Activities, Grosse Pointe South High

Gray matter working on gray matters

To dye, or not to dye. That is the question.

Whether 'tis nobler to — as Nike ads say — "just do it," or to suffer the slings and arrows of people who look at the top of my head and say, "Wow, look how gray it's getting up there!"

When I found my first gray hair, on my 17th birthday, I thought it was kind of amusing. I even left it in for a few days, as a badge of honor, a sign of my advancing maturity.

Of course, it didn't have anything at all to do with maturity. Just dying pigmentation cells.

I've stopped plucking the gray hairs (mainly out of fear that I'll wind up bald) and they're starting to pile up up there.

One day (hopefully in the far off future), I'll stare into the mirror, and see newscaster Kathleen Sullivan's brown and silver-streaked locks. Then I'll have to decide. Should I follow the lead set by her and Barbara Bush, and say, "I've earned these gray hairs," and leave them be? Or should I be like Cybil Shephard — who says, "I don't plan to grow old gracefully" — and dye my hair?

It's not something I'm agonizing about. At least not yet. It's just a decision I know I will one day have to make, such as when to get married, when to have children, how to spend the Lotto money I plan to win.

Before I make that fateful (and colorful) decision, I'd like to know one thing. Why can men, according to a current tel-vision commercial, dye their hair in five minutes, when it takes women at least a half an hour?

I Say

Can the dye distinguish between male and female hair, and if so, how? Testosterone levels? I thought human hair was human hair.

But those are just a couple of things I've been wondering about.

Staying with the male/female difference theme: Will the Supreme Court's recent decision that women have the same rights as men to work in hazardous jobs be a back-door way for women in the military to serve in combat? In Desert Storm, some women did find themselves in combat — flying helicopters, commanding a ship. But they were the exception, not the norm.

Desert Storm reminds me of Anthony Riggs, who was allegedly murdered by his wife and brother-in-law in Detroit, after serving in the war.

I wonder if Jesse Jackson and Aretha Franklin would have shown up at his funeral had they known about the allegations surrounding his death. Their tribute to him was nice, but would Riggs have had the chance to meet Jackson and Franklin had he lived, or had not been shot?

And I worry and feel sick about the poor people in Kuwait and Iraq whose homes were destroyed by the war, and what it must be like to live in such primitive conditions, without proper sewage, water and waste disposal facilities.

And then I think about all the problems we're having here, with the Milk River, the Detroit incinerator and overflowing landfills, and I feel guilty about worrying about homeless people in other countries when we have so many homeless people here.

People like Andre Davis and Sandra Young. College-educated people who are working toward a better life but who, by unlucky twists of fate, find themselves without a home and at the mercy of strangers.

That is the situation Davis and Young were in when I met them last month at a rotating shelter hosted by St. Clare of Montefalco Church in Grosse Pointe Park. I hope they're better off now, and that more churches and groups will join the rotating shelter effort.

On a more trivial note, I'm wondering what Nielsen families have against me and my kind, people who are able to follow and enjoy complicated, quirky television shows like the ill-fated "Twin Peaks."

But I'm going to give this wondering stuff a rest for now. I can feel it bringing on more gray hairs.

Volunteers extraordinaire

Dayton and Elizabeth Dailey of Grosse Pointe Woods will receive a National Community Service Award from the American Association of Retired Persons. The Daileys are members of AARP Chapter 1194 and were selected by the organization's board of directors for their outstanding volunteer contributions to the community.

The Daileys were instrumental in forming the chapter in 1972. Elizabeth Dailey is chairman of the Community Service Group which meets every month to roll bandages for World Medical Relief and provides covers for cancer pads for the Michigan Cancer Society. The Service Group also visits residents of Luther Haven Nursing Home in Detroit.

Dayton Dailey is a long-time volunteer at the Detroit Historical Museum, the Dossin Great Lakes Museum and Historic Fort Wayne. He is also a member of the Coast Guard Auxiliary and teaches classes in safe boating.

The award will be presented to the Daileys at the group's spring card party on Monday, April 22, at the Harper Woods Community Center.

Breakfast

Speaking of volunteers... National Volunteer Week is April 21-27. A breakfast will kick off the week-long celebration at 8:30 a.m. on Monday, April 22, at the Hyatt Regency in Dearborn, sponsored by United Community Services Center for Volunteerism. Grosse Pointer Neal Shine will provide the keynote address. Tickets are $12.50 a person. Call 226-9429.

Wipe the slate clean — but cautiously

Who do Americans love to hate? Lawyers, journalists, politicians — and now teachers have joined the list.

Oh, here and there, in places like Grosse Pointe, people are satisfied. But on the larger scale, the schools are everybody's favorite whipping boy.

Nancy Parmenter

With reason, unfortunately. Study after study shows that kids don't know much about math, history, science, literature, foreign languages or geography. It's been eight years since a national report warned of a "rising tide of mediocrity" — and what's happened?

We panicked. We ran in circles. We jawboned. We spent. IBM alone kicked in $42 million in education projects — in one year (1988).

Most of all, we sought advice from the education professionals, and they said "more money." So we dug deeper.

"In just the seven years since the release of 'A Nation at Risk,' 35 states have raised graduation requirements, reduced class size and boosted teacher salaries. All to no avail. No objective measurement of our schools will tell you that education has improved, despite our huge investments. In fact, it has declined further."

That's according to a report last year from the Free Congress Research & Education Foundation. They're a group dedicated to "conservative governance, traditional values and institutional reform" (which is more or less a code word for schools of choice).

But according to U.S. News & World Report, conservative groups aren't the only ones who have jumped on the choice bandwagon in an effort to do something about the schools.

"School choice is warmly supported by the liberal Brookings Institution and the conservative Heritage Foundation, by The Nation and The National Review, by libertarians, Roman Catholics, Afrocentrists, radicals, much of the business elite... and minorities," the magazine reported in January.

Who isn't included in that potpourri? Successful school districts that don't rely on state aid. Educational professionals.

Forces for choice (which now include 60-70 percent of the population) are fond of bashing the educational bureaucracy for seizing control of the public school system and using it for self-aggrandizement. But hey, teachers wouldn't be human if they didn't try to protect their turf.

I think the culprit in this particular equation is parents, because parents have bought into the American zeal for credentials.

If the public weren't so darned sure that credentialed people, trained professionals, are the only ones who know anything, it wouldn't have been so eager to turn over the power. But we wanted the best for our kids, and credentialism convinced us that the professionals were the only ones who could produce it.

What we need now are some fresh ideas and a lot of discussion. Education has been too ready to leap at faddish panaceas. Let's think boldly, not condemn the new out-of-hand, but let's also look before we leap.

Let's look at choice. Let's look at allowing knowledgeable people without certificates to teach. Let's look at new ways of school funding, at abolishing the property tax altogether and replacing it with a graduated income tax. At letting colleges take over school districts. Let's look at the whole ball of wax.

I approach this from a practical point of view. The schools are in big trouble and we owe it to the future to do the right thing.

Marilyn Lundy comes at the question from a different angle. This immaculately groomed Grosse Pointe Shores matron is an advocate for the poor. As CEO of the League of Catholic Women, she works in and for the inner city, seeing daily the results of a poor education system.

As a member of the state board of education, she also dwells in "the ivory tower of the education establishment." And her own children graduated from Catholic schools.

"I look at the question theoretically as well as practically," Lundy said.

"I'm looking at a parent's right to choose. I favor the idea of aid to the child, not to the school. Currently, only upper income people can afford to choose, because they have the ability to move to a district with good schools or to send their children to non-government schools.

"It's a social justice issue." Lundy is convinced that complete school choice (meaning tax dollars would follow a child to any school that meets the compulsory education requirements) is the answer for what ails education. State law currently prohibits such aid going to religious-affiliated schools. She's a member of a coalition planning to change that with a question on the state ballot in 1992.

The state board has been interested in the choice concept for a couple of years, when the members first articulated a plan favoring choice within school districts.

"What really pushed it at the board level was the issue of property transfers," Lundy said. People whose property lies on the boundary between school districts may petition to change districts under current law.

"It seemed curious that only the people who have the accident of living on the border have the right to change," she said. "It didn't seem fair."

She sees wide choice as injecting a free market element into education — and she believes that the ensuing competition would result in big improvements.

Lundy doesn't have her head in the sand. She knows that systems like Grosse Pointe can't see any benefits to choice.

"Grosse Pointe doesn't see the need for change because the schools are good and the parents are satisfied," she said. "They fear interdistrict choice; it would mean children from other school systems: Would they have to lower their standards? Would they get the dollars? Would they have to accept them even if there was no room?"

"That's why it's important to include non-government schools. Minority parents don't want to put their kids on a bus to go out and sit next to whitey in a suburban school — they want quality education close to home.

"There are wonderful opportunities — if we'd just loosen up."

Drug abuse

To the Editor:

In the Feb. 28 issue of the Grosse Pointe News, there was an article I found to be upsetting. It was "Schools Say No To Dare."

The story stated that the Grosse Pointe school system has turned down the implementation of a program designed to educate and keep students off drugs. Grosse Pointe police would be sent to fifth-grade classes throughout Grosse Pointe to give the students up-to-date information on alcohol and drug abuse. I feel that this program would be very useful to the children in this community and I am sorry to see the schools turn it down.

I feel that the reasons for rejecting this program are unjustified. The first concern was that the project does not discuss alcoholism or children of alcoholics. I don't think it is necessary to emphasize those issues at that level as we get a very extensive outlook on those issues in later years. Students would benefit greatly from a program that concentrates on drugs instead of drugs and alcohol. This would force the class to focus on one subject instead of two.

Another reason cited for rejection of this program was that there would be no staff involvement. The project was to be presented solely by police officers. I think that this is an advantage rather than a disadvantage. I think that the students would listen and take a policeman more seriously than their teachers. A police officer would have pertinent knowledge about drugs and their effects because they have to deal with the problems related to drug use more often than teachers in this area.

The last reason that this project was turned down was related to the limited number of qualified officers to administer the program. A simple solution to this would be to train more officers. Perhaps they could form a special class to educate and implement this program.

I feel that the school system should take another look at the benefits of such a project. The children of Grosse Pointe and all areas need to learn more about the dangers of drugs. Drug abuse is a big problem and teaching children at a young age to say "no" is extremely important.

Abortion rights

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter in regard to the upcoming abortion rights notice that has been proposed for distribution to all students grades 6 through 12 in public schools.

The Michigan state school board has decided that all students grades 6 through 12 will be given:

- Information about the existence of the law that allows them to seek a parental consent waiver from a probate judge
- Names and addresses of local judges
- Instructions on how to contact the judges

In essence, students as young as 11 will be informed how to get an abortion without permission, or knowledge, of their parents.

I personally question the logic of this policy of using educational institutions to subvert parental authority.

Will the schools also provide post-abortion counseling services as well?

It seems extremely ironic to me that just two weeks ago, I was summoned to school to remove a splinter from my second-grader's hand, because school employees are not allowed to do this type of procedure, yet in four short years, the schools will instruct my child how to obtain an abortion without my knowledge.

If this policy of using the schools to circumvent parental knowledge is of any concern to parents, they should contact their state representative and senator and let them know how they feel.

Rep. Ken Sikkema (R-Grandville) has introduced legislation to repeal this section of the law and give individual school districts/systems a choice to either accept or reject, as the community desires.

The revisions pending are H.B. 4696 and S.B. 243. State Rep. William Bryant (R-Grosse Pointe Farms) can be reached at 1-517-373-0154 and state Sen. John Kelly at 1-517-373-7346.

I would urge concerned citizens to let their elected officials know how they feel about this issue.

Arts funding

To the Editor:

As a student at Grosse Pointe South High School, I have had cause on numerous occasions to visit the Detroit Institute of Arts. Because of these visits I have acquired a fondness for the institute and my love and appreciation of art have flourished.

Now I learn that the Detroit Institute of Arts has been forced to trim hours and discharge employees due to recent budget cuts from Lansing. If the governor has his way, all funding will be abolished, leaving Michigan the only state in the union which does not support the arts.

Unfortunately, the picture gets more discouraging still. Governor Engler's proposal calls for the end of funding for all arts and cultural institutions in the state. Here at home this means such treasures as the Detroit Zoo, the Detroit Public Library, and the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, not to mention the Detroit Institute of Arts, which would be closed completely.

Such cultural attractions as the Detroit Institute of Arts and the Detroit Symphony Orchestra do more than provide good art and music. They mark Detroit as a major metropolitan center as well as providing a means for self-expression and emotional release which could otherwise manifest itself in violence or apathy. Art and music are two of the most important components of humanity. If we let them fall under foot, we are only hurting ourselves.

I can only hope and pray that those who would write the budget in Lansing soon realize the dire course they have taken, and change direction. If not, the future of this great city of Detroit, as well as the rest of Michigan, looks bleak at best.

War Memorial

To the Editor:

I have recently learned that the Grosse Pointe War Memorial is appealing the recent ruling by Wayne County Circuit Judge Michael Connor wherein Judge Connor issued a permanent injunction limiting the War Memorial's use of the Griffin property to residential use only.

As one who has followed this battle between the War Memorial and its neighbors, I am appalled by the War Memorial's continued attempts to use what was clearly intended to be residential property for business purposes. The law apparently was very clear to Judge Connor but apparently not to the War Memorial.

While the War Memorial complains of having to pay legal fees to defend what is a clear abuse of deed restrictions, it is now expending even further funds to appeal a very clear tenet in the law. It is interesting that the law firm that is representing the War Memorial has, as one of its members, a director of the War Memorial.

Perhaps it would be wiser for the War Memorial to have an independent law firm examine the law and determine whether it is worthwhile fiscally and legally to pursue an appeal. Maybe we wouldn't be inundated with requests to donate money to the War Memorial if the War Memorial, its board and its attorneys were more diligent in title searches and legal research before committing funds that have apparently been contributed by members of the community for purposes other than legal fees. When will it end?

Skaters get their blades, wheels and board clipped

By Donna Walker
Staff Writer

The Grosse Pointe Woods City Council passed an ordinance Monday night giving the public safety department more authority to regulate the use of skating activities within the city.

The ordinance makes it illegal to rollerskate, rollerblade skateboard or ride scooters on property where signs prohibiting such activities have been posted.

It also makes it illegal to ride a skateboard or scooter on any city sidewalk "in a manner that interferes with or tends to interfere with pedestrians lawfully using the sidewalk."

City Attorney George B. Catlin said the ordinance was requested by the public safety department.

"The public safety department has reported that with the spring weather, they've been getting a lot of complaints about kids skating and skateboarding in parking lots, especially the Parcels school parking lot and Peters funeral home, and the present ordinance doesn't address that problem in a meaningful manner," Catlin told the council and the audience, which included more than 16 youths with skateboards.

Before passage of the ordinance, if a resident or business owner found an unauthorized person skating on his property, he was obligated to tell the skater that he was trespassing and to leave.

If the skater didn't leave, then the owner could call the police, who would either bring a trespassing complaint form for the owner to sign, or tell the owner to come to the station to fill out such a form.

The offending skater could only be ticketed after a trespassing complaint was signed by the owner, according to Catlin.

Now, as long as the land is posted with a sign that says something to the effect of "No skateboarding, rollerskating, rollerblading or scooter riding allowed," public safety officers can issue a ticket to anyone they see engaging in those activities on the property, without the owner having to sign anything, Catlin said.

Mayor Robert E. Novitke said it is up to property owners to buy or make signs; the city will not issue them.

"But the signs have to be of sufficient size to adequately warn people," Novitke said. "They can't be really small or have really small lettering." He said that people should call the public safety department if they want to find out exactly how large a sign should be.

The new ordinance does not prohibit skateboarding or scooter riding on city sidewalks. "If it did, there'd be no place to skateboard, because it isn't allowed in the street," Catlin said.

The new ordinance says that people can skateboard and ride scooters on the sidewalk as long as they do not "unreasonably interfere" with pedestrians.

"We do this for your safety and the safety of adults," Councilwoman Jean Rice told the youths in the audience.

"I think it would behoove you all to be extremely careful, not only for your sake, but for the sake of the person you might hit."

Rice told a story about a woman who was severely injured in a pedestrian accident, and ended it by saying, "I see you shaking your heads and thinking 'no, no, no, this could never happen to me.' Young people always think they're immortal. But believe me, you're not immortal," Rice said.

One Woods man in the audience said he was concerned that youths would not have any place to skate.

Harold Landstra, chairman of the citizens' recreation commission, said, "Mr. Catlin has already told them where they can go — on the sidewalks. We have miles and miles of sidewalks, and they can skate for miles and miles on them and be safe."

However, Landstra said the parks and recreation commission will look at skateboarding parks such as those in Florida and in the Windsor area to see if something similar would be feasible in the Woods.

After the meeting, Tim Addy

Sr., who was there at the request of his son and his son's friends, said he objected to the word "unreasonably" in the new ordinance, saying public safety officers can interpret the word any way they choose.

"I really believe this ordinance was necessary to protect property owners," Addy said. "I don't have anything against the property owners. What I have a problem with is when the city starts regulating what children are doing by tacking on an 'unreasonable use' clause.

"Why do we have a special issue to address skateboarders? We don't have one for bikes. I'm against the mentality that seems to be out there that when a kid has a skateboard in his hand, he's considered to be a troublemaker."

Kenneth Van Steenkiste, 16, of the Woods, said he also objected to the word "unreasonably." "It means different things to different people," Van Steenkiste said. "I might be skateboarding at a speed that I think is reasonable, and the cops might come along and say it's unreasonable."

As for skateboarding on the sidewalks, Marshall Swanson, 14, of the Woods, said, "The sidewalks are all beat up. They have cracks in them. And they say you can skate for miles and miles on the sidewalks, but that's boring. Sidewalks just go in a straight line. We need curbs and stairs and things (to do skateboard tricks)."

Dirty diapers disappear

Grosse Pointe City police are trying to solve an April 15 theft of dirty diapers, but they have no one to pin it on.

At 11:17 a.m., a resident in the 300 block of St. Clair reported that a laundry bag containing about 60 dirty diapers was taken from the front porch. The bag had "Dy-Dee" in green letters all over it, the resident said.

Police were unable to sniff out clues to the malodorous crime.

Farms council urges residents to assist composting effort

By Donna Walker
Staff Writer

The Farms city council hasn't made it mandatory, but it is urging residents to put their yard waste in clear plastic bags from May 6 through Nov. 30.

It is also asking residents to set their clear bags on the curb for collection, instead of leaving them in their back yards. The bags will be picked up by Farms Department of Public Works (DPW) employees on each resident's regular collection day.

These and other guidelines for grass and leaf collection in the Farms are outlined in a letter that the city will send to residents in the next two weeks, said City Manager Richard G. Solak.

The new guidelines are part of the composting program the city began last fall, when it started sending its leaves to a Storyteller Carol Birch will bring the art of storytelling to life on Saturday, April 20, at 2:30 p.m. in the Friends Auditorium of the Main Detroit Public Library, 5201 Woodward in the University Cultural Center.

Of interest to parents and young people and persons wishing to develop their storytelling skills, the program is offered without charge.

Birch will offer an advanced storytelling workshop from 9:30 a.m. to noon in the Library's Explorers Room. A box lunch will be available for interested persons at 12:30 p.m. in the Explorers Room.

compost pile operated by the Grosse Pointes-Clinton Refuse Disposal Authority in Clinton Township.

This year, the city plans to send all of its yard waste — including leaves, grass clippings, garden waste, and brush and tree limbs that are less than four feet long — elsewhere. The city council is negotiating a contract with Indian Summer Recycling Inc., which operates a composting yard in St. Clair County's Casco Township.

The proposed contract will be discussed at the next city council meeting, on April 22, Solak said.

Grosse Pointe Woods recently hired Indian Summer to compost its yard waste.

Until last fall, the Farms had been sending its leaves to the disposal authority's incinerator in Clinton Township, and the city's grass clippings and other yard waste continue to be sent there.

The disposal authority composts leaves only because it doesn't have the room to compost grass and other organic materials at its yard in Clinton Township, said Edwin Whedon, general manager of the Grosse Pointes-Clinton Refuse Disposal Authority facility.

The Farms has decided to compost all of its yard waste for three main reasons, Solak said: it's cheaper than incineration, a state law will make it illegal to take yard waste to a landfill or an incinerator beginning in January 1992, and composting is good for the environment.

The disposal authority currently charges $55 a ton to incinerate burnable waste, and Indian Summer is proposing a fee of approximately $25 a ton to compost the Farms' yard waste.

"We wouldn't have a savings of $30 per ton," Solak said, "because you have to figure other costs in there, for example; the cost of operating a separate truck to collect yard waste... but we should still see a significant savings."

Solak said that about 15 to 20 percent of the garbage generated by a community each year consists of yard waste. Last year, according to Solak, the Farms took about 4,500 tons of yard waste to the disposal authority's incinerator.

"That's approximately 4,500 tons we're taking out of the incineration waste stream," Solak said.

Also, as of Jan. 1, 1991, yard waste generated by municipally owned lands (for example, city parks) cannot be sent to landfills or incinerators, according to a state law passed in 1989.

The same law states that beginning Jan. 1, 1994, residential yard waste cannot be sent to landfills or incinerators.

"You could say we're just getting a jump on things," Solak said.

Farms residents are being asked to put their yard waste in clear plastic bags so that city DPW workers can make sure that nothing but yard waste is sent for composting.

Kitchen waste should still be placed in colored garbage bags and left on the curb or in the back yard for pickup, depending on where the garbage is currently collected.

Residents can expect two DPW trucks to service their homes on garbage day. Kitchen waste will be emptied into one and yard waste will be emptied into the other.

Landscape contractors must continue to remove their own debris.

Beginning July 1, when the city starts recycling glass, cans and paper, residents can expect to see a third truck, operated by Waste Management Inc., come down their streets, collecting recyclables.

However, recyclables may be collected on a separate day. The schedule for pickup of recyclables hasn't been decided yet, Solak said.

Before setting out brush and tree limbs for garbage pickup, Farms residents are asked to cut them into lengths 4 feet and under and tie them in bundles that can be lifted by one person.

The clear and colored garbage bags may be purchased anywhere, but the Farms is selling them at city hall for residents' convenience.

The cost for a roll of 100, 30-gallon garbage bags is $10. They come in clear and black.

For $18, a resident can purchase a roll of 100, 40-gallon, see-through leaf bags.

Residents are asked not to put grass clippings in the 40-gallon bags, because the bags would be too heavy for one person to lift.

"We expect that our residents will cooperate (with the new yard waste disposal guidelines) because they're pretty good about things like this and it's a good way to help the environment," Solak said.

If residents don't cooperate, Solak said, then the Farms city council will have to consider passing an ordinance, like the Woods recently did, making it illegal to mix yard waste with residential waste.

Man caught trying doors

A man known to Park police was arrested April 11 after he was caught trying to force open the front door of a home in the 1000 block of Audubon.

At 8:02 p.m., police received a report of someone trying doors on Audubon. An officer on foot saw the suspect trying to open a door. When he saw the officer, the suspect tried to flee, but was caught.

Police said the suspect has been arrested several times in the past.

Farms has mulch

During the Christmas season, Grosse Pointe Farms Department of Public Works employees collected discarded Christmas trees and shredded them at the Farms Pier Park.

Farms residents may obtain the mulch between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. Monday through Friday, now until it is gone, on a first-come, first-served basis.

Bring containers and a shovel and drive to the southern end of the outside parking lot, by the pool. Last year's or this year's park pass is required for entry.

The Dodge Caravan still leads the pack in minivans

This was one vehicle I hated to give back. After only a week, the chalk-white Dodge Caravan minivan had endeared itself to the point that one wondered how to get along without it.

Peppy, maneuverable, spacious, comfortable — it was an all-around pleasant and competent vehicle, which explains its continued success in a market segment that has attracted some tough competition.

When we picked it up a week or so ago, I had been hoping to get one of the extended-wheel-base minivans, or one with the all-wheel drive option, or one with the captain-style chairs in the second row, or one with ABS brakes — or all of the above. Instead I got a refrigerator white standard-length, front-drive Caravan with bench seats in its second and third rows. But it soon became clear why this restyled classic is Chrysler's pride and joy.

The 1991 Dodge Caravan/Plymouth Voyager/Chrysler Town and Country family features redesigned interiors, instrument panels with rounded switches in clusters, additional cupholders (a Chrysler trademark) and expanded interior storage space. Factory-installed bucket seats are available in the intermediate row for the first time this year. They're kind of neat and a business friend whose company produces foam head and arm rests by the thousands each day is pleased to have the Chrysler minivan business.

An all-wheel-drive system and optional four-wheel anti-lock brakes can be ordered. They'll add significantly to the price, but they also add significantly to safety and enjoyment. New exterior sheet metal gives the '91 models a more stylish appearance. Glass area has been increased 15 percent, Chrysler says.

The whiteness of this Caravan, plus matching wheelcovers — it would not have been our color of choice — grows on you.

It's distinctive and doesn't show the dirt.

A 2.5-liter four-cylinder engine is standard in all regular-length Caravans. The SE model can be purchased with a 3.0-liter V-6 or a 3.3-liter V-6. We'd suggest a six in a vehicle this size. Automatic transmission is standard for 1991.

In the Nobody's Perfect category, there are a couple of items: automatic locking doors and a digital clock that defied all efforts to reset to daylight savings time. Yes, the doors on this model locked all by themselves after the vehicle had been driven forward about 50 feet. That's nice in some ways, but a pain in the neck for those of us who cannot remember to flip up the power locks each time we stop. Hence, you say-say around to unload things from the passenger side and can't get either the front or sliding door open without a key.

The switch to daylight savings mandated that we "spring forward," but after pressing all conceivable combinations of black buttons attached to the clock/AM-FM radio/tape deck, Eastern standard persisted. If all else fails, read the directions, they say, so I did. The owner's manual referred to a separate guide with chapters for each type of clock-radio. No luck. This minivan is destined to be an hour late until the end of October or until it is test-driven by a computer nerd.

When Consumer Reports took a jab at Chrysler's highly successful minivans a few months ago, claiming an automatic transmission mated to the V-6 engine was faulty, Chrysler's Lee Iacocca came out swinging.

The problem was an oldie, Chrysler said, occurring in some 1989 and 1990 models. The corporation's defense was plausible. It had done everything it could to help owners — everything from mailing notices to individual households

Autos

By Jenny King

Dodge Caravan has a more rounded look for 1991, but is still more conservative than the competition and still ahead of the pack.

to gearing its dealers for repairs and customer concerns.

But good intentions are not as good as doing it right the first time. Friends who own a 1989 Chrysler minivan would like very much to support the domestic auto industry. But while they keep buying American, they also have slipped a Honda Accord into the family garage.

Did they have a problem with the automatic transmission in their van? You bet. It happened at the outset of the long trip from their home in Northville to their beloved cottage on Lake Huron, near Cheboygan. On this particular trip, of course, grandmother eighty-something was along.

"We could drive the vehicle," they said. "But it locked in second gear shortly after we left home. So we made the trip up, and back, going 45 mph in the slow lane on I-75, with our emergency lights flashing."

At that point the van had 19,000 miles on the odometer. The problem recurred at 34,000 miles. The family still owns the Caravan — he says he intends to keep it for a few more years. He figures a North American-made vehicle should last eight years and be able to accumulate well over 100,000 miles.

Current models do not have the transmission problems of the earlier minivans. But those old problems haunt Detroit.

Local dealers say the Chrysler vans remain popular. "I'm selling the heck out of them," said a sales person at Lochmoor Chrysler-Plymouth on Mack Avenue a couple of weeks ago. Then she excused herself. She didn't have time to talk. She said. She had customers.

Next door at Pointe Dodge, minivans are prominently displayed on a glass strip between Mack Avenue and the sidewalk. Assistant new-car sales manager Tony Gullette was confident about the sales future of the first domestic minivan. "When people think about minivans, they think (Dodge) Caravan," he said.

"For the 1991 model year, the best got better," Gullette continued. Half the new Caravan buyers at Pointe Dodge are repeat buyers, he said. The rest are first-time Caravan owners. Transmissions are seldom a topic with customers.

"Consumer Reports reviews things like pots and pans. They should stick with them," Gullette said.

The Dodge Caravan is a lot of car and it's hard to beat for comfort, utility and style. It is not as radical and swoopy as some of its competitors, but it is handsome in a conservative middle-America way.

Base prices range from $13,215 for an el strip auto-automatic front-drive four to $21,105 for a stretch all-wheel-drive Grand Caravan V-6. Plymouth Voyager spans exactly the same price range, while the Chrysler Town and Country comes with a base price of $23,905.

Before taking your car in for repair, know your rights

Your right isn't running right. You know it has to go to the repair shop for work. And, of course, it's going to cost money.

Wouldn't it be nice if you could know what's wrong with it and what it will cost before it's fixed and you get the bill?

Not only would it be nice, but in Michigan a repair facility must give you this information before it may legally begin work on your vehicle.

Under Michigan law, you are entitled to certain information and other protections in any transaction with a motor vehicle repair facility. Often referred to as the "Auto Repair Bill of Rights," these protections include the right to:

- a written estimate of cost before repairs,
- inspect and keep replaced parts,
- a detailed final bill,
- have major repairs performed by certified mechanics.

Probably the most important feature of the law is your right to a written estimate. A repair facility must give you a written estimate before doing any repair work that will cost $20 or more. On repairs of under $20, the facility must give you a written estimate if you ask for one.

The written estimate must state what work will be done, the price for parts, the price for labor and an estimate of labor time. The estimate, if you accept it, becomes a contract or agreement between you and the facility. The facility must give you a copy of the estimate.

Suppose you accept the estimate, leave your vehicle for repairs and the facility later finds that additional work, above the estimate, is needed. The facility must contact you and get your permission before it can legally do any work that will go over the estimate by more than $10 or 10 percent, whichever is less. If you say no to the additional work, the facility cannot do it and bill you for it. This must be done in writing, or on a form provided by the facility.

A facility may not legally require you to sign a waiver as a condition of doing business.

If you have a complaint or problem regarding an auto repair or purchase that you cannot settle with the dealer or facility, contact: Michigan Department of State, Bureau of Automotive Regulation, Lansing, Mich. 48918, or call toll-free in Wayne, Oakland, and Macomb counties: 357-5108.

Soldier tells students about life in the Saudi Arabian desert

By Rose Palazzolo
Special Writer

The adopted son of Elsie Onychuk's fourth grade class at Trombly paid a visit to the students last Friday to tell them of his time spent in Saudi Arabia during Operation Desert Storm.

While Jason Fontella, 20, of Grosse Pointe Farms was stationed in Saudi Arabia the students sent him everything from Valentine cards and steel wool to toilet paper. Fontella was Onychuk's student when he attended Kerby grade school. His platoon, the 800th Military Police Brigade, was activated Nov. 15, 1990. The Brigade arrived in Saudi Arabia Dec. 8. Eric Frakes' class was also there to ask Fontella questions.

"We started out in a place called 'Cement City,'" Fontella told the class. "That's where all the Scuds were launched."

Fontella is a military policeman. He has been in the Army for three years and plans on staying for another 20.

His first mission in Saudi Arabia was to perform basic police duties.

"We were nice police officers, though; we didn't give any tickets out," he said. "We just warned people."

The students asked about everything from the weather in the Gulf to Scud attacks and insects.

"One night it got so cold," Fontella said, "that there was frost on our tents in the morning."

Fontella told the students that the only time he fired his weapon was when he was cleaning it. A round was in the chamber and the rifle discharged.

He also said the steel wool came in handy because it got so humid in the Gulf that his gun got rusty. He used the wool to scrape off the rust.

"The Scud attacks looked a lot like the fireworks display downtown," he said. "But, it was a lot louder."

Fontella told the students that even though the war is over, it's still going on because of all the U.S. troops still stationed there.

"It's weird how that works," he said.

Pontella is home on leave for two weeks and then will report to his base in eastern Michigan. In the meantime, he is relishing some home-cooked meals.

"The food (in Saudi) looked and tasted a lot like Alpo," he said.

Durant helps bishop establish ecumenical schools

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

Detroit Archbishop Adam J. Maida's plan to open two Christian-oriented, non-denominational schools in Detroit has raised eyebrows. Now, thanks in part to Grosse Pointe Clark Durant, it will start raising funds.

Durant has created the Genesis Foundation, a group he hopes will have far-reaching consequences, but which will start with raising money for Maida's proposed schools.

Durant said he hopes to raise the entire $3.5 million the schools are expected to cost, but is pledging at least $500,000 by the schools' September opening. He already has pledges for $130,000.

"I've been touched by the response," Durant said.

The schools Maida has proposed are for children in grades K-2 and 6-8 and would be run like a private school — tuition would be charged, but scholarships would be available. Parents of students in the lower levels would be encouraged to get a high school diploma if they don't have one. The schools would be non-denominational, but would be centered on the teachings of Christianity.

An Episcopalian, Durant's involvement with Maida's schools came shortly after Maida announced the idea late last year at the Detroit Economic Club.

"I wasn't at that meeting, but I heard parts of it later and read about it and was sort of intrigued by the theme," Durant said. "So I got hold of a copy of it and I was moved by it."

He met with Monsignor Mike LeFevre, secretary to the archbishop, and asked if he could meet with Maida.

"After that talk, I told him I wanted to help him, but I didn't know in what way," Durant said.

Durant attended planning meetings for the new schools and was put on a 12-person steering committee for the project. Grosse Pointe Mike Timmis is also on the committee.

Durant came up with the foundation idea and ran it by Timmis who also thought it was a good idea. The name Genesis — which is also the name of the first book of the Bible — means beginning.

"I was impressed by the number of people of all faiths (Maida) was able to collect," Durant said. "It's such a diverse board in terms of backgrounds, but it is a board of common commitment. It just goes to show you that if you get a good idea, people gravitate toward it."

Monsignor LeFevre said the Genesis Foundation is a big step in the founding of the schools.

"I think the committee is capable of getting the money together," he said. "And hopefully it will become more flexible and be able to fund more ecumenical projects as the schools get going."

He said the foundation would not be a fundraiser for the archdiocese of Detroit.

Donations to the fund have come from private individuals, but Durant will soon be requesting funds from other foundations and businesses and setting up challenge grants.

A one-time U.S. Senate candidate, Durant said he was not using this project to help get name recognition for another Senate race. He said he has no plans to run again at the moment and "even if I did, this is not the kind of thing that would get me elected."

Durant said his only goal is to help provide better, Christian-oriented education.

Pierce's team competed in the "Super Collider" problem. They were required to build a structure of balsa wood weighing no more than 15 grams that would hold as much weight as possible while having a cueball colliding with it. Members of that team are, from left, Dan Bruscher, Ann Richard, Greg Sharrow, Kate Callas and Patrick Worrell. Not shown is Mac Nutter.

Pierce, Defer students place in regional OM competition

The regional competition for the Odyssey of the Mind program was held March 9. Two teams from Pierce Middle School placed second and one team from Defer Elementary school placed second. The three teams now qualify to enter the state competition that will be held at Central Michigan University on April 27.

ULS college fair

Representatives from more than 100 colleges and universities from throughout the United States will participate in the University Liggett School College Fair on Wednesday, April 24 at the school, 1045 Cook Road, Grosse Pointe Woods.

The program begins at 7 p.m. in the school's gymnasium. The event is being held in an arena-type setting, so all college representatives will be available at once to discuss their schools and to answer individual questions from students and/or parents about any aspects of the college admissions process.

All 10th- and 11th-graders and their parents are strongly encouraged to attend and younger students are welcome. The event is open to the public and there is no charge.

For more information, call ULS college counselor Sue Frederick at 884-4444.

South students are presidential material

Chris Marston and Melissa Grego, two Grosse Pointe South High School juniors, recently participated in the Presidential Classroom's 1991 Senior High School Program in Washington, D.C.

Marston and Grego joined 289 high school juniors and seniors from 31 states, Mexico, Germany, Honduras and Puerto Rico. The students spent a week meeting with leaders representing the branches of government, the military, the media, the diplomatic community, lobbyist organizations and business, as they witnessed the United States government in action.

While in Washington, the students attended seminars on the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives, at the State Department and in other federal buildings. Participants also met in the offices of each of their senators and representative and attended sessions of the House and Senate, committee hearings and other events on Capitol Hill.

Speakers at the program included William F. Alden, chief of the office of congressional and public affairs and the DEA, Philip Peters, director of press and public affairs, Dr. Piet Koornhof, ambassador from South Africa and Rear Admiral Henri B. Chase, deputy comptroller for the office of the secretary of the Navy.

During the seminar sessions, speakers delivered prepared remarks and then took individual student questions, providing lively, informed discussion of the most controversial and current issues facing American leadership. In addition to witnessing the government process as it happens, students attended Crossfire debates on international, national and local concerns and visited the monuments, memorials and treasures of the capital.

Representative of the country's most outstanding high school student leaders, Presidential Classroom participants must meet grade point requirements, be active in school or community organizations and obtain their principals' written approval to attend the program.

The two South students were nominated by the social studies department. The trip was partially funded by South's Student Association and the South Mothers' Club.

Science winners

Jamie Elsil, left, and Katrina Koski, students at Grosse Pointe South High School, are finalists in the 27th annual Southeastern Michigan Junior Science and Humanities Symposium held recently at Wayne State University. The event, sponsored by the WSU College of Education and the U.S. Army, is held to recognize talented high school students and allow them to share the results of their research with other scientists and researchers participating in the symposium. Elsil was second runner-up with her paper, "Determining the Shape and Focal Point of a Parabolic Reflector." Koski was third runner-up with her paper, "An Investigation of External Variables Affecting a Radio Telescope." They are eligible to go to the National Junior Science and Humanities Symposium in Fort Monroe, Va., later this year.

The following poem was written by Nathan Steiner, son of Lisa and Mark Steiner of Grosse Pointe Farms. The 10-year-old is in the fourth grade at Kerby School.

You're 60? Time to plan for successful career

Suppose you are approaching 65. Suppose your company has a hard and fast rule that requires employees to retire at that age. You know that you can invoke government regulations stating that workers may remain on the job past 65. You also know that if you do, you could be shunted off into a do-nothing job where you are more a fixture than a person.

On the other hand, maybe the prospect of having a life of comparative ease made possible by Social Security, plus a pension and returns on investments, looks good. According to statistics, you have anywhere from 15 to 20 years left to do all the things you have looked forward to doing when you retired.

But suppose you are a person who likes work and challenges. Leisure time activities to you are just that — something you enjoy as a change of pace from work.

To provide suggestions, plans, blueprints and examples of how to remain active after retirement, Albert Myers and Christopher F. Anderson have written, "Success Over Sixty: How to Plan, How to Have It, How to Live It" (Summit Books, N.Y.).

Myers is president of the Success Over Sixty Institute. He writes from experience. He founded his own travel agency, launched a hot air balloon company and started a coal-exporting business.

He contends that men and women over 60 are creative and productive and have something young people lack — experience.

To prove that there is life after 60, he consulted sociologists, gerontologists, psychologists, and authorities on finance, fitness and family relations. In addition, hundreds of retired people who are successes over 60 were interviewed.

The result is a compendium of carefully aimed facts indicating that it is possible to achieve new successes after what was once regarded as retirement. "Retirement," Myers says, "is a word that by its very nature implies letting go, dropping out, giving up."

He then goes on to expand on what he calls the five Cs, five keys to success over 60. They are Change, Curiosity, Communication, Confidence and Commitment.

Change, even for its own sake, can jolt you into realizing that no matter how long you've lived, there is always something new and interesting that you have not done or experienced. "Maintain curiosity and sense of wonder to stave off defeatism," he advises.

Communication is necessary to break down the wall of silence between you and the rest of the world.

Confidence in yourself is necessary and appropriate because

Prime Time

By Marian Trainor

you have much to offer from long experience. "Remember," he writes, "you are not as good as a young person. All other factors being equal, you are better."

Finally there is commitment. "Hang tough," he advises, "Disappointments, frustrations and setbacks will occur. Having been through them many times over a lifetime, you should be better prepared than most to meet difficulties."

Myers goes on to give real life examples of retirees who have made it after 60.

A dental technician spent 60 years making gold inlays and bridges. He then turned to Chinese art and antiques, and qualified as an expert appraiser of jade, cloisonne and amber, which led to a career as a jewelry designer.

Communication, connecting with others, is another essential ingredient in growth after 60. Myers strongly believes that we benefit immeasurably from the ideas and knowledge that we have accumulated through years of experience and in our relationship with others.

Confidence is another factor. He cites the example of a regional sales director for a muffler company who worried about his future as retirement neared. Bolstered by the confidence expressed by friends in his ability, he opened a small garage and built it into a booming business.

"Grit, fortitude, perseverance — once you have reached 50 there is no way to build a future for yourself without them," says Myers.

After an expanded delineation of the Five C's, Myers takes off on the premise that his book is not a sociological treatise nor is it a manual for planning a pension.

He contends that it's a blueprint for computing the psychological and emotional obstacles that stand in the way of making the most of your talents; it is a practical guide of ensuring that your future will be at least as bright as your past.

A big order, but he deals with it in a practical and concise way. The first order of business concerns not the retiree but the "enlightened corporation" which recognizes its senior employees are the most valued and has acted upon its conviction with new policies and programs such as abolishing mandatory retirement and any age restrictions on new employees.

He then moves on to dispel any doubts that the older person may have of his importance. He points out that for one thing they are an important cog in the economy since 80 percent of all money in savings and loan institutions is controlled by people over 50, per capita travel expenditures are highest in the 50 to 60 age group, and households headed by older Americans account for 30 percent of all expenditures on food and liquor.

Shop Wednesday

Perry Drug Stores will offer senior citizens a 10 percent discount on many items in its stores on Wednesdays.

The customer must be 60 or older. Seniors will be issued a senior savers discount club membership card which they obtain by filling out an application.

Items excluded are beer, wine, liquor, cigarettes, lottery tickets, money orders and stamps.

Mitchell Makes Music

ON CUSTOMER AS CELEBRITY

My philosophy is simply that the client must be pleased with my work. That's why I've never subscribed to the "designer as celebrity" syndrome. The customers are the celebrities. Designers are just here to serve them.

ON PERSONAL STYLE

Being a client-oriented designer, I've always done what's appropriate for each personality. This makes my work exciting, and constantly changing and very personal.

ON CHALLENGING PROJECTS

My most challenging projects are those involving large committees. I've designed four country clubs and numerous churches. They also bring me my greatest joy.

ON WHAT DESIGNERS CAN DO

I can't imagine people doing their own designing today. They're not only depriving themselves of a professional's expertise and years of experience, but they simply don't have exposure or access to the wondrous variety available to the professional designer.

ON USING MICHIGAN DESIGN CENTER

The Michigan Design Center gives me a practically limitless selection of elements and objects from which I make my selections. I play it like a piano.

SOC will cheer its volunteers

"Cheers to Volunteers" highlights the invitation sent to more than 200 volunteers who work with the staff of Services for Older Citizens (SOC) to help make the five Grosse Pointes and Harper Woods a better place for older adults.

The men and women who offer the hands and resources each week of the year, carrying out the mission of SOC, will be honored at a Tea for Volunteers, Sunday afternoon, April 21.

These six are typical of the many volunteers who contribute their time and talent:

Juanita Gaynor has assisted older citizens through the maze of income tax forms for the past seven years. SOC volunteers, trained by the IRS and the State of Michigan, assisted more than 200 residents with their tax work this year.

Dorothy Craig, a volunteer for 10 years, is a distribution manager of the SOC newsletter.

Be prepared: Review tornado procedures

The approaching warm weather brings the threat of tornadoes to Michigan residents. Twisters, however, don't have to be killers.

According to a spokesman for the National Weather Service, residents can minimize risks by being prepared. "Every household, school and business should have a plan just in case a tornado strikes in the area," said David Runyan, warning and preparedness meteorologist.

To focus attention on tornado safety planning, Gov. John Engler has declared April 14-20 as Tornado Safety Week in Michigan. Residents are encouraged to practice their "just-in-case" procedure for tornado warnings.

Each year, on average, 16 tornadoes will strike in Michigan. Since 1960, 237 persons have been killed by twisters in Michigan. Tornadoes can hit anytime of the day or night in almost any month of the year. Most, however, occur in the months of April, May, June and July during late afternoon and evening hours, usually between 3 and 7 p.m.

"Unfortunately, some people still don't take tornado warnings seriously," Runyan said.

ter, "Senior Information Exchange." Each month, volunteers are responsible for gathering, writing, editing and distributing information of interest to seniors.

Dean Spencer, another 10-year volunteer, delivers meals to 14 seniors in their homes. Every noon, five days a week, volunteers bring meals to home-bound people through the Meals-at-Home program, funded by the Detroit Area Agency on Aging and administered through the Detroit Department of Health.

Russell Frank offers his services to the same program by assisting with the packing of lunches which go out to the homes. Many hands are needed to get these meals on the road.

Mary Evelyn Self, president of the board of trustees, is one of 24 men and women who donate their talents to oversee the work of the organization. The following services help older citizens maintain their lives in independence and in dignity: Senior Information, Food and Friendship, Meals-at-Home, Minor Home Repair, Transportation Services, Lifespan (an intergenerational respite care program), Rebate and Tax Service, and the SOC Show, aired seven days a week on Grosse Pointe Cable, Channel 32.

Fred Cook, who became computer knowledgeable after his retirement, has donated his computer know-how to SOC for about two years. SOC's growth, since its beginning in 1978 now necessitates the kind of computer assistance which Cook provides.

Other volunteers, who SOC will honor during National Volunteer Week assist with flu clinics, drive others to doctors' appointments, work at Food and Friendship, type, stuff and collate mailings, serve as Medicare advocates, and help in myriad ways.

heavy object. Stay away from windows.

At work or school, if a basement is not available, move to an interior hallway on the lowest floor possible. Avoid rooms with a large, free-span roof, like gymnasiums.

If caught in the open during a tornado warning, seek shelter in a ditch, ravine or other place below ground level and stay as low as possible.

Also, property owners can be prepared by reviewing their insurance policies to ensure that they have adequate coverage in case their home and belongings are destroyed by a twister. Tornadoes are considered "winds-torms" and are covered under virtually all homeowners policies, according to a representative of the insurance industry.

Middle East expert to speak

"The Middle East in Transition," scheduled by the Department of Community Education, will be presented by Father Elias Chacour at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, May 9, in the auditorium of Grosse Pointe South High School, 11 Grosse Pointe Blvd. Admission is $4 and prior registration is urged.

A Nobel Peace prize nominee, author and educator, Chacour will discuss the current political and economic situation in the Middle East from the vantage point of an informed Israeli. A Palestinian-Christian, his work with youth of different faiths and his books, "Blood Brothers" and "We Belong to the Land," have established him as a respected authority on ecumenical issues in the region. Chacour's discussion of the Middle East today is expected to be especially timely in light of recent social, political and economic developments in the region as an aftermath of the Persian Gulf war.

An activist, Chacour has initiated community centers, organized summer camps, built public libraries and created a high school which he is currently working to develop into a community college.

He has served as parish priest in the village of Ibillin in the Galilee, as director of the Greek Catholic Seminary in Nazareth, as an assistant lecturer and as chaplain to Arab students when the first Arab students' hostel opened while he was studying at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

Chacour attended elementary school in Haifa, secondary school in Nazareth and graduated in theology and Bible from St. Sulpice and the Sorbonne in Paris. He was the first Palestinian to do graduate work in Bible Studies and the Talmud at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. He also did graduate work in ecumenical theology while at the World Council of Churches in Bossey, Switzerland.

Chacour is the latest in a series of clergy from many faiths and countries who have come to the Grosse Pointe area at the invitation of Grosse Pointe Memorial Church. The purpose of the Ecumenical Minister Program has been to broaden the perspectives of those in the church and in the community at large.

shifted slightly during liftoff, causing the antenna in its stowed position to catch on a small piece of insulation.

"We are hoping now that everything goes well after that," Pieronek said. "If that's the only problem we get, then I'll be really happy."

The satellite was then successfully launched and everything seems to be working as planned.

The $617 million gamma ray satellite is the second of four "Great Observatories" to be put into Earth orbit to study the electromagnetic spectrum.

The first was the Hubble Space Telescope launched a year ago. The remaining two are the Advanced X-Ray Astrophysics Facility, expected to be launched in 1998, and the Space Infrared Telescope, scheduled for deployment at the end of the decade.

The Gamma Ray Observatory will provide scientists with clues to the inner workings of some of the most exotic phenomena in the universe — supernovae, neutron stars, black holes and quasars. The satellite will indirectly observe gamma radiation emitted from these fascinating objects and, possibly, explain processes that occurred shortly after the universe began in the theoretical "Big Bang."

Gamma rays are a form of light that cannot penetrate the Earth's atmosphere and cannot be seen with the human eye. They have the highest energy of any type of light radiation.

Pieronek earned her undergraduate degree at Notre Dame and her master's degree in aerospace engineering from UCLA. She is the daughter of Richard and Joann Pieronek of Grosse Pointe Woods.

She's seen six shuttle liftoffs, but the last one was the best.

"It is pretty exciting," she said.

When asked if she had wanted to be an astronaut, she quickly answered, "No, I always wanted to be an aerospace engineer."

"It is pretty exciting."

Magazine recounts suffrage movement in Michigan

The history of victories and setbacks experienced by the Michigan Equal Suffrage Association, which finally won women in the state the right to vote, is recalled in the March/April Michigan History Magazine.

The Michigan suffragist movement took shape in 1866, two years before the national campaign was launched in New York. Although the Michigan Legislature denied women the right to vote in 1866 by merely one vote, another 52 years would pass before Michigan women were enfranchised.

The Michigan Equal Suffrage Association (MESA) was formed in 1884 in Flint to attain women's suffrage through organizing, agitating and educating. MESA fought for the school vote, the municipal vote, a constitutional amendment to let women vote and the right of women to hold office in public institutions.

At every turn the group was opposed by tradition, male dominance, organized antisuffragist movements which urged legislators not to "burden women with the vote," and monied liquor interests who feared Michigan would become a prohibition state if women were allowed to vote.

Finally in 1918 by less than 10 percent of the total vote, Michigan voters gave women the right to vote; as many as 50 percent of Michigan women voted for the first time in the 1919 spring election.

The magazine's cover story is an intriguing 12-page article excerpted from a newly-published book about copper mining in the Keweenaw Peninsula. The excerpt, by Michigan Technological University professor Larry Lankton, reveals corporate surveillance of suspected agitators in the workforce; provides firsthand reports of working conditions in the mines; and describes management attitudes toward treacherous mine conditions.

Other articles in the current issues describe last summer's discovery of the Forester, Mich-

Water unseats rain covers

A Woods patrolman was stopped by a motorist at Verber and Mack at 6:24 p.m. April 9 and was told that two wet storm drain covers had been blown off by water pressure.

The officer investigated, and the two covers and needed them back over the drain. He reported that water pressure was lifting off one of the covers.

The Woods police advised the River Pump Station personnel of the incident.

Robbery parolee arrested in Woods

A man on parole from an armed robbery sentence in Georgia was arrested by Woods police April 11 for suspected auto theft and purse snatching.

Following a reported purse snatching and hubcap thefts at the Harper Woods Farmer Jack store on Harper April 10, Woods police staked out the Mack store on April 11.

At 9:06 p.m., an officer sitting in a police car at the rear of the Mack store saw a brown Chevrolet occupied by two men enter and slowly circle the lot. The Woods officer called in the license plate and found that the car had been reported stolen in Detroit the previous day.

When a second Woods patrol car arrived, the officers converged on the suspected vehicle. The two men in the vehicle, seeing the approaching policemen, got out of the car and attempted to flee on foot.

One man, who had been the passenger, was ordered at gunpoint to stop and lie on the ground, which he did. He was arrested and taken to the station. He had a martial arts weapon concealed in his waistband.

The suspect who had been driving the stolen vehicle fled on foot across Mack, then south to Lancaster and into the alley, where another officer was waiting and made the arrest.

The suspect had on his possession some of the personal effects from the purse snatching the previous day in Harper Woods. Items from the purse were also found in the suspects' vehicle.

The law enforcement computer system revealed that the driver of the stolen vehicle was wanted for parole violation after he had been sentenced to 12 years in prison in Georgia for burglary in 1989. According to police reports, the man may also be wanted on a St. Clair Shores warrant.

Resident helped open the door to the nation's garages

By Pat Paholsky
Editor

The garage door opener. The automatic parking lot device that spits a ticket when a car approaches and then raises its crossbar barrier when the driver takes the ticket. The sliding steel security gates that protect an industrial building and can be opened by voice or card. All common, everyday automatic equipment that we either use daily or are at least familiar with.

But how many people know that these ubiquitous devices, so prevalent in the modern world, began life right here in Detroit city? And that one of the early pioneers in the industry lives in a house he built in Grosse Pointe Shores 35 years ago?

Joseph Vaughn was a young electrical engineer, fresh from service with the U.S. Navy during World War II and looking for a job. Born on the east side of Detroit, Vaughn attended St. Charles High School and then earned an engineering degree from the University of Detroit before he enlisted.

He saw a help wanted ad for an engineer on a bulletin board, applied and was hired at Federal Industries. The company manufactured transmissions and clutches during the war and was successful, Vaughn said.

The owner, Allen Parrish, decided to put his resources into a new technology that had yet to be invented — the garage door opener.

"They had the operator (device) that would open the garage doors, but they didn't have the means to operate it from an automobile," Vaughn said. "So I was hired as a liaison to design and manufacture a radio device."

He worked on a system with a company in Benton Harbor, but there were many problems. Vaughn said he read about a company that was working on a home security system for a subdivision which would hook up the homes to the police and fire departments.

"I zeroed in on that," he said.

To his surprise, he discovered the company, Weltronics, and its engineer, Gus Undy, were three doors from Federal Industries.

"I called them up and had lunch with them that day," he said. "They had a receiver and the start of a garage door opener, but it didn't work very well."

Thus was born an industry. It was not without problems, however. Airplanes flying overhead opened the radio-controlled doors, the devices were expensive and the market was limited. The early garage door openers consisted of a receiver, about 6 by 12 by 5 inches that was installed in the garage. A small transmitter was installed under the hood of the car and wired to the battery. It sent radio signals to the receiver in the garage.

Besides being cumbersome and difficult to install, the system had to be removed and re-wired everytime the owner bought another car.

The first builders' show ever held opened in Chicago about 1948 and Federal Industries had a booth. "We mocked up a radio and had the doors going up and down," Vaughn said.

It was a hit. The company took orders, but was plagued with problems involving the product.

"Federal struggled along with the product and couldn't make any money on it," Vaughn said.

He bought the business in 1953 and formed Vemco Products located at Nevada and Mound roads in Detroit. The name was a derivative of the initials of its three principals: Vaughn; Charles Englehardt, an accountant; and Harold Miller, a mechanical engineer.

From their contacts at the first and succeeding builders' shows, Vemco began selling the system to dealers which installed them for individual buyers. "We were getting $200 for a system and the dealer-installers were selling them for $300 to $350," Vaughn said.

Vemco was also involved in the manufacture of barrier gates.

"We put the first automatic parking lot on Jefferson and Chene in 1953 across from the police station," Vaughn said.

"It was a 25-cent coin-operated lot."

The design had to be re-worked and refined, Vaughn said, after it was discovered that the policemen would place their motorcycles strategically so that the barrier gate remained up, permitting others to drive their vehicles through without paying.

Also, the coin-operated devices didn't produce enough revenue, Vaughn said, and the next step was to design a machine with a time clock that dispensed tickets. Vemco manufactured the hardware for Automatic Parking Devices (APD), a company later sold and now known as Federal APD.

The young company took off "like gangbusters," Vaughn said. "It was pretty much local business. Within a year we were selling around the Midwest."

The industry changed rapidly with the advent in the '60s of the hand-held remote control and the do-it-yourself package which opened up a huge segment of the market. Stanley Works bought Vemco in 1973.

"Before Stanley, we sold primarily to installer-dealers," Vaughn said. "They moved into the do-it-yourself market; they had the contacts. We were doing $9 million in sales and after we sold, Stanley did $50 million."

Vaughn said that even though inflation has soared since 1975, a person can buy a garage door opener for the same price — about $150 — that it sold for then.

"This generation is more apt to have it installed by a dealer than install it themselves," Vaughn said.

Today Vaughn is involved in sliding security gates for residential and industrial clients. President of Operator Specialty Co. Inc. (OSCO), based in Casnovia, near Grand Rapids, Vaughn conducts business from an office at home.

"It's an interesting business because of the security problems that exist today," he said. "We are not going through the technical problems now. We're going through the growing pains of the marketplace and how to get out to the market where the problems are."

The company does substantial business in Florida. "Condos are a big application as well as industrial plants," he said. "We do a lot of condos in Florida."

Vaughn and his wife Frances have six children and 18 grandchildren. He is proud of the fact that three of his grandchildren currently attend Star of the Sea School, from which all of his children graduated.

semi-pro ball and bought his sons enough equipment to outfit two teams.

The teams were picked from whoever showed up. At the end of the day, Mussill's father would stop by the ballfield and pick up his sons. Mussill's summers were filled with all-day scrimmages.

During high school at Our Lady of Lourdes, Mussill pitched three scholastic no-hitters, and he still has two of the game balls.

In 1937, he was invited to Briggs Stadium to pitch batting practice for the Detroit Tigers. He hit the first batter he faced: Goose Goslin. But Goslin didn't take it personally, and three years later as manager of the Trenton, N.J., Inter-State Team, Goslin had Mussill as one of his relievers.

During the fateful summer of 1937 before Mussill was to enter his senior year in high school, Tiger slugger Hank Greenberg paid Mussill $17 a week to come to the ballpark to pitch extra batting practice. Greenberg wanted to work on hitting outside pitches from left-handers. Tiger manager Mickey Cochrane loaned Mussill his 1937 Ford convertible to get to and from the ballpark.

Two days after graduating from high school in 1938, Mussill was signed by the Philadelphia Athletics. For four days, he traveled the major league circuit with the team by train. Then A's manager Connie Mack sent Mussill down to the Fredericksburg, Md., team in the Class D Eastern Shore League.

By 1940, he had advanced to the Class B Trenton, N.J., team under Goslin. At the end of the 1941 season, Mussill was bought by the New York Yankees ballclub for its International League farm club at Newark, N.J. The trade was blocked, however, by the United States' involvement in World War II.

In 1942, Mussill was drafted into the Army and was assigned to the chemical warfare division at Fort Warren, Wyo. He played for the post team for two seasons and had impressive won-loss and earned-run records.

In 1948, Philadelphia A's manager Connie Mack invited Barney Mussill to visit him at his hotel suite while his team was in town to play the Tigers.

An accident at Fort Warren almost cost Mussill his eyesight, but turned into a blessing for his baseball career. While he was working in a storehouse for mustard gas, a canister discharged. He was in the hospital for three months and was nearly blind.

He regained his eyesight and received an honorable discharge from the service. With WWII reducing the number of ballplayers available, Mussill was signed by the Phillies in 1944. Finally in the major leagues, Mussill became a relief pitcher for Manager Freddy Fitzsimmons.

According to The Baseball Encyclopedia, Mussill, during his one season as a major-leaguer, pitched 19-1/3 innings in 16 games. He had one loss and no wins, gave up 20 hits and 13 walks and had an ERA of 6.05. He had one at bat, but didn't get a hit.

Mussill was paid $2,600 for his year with the Phillies. The average major-league salary then was $4,700, according to an in-depth article on Mussill by Chuck Hershberger, in the Oldtime Baseball News (Vol. II, Issue No. 6), in which the details of Mussill's career are provided.

Mussill has never lost his love of the game. "This game gets into your blood," he said, "and it doesn't go away."

Following his year in the majors, Mussill was regularly visited by ballplayers, who stopped by the sporting goods store when they were in town. Mussill's scrapbook is filled with photos of autograph sessions at the store.

During his years in the sporting goods business, Mussill has become somewhat of an expert on the evolution of the baseball glove. He still has his glove from high school, which is in usable condition.

Using his collection of gloves, he can show how at first the gloves were little more than five fingers with little padding. Over the years, more padding was added, the fingers were connected with rawhide strips and a pocket began to develop.

Mussill theorizes that the improvement of gloves over the years has resulted in lower batting averages — perhaps by as much as 50 to 60 percentage points. Balls that used to go uncaught are now trapped in the black-hole-like pockets of modern gloves.

At the store, Mussill enjoys repairing old gloves and those not-so-old. "When a glove looks like it's ready to be thrown away," he said, "that's when I want it."

He advises young ballplayers to lightly oil their gloves at the end of the season and put a ball in the pocket and wrap the glove with string. Keep the glove stored in a dry location to prevent mildew and rot.

He invites anyone with a glove that needs reconditioning to call him at the store at 843-7343.

Mussill and his wife use what little time they get away from the store, taking short trips around Michigan and, of course, going to ball games. They attend St. Lucy's Catholic Church. They moved to the Pointes 28 years ago and raised two daughters here.

"This has been very pleasant here for us," Mussill said of living in the Woods.

A slender 6-footer, Mussill appears in good physical condition and looks as though he could still put in a respectable performance on the mound in any old-timers' game. He is optimistic about life and baseball.

"I feel I've never worked," he said. "I've enjoyed everything I've done."

Cook with Chet Sampson

Chet Sampson, who offered Grosse Pointe residents western tours in the post-World War II years, will visit the area and offer two cooking demonstrations at the Pointe Pedlar, 88 Kercheval, on Thursday and Friday, May 9-10, at 7 p.m. The cost is $15.

Sampson, who learned to cook in the Boy Scouts, prepared meals for up to 94 members of his tours.

When he moved to Hollywood in the late '60s, he taught cooking to entertainers. He opened his house as a restaurant once a week to use up leftovers and NBC did a documentary about the project. Sampson was also asked to host cooking shows.

For reservations, call 885-4028.

some of the shortfall of adults to registered voters.

Jane Blahut, Park treasurer/deputy clerk, said she is in the process of purging the voter registration files, a task that began in December. She indicated that the high number of rental properties and the resulting turnover in residents may explain why her city's voter registration lists are so inflated, as compared to the census data.

While the discovery that voters outnumber voting-age residents in the Pointes seems startling, it really has no effect on the outcome of elections since they are based on a plurality, not a majority.

The biggest effect of inflated voter registration rolls is that the voter turnout is probably much higher percentage-wise than the numbers indicate.

However, there appears to be no exact way of knowing how many registered voters are actually living in the Pointes at any given time.

Schools

"It's devastating," said Grosse Pointe Education Association President Tom Whall. "I've been sick since I heard about it. The teachers inevitably have to bear the burden for any cuts of this size." Shine has sent a letter to the presidents of each school's PTO boards, urging them to encourage people to write their representatives. Whall has sent a similar letter to his members.

"If there ever was a time to get involved in the process — and sometimes we think of Lansing being this big, immovable governing body — this is it," Shine said.

Whall echoed that sentiment: "We're in for some tough times."

More trash lids taken

Lids to commercial trash containers behind two businesses in the Village were reported stolen April 12.

The recent theft continues the mystery of a rash of thefts of the large lids that was reported during last fall's deer-hunting season.

At the time it was speculated that possibly hunters were using the lids to build blinds. At this time of year, who knows? Maybe they're being used for small fishing boats.

Bicycle thief

While a suspect was trying to convince Park police that he just "found" the bicycle he was pushing down the street April 12, a report came in at 7:31 p.m. that it was stolen from a nearby garage.

The suspect then fled on foot, but not before he had been identified. A warrant for theft was later obtained. He is currently on parole from a drug conviction and has a record of prior arrests for robbery and sexual assault.

Next time, stop the bus

A man who became incensed when a SMART driver refused to let him off in Detroit April 5 was fined by throwing a sewer cover at the bus. According to Park police, the passenger was at the woman bus driver's side when he got off the bus, he was arrested at 6:43 p.m. Maryland and Jefferson.

*'Spring is a wonderful thing
It's a blessing that makes life worth living ...'*

I wandered lonely as a cloud
That floats on high o'er vales and hills,
When all at once I saw a crowd,
A host, of golden daffodils.
— William Wordsworth

To what purpose, April, do you return again?
Beauty is not enough.
You can no longer quiet me with the redness
Of little leaves opening stickily.
I know what I know.
The sun is hot on my neck as I observe
The spikes of the crocus.
The smell of the earth is good.
It is apparent that there is no death.
But what does that signify?
Not only under ground are the brains of men Eaten by maggots.

— Edna St. Vincent Millay

A bird came down the walk:
He did not know I saw;
He bit an angleworm in halves
And ate the fellow, raw.

— Emily Dickinson

— 1952 song by Sam Jack Kaufman and Allan Zee

The year's at the spring
And day's at the morn;
Morning's at seven;
The hillside's dew-pearled;
The lark's on the wing;
The snail's on the thorn;
God's in his heaven —
All's right with the world.

— Robert Browning

There is a sumptuous variety about the New England weather that compels the stranger's admiration — and regret. The weather is always doing something there; always attending strictly to business; always getting up new designs and trying them on people to see how they will go. But it gets through more business in spring than in any other season. In the spring I have counted one hundred and thirty-six different kinds of weather inside of twenty-four hours.

— Mark Twain

The Pastor's Corner

Thank God for sending Eskimos

By Rev. Robert E. Neily
St. Michael's Episcopal Church

Actress Mariette Hartley began her recent autobiography with a version of one of my favorite stories. A person says to a member of the clergy: "You've got it all wrong about this God stuff. God doesn't exist. I know, because when I was ice-fishing in the Arctic, miles from the nearest village, a blizzard came up — a real doozy. I prayed and I prayed to God for help, but God didn't lift a heavenly finger. I would have perished if some Eskimo hadn't appeared out of nowhere and showed me the way."

Hartley says of her book, "This is my space to thank my Eskimos — visible and invisible — who have helped me out of even the littlest storms and some real doozies."

All of us have had Eskimos (friends, relatives, teachers, authors, strangers, etc.) appear in our lives at crucial times and show us the way. Be thankful for them today. And be thankful too that you probably have been and can still be an Eskimo for others. We all have Eskimo potential.

The New Testament Book of Acts tells how people brought their sick into the streets so that as Peter came by, at least his shadow might fall upon some of them. We all want to get close to people who have a positive influence on others.

The shadows we cast in life are very much the result of the shadows our Eskimos have cast upon us over the years. Their shadows have played a part in making us the persons we have become (and are yet becoming).

Likewise, our shadows impact other people's lives (for good or for ill).

As a pebble dropped into a stream of water causes ripples to move outward in ever-expanding circles, our shadow moves ever outward into the stream of life like a living force that never comes to an end. The influence of a person's shadow goes on from generation to generation. We never know where the shadow of a kind word or deed will fall or how far the ripple will reach. We never know when or how we may become an Eskimo to a person in need.

Someone has observed that the reason we have to wait for a final Judgment Day instead of being judged at the moment we die is because all the returns are not yet in. Life may be finished here, but the record isn't. Our influence as Eskimos has yet to be computed. Not until the end of time can a person know how his or her influence has registered for the human race.

That may seem a bit far-fetched to you, but it says to me that our influence goes on long after this life. We still have time to cast our shadows and become Eskimos in this life and in the life to come. So think of this column today as your space to be thankful for all your Eskimos, but remember to be thankful also for your own Eskimo potential.

Christian Science lecture April 25

"Is God real? What is He like? Why do evil things happen? Why do I exist?" These are questions that both children and adults may ask at different points in their lives.

"Acquainting Children with God" is a free Christian Science lecture that considers answers to these questions. The lecture shows how anyone can feel closer to God; can think and act better; can feel safer; and feel worthy.

Sixth Church of Christ, Scientist will host the event and people of all faiths are invited. The lecture will be on Thursday, April 25, at 8 p.m. The church is located at 14710 Kercheval, one block west of Alter Road.

The lecture will last about an hour, and is suitable for upper primary grades and older.

The speaker will be Margaret Rogers, C.S., of San Francisco — a member of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship and an experienced practitioner of the spiritual healing ministry.

Child care will be provided for infants and children too young to attend the lecture. There is lighted, secure parking surrounding the church.

For more information, visit the Christian Science Reading Room, 15029 Kercheval, in Grosse Pointe Park, or call 824-2058.

Agency gets grant to recruit adoptive homes

Catholic Services of Macomb has received a $45,000 grant from the Skillman Foundation to recruit adoptive homes for black children in Macomb County.

According to 1990 census data, Macomb County has a black population of 1.4 percent, but agency placement workers find it difficult to identify and recruit enough adoptive families for black and bi-racial children.

The agency will use the grant to hire a minority recruitment social worker to develop and implement a program to identify, recruit and approve adoptive homes for minority children. Plans include the development of a community education program and the establishment of contacts in the community to help create an awareness in the black population of the urgent need for adoptive families.

The Skillman Foundation was founded in December 1960 by Rose Skillman, widow of Robert H. Skillman, who was vice-president and director of Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co. The foundation is a private, grant-making foundation with assets of $290 million. Its geographic area is southeastern Michigan.

St. Ambrose offers renewal day for women

The program will be led by Sister Mary Ann Flanagan, IHM, professor of religious studies at Marygrove College in Detroit and Siena Heights College in Adrian. Flanagan holds a doctorate in theology from Louvain University in Belgium and has been an educator, lecturer, writer, and spiritual director in Florida, Georgia and Michigan.

The day of renewal for women will celebrate women's spirituality and focus on the dignity of women in the church.

The cost is $4 for lunch. Saint Ambrose Church is located on Hampton Road in Grosse Pointe Park, one block north of East Jefferson Avenue between Maryland and Wayburn.

Bridge

HAVE A PLEASANT TRY AT PERFECTION BRIDGE BY WOODY BOYD ♠♥♦♣

I have a determined opinion that the fair damsels of duplicate play this game immeasurably better than we men give them credit for. They are far more tolerant of us than we are of them and their partnership behavior is especially commendable. True, there are few with the brilliance of Dorothy Hayden Truscott, Mary Jane Farrell, Jacqui Mitchell, Emma Jean Hawes and a handful or so more, but on average our good lady players make superb partners and have the aptitude and desire to win and do so consistently.

The two best hands I've witnessed played this year were by ladies and nothing the men have shown me to date can match that. First Audrey Melander's four spade contract I wrote about this past March which Ira Rubin classed as one of the best he had seen in two years and today's presentation which required an exceptional effort to succeed at.

Classic hands are fun to commemorate, but the players behind those devilish pasteboards who accurately solve the problems of such wonders are the genuine celebrities.

Joyce Krout is as well known in S.O.M.B.A. or M.B.A. as anyone in the Southeastern Michigan bridge community. For years she has directed one of the strongest and most popular duplicate club games, at the Southfield Civic Center, we have in Metro Detroit. For this she ranks high in bridge administration, but unless you've had the pleasure of playing with this lovely lady you can't appreciate what a fine partner and accomplished player she is. Recently we teamed for the Valentine Senior Pairs Sectional and if I matched her effort we would have finished high in the money.

To play a Moysen fit in a game contract successfully isn't an everyday occurrence. Witness with wonder her artistry on this one.

Typical of my partner's well calculated aggressiveness, she responded to my one diamond call with a very modest high card holding, but with E/W passing she felt sure I had a good hand. This was confirmed by my next call, but she also had every right to assume that I had raised hearts with four.

When the dummy came into play, she didn't show a smidjeon of pique even though I knew there was a modicum of chagrin. Immediately Joyce recognized that trumps had to behave or the contract was in jeopardy. She won the diamond in her hand and played a small heart to the ten knowing full well that a diamond ruff would follow east's assumed trick two win. At trick four, east got out with a small spade won in dummy. Now a heart to her queen and a club toward dummy winning east queen with the ace. At trick 7, she made the exceptionally fine play of the club jack smothering east's ten and won by west's king. At trick eight, west played his spade king and dummy's trump ace won. At trick nine, dummy's good club nine ruffed by east and over ruffed by Joyce. She then played her last trump and won the last three high diamonds in dummy. Not only was this a marvelous example of declarer execution, her effort won an absolute top. Those in game went down in 3 no trump and five diamonds, but most never got above the 3 or 4 diamond level.

Music Hall receives $700,000 Kresge Grant

The Kresge Foundation has pledged a $700,000 challenge grant to Music Hall Center for the Performing Arts to support restoration and renovation of the historic theater. The grant brings the total raised in the facility's capital campaign to $1,782,000. The Kresge challenge grant requires the raising of $2,250,000 by July 1, 1992 to complete full funding.

"We are deeply grateful for this very generous gift," said Music Hall Chairman Henrietta Fridholm. "Once again, the Kresge Foundation stepped in with the major portion of an amount needed to purchase and save the building. That action initiated the first effort to restore a downtown theatre.

Other restoration projects followed and today there is a thriving theater district in central Detroit."

Music Hall, which opened as the Wilson Theatre in 1928, is being completely restored to recapture the grandeur of its early years. A capital campaign is underway to raise $5 million which will be put into a trust to support restoration, renovation and an endowment for the continued upkeep of the building.

"Our campaign is going extremely well," Fridholm said. "This gift means that we can plan with confidence to complete the restoration this year."

Music Hall was built by Matilda Dodge Wilson as a legitimate theatre. In its 63 years, it has presented virtually every form of live performance art. Unlike other downtown theater buildings, it has never closed. Music Hall has served as the home of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Michigan Opera Theatre and as a facility showing wide screen Cinerama films. In 1979 the theater was placed on the National Register of Historic Places.

The Kresge Foundation is an independent, private foundation created by the personal gifts of Sebastian S. Kresge. It is not affiliated with any corporation or organization. Grants are made toward projects involving construction or renovation of facilities and the purchase of major capital equipment or real estate.

Awful truth is found in the simplicity of 'Hide and Seek'

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

Terese Edelstein's greatest compliment is that her 9-year-old daughter Katie likes "Hide and Seek," the book that has consumed Edelstein's spare time for months.

"And she doesn't like it just because I translated it," she said.

Edelstein's daughter is the first American child to read Dutch author Ida Vos' book detailing her life in hiding during the Nazi occupation of Holland. Written from the point of view of a young girl, the book traces the progression of events, from the confiscation of bicycles, to the shame of wearing the yellow star, to the separation from gentile children and from her parents and finally into hiding.

The simply-told story — all in short sentences written in the present tense — is, Edelstein says, an objective presentation of what the Dutch people were like. Not all are heroes, nor are they all villains. They are human beings caught in the events of the time.

Although it is written for children from 8 to 12 years old, Edelstein, of Grosse Pointe Park, says it's not a typical children's book. But children like it. In Holland, it was recently chosen the favorite children's book in a national poll of Dutch students.

As the occupation begins, Rachel, the little girl, describes how her life changes in small ways, this time during a game of hide-and-seek:

*Ready or not, here I come!
Rachel looks into the empty street. There is not a child to be seen. She will have to go searching now.*

Rachel looks behind the little wall. She looks under the bench. She looks behind the tree. "They've certainly found some good hiding places," she whispers to herself.

A child is laughing in the distance. Marieke laughs like that. Rachel walks toward the park. The laughter is becoming clearer.

*"Shhh, here she comes."
Rachel hears someone say. She takes a few steps into the park. They are probably over there behind that thick oak tree.*

All of a sudden Rachel sees the white board with black letters, the board that she has seen so often already. The words FORBIDDEN FOR JEWS are written upon it.

Rachel can no longer play hide-and-seek; it is forbidden by the Nazis.

Edelstein is pleased to be able to give — for the first time — a book like "Hide and Seek" to the English-speaking public. But it is not the first and will not be the last for her and co-translator Inez Smidt.

Edelstein, a one-time music teacher, met Smidt when Edelstein lived in Holland where her husband was working.

They lived there first from 1975-76 and again from 1980 to 1984. One day Edelstein was looking for a book in the library and Smidt, a friend from the first stay in Holland, suggested she read "Star Children" by Clara Asscher-Pinkhof. A classic in Holland, the book was not well-known outside the country.

It is a collection of 68 unrelated short stories about children during the Holocaust.

"I was extremely moved by the book," Edelstein said. "And

Terese Edelstein

I wanted my family to read it, but when I went to order some English copies, I found out it had never been translated to English. And one day I was sitting down talking to Inez and she said, 'Why don't we translate it?'

It took two days to translate the first page, but after that it got easier. Then it became a need — two women with children at home wanting mental stimulation.

As the women progressed, they wrote the Dutch publisher asking if the firm would mind if they completed a translation. The publisher said it would be happy to allow them to complete it.

Edelstein moved back to the United States and left the uncompleted translation in a desk drawer until she was urged by her father to finish the project and find a publisher. He said he would talk to an acquaintance of his in St. Louis.

The acquaintance turned out to be Harry James Cargas, a professor of literature and religion at Webster College. He is associate editor of the journal "Holocaust and Genocide Studies" and is a member of the United States Holocaust Memorial Council. He is an expert on Holocaust literature.

After reading a rough transcript, he offered to write a foreword. The book was published in 1986 by Wayne State Press.

"Hide and Seek" was Edelstein's and Smidt's next project. It was printed by Houghton Mifflin and has received four advance reviews — all glowing.

Edelstein and Smidt are currently choosing their next book for translation.

Psst. Want to read a Great Book?

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

This afternoon at 2 p.m. a group of book lovers will begin another class of reading, studying and analyzing books which have changed the course of the world.

The class, taught by Lisa Peracchio and Gail Reagan, is sponsored by Community Education of the Grosse Pointe Public School System and is part of the national program known as the Great Books Foundation.

The Great Books Foundation was established in 1947 as an independent, non-profit educational corporation which encourages people of all ages to continue lifelong learning. The program is designed to teach participants how to read selected works more carefully and critically.

The works are selected on the basis of their contents and their place in history. Fiction selections are presented in their entirety; non-fiction selections are excerpts. Selections run the gamut from "How an Aristocracy May Be Created by Industry" by Alexis de Tocqueville to "The Gospel of Mark" in the Bible to Shakespeare's "Hamlet" to works by Isak Dinesen.

The class meets once a week for eight weeks, and although it is led by Peracchio and Reagan, the students determine which way the class goes.

"After we read a selection I ask an interpretive question and they discuss the selection from that question," Peracchio said. "There are no right answers to any question and the class is conducted in a non-threatening manner so we get some great discussions going. As long as you can support your answer with evidence from the text, it's fair game."

Because people are taking the class for their own edification, it attracts people who want to learn and are interested in what they read. They bring varied life experiences to the class which shapes their perspectives on any of the readings.

"It's a fun class to teach, because they expect a lot from us and some of the questions they ask are very challenging," Peracchio said.

The class is intended to be a point of departure for students, she said. It is intended to expose people to new ideas and works they may not have wanted to read before. After a small sample of a particular author, students may read other works by the same writer.

Although the books chosen by the Great Books Foundation for study include only a few women and minority authors, a spokesperson for the foundation said it periodically revises the reading list.

The class is run every semester. For more information, call Community Education at 343-2178.

By Ronald J. Bernas
Staff Writer

Dave Tidwell, chair of the English department of University Liggett School, remembers, hiding his copy of J.D. Salinger's "Catcher in the Rye" from his high school teachers.

Today the book is taught in high school English classes across the country, including ULS and both Grosse Pointe high schools.

Literature students today are taught — with few exceptions — the same works that have been taught for decades, but that doesn't necessarily mean it's wrong, officials say.

Bob Welch, director of curriculum for the Grosse Pointe schools, admitted that what is taught as literature is relatively arbitrary, but is in line with what has been passed down over time. Although some teachers elect to study different books under the same heading — one teacher might teach one Hemmingway novel and another would choose a different one — the board of education approves all the books taught on a class level. The community has the opportunity to peruse them, before board approval.

In the Grosse Pointe high schools, all students must take four years of English. Introductory High School English, Writing Workshop and a literature course are required. Students must fill the rest of that requirement with electives which include American Literature, Classics of Western Literature, English Literature, Readings in Current Literature, Shakespeare, Mythology and Explorations to name just a few. Writing, debating and journalism classes are also included in the English catalog.

Students in these courses read everything from "Beowulf" to Orwell; from Hawthorne to Steinbeck, spanning works from ancient Greece to modern America.

ULS has a similar form of introducing students to the classics. They read everything from "Romeo and Juliet" to "The Great Gatsby" and those students in the 12th grade honors course read from "Hamlet" to "Rosencrantz & Guildenstern are Dead."

Additionally, students must read one book of their own choosing and report on it in front of the class.

ULS also has a summer reading program requiring students to read certain books before the year begins. They are tested on the books when school starts in the fall.

The lower school, to encourage reading among younger students, urges all its students to get library cards, Tidwell said.

The required reading list is updated yearly by consensus of the English department; selections are chosen to reflect teen issues and feelings. Women's issues and black issues are also represented with, "The Heart is a Lonely Hunter," and "Black Boy," in addition to what is included in anthologies.

No parent, student or teacher has challenged any required reading selection in recent years, Tidwell and Welch said. They credit that to the education level of the community.

Welch believes the schools and the teachers can make kids become readers. They simply need to take the time to present the right works to students in the proper form at the proper time.

Giving a student "Canterbury Tales," before he is ready, or in a bad translation can turn many students off from reading classics.

Young cast keeps Benton from scuttling 'Dames at Sea'

By Marian Trainor
Special Writer

ing musical sailor, a jealous star, a tap-dancing chorus and wisecracking sidekicks.

It's the story of a small-town stage-struck girl who arrives in New York with no money and a battered suitcase containing a pair of dancing shoes and nothing else, hoping to get a job in a Broadway chorus. It begins, appropriately, on 42nd Street.

Mona (Barbi Benton) is belting out a "Wall Street" song, a lively number that spreads out when the ensemble joins her in an impressive tap-dance routine. The theater audience greets the efforts with wide applause, in this play-within-a-

In the meantime, Ruby (Trish Gorman) appears dragging her battered suitcase, obliviously small-town and worn down.

Hennessy has one thing to say to her, "Go home," and then walks away leaving her with Joan (Lisa Merrill McCord), the wise-cracking chorus girl with a heart of gold, who was always present in vintage 1930 musicals.

Having been there herself, she realizes that Ruby hasn't the money to go home, hasn't eaten in three days and has no place to stay. Promising to do what she can, she takes off to try to persuade Hennessy to give Ruby a break.

Enter Dick (Don Goodspeed), a sailor on leave, who wants to be a songwriter. He's just in time to catch Ruby, who faints from hunger. True to formula, when she opens her eyes to meet his, it's love at first sight. Since it's mutual, it calls for a duet, "It's You."

Ruby makes it to the chorus line and Dick hits the bigtime, too, because Mona likes his songs. The problem is, Mona wants a package deal — Dick and the songs.

An improbable story that has been told many times in various settings, its laurels rest on a talented cast of singers and tap-dancers, original settings and memorable songs.

Set designer Russ Smith's battleship scene is delightful as is the "Echo Waltz" scene.

Benton gets top billing as Mona, Broadway's formidable "femme fatale." She's curvy, vivacious and sexy and a good dancer, but her singing leaves something to be desired, which is a real downer when she is called upon to croon the heated torch song, "Mister Man of Mine," and the lovely, "Doing the Echo Waltz." It's the other, younger actors who keep the show afloat, though.

Fish around and you can find tasty ways to serve sardines

The sardine is a small fish related to the herring. It has a blue-green back and silvery sides and belly. Once it was fished abundantly in Sardinia where it may have gotten its name. The pilchard, a European fish closely allied to herring, occurs in large schools along the western coast of Europe and the Mediterranean Sea. The true sardine occurs only in European waters, but other species are found in America.

Sardines come canned in olive oil, vegetable oil, oil and lemon juice, tomato sauce, or a vinegar marinade. Canned sardines can be stored for several years in a cool place, but never in the refrigerator — the oil solidifies and can no longer penetrate the fish.

or as a sandwich.

Nutritive values per 3-1/2 oz. of sardines are: 142 calories; 19 grams protein; 7 g fat; no carbohydrates; 100 mg sodium, and 52 mg cholesterol.

LCE honors Horowitz

The Lyric Chamber Ensemble will present the second concert of its third annual piano festival on Sunday, April 21, 7 p.m. at Orchestra Hall.

The concert offers a rare opportunity to hear music which was frequently programmed by Vladimir Horowitz in recital, and played on a 9-foot Steinway concert grand piano which was acquired by the Steinway Company from a private estate specifically for use by Horowitz. He was especially fond of the rich tonal quality of that particular Steinway, which was built in 1912. It was still in its original condition, when Horowitz began to use it on tour in 1981, according to Franz Mohr, the piano technician who traveled with Horowitz and tuned all of his pianos.

The piano was in the Horowitz home from June 1981 through August 1983, during which time it was used for a tour which included Minneapolis, Boston, Pasadena, and Washington, D.C. Horowitz also played this instrument in the first solo piano performance to take place on the stage of the new Metropolitan Opera House in November 1981.

Performing on the Horowitz Steinway will be renowned Michigan pianists Flavio Varani, Louis Nagel, Joseph Gurt, Fedora Horowitz, and Michael Gurt.

The varied program, comprising pieces associated with Horowitz recitals and recordings, includes the Sonata in E flat major by Haydn, Rachmaninoff's "Etude-Tableau" and Prelude in G sharp minor, Op.32, No.2, Mendelssohn's "Songs Without Words," Op.19 No.1, and his "Variations Serieuses," Sonata No.5, Op.53 by Scriabine, Prokofiev's Toccata in C major, Sonata in F sharp minor, Op.25, No.5 by Clementi, two Debussy preludes, and the Sonata No.2 in B flat minor by Chopin.

Tickets for the "Horowitz Sampler" concert are $30, $20, $15, and $10. Discounts are available for students, seniors and groups of 15 or more. For tickets and information, call 357-1111.

Mackie's back in town

Bertolt Brecht's most popular play, "The Threepenny Opera," with music by Kurt Weill, opens at the Hilberry Theatre at 8 p.m. Saturday, April 20, following a preview Friday, April 19. It will run in repertory through May 18, which marks the close of the 1990-91 Hilberry season. The musical — a free adaptation of John Gay's "The Beggar's Opera" — broke all box office records and catapulted Brecht and Weill to international fame. The entire Hilberry company appears in the production including, above, Catherine Coscarelli as Jenny Diver, Michael Ouimet as Macheath and Tami Evans as Polly Peachum. Tickets may be purchased at the Hilberry Theatre at Cass and Hancock, or reserved with VISA or MasterCard by calling the box office at 577-2972.

Travel Trends

By Phyllis Hollenbeck

Cut strain, take a train

Next time take the train — or at least think about it. If you have time and are interested in doing something different, consider rail travel as an alternative to flying or driving to your destination.

Trains in the United States differ in comfort and service, depending on where you are traveling. It is certainly true that traveling by rail is not what it used to be, but what is?

It can be an adventure, though, and it may be the ideal way to travel with your children, instead of being confined and stressed on a plane or in the car.

One of the biggest advantages of traveling by rail is not having to go to the airport. The stress involved today in everything about traveling by air is hard to believe. It begins when booking your reservation and trying to understand the ins and outs governing today's air fare (though there are a few rules on rail tickets as well). From the first phone call to arrival at your destination, there is congestion, delay and frustration. Although the train stations are not as new and shiny as most refurbished U.S. airports, and your train may run a little late, it somehow feels different when you are not surrounded by the throngs generally jamming the airport.

Of course, you cannot get everywhere on a train. Today's Amtrak spans the nation east to west on the northern route between Boston and Seattle; a central route from New York to San Francisco; and a southern route from Washington to Chicago and then Los Angeles. The major north-to-south routes run between Boston and Florida; Boston and New Orleans; Chicago and New Orleans; and Seattle and San Diego.

Train travel still is a good way to see the United States; but, some of what you see will not be beautiful. The route out of most large cities is through the heart of the industrial section of town. But, it won't be long before you are out in the countryside and the city will dissolve into rolling hills, tall pines and sparkling rivers.

There are different accommodations and dining services available in different parts of the country. It depends on the type of train and the length of the trip. Generally, the short distance coaches have two reclining seats on each side of the aisle, overhead reading lights and large picture windows. Depending on the specific route, long distance trains will offer a variety of sleeping accommodations, ranging from a Superliner deluxe bedroom that sleeps up to four and measures 6'6" by 7'6" with private facilities to slumbercoach rooms with berths that measure 6'2" long and 2' wide. The latter are designed for the budget minded passengers who want sleeping car privacy and comfort without spending too much money. Take your time when reading the Amtrak literature describing accommodations. Take note of the berth dimensions and access descriptions. You need to understand in detail what to expect so that you are not unpleasantly surprised.

Meal service also differs depending on the route, with everything from linen and crystal on some of the longer routes, to plastic and styrofoam on others. If meal service is important to you, have your travel agent check, so that you know just what to expect on your trip.

It is easy to get all the details. Simply call your travel agent or Amtrak at 800-872-7245. Investigation will show that Amtrak will not only get you from point A to point B, but also offers an interesting array of vacation plans. These packages are designed to be flexible and are available for a variety of destinations on the Amtrak routes.

Amtrak's pricing philosophy is interesting. A comparison of air fares and train fares will show that as a rule, rail travel will offer a better value than the airlines on the shorter trips. It is best, though, not to generalize. If cost is an important factor in your planning, check with your travel agent about both Amtrak and the air fares to your destination.

Rackham Symphony Choir

The Rackham Symphony Choir, one of the Detroit-area's oldest singing groups, will join a world-wide celebration of the genius of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart with its annual Schools Concert at 8 p.m., Friday, April 19, in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, Woodward at Warren, in Detroit.

Rackham will join the choir from Detroit's Cass Technical High School to perform Mozart's "Coronation Mass." The choir will be accompanied by an orchestra which will include some of the finest high school instrumentalists from schools throughout the metro Detroit area. The Rackham Symphony Choir, and the orchestra, will open the concert with Mozart's "Vesperae Solennes de Confessore."

The concert is an opportunity to acknowledge the positive accomplishments of high school students, whose dedication and love of music have led them to devote many hours of rehearsal, both in the classroom and on their own time, to preparing for this performance of one of the most significant compositions in the sacred music repertoire.

Rackham's Schools Concert also adds Detroit to the list of cities ranging from Mozart's birthplace in Salzburg, Austria, to Munich and Manhattan, where the international music community is marking this year as the 200th anniversary of the composer's death.

Since its beginning in 1949, the Rackham Symphony Choir has focused on the performance of major choral works performed with orchestra. The choir is an independent, non-profit organization that supports itself through the dues and music fees of its members, performance fees, donations, program advertising and concert ticket sales.

Tickets for the annual Rackham Symphony Choir Schools Concert will be available at the door of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul on the evening of the performances.

Dance fever

The White Oak Dance Project will present the debut of a new piece choreographed for the group's spring tour which will visit the Fox Theatre at 8 p.m. Saturday, April 20, and at 2 p.m. Sunday, April 21. The White Oak Dance Project is headed by Mikhail Baryshnikov, with modern dance/ballet choreography by Mark Morris. Tickets to the show are $30, $40 and $50 and are available at the Fox Theatre box office and all Ticketmaster outlets. The Friday, April 19, performance has been cancelled to allow the group to rehearse the new number. Patrons holding tickets for that day may exchange them at the Fox Theatre or Joe Louis Arena box offices or may receive a refund at the point-of-purchase. For more information, call 567-6000.

Community leaders support International Folk Festival

Music and dance from 11 countries plus food and drink from 12 more foreign lands will bring the cultures of the world to the Southfield Civic Center Pavilion from 4 to 7:30 p.m. Sunday, April 21 for the Fourth Annual International Folk Dance Festival to benefit the International Institute of Metropolitan Detroit.

Metro area businesses and community leaders lend their support to the festival as honorary co-chairs including Grosse Pointers Mado Lie, Stephanie Germack, Diane Schoenith and Margot Parker.

The festival will mark the first American appearance of "Ansemble DOR" from Bucharest, Romania, a group of 26 dancers, 10 musicians and 15 pan pipers. The group was only permitted to perform for the hierarchy of Romania until its overthrow last year. In 1990 they toured with world renowned flutist Gheorghe Zamfir.

Local headliner ethnic groups performing at the festival include the Wisla Polish Folk Ensemble with director Martin Pack of Detroit; Grupo Gaucho Argentino with director Ruben Cazala of Southgate; the Hora Aviv Israeli Rolk Dance Troup, Tim O'Hare's Irish Step Dancers, the Glendi Greek Dancers, the International African Cultural Arts Exchange, Vidyajali East Indian Dancers, the Sarisan Slovak Folk Ensemble and the Audinis Lithuanian Folk Dance Troupe.

Festival tickets include an extensive selection of ethnic appetizers, main dishes and desserts, gourmet coffees, fine wines and spring water provided by more than a dozen international specialty restaurants and gourmet food shops throughout metro Detroit.

The International Folk Dance Festival is co-sponsored by the City of Southfield Community Relations Department and the International Institute. Tickets are only $13.50 in advance or $15 at the door and include all performances as well as the full buffet.

Call the institute at 871-8600 or the City of Southfield at 354-4854 for tickets or more information.

The Roches sing at the Attic

The Roches — those glorious singing sisters known around the country for their rapturous harmonies — appear at the Attic Theatre for three performances: Friday, April 19, at 8 p.m. and Saturday, April 20, at 7:30 and 10 p.m.

Tickets are $18.50 and are available at the Attic Theatre box office, 875-8284, or TicketMaster outlets, 645-6666.

Often called folk singers, The Roches — Maggie, Terre and Suzy — are nearly impossible to categorize. "Homemade" is how they once referred to their eclectic mix of songs.

Although The Roches have covered such disparate works as Handel's Hallelujah Chorus and "Come Softly To Me," the group's original music sounds like no one else's today. Critics have compared their intricate harmonies and polyphonic song structures to 16th century madrigals and their spirit to that of "holy fools."

Singing closely woven harmonies, The Roches show their trademark blend of the comic and the bittersweet in deeply personal, revealing lyrics.

Spinning autobiographical musical stories of their lives and loves, The Roches share with listeners their private visions. These revelations, together with between-songs banter, add to the group's warmth, humor, authenticity and charm — a combination which continues to attract a loyal and ever-growing following.

For more information, contact the Attic Theatre box office at 875-8284. MasterCard and Visa are accepted.

The Attic Theatre is Detroit's leading resident professional theater. Providing southeastern Michigan with year-round, award-winning theatrical productions and outstanding guest artist in concert, the Attic also serves the community with outreach programs for students and senior citizens.

Just help out

Does Michigan State have another black eye to heal? You bet it does.

With the recent escapades and arrests for alleged drug sales and usage, I further declare Michigan State a problematic institution that deserves the poor publicity.

What's going on up there? Where is the supervision? We could argue that 18-21-year-olds are adults and need no supervision, but it appears they just may.

Perhaps the coaches are oblivious to it all. Perhaps they have turned the other cheek. Then, we must turn to the peers, friends and teammates.

When we were young, most of us were taught to walk away from any taunting or persuasion to do drugs or alcohol. Those people offering you that buzz or quick sip of beer aren't your friends. Wake up. When someone puts the strong arm on you to "fit in" and/or "be one of the guys," do you really think they're doing you a favor?

Today, we are constantly reminded to just say no. We hear radio and TV commercials claiming, "friends don't let friends drive drunk." Friends also don't allow friends to get that involved in drugs or alcohol in the first place.

Many times kids, athletes or students stray from the norm. Society is trying to reform these people who get off the path. I see a lot of high school kids smoking cigarettes on their way to school, at lunch time or after school. I know kids will experiment and want to be cool. Maybe some really enjoy the flavor of a cancer stick, while others like having foul breath. Maybe a "friend" who is walking with the smoker can just suggest that his buddy stop.

Maybe we can blame all the advertisers, too.

At ballparks, arenas and sporting events, just look at the billboards positioned around the stadium. You see vodka advertised, you see beer signs. Kids will be kids and will want to experiment. It's up to peers and brothers and sisters not to turn the other cheek, not to "not tell mom," and by no means should they allow it.

Tell these people that what they are doing is wrong. Be a responsible person and get some guts to tell your friends not to do drugs, drink or smoke.

I guess I'm preaching a bit here, but it's necessary. About two years ago, I saw several student-athletes smoking cigarettes outside a gymnasium door between classes. Couldn't they wait? Did they need that nicotine buzz to get through fifth hour? What's going on people? Can't we try to keep our friends from doing things that will shorten their lives, or endanger other lives?

On April 24 at North, two quadriplegics will tell how they were injured in alcohol-related incidents. You should be there. With proms, graduation parties and other get-togethers on tap for the next few months, it wouldn't hurt any of you to attend this and see what could happen to you, or your friends if you don't say no to peer pressure.

You couldn't drive before you were 16, and you can't — legally — drink before you are 21. Being able to drink doesn't make you an adult; being responsible and making right choices does.

North, South, ULS coaches are people, too

By Rob Fulton
Sports Editor

The stern taskmasters who yell, scream, correct, discipline and instruct your children on the fields, diamonds and tracks of Grosse Pointe have a major influence on the lives of your student-athletes. So who are they and what makes them tick?

The following is a brief look at the varsity coaches this spring at North, South and University Liggett School. I asked each of them five questions: 1) most embarrassing moment, 2) most memorable moment, 3) favorite cliché, 4) hobbies and 5) favorite sports hero. The coaches' dates of birth are also included just for your information.

Al Moebus

Al Moebus

South boys' track

DOB: Feb. 4, 1936.

Most embarrassing moment: "It's got to be when I was refereeing a basketball game and a very good friend of mine was the coach on one of the teams. I had to eject him, but we did have dinner after the game."

Most memorable moment: "I was coaching baseball in Maumee, Ohio. Our team was winning 2-1 in the regional playoffs and we were only one out away from making it to the state tournament. We didn't get there because we lost, 4-2. I've still got all the scorecards from that season. I think we finished 24-3."

Favorite cliché: "Keep swinging and you're bound to make it."

Hobbies: "I've made a hobby out of coaching in a way, but I also love to sail."

Sports hero: Roger Staubach, Tom Landry and Mike Singletary.

Bob Newvine

ULS boys' track

DOB: August, 22, 1958, in Stuttgart, Germany.

Most embarrassing moment: "Watching as one of my runners, who was wearing boxer-style shorts to race in, suddenly found himself, um, coming out of his shorts. The timers forgot to get the time, another coach who was taking photos forgot to take the picture and everybody just froze as they watched this poor kid struggle. And the way he was moving and trying to get himself together, I thought he'd pull a muscle."

Most memorable moment: "Mike Barnes winning the 800-meter dash at the state meet in June 1990."

Favorite cliché: "Have a nice day!"

Sports hero: Notre Dame's Lou Holtz and Jerry Kramer, formerly of the Green Bay Packers.

Frank Sumbera

DOB: Sept. 27, 1947.

Most embarrassing moment: "I don't know if it was really embarrassing, or not. I felt the worst after we turned the ball over 11 times in a 41-14 loss to Henry Ford in the regional football finals. It was a fiasco. That loss snapped our 26-game winning streak."

Frank Sumbera

Most memorable moment: "I remember the 1980 state championship baseball team very well. But, we also lost to Gallagher in the district finals. We were ranked No. 1 for two straight years, and that loss broke our 44-game winning streak."

"In football, I remember my first undefeated team in 1985. That year we won the Bi-County League after beating Clintondale (39-0), and then we finished the season with a 37-0 win over South. Putting those two wins together at the end of the season was outstanding."

Favorite cliché: "To play the game to the best of your ability and have fun and whatever happens, happens."

Hobbies: Downhill skiing, golf and being with the family.

Dan Griesbaum

Dan Griesbaum

South baseball

DOB: Dec. 24, 1952.

Most embarrassing moment: "I was 8 and I was playing little league baseball. We got caught in a long inning and I had to go to the bathroom so I had to run off the field in between innings."

Most memorable moment: "Going to the final four in the 1987 baseball tournament."

Favorite cliché: "Show me a good loser and that's exactly what I'll show you — a loser."

Hobbies: "I don't have a lot of time for hobbies, but I like to jog, lift weights and spend time with my family."

Sports hero: "Pete Rose, because of the way he played the game. If we're looking at the way he played and not the problems he recently encountered, then I would say Pete Rose. He played with a reckless abandon and a bulldog attitude and that's what I like about him."

John Fowler

ULS lacrosse, hockey

DOB: Dec. 28, 1956.

Most embarrassing moment: "In my first road trip as head coach of a jayvee ice hockey team I forgot the team's jerseys. The game was a significant rival and I had to resort to borrowing their other set of sweaters."

Most memorable moment: "The 1990 state semifinal win over Sault Ste. Marie. Also, while in college, going to Lake Placid (1980) and watching the USA hockey game against the USSR."

Favorite cliché: "Tammy Faye Baker does injustice to Yogi Berra's quote, 'It ain't over 'til it's over.' I used to like that one."

Sports hero: Wayne Gretzky, Bruce Jenner and Frank Robinson.

John Fowler

Tom Berschback

DOB: Oct. 13, 1944.

Most embarrassing moment: "I was coaching tennis for North and we were playing South in the regional finals. We were tied in points with one match left. It was match-point when my kids (doubles match) hit a weak lob that was just waiting to be smashed back at them. My kids started running away from the net because they knew the ball was going to be smashed. The South player hit the ball, but the ball hit the net and just trickled over. We lost, but if the kids didn't run away..."

Most memorable moment: After coaching North for several years, we finally beat South to win the regional title. It was a thrill to finally beat them."

Favorite cliché: "I'm a math teacher first and a tennis coach second."

Hobbies: Fishing, reading and golfing.

Phil Langford

DOB: Dec. 25, 1954.

Most embarrassing moment: "Being the first one lapped in the 10,000 meter race in 1974 in front of 40,000 at Duke University (USA vs. USSR meet)."

Phil Langford

Most memorable moment: "Watching Mike Barnes win the 800-meter dash at the state meet in June 1990. Also, being track-side when Rick Wohlhurter set the world 800-meter record. Wohlhurter had a saying, 'Give me a quarter and I'll cash it in.' Meaning if he was ahead at the 1/4 mile, he would win. During his victory lap, the fans were tossing quarters onto the track. That night at the banquet, he still had two very large bags filled with quarters and had counted out at least $250."

Favorite cliché: "Take a lap."

Hobbies: Bowling, camping and fishing.

Sports hero: Jim Ryun. "I was the only sixth-grader in Michigan who knew who he was!"

Bill Taylor

North softball

DOB: March 24, 1946.

Most embarrassing moment: "I really can't think of any one time I was embarrassed coaching, but I'm sure the girls on the teams I've coached could name a few."

Most memorable moment: "Last season was very memorable for me because the girls pulled together very nicely to win the district championship. The 1980 district championship was also nice when we beat Regina."

Sports hero: Al Kaline.

Bill Taylor

Tim VanEckoute

South softball

Favorite cliché: "Hit the ball somewhere."

Hobbies: Skiing and boating.

Bob Wood

ULS tennis

DOB: May 23, 1941.

Most embarrassing moment: "Losing our top seven players in 1971 to a training rule violation and three of our top five in 1988 to a senior prank."

Bob Wood

Most memorable moment: "I have four, 1) the 1966 boys' state tennis championship — my first as a coach, 2) the 1984 boys' state tennis championship — our 13th consecutive title that set a national record, 3) the 1990 girls' Class A state tennis championship — the first in Class A, 4) the 1990 boys' 'miracle' state championship team."

Favorite cliché: "If the only points you lose are to winners, you will never lose."

Hobbies: Golf, fishing and watching football, baseball, ice hockey and basketball.

Sports hero: Arnold Palmer.

Chris Ferrari

South lacrosse

DOB: Dec. 3, 1966.

Most embarrassing moment: "Last year we ordered new singlettes for wrestling and they were kind of sheer and some of the guys didn't wear boxer shorts."

Most memorable moment: "Last year when we beat L'Anse Creuse North for our first varsity lacrosse win at South."

Favorite cliché: "The best offense is a good defense."

Guido Regelbrugge

Guido Regelbrugge

North soccer

DOB: Nov. 7, 1938.

Most embarrassing moment: "A couple years ago we played DeLaSalle and before the game the kids were warming up. I was talking to one of my players and out of nowhere I got hit by a ball in the back of the neck. I suddenly saw all the stars that were ever in the heavens."

Most memorable moment: "We lost to Livonia Stevenson, 2-1, in three overtimes in the 1982 state championship game. It was the most heroic performance I've ever seen by one of my teams."

Favorite cliché: "Let's go Norsemen, for the day of glory has come."

Hobbies: Travel, reading good books and listening to classical music.

Sports hero: "I really don't have one. I am most inspired by people who show me unusual character, and someone who plays over adversity."

Peggy VanEckoute

South softball

DOB: March 20, 1952.

Most embarrassing moment: "This year's basketball game against North when we just got plastered by North. We didn't even look like we knew how to play, that was embarrassing."

Hobbies: Boating, gardening, cooking, golf and softball.

Sports hero: Coach 'K' (basketball) from Duke.

Steve Zaranek

South girls' track

DOB: Feb. 25, 1956.

Most embarrassing moment: "When our cross country team qualified for the state meet for the first time (1979). I was more nervous than the girls. When the girls got to the starting line the announcer told them to take off their sweat pants to prepare for the race. I looked and everyone — except our team — had their numbers on their jerseys. I was still holding the packet of numbers the girls should of had on their jerseys, so I had to yell 'stop' and the meet was held up until I could issue the numbers."

Most memorable moment: "Meg Moison sent me a copy of her All-American certificate she received when she was at Villanova. Receiving that from her and seeing her accomplish such a great feat was very unique."

Steve Zaranek

Favorite cliché: "Attitude and effort is all that matters. Always compete to win and always give all you can to your team."

Hobbies: Traveling, biking, photography and competing in the master's hurdle races.

Ken Gutow

North tennis

DOB: July 13, 1939.

Most embarrassing moment: "We were playing South Lake and I had to go to a seeding meet so I couldn't be at the match right away. The kids knew what to do, but when South Lake got there (it was our home match) there were no

Omar Sawaf (No. 1 doubles).
Girls' lacrosse

B.B. Ford scored four times as the Lady Knights lacrosse team tied Ann Arbor Pioneer, 10-10, April 12.

Amy Mehr had three goals, and Linda Morreale, Cara Stackpole and Katy Campbell each had a goal. Senior Katrina Linthorst-Homan played an outstanding game.

Freshman Magda Chojnacka and senior Abby McIntyre split the goaltending duties. Chojnacka made seven saves in the first half and McIntyre stopped three shots in the second half.

VanAlmen, who finished with two RBI, and Blake each finished with two hits.

Girls' track

Coach Steve Zaranek was calling this year's team, which had 100 girls try out, the best he's had in years. It appears he's right.

South waxed Regina, 87-41, in the season's first meet, and then promptly took care of Anchor Bay, 125-3, in the Macomb Area Conference White Division opener April 11.

In both meets, South won all the sprint relays and open-sprint events. The Devils also ruled the throwing events behind the shot and discus tosses by Tanya Brewer, Suzanne Trojanowski and Elaine Ford. Senior Karen Ehresman won the 100 and 300 hurdles in both meets, and Angela Drake and Rachel O'Byrne followed closely behind.

Most embarrassing moment: "I was talking to a referee during the game and the string on my sweat pants broke and my sweats were down around my ankles. I didn't even know it. Luckily, I was wearing shorts at the time."

Most memorable moment: "I was coaching Livonia Bentley and we were playing Plymouth Canton in the district finals. We couldn't penetrate their eight-person defense, so we had to change some things and started attacking with our midfielders. We scored with 20 seconds left to win, 1-0."

Favorite cliché: "Let's kick some butt."

Sports hero: Pele.

The game was tied 1-1 until the fifth when East rallied for five runs.

On April 10, ULS hosted Clarenceville and lost, 4-3. The Knights had taken a 2-1 lead before Clarenceville's Ken Buzzy shut them down in relief.

The sole bright spot of the week for the Knights was David Martin, who had five hits in 10 at-bats, including a triple.

Lady Norsemen win two

By Rob Fulton

Sports Editor

Goalie Julie Hielscher recorded two straight shutouts as the Norsemen pounded Eisenhower and Cousino in their first two soccer games of the season.

North beat Eisenhower, 5-0, in the season opener, and then moved to 2-0 on the year with a 12-0 drubbing of Cousino.

In the win at Eisenhower, Felicia Paluzzi scored a hat trick and Amy Shepley and Allison VandeGinste added solo goals.

Paluzzi continued her quick start just two days later, when she scored five times in the lopsided win over Cousino. Katie Kutscher scored twice, as did Kelly Konsler.

Softball

After trailing 2-0 early in the game, the Lady Norsemen softball team rallied to beat Clintondale, 10-2, April 11 at home.

North scored four times in both the third and fourth innings en route to its second win of the season.

Right-hander Melissa Drouillard pitched a three-hitter, striking out 14 for the win.

Senior Noelle Cormier won the 100 and 200 dashes to lead the Lady Norsemen track team to a 104.5-19.5 win on the road at Roseville April 11.

Cormier also ran on the two winning relay teams, and the Norsemen swept the 800, 1,600 and 3,200 runs and both hurdle events.

Boys' track

Winners for North were John Ament (high jump), Erik Lacey (shot put) and the 3,200 relay team of Reeve Brandon, Tom Gauerke, Jim Moore and Mark Phipps.

Hayko Ekmekjian won the 110 high hurdles, while Jeff Grant won the 100 dash. Jared Kolleth, Ekmekjian, Brian Vantiem and Matt VanCoppennolle won the 800-meter relay. Grant, Matt Witulski, Eric Byrne and VanCoppennolle teamed up to win the 400-meter relay. Kolleth won the 300 intermediate hurdles.

Gauerke went on to win the two-mile run.

Knights boot way to 1-0-1 start

The University Liggett School girls' soccer team got off to a strong start this season, posting a win over Lutheran East and a tie against Class A Dearborn.

ULS is ranked No. 7 in the Class B-C-D poll.

On April 9, the Lady Knights exploded for nine goals in shutting out Lutheran East, 9-0. Liz Eldridge, Monica Paul and Lauren Gargaro scored two goals each, while Anne Cavanaugh, P-R Stark and Beth Paul added one goal apiece. Beth Weyhing and Beth Mozena combined in net for the shut-out.

On April 13, ULS traveled to Brennan tosses 3-hitter to pace Devils

By Rob Fulton

With two wins and a loss in the Sterling Heights Tournament April 13, the Grosse Pointe South Blue Devils' baseball team finished second in the four-team competition.

South, which hadn't won a game until the tournament, picked up its first victory of the season when sophomore Kevin Brennan tossed a three-hitter to beat Royal Oak Dondero, 1-0, in the first game of a triple-header.

All games were six innings long.

After beating Dondero, the Blue Devils were shut out, 11-0, by Sterling Heights, which won the tournament. South then bounced back to beat Detroit Country Day, 8-5, in the final game.

Brennan had a very impressive outing in his first varsity start, striking out nine and walking four on a rather cold and damp day. The Devils' hitting, however, was less impressive.

"We had only one hit, but still escaped with the win," said South coach Dan Griesbaum, whose team is 2-5 overall. "Kevin pitched a solid game and really did the job."

Brennan was paired against Jason Beverlin, who impressed Griesbaum.

"He was, by far, the best pitcher we've faced so far this season," he said. "He was very effective."

Brennan led off the first inning with South's only hit.

South scored the game's only run after Colm Moore walked and moved to third base on a passed ball and a ground out. Jason Benavidez got Moore home on an RBI ground-out.

Brian Downs got the start against Sterling Heights, a strong offensive team, and took the loss after tossing 5 1/3 innings. He gave up nine runs, five earned, before Brian Campbell took over. Campbell yielded two runs in the 11-0 loss.

Bill Leins, Kelly Graves, Moore and Nick Johnston all had one hit.

"We threatened in the second inning, but that was about it," said Griesbaum. "Sterling Heights is a good team, but it was a pitcher we should have hit. We had only three strikeouts, but we didn't really hit the ball hard."

With 1 2/3 innings in relief, Mike Oliver secured the 8-5 win over Detroit Country Day in the nightcap, but the victory didn't come easy.

South took a 3-1 lead into the bottom of the fifth, but at the end of the inning trailed 5-3. The Devils' Scott VanAlmen doubled home Matt Recht and Leins, who had singled, in the fourth inning. Recht singled home Dan Minadeo in the fifth with the third run.

Starting pitcher Fritz Coyro, who gave up five runs in 4 1/3 innings, struck out seven, but couldn't hold onto the lead in the fifth inning, giving up four runs.

In South's half of the sixth, it got a walk from Leins, and back-to-back singles from VanAlmen and Brian Blake to load the bases. Two South runs subsequently scored on walks to Moore and Minadeo. Brennan then walked, forcing a run home. A two-run error by Country Day ended the scoring.

Nero, Caesar and other fruit and veggie freaks

One of the most delightful signs of spring is the deluge of colorful and tantalizing seed catalogs arriving in the mail with their promise of beautiful flowers and succulent fruits and vegetables to grace our gardens. We can hardly wait.

Our midwest pioneer ancestors were convinced that spring tonics, so-called, were necessary to shake off the winter blahs and restore energy lost in the long winter months of a limited diet lacking vitamins and minerals. Old almanacs, usually sponsored by patent medicine manufacturers, emphasized the symptoms of run-down tiredness and prescribed remedies like "Dr. Able's Miracle Discovery" or "The Old Indian Spring Reviver."

Psychologically these ads were well-timed, for the limitations of the pioneer's winter diet often produced deficiencies. When spring came, the fields and forests were searched for greens — wild onions, dandelions, sorrel and fiddlehead ferns — and as pasturage improved, cows gave more milk. People noted now much more vigorous they felt and while their improvement was really due to more vitamins in their diet, they often gave credit to the patent medicines in the almanacs.

Vegetables and fruits play a big part in our nutritional well-being. Science has proved this group of foods is a veritable storehouse for minerals and vitamins, the ingredients so often sought in medicines.

In "The Apicius Book," an ancient cookbook dating back to Imperial Rome, many present-day vegetables and herbs are listed. Apician recipes influenced European cooking for centuries until the advent of printing, and even then new books and herbals leaned heavily on this early source.

In a book called "Crums from the Round Table," written by one John Barker in 1866, he says that the Romans understood and applied hygienic principles rigidly, and regulated dietary requirements by penal statute. Greens were required and salads were a part of every meal. Vegetables, herbs and fruits were required daily.

Many prominent families seem even to have derived their names from association with writing vegetable laws or their enforcement. "Lentilius" plainly derives from the lentil; "Fabius" comes from faba, a bean; and "Cicero" hails from cicer, a kind of pea.

The bean was a favorite edible of the ancients. Alexander the Great brought white beans from India and set a fashion of eating bean salad in Macedonia, Greece and Rome which has lasted to this day. And peas were sold at sports events in the Coliseum, much as popcorn is today.

Garlic is a cultivated plant of such antiquity that its origin is unknown. Onions and cabbage were deified by the Egyptians. Leeks were very popular. Pliny recorded that Nero ate leeks before making an important speech because he was convinced that doing so improved the quality of his voice. Many superstitions have centered around leeks. Charlemagne, for example, ordered leeks to be planted on housetops to protect against fires, lightning and sorcery.

Lettuce is another ancient plant and in the fifth century was prized so highly that in some gardens it was watered with honey and wine. The Emperor Caesar Augustus erected a temple to lettuce. Radishes were known in ancient Egypt but only reached Europe in 1548. And cucumbers were known and are mentioned in the Bible. Carrots were mentioned in writings as early as 500 B.C., but did not reach England until the reign of Queen Elizabeth I. Shakespeare talks about carrots in "The Merry Wives of Windsor" and in the reign of James I it was the fashion for ladies to wear carrot leaves as hair ornaments.

Greece gave the world great art; Rome provided government; and the American Indian gave the world corn — a great and enduring gift. It was first seen in Europe when Columbus brought it back on his first voyage. Corn has been found in prehistoric tombs in Peru, in prehistoric mounds in Ohio, and in the cliff dwellings of the southwest Indians. The early word for corn, "maize," derives from "zea mays," the name given to this grain by the early Swedish botanist, Linnaeus. Zea is Greek for cereal, or grain, which in turn comes from the verb zeo, to live. From very early times any cereal which could be ground into flour to make bread has been called corn, which leads to some confusion.

Another native American plant is the potato, which was common in Sir Walter Raleigh's Virginia. Introduced to Europe in the late 16th century, it was first considered a rare delicacy. When famine swept Ireland a century later the potato was widely planted as a relief food. Early 18th century Scots resisted the growing and eating of potatoes because they were not listed in the Bible; and the French would have none of it because the potato is a member of the nightshade family and therefore must be poisonous. Later potatoes became fashionable in France and King Louis XVI wore a boutonniere of potato flowers and Marie Antoinette wore the blossoms in her hair at a court ball.

Author Vernon Quimn declares that a Moor carried the tomato seed from Spain to Morocco where it became a favorite. An Italian sailor in Tangiers succeeded in bringing tomatoes back to Italy where they were called "Moor's Apples." In France this became "pomme d'amour" or "love apple," the name by which they were known for a long time. The word "tomato" derives from the South American Indian name "tomatl."

Salad has been popular for thousands of years. The Roman's contribution was the hot salad, largely greens blanched and served with herbs and vinegar. It was the French who really developed salads and by the year 1550 salad bowls often contained more than 35 different ingredients.

The untraveled Scot still refers to salads as "uncooked greens." France likes oily salads, Germany vinegary ones. English salad has been dubbed "the infancy of mixed pickles" but an American dinner is not complete if it lacks a salad.

Seed catalogs are filled with tantalizing pictures of all kinds of salad and vegetable delights. Whether you have an acre or just a window box, the possibilities for growing edible jewels are endless. You might seriously consider wearing potato blossoms and carrot leaves in your hair, or making a salad with 35 ingredients.

A yellow carpet of dandelion flowers where your lawn used to be is a good sign of a dandelion problem out of control.

The best time to do something about it was last fall, when dandelion seeds were germinating. Spring herbicide treatments tend to be less effective, especially if you let the plants flower and go to seed.

There is a certain satisfaction in watching the dandelions curl up and die, however, so many homeowners apply herbicides in spring.

The problem is that the same chemicals that zap dandelions and other broad-leaf weeds may damage foraging honeybees.

Roger Hoopingarner, extension apiculturist (bee specialist) at Michigan State University, points out that the concentrated flowering of dandelions in May attracts honeybees by the thousands.

"Because the numbers of bees in colonies are at their lowest in spring, beekeepers can least afford large losses then," he says. "Though herbicides are less likely to damage bees than an application of insecticide, it takes very little effort to avoid even that risk."

The simplest way to protect bees and other pollinating insects is to mow the lawn before applying the herbicide to remove most of the flowers. Another strategy is to apply lawn chemicals when bees are not flying — either on cool days, with temperatures below 55 degrees, or in the evening, after bees have gone back to their hives for the night.

"Treating the lawn in the evening gives the chemical time to do its job and begin to break down before bees are active again," he said. For more information, contact the Macomb County Cooperative Extension Service Master Gardener Hotline at 469-5063 on Monday, Wednesday and Fri-

Why worry about a few bees?

"Though some other insects are also pollinators, honeybees are responsible for pollinating most of Michigan's fruit crops, as well as seed production in vegetable crops and alfalfa," Hoopingarner said. "About $200 million worth of crops in Michigan depend directly on bees. The annual honey harvest adds another $5 million to their economic value. Some 2,000 beekeepers generate income from bees. All of that makes bees a valuable asset to the state's agricultural economy and well-being."

Architects design resort to help save threatened rainforest

By Stephanie Stubbs
AIA News Service

The disappearance of tropical rainforests is a problem of global scale, nowhere more pronounced than in the Central American country of Costa Rica, where land is being deforested at the fastest rate in the world. The Andersen Group, an eight-person architecture firm based in Minneapolis (the sister city of San Jose, Costa Rica) has offered its talents to try to help alleviate the problem. The young firm, headed by architects Gail Andersen and her husband, David Andersen, is undertaking the design of a reforestation and "ecotourism" resort in the rainforest of Costa Rica.

Their client, attorney John Lewis, hired the Andersen Group when he decided to give up his law practice in Minnesota and devote his time to bettering the world environmental situation. Lewis purchased property in Costa Rica, one of the last remaining areas of the world with virgin rain forest, and also the country in which the rainforest is disappearing at the fastest rate. He searched the entire country for the ideal site, and finally purchased 1,100 acres on the southern tip of the Osa Peninsula, some 60 miles from Panama. Three-quarters of Lewis' site still is virgin rain forest, while the remaining fourth has been cleared and used as grazing land and for crops.

Lewis then decided he had an opportunity to educate others about saving the rainforest by creating a place where people could come to appreciate its natural beauty and intrinsic value. He and the architects currently are working out a design for the "Lapa Rios" ("River of the Scarlet Macaw") resort. The intent of the project, and the idea behind "ecotourism," according to David Andersen, is "to enjoy a meaningful vacation while you learn something."

The architect says his visits to the building site have not been "your typical architectural assignments." Inhabitants include howler monkeys, scarlet macaws, "tons of snakes" and huge spiders that don't bother people, according to Andersen. The land itself offers its own spectacular and varying beauty, with the topography of the site rising from sea level to 1,000 feet. The Cabonera River, which flows through the site, boasts a number of waterfalls, including a 70-footer. "You'd swear you were in Tahiti, except there are no umbrella drinks available," Andersen says.

The project will incorporate building forms and materials used by the area's natives for hundreds of years, including wood frame houses with thatched roofs. The buildings themselves will occupy at most 10 acres of the 1,100 acres. The buildings include 20 freestanding duplex rental units, each with views of both the Pacific Ocean and into the rainforest, and surrounding a courtyard with an outdoor shower screened with palms.

The ecotourism resort also will contain a main lodge with a restaurant and a library, and what Andersen describes as a "scientific center" where visitors can study the environment. Small amenities, such as a free-form swimming pool with a waterfall, a riding stable, plus a house for Lewis and his family, also are being planned. The Andersen Group will develop trails and bird-watching platforms so that visitors can experience the true environment.

The project has been a balance of unique challenges and natural constraints. "We truly enjoy the orientation of a client who takes a world view and genuinely wants to give something back to the planet," says Andersen.

Call this design carpenter Gothic

A design for the individual who wants something different, this home could symbolize a trend referred to as "carpenter Gothic." The octagonal towers, corners and window treatment require the talents of a skilled craftsman.

The exterior carries over into the interior. Immediately off the entry is an open stairway for a visual effect from the living area. There is a spa area with sauna or hot tub.

The second level has two large bedrooms that share a bathroom with easy access to laundry facilities. The stairs continue on to a living attic, that can be used for hobbies or storage.

Some of the house's features include skylights over the kitchen sink and windows in the attic.

Beewildered: Historic questions raised

By Stephanie Stubbs
AIA News Service

The historic Octagon Museum, built in 1801, was home to the wealthy Taylor family of Virginia, and during the War of 1812, served as the executive mansion for President and Dolley Madison. Until recently, it also served as home for some 120,000 residents — honeybees, that is. Speculation has it that these little pollen connoisseurs had been dining out for years at the White House Rose Garden, two blocks east of The Octagon.

The Octagon, owned and operated by the American Architectural Foundation (AAF), is the oldest museum in the country dedicated to architecture, and houses some of the world's finest exhibits on architecture. The AAF and its parent organization, The American Institute of Architects, whose headquarters is directly behind The Octagon, were abuzz about what to do with the entomological interlopers. But it was not as if the building had suddenly broken out in hives. "The bees had been in residence as long as any of the present staff can remember," says Lonnie Hovey, preservation coordinator for The Octagon.

There is the question, however, of a $3.5 million restoration under way, and the workers were getting close to the attic where the bees had set up camp. Honey dripping into a historic structure can cause considerable damage. Bees buzzing around your head when you're on scaffolding three stories off the ground is not a pretty picture. "It's not a matter of our fondness for the bees, but of our wanting to restore a building," said AAF

President Norman L. Koonce.

Okay, the building is important, but who wants to sign the execution order for a bunch of innocent little honeybees? What are you gonna do — Who are you gonna call?

Bee Busters, of course, a Richmond, Va.-based firm specializing in the "relocation" of bees. On February 20, before the bees came out of their long winter's nap, Bee Busters' John Q. Adams, the bee catcher, teamed up with Tidewater Restoration, the firm doing the exterior restoration work on The Octagon. They erected scaffolding on the outside of the building and carefully removed the two strategic pieces of the cornice just under the historic roof.

Adams then literally vacuumed the bees out of the attic and onto wood bee frames, while staffers and camera crews watched with interest

(and a tad of trepidation) from a safe place on the ground. The bees, once on the frames, were placed in boxes and loaded onto a truck southbound for the Richmond area and a new hive that the little buzzers could call their own. It took the Bee Busters two days to evict the bees, which had established two separate colonies on opposite ends of the back side of the combs, and to retrieve some 100 pounds of "historic" honey.

So far, so good. The restoration is proceeding on schedule. Once the removed cornice pieces are restored and ready to be put back in place, Bee Busters will return to The Octagon once more to chemically "neutralize" the attic space and make it unattractive to a roving swarm looking for a nice place to nest. And The Octagon bees are alive and buzzing in their new home in Richmond.

500 ANIMALS ADOPT A PET

SPAY or NEUTER YOUR PET TODAY! An altered pet is a healthier and happier companion. Also, it spares you the grief and pain of having puppies and kittens destroyed when no homes can be found. Countless numbers of sweet, innocent little ones are euthanized every day in shelters across the country because a pet wasn't spayed or neutered. If we cut down on the numbers of unwanted litters being born, we will also cut down on the number of abandoned, lost and unwanted animals to destroy.

Welcome to the Real Estate Resource!

In an effort to make your search for that next house easier, the Grosse Pointe News is initiating with this issue a new page where you can find in a few minutes what the market is offering today, in the five Grosse Pointes, St. Clair Shores, Harper Woods, Detroit and other municipalities. This source will pinpoint what the up-to-date price of a property is, what are its features and when it will be available for viewing.

Are You The Landlord Type?

You don't need to be like Mr. Roper on Three's Company to be a good landlord, but you do need to be smart. There are many economic risks for landlordship, but if you're in the right place at the right time, this business can have the biggest rewards for investors.

One risk is that rents in the area may plummet, and you'll have to use money from your own pocket to pay off your mortgage. It's a good idea to go in with someone else unless you have enough cash to spend on repairs and have ample time to devote to details, such as plumbing problems.

Go into business with realistic expectations. Your rental income just might not be enough to cover mortgage payments and repair costs. You don't want to have to rely on your tax breaks to break even.

Study the market before buying any real estate.

In some areas, condominiums just don't sell, but in others they sell like gangbusters. Purchase property which is close to schools, stores, entertainment and public transportation. And remember, 'tis better to buy the worst house in the best neighborhood than the best house in the worst neighborhood.

When buying an apartment complex, make a good investment. The more apartments a building contains, the lower the risk due to vacancies. Here's an example: your loss is less on a percentage basis if one of six apartments is empty than if one of two units is unrented.

As with any real estate purchase, have the property inspected by experts for structural, termites and other damage. Find out how well the current owners have maintained the property. You don't need any unpleasant surprises that will cost you big money down the line.
